THE soporific effect of the August vacation was still upon the Stock Market last week, though with the nineteen-day account at an end there are indications of brisker business. Prices have moved with a good deal of irregularity without, as a rule, giving any thrills to either the bulls or the bears. Monetary considerations have come to the front, as usual at this season. Egypt, which is preparing to move a cotton crop that bids fair to be almost of record dimensions, has started to take gold from London; and although France will most likely send a portion of the total, the outflow from the Bank is bound to run into several millions. India, too, is likely to make some heavy calls upon our gold supplies, especially as she cannot count upon imports from Australia, and it is possible that sovereigns will be "earmarked" at the Bank for the account of the Secertary of State for the dependency. With the Bank commanding a reserve of nearly thirty and a-half millions, there is nothing calling for violent methods, but an advance to 4 per cent. in the Bank-rate (probably by two stages) is to be looked for. Perhaps the sooner it comes the better, for if the Bank can avoid repeating its action of last year, when, in a fortnight of October, the rate had to be jerked up by 2½ per cent. to the level of 5 per cent., it will be to the advantage of the City.

American Rails, as is their wont, have displayed the chief fluctuation. The market's readiness to rally shows that it is in strong hands, and is also indicative of the feeling that prices are low, having regard to present earnings and dividends. But for the present uncertainty over politics will prevent the market settling down—or settling up. There is nothing so disturbing to Wall Street and the trusts as uncertainty over the tariff, and the attitude of the Democrats and the Insurgent Republicans plainly shows that this question is not going to be allowed to remain where the Stand Patters would like to keep it.

One of the buoyant features of the week has been Mexican Rails. The company's revenue statement for July was frankly excellent. Instead of a decrease in gross receipts of $26,600 (as previously estimated), there was an actual increase of $26,900, while expenses were reduced $6,600, giving a net increase of $33,500. The ratio of expenses to receipts worked out at only 50 per cent., as compared with 53 per cent. in July, 1909. If this means that the company has been able to revert to the use of oil fuel (after the little hitch that occurred through partial failure of the supply) there is room for a continuance of good statements in the next few months. A year ago the company worked at 55.60 per cent. in August, 59.50 in September, and 57.90 in October, so that a reduction to 50 per cent. in the corresponding period of this year would have important results for the shareholders. Gross traffics are still showing expansion, the estimated takings for the first three weeks of August giving an increase of $50,700. There will be time a little later on to estimate dividends for the December half, but meanwhile I may mention that on account of the June half-year, the dividend for which should be declared at the end of September or the beginning of October, the market is going for full on the second preference, and ¾ to 1 per cent. on the ordinary. As a speculation Mexican Ordinary looks rather attractive.

RUBBER

THE BRAZILIAN OUTLOOK—SINGAPORE PARA—SOME PROMISING LOW-PRICED SHARES.

Advices from Brazil as to the state of the Amazon River and the reports as to the prevalence of yellow fever in the Bolivian rubber districts lend some support to the opinion that the South American output, during the next few months at least, will not be equal to last year's figures, and the quotations for forward positions in crude rubber have hardened in consequence. Once again the reported difficulties call attention to the dangers which beset those who season by season imperil their lives in an adventurous journey after rubber. And if further evidence were wanting of the hazardous nature of the occupation of the Brazilian rubber collector, and the remoteness of the prospect of laying under contribution the millions of trees which are said to exist untapped in the forests of Brazil, it can be found surely enough in the inducements which the Government itself have recently offered for the establishment in Brazil of cultivated rubber plantations. Ample proofs have been given by the Eastern planter of his ability to produce plantation rubber at one-half of the cost at which the Brazilian can collect it from wild trees; and with labour in Brazil scarce and unsatisfactory, and costing four or five times the cost of labour in Malaya, it is inconceivable that the Government of Brazil can do much to impede the inevitable transfer of the chief seat of the great rubber industry from South America to the Middle East What Brazil has failed to do with rubber at 8s. and 10s. per lb. she will never accomplish when the commodity has fallen to 3s., and at that figure many of the Eastern plantation shares which my readers hold will pay dividends of 100 and 200 per cent. The Eastern industry was entered upon long before rubber promised to fetch its present abnormal price, and it will remain to furnish us with rich dividends long after the commodity has fallen again to its normal value. Our course, indeed, is pretty clear; we shall do well to follow those pioneers who established the industry in the East, and who by their rare forcsight and conspicuous ability have brought the rubber market to its present remarkable state of prosperity. Arbuthnot, Lampard, Maclaren, Rutherford—to mention only a few—are among those who have been instrumental, it is not too much to say, in bringing millions of profit into the pockets of British investors, and it is their lead which the wise investor will follow to-day.

The Singapore Para Company, to whose prospects I recently alluded, returns its first year's output at 61,200 lbs., thus nearly doubling the official estimate of 32,500 lbs., and as the rubber has realised an average of about 8s. per lb. and the cost of production has been low, the directors should be in a position this month to declare a dividend not far short of 20 per cent. The property adjoins the well-known Anglo-Malay estate, and was acquired from a local Singapore company by Mr. Arbuthnot, who joined the board of the present company, handing over the estate to them at the price at which he had himself acquired it. The company thus started under very favourable conditions, and I am not surprised to hear that the very satisfactory results obtained by the company have induced the original owners to offer the remainder of their property to Singapore Para for a consideration, be it noted, payable wholly in shares; and investors may well take this hint as to the present value and future prospects of the shares. The new property includes, I understand, 1,200 acres of planted rubber, some of which is already in bearing, and should materially strengthen the position of Singapore Para as a producer. The shares, I hear, are to be split into floriners at the forthcoming meeting, and with the announcement of the company's first dividend, and of its new acquisition, the market looks for an advance in the quotation.

As the end of the holiday season approaches greater market activity may in the ordinary course be looked for, and it will be strange if the rubber share market, which gained so much in popular favour during the early part of the year, does not reawaken from its temporary torpor into some share at least of its former briskness. At the present low level of prices one does not care to advise investors to dispose of any sound holdings, but as the year advances I shall probably from time to time advise my readers to exchange out of some of their six-hundred-pounds-per-acre shares into the low-priced junior issues, which will, I think, mark great advances and provide some handsome profits during the next year or two of rubber history. It is always wise to distribute one's risks pretty widely, and holders of rubber shares would do well to divide their holdings, as I have before advised, among the heavy dividend payers, the promising junior companies, the trust companies (now at a more reasonable level), and the well-managed, but necessarily more speculative, wild rubber group, always taking care not to hold too large a proportion in any one section, and never, of course, adopting the dangerous practice of carrying shares on borrowed money.

The MOST COMPLETE List of Rubber and Oil Share Quotations will be found in every Saturday's issue of "The Financial Times." 1d. daily. On sale everywhere.

Some of the shares which I warned my readers not to purchase at a premium now look attractive at a substantial discount, and among these Garing may be mentioned. Mr. Maude, of Cicely, strongly advised the purchase of the estate at £40,000. The issued capital of £68,000 at the present quotation of 15s. per share, less £18,500 working capital in hand, reduces the market valuation of the 900 acres of rubber (over 600 acres of which are nearly three years old) to £32,500, or approximately £36 per planted acre. The working capital is said to be sufficient to bring the planted area into bearing and to open up the greater part of the company's unplanted area of 1,000 acres; and the presence of a Linggi director on the board may be taken as a sufficient guarantee of experienced and capable management. Mr. Maude is responsible for the following estimates of output:—

| | lbs. |
|---|---|
| 1911 | 15,000 |
| 1912 | 78,000 |
| 1913 | 129,000 |
| 1914 | 189,000 |
| Total | 411,000 |

On the very low basis of an average net profit of only 2s. 6d. per lb. the total of the four years' profits is sufficient to cover the present market valuation of the whole of the company's issued capital, and there would appear to be good reason for Mr. Maude's opinion that the value of the estate must increase very considerably after twelve months' cultivation.

A company whose output returns are exceeding prospectus expectations is Langkapoera, and a realisation of its revised output estimate for the year ending June next should enable the company twelve months hence to pay its maiden dividend. Possessing ample working capital and having the advantage of a plentiful supply of cheap labour, the company is extending its area in a manner which will ensure its ownership of a considerable planted acreage at a very moderate capital cost; and its older rubber and its revenue from coffee will provide satisfactory dividends during the period in which the younger portion of the estate is being brought into bearing. The low valuation on which the company was floated makes for substantial future dividends, and the shares, which are now obtainable at a small premium, particularly commend themselves to investors who wish to secure a low-priced, dividend-earning share in a moderately capitalised company with the prospect of substantial capital appreciation.

TRUTH will be sent weekly to any address in the British Islands for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or £1 9s. 1d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). The subscription to Canada (Thin Edition) is: 7s. 7d. for 3 months; 15s. 2d. for 6 months; £1 11s. 6d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). To the Colonies and Foreign Countries (Thick Edition): 3 months, 8s. 8d.; 6 months, 17s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 15s. 10d. (including Christmas Number). All cheques and P.O.O.s should be made payable to THE MANAGER OF TRUTH, and addressed to Truth Buildings, Carteret Street, London, S.W.

MINES.

The New Rhodesian Trust—Banket Cable—Rand Labour—Nourse Mines' Results—Mount Morgan Prospects.

Conditions in the Mining markets have improved a little since my last week's notes were written, and with the nineteen-day account out of the way and the holiday period drawing to a close, I think we may expect to see a gradual improvement in business, providing there is no political scare or other untoward development to check speculation. Thanks to the spurt in tin increased attention has been directed to the shares of companies concerned with that commodity, and a fair amount of interest—mostly professional—has been evinced in connection with Rhodesians. The Banket cable, referred to below, rather spoilt the look of things Rhodesian for a time, but when they found the shares were not altogether without support from insiders House speculators' courage revived.

The announcement of details of the new Rhodesian trust has been delayed, the arrangement of the scheme having taken longer than was expected, and at the time of writing shareholders in the companies to be taken over are still without particulars. I understand, however, that five concerns are involved; their names and nominal capitals are appended:—

| | Nominal capital. £ |
|---|---|
| Etna Development | 250,000 |
| Gold Schists of Rhodesia | 750,000 |
| Rhodesia Exploration and Development | 450,000 |
| Rhodesian Abercorn Shamva Trust | 450,000 |
| Rhodesian Banket | 500,000 |
| Total | £2,400,000 |

The Rhodesia Exploration will constitute the nucleus of the scheme. The nominal capital of the combine is expected to be £1,500,000, and it is stated that in addition to receiving a certain number of shares of the new concern for their present holdings, shareholders will be offered for subscription at 2¼ a quarter of a million shares, which will be guaranteed free of charge. Unfortunately the Rhodesian Banket Co. received a cable last week announcing that developments on the "Rowdy Boys" claims are unsatisfactory, and that on the advice of the consulting engineer work has been suspended for the present. Shareholders are not likely to have forgotten that it was in order to provide funds for a comprehensive and active scheme of development at this property that the Banket company made an issue of 108,000 new shares at 45s. each just about twelve months ago. The latest news is disappointing, but the management still has hope of the continuation of the Eldorado's rich chute being found somewhere in Banket ground sooner or later.

Advices from the Rand predict that the native labour return for August—which is not due to be published for another ten days—will not show any further diminution in the mines' supply of labour. This is one of the best bits of news received for some time in regard to the Rand gold mining industry, and it is to be hoped the actual figures will confirm the forecast. In August last year the mines lost over 2,000 "boys," following on still greater losses in the preceding months, and it is not usual for the return of natives to the Rand to commence before October.

During the first four months of the current year the earnings of the Nourse Mines were adversely affected by the labour shortage, but the last few monthly returns have exhibited recovery, the July profit of £22,495 comparing with £13,100 for April. The company's financial year 1909-10 terminated on July 31, and it is interesting to contrast the results with those for the preceding period:—

| Year. | Ore milled. Tons. | Revenue. Total. | Revenue. Per ton. | Expenses. Total. | Expenses. Per ton. | Working Profit. Total. | Working Profit. Per ton. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | £ | | £ | | £ | |
| 1909-10 | 464,577 | 697,809 | 30/- | 506,306 | 21/9 | 191,503 | 8/3 |
| 1908-9 | 441,701 | 681,249 | 30/10 | 445,978 | 20/2 | 235,271 | 10/8 |

Revenue from other sources increased the available balance to £208,800, and the company could have maintained its 1908-9 dividend rate of 25 per cent., but because of the heavy capital expenditure in connection with the installation of new plant the final distribution for 1909-10 was reduced to 10 per cent., making 22½ per cent. for the whole period. When the whole of the new plant is in full operation further expansion in the monthly returns may be expected, and it is evident that the market anticipates an increase in the dividend rate, the price of the shares being still within a trifle of £3. It must not be overlooked, however, that an additional 152,821 shares rank for dividend as from August 1.

The cable received from the Mount Morgan Company last week stating that the Many Peaks railway was officially opened on August 18 marks an interesting stage in the affairs of this famous Queensland mine. The Many Peaks leases have been acquired by the Mount Morgan, as the material they contain forms a suitable flux in the smelting of its own gold-copper ores. Hitherto the Mount Morgan has used a barren flux, but the Many Peaks' material contains a certain amount of copper, and it is consequently expected that the Mount Morgan's output of the red metal will considerably increase. The company's distributions have not been on a very liberal scale of recent years, but now there would appear to be good prospects of expansion in this respect. As a matter of fact the company could have increased its dividend rate for 1909-10 had the directors thought fit, but they preferred to strengthen the company's finances. The net profit for the year ended May 31 last was £308,778 (against £199,528 for the preceding year), and the dividends, amounting to 4s. per share, absorbed £200,000. A sum of £50,000 was placed to reserve, and no less than £61,700 was carried forward to the current financial year. The present price of 3⅞ for Mount Morgans is the highest of the year, and practically coincides with the best levels touched during 1909 and 1908. In 1906 and 1907, however, the shares' highest was about 4¾.

The Rise in Tin and Tin Shares.

At the beginning of August the price of tin was just under £150 per ton; last week it touched £166, and at the time of writing is £162½. The reason for the recent advance is that a bear position existed in the metal market, and the bulls have had the facts in their favour. In the earlier part of the year there was considerable short selling in the belief that the supplies of tin from the Straits would be maintained, if not increased, but this anticipation has not been realised. It is said that the reduction in the supplies from the Middle East is to be partly attributed to the rubber boom having turned the attention of prospectors to the growing of rubber. Whatever the real cause, the fact remains that the bears of the metal, having gone astray in their calculations, have been having an unpleasant time, and the prospect is thought to be for a further rise in the quotation, but how long the improved price may be maintained it is practically impossible to say.

Naturally, the companies producing tin are pleased to see the value of the commodity increased, and it would have been surprising if the spurt in the metal had not attracted a little more attention to tin shares. At the end of last week demand sprang up for most of the Nigerian tin shares, and also for the scrip of a few concerns working in other parts of the world. The floating supply of stock on the market being small, share values were promptly advanced. Some weeks ago, and again last week, mention was made in this column that a revival of interest in the Nigerian tin shares was expected before very long. That expectation was not based on any movement in the metal itself, but it so happens that a rise in tin has come along and started the ball rolling.

I have been asked what difference the increase in the value of the metal will make to the Nigerian companies. Probably not a great deal, unless the enhanced price is maintained for a good length of time, as not much in the way of output from the Northern Nigerian alluvial tin field is to be expected in the early future. Besides the Naraguta, which is now producing some forty tons a month, the Lucky Chance, the Bauchi, and possibly one or two others, are winning a little tin by hand labour, but until sluicing operations with modern plants are commenced the quantity will not be very large. However, the recent rise in the metal represents a respectable sum on an output like that of the Naraguta, to which I referred last week. Assuming that the 215 tons won by this company during the last six months have not yet been sold—and I believe that at any rate the bulk of it has not—the difference between the amount at which the company valued that output and its approximate value at the time of writing (with metallic tin at £162½ per ton) is about £3,500. That is to say, the Naraguta's estimated profit for the six months would be raised from £10,000 to £13,500. Of course, the actual profit cannot be ascertained until the whole quantity is sold. Meanwhile, shareholders may like to know that so long as the price of metallic tin remains above £145 there will probably be no need to modify the Naraguta's official profit estimate in the other direction. The company should get about £100 a ton for its product (tin oxide) when metallic tin is quoted at £145, and that level shows the company a very good margin of profit, even with the present high cost of transport. Most of, if not all, the Nigerian alluvial tin propositions whose shares are already on the market are, I believe, expected to be able to earn a satisfactory rate of profit with tin oxide at £80 a ton.

Waihi Rumours and the Recent Slump.

Waihis, which have been up to 10 1-16 this year, were down to 7¼ at one time last week, the lowest level they have touched since 1906, in which year they were under 7. Rumour has been fairly busy with Waihi affairs the last few weeks. Developments in the mine are reported to be disappointing, labour troubles are hinted at, and the Government is credited with an intention to levy a tax on the company. In regard to the first, it is no secret that developments on the Martha lode some time ago were less satisfactory, and my information is to the effect that the local view of the present indications at depth is pessimistic. As to the second report, the company's London office has no knowledge of any labour trouble, and other people usually well posted on Waihi mining matters tell me they have heard of no difficulty of the kind implied by the market rumour. The third statement mentioned appears to be well founded, but it is not of much importance. The finding of the Commission appointed by the New Zealand Government to inquire into the silting up of the Ohinemuri River by the tailings from the mining batteries along its banks is expected to result in a tax being imposed on the companies owning those batteries. One of the plants is the Victoria battery of the Waihi company, and it is calculated that the levy in this case will amount to three-farthings a ton on the mine's total output. That would represent a sum of only about £1,300 a year—quite a small matter to such a concern as the Waihi.

One of the reasons for the local selling is probably to be found in the desire to have funds in hand in readiness for the time when the Government throws open for settlement the Maori lands in the King country, which it has recently acquired from the native holders. These lands are reported to be of superior quality and well situated, and the competition for them is expected to be keen. Doubtless the recent steady decline in the shares made some holders on this side nervous, so that they assisted the fall. Had not Waihis been overvalued to start with the selling would have had less effect. On more than one occasion in my notes, and in replies to correspondents, it has been indicated that I considered Waihis too high; in May last when they had come down to 8½ (from their previous level of 10 1-16), and again when they were about 8, I pointed out that the yield even then was inadequate. Now they are 7⅝, having recovered part of the ground lost during the last account, and on this price the yield works out at just under 12 per cent. This is better, but it is not really sufficient to compensate one for the risk attaching to quartz mining.

INDUSTRIALS.

IRON AND STEELS AND TEXTILES STRONG—RALLY IN ANGLO A—THE LATEST BANKING AMALGAMATION—THE OIL SHARE MARKET.

The leading groups comprising the industrial market have shown quiet strength in the past week. Iron and steel shares were again the subject of inquiry, and a better demand was reported for South Wales coal shares. The recent firmness of the textiles was well maintained, a feature being some buying of Coats preferred upon a recrudescence of the question as to whether the preferred stock is entitled to participate in a distribution of reserves. At the Guest Keen meeting Mr. Arthur Guest made a speech which was on the whole of a hopeful character, although optimism was tempered by references to the great keenness of competition and to the considerable increase in the wages bill that has followed the passing of the Miners' Eight Hours Act. Anglo A after a period of neglect showed a revival which was unofficially said to be connected with a resumption of negotiations for a deal with the American Telegraph and Telephone Company.

Yet another banking amalgamation. This time it is the absorption by Parr's of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Bank. The latter has a paid-up capital of £862,660, and Parr's proposes to give for it shares in its bank with £739,380 credited as paid-up. Parr's Bank has paid dividends at the rate of 20 per cent. per annum for ten years past, whilst the Lancashire and Yorkshire Bank distributed a dividend of 15½ per cent. for the last four years, and its dividends earlier were lower. The terms, therefore, seem sufficiently favourable to tempt Lancashire and Yorkshire holders. Whether the fusion is desirable from other points of view is open to question. Union is strength, but there are many people who regard the craze for banking amalgamations as having been overdone. They contend, and with a good deal of force, that the banking of the country is fast becoming the monopoly of a few gigantic trusts, and that the elimination of the local banker, acting in close touch with his customers, and the substitution of mere branches of a huge institution, having its seat of control in London, is not to the advantage of the farmers and small traders.

Among oil shares further liquidation has been going on in Shell Transports. Amsterdam has been the chief seller, and the reason appears to be that price-cutting between the Shell and Standard Oil interests in the Far East has been resumed. If the Shell were a weak concern this would be a sufficient reason for prompt selling of its shares. But as it is so strong that the Standard Oil Trust cannot hope to break it the probability is that another agreement will be arrived at after the first round or two. I do not therefore advise holders of Shells to be frightened into throwing away their shares. Burmahs have been quietly bought from Glasgow in the last few days, and according to unofficial reports the company is still enjoying great prosperity. As a speculative investment the shares at their present price certainly look rather attractive. Not only is the company very strong financially, but it enjoys the best of management, a consideration which is of prime importance in a business so highly technical as the oil business. Maikop descriptions have been quiet, though in some quarters the hope is entertained that business will broaden in the late autumn when the first pipe-line, that to the railway at Enem, is completed. In market circles good things are being said about the shares of the Maikop Pipe Line and Transport Company, and at ⅛ discount the £1 shares, 15s. paid, should be worth picking up. Whatever be the fate in store for individual producing concerns, the Pipe Line Company will not be disturbed so long as the output of oil in bulk from Maikop is at all substantial; in other words the Pipe Line Company does not stake its welfare upon the results accruing from this or that group of plots, but upon the field as a whole. Once Maikop demonstrates the assertions of the experts that she has plenty of oil to export the shares of the Pipe Line Company will not be allowed to remain at their present price.

CITY SPIDERS' WEBS.

The last few weeks have seen several additions to the ranks of the Bucket-shop Brigade, and have been marked as well by a furious outburst of energy on the part of a number of concerns with which readers of TRUTH Cautionary List are familiar. My desk as I write is piled high with newly arrived circulars and cuttings from the advertisement columns of papers, all telling the public at large how it is possible to immediately amass wealth by the outlay of comparatively small sums deposited with these various firms. We have lately heard a good deal about the spread of financial knowledge; the public nowadays, it is said, knows more than its brokers. The assertion may be true of a section of the public, but the activity in the ranks of the bucket-shop keepers proves that there is no danger yet awhile of the race of fools becoming extinct. Actions in the civil courts, sentences in the criminal courts, innumerable press warnings, and years of practical object-lessons provided by the fleecing of clients still fail of their purpose in stamping out the bucket-shop pest. The ordinary man or woman, if accosted by a stranger who offered to exchange sovereigns for £5 notes, would regard the person who made such an offer as a rogue or a lunatic, yet much of the literature of the bucket-shop which it is found profitable to circulate demands at least as big a tax upon one's credulity.

Take, for instance, the circular of Hessell, Gould and Co., 66, Victoria Street, S.W. This firm invites subscriptions for a month's trust in American Rails, and states that, for each £1 invested, anything from £25 to £50 can be expected, which, together with the subscription, will be forwarded to all clients upon the closing of the trust. In other words, the public is being asked to believe that it will obtain profits of 2,500 to 5,000 per cent. in a month, or at the rate of 30,000 to 60,000 per cent. per annum. Hessell, Gould and Co. act as principals, so that "clients'" gains are their losses. There is only one thing more astounding than this offer, and that is that it pays the firm to print and post it.

Mellish, Thornton and Co. is a new arrival in the bucket-shop world; at least, I do not recall having heard of it before. Its address is printed as 24, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., and 11, Poultry Chambers, E.C.—are they not one and the same?—and it has the not inappropriate telegraphic address "Antitrust, London." It also announces "Code A.B.C.," which, if it is meant to indicate that the firm is in the habit of dealing with very simple people, hardly seems necessary. Mellish, Thornton and Co. invite subscriptions for its next "Special Stock Operation in American Rails," but does not deem it worth while even to divulge the names of the stocks. It has a fund of humour. It begins by narrating, with the emphasis of block type, its achievements on the occasion of its last deal, "which only ran eight days and resulted in the handsome profit of £27 10s. on each £10 subscribed," and then, in a list headed "What We Don't Do," declares: "We don't brag about the profits we make, but we meet our liabilities promptly." Seeing that the firm charges no commissions, contangos, etc., and that its "clients" are so successful, it must be doing nothing else but meet liabilities. The A.B.C. Code may have its merits, but when you are asked to play blind pool, I would recommend the D.E.F. Code.

Francis Ellis, 8, Union Court, E.C., is still beseeching an ungrateful public to allow him to make its fortunes. His philosopher's stone is Canadian Pacifics. On August 16 he invited country cousins to send along a 5 per cent. marginal deposit. Canadas he announced had crossed the 200 mark, and he had "inside" information which made him absolutely confident that the shares would within a comparatively short period cross 250. An advance of 20 points only, he blithely sang, will return you £50 on a £10 investment. Never a word sang Francis Ellis about the results that would accrue from a fall. But facts are facts, and on August 23 Canadas dipped to 193, which would mean that those who bought the shares at "about 200" on a 5 per cent. margin had been attending a Barmecide feast. Pity the woes of Francis the prophet; he must console himself as best he may by the thought that the losses of his "clients" are his gains.

G. A. Fleming and Co., which has its offices in the financial atmosphere of 24, St. James Street, S.W., wants to make money for other people by opening limited liability accounts in Americans and Rhodesians. It is quite above the suspicion of seeking to make anything for itself—here is its self-sacrificing avowal:—"Being dealers we act as principals, making no deductions of any kind, such as commissions, brokerage, etc., not even charging contract stamps, which now amount to a considerable amount, so that any rise means all clear profit to you." To anticipate the questions which will reach me from some guileless people as to whether it is a firm I recommend, let me just say this: When strangers address you offering not merely to work for you without fee or reward, but to lose money that you may make it, just button up your pocket.

BUCKET-SHOP AVIATION.

Duncan Forbes and Co., 49, London Wall, E.C., is a bucket-shop which likes variety. Most people would find the engaging in complex stock deals in Yankees that involved the guaranteeing of their clients against loss a sufficient tax upon their energies, but Duncan Forbes, true to its Scottish label, is made of sterner stuff. While not resting from its labours in the collection of marginal deposits, and the turning of £15 into £155 or more for the benefit of other people, it can yet spare time to take an interest in the latest craze of aviation. It may be that because aviation is the latest word to conjure with, Duncan Forbes has lightened upon it, but my readers may judge for themselves after studying the firm's latest offer. According to a typewritten circular, it has concluded arrangements with Aviation Courses, Limited, of 32, Regent Street, W., to render financial assistance in connection with an aviation meeting to be held from September 19 to 24 on the Doncaster Racecourse under a contract between that company and the Doncaster Corporation. The terms arranged with Aviation Courses, Limited, the circular states, will enable us to offer our clients a substantial participation in the profits arising from the meeting, viz., a bonus of 25 per cent. upon the sums contributed, which, with the cash addition, will be returned immediately after the meeting, viz., on or about October 7 next, when the accounts will have to be made up. The circular proceeds:—

Thus for every £20 subscribed £25 will be returned within about seven weeks from the present time (the bonus addition being, therefore, at the rate of 175 per cent. per annum being guaranteed by us). Both principal and bonus will be secured upon the gate moneys and other income from the meeting, thus removing any element of risk.

The vagueness of this offer is only matched by its munificence. Even the actual amount required is not definitely stated, though the hint is thrown out that the outlay will not exceed £5,000. Duncan Forbes and Co. a week or two ago likened themselves unto the great magnates in New York; they now have to appeal to strangers for a sum of £5,000, which just shows how great magnates must suffer when they start guaranteeing the world against loss. Who the people are styling themselves Aviation Courses, Limited, we are not told, but the fact that they have to go for assistance to a bucket-shop calls for explanation. It was only a few months ago that this same bucket-shop was seeking to extract money from the public by offers of subscriptions to what it called a Turkish War Claim Loan of £6,000, and on that occasion it had the impudence to use as a bait the name as trustee of a well-known K.C.B., who promptly repudiated all connection with the business. Duncan Forbes, true to his generous habit, now comes forward to guarantee the return of subscribers' capital plus a bonus at the rate of 175 per cent. per annum. But seeing that a little while ago a client had to employ a writ to get back from him a sum of £10 deposited as cover on a marginal deal, and was unable to obtain the amount of profit shown on paper, the guarantee thus given is hardly as attractive as, say, that of the Bank of England. Duncan Forbes is of opinion that the staking of money upon this aviation meeting is free from any element of risk, but that is just a little sample of the unshakable optimism of the bucket-shop keeper, and possibly arises from the fact that he is always handling the money of the other fellow. I was under the impression that familiarity with aeroplanes was causing a slump in the attendance at aviation meetings, and even Duncan Forbes takes the trouble to dwell upon the losses that accrued from the recent meetings at Lanark, Bournemouth, and Blackpool. But whatever results may attend this Doncaster aviation meeting, the man who puts down money on the strength of the amazingly bald circular issued by this bucket-shop stands in need of an elementary lesson in business caution.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The British Coalite Co.

The latest news in connection with the British Coalite Co., Limited, is that the works at Wednesfield have been closed down. In a statement published in the Financial News the newly-appointed managing director seeks to minimise the importance of this event. He says the staff is being reorganised and the plant being put into shape for more continuous working, while against the stoppage at Wednesfield "the company is starting up at Barking." Probably the shareholders will remember the chairman's unfulfilled predictions last December as to the great things that would be accomplished at Barking "within a month." With regard to Wednesfield it was announced nearly two years ago that the company had erected a foundry there capable of turning out two coalite plants per week. It was in order to provide funds for the construction of the forty or fifty of these plants—presumably at Wednesfield—that £300,000 of debentures were recently offered for subscription by the Investment Registry, Limited, and it will be extremely interesting to learn what progress, if any, has been made with that scheme. At the present moment, at any rate, Plymouth appears to be the only place in which the company now has any coalite plants in actual operation.

Redway, Furness's New Name.

It is difficult to keep pace with the changing names of the outside broking fraternity, and in writing last week of Redway, Furness and Company, Limited, as the proprietors of the Financial Outlook, I forgot that the business of this firm, after being temporarily made over to the London and Mexican Exploitation Company, is now conducted under the title of the Metropolitan and Counties Investors, Limited. The fact is recalled by an action in the City of London Court, in which an ex-employee sued the last-named company for commission on advertisements. The defence was that the new company were not the owners of the Financial Outlook, but Mr. Charles P. Redway, a director, innocently coupled his denial that they "ran" the paper with an admission that they paid its expenses, and the Judge regarded this as a sufficient proof of the ownership. In the circumstances it is, of course, only natural that the editor of the Financial Outlook should recommend the Metropolitan and Counties Investors, Limited, as "a stock-broking house of the highest repute." Personally, I should describe it rather differently, and, as I indicated last week, I advise my readers not to touch the shares of the Anglo-Adriatic Syndicate, which are being so audaciously puffed by this "stockbroking house" and its journalistic organ.

McKinley, Alexander and Sons.

Since my last reference to McKinley, Alexander and Sons, I have received further complaints from customers of the firm who have been unable to secure payment of the profits due to them. This is a little drawback to the wonderful system of Three Months Trusts which may well give pause to intending subscribers. By way of a change from these gambles, McKinley, Alexander and Sons a short time since strongly recommended a purchase of the shares of a concern called the Albion Glass Works, Limited, at 17s. 6d. each, as "a good first-class non-speculative industrial share." It was asserted that the company, with a capital of only £10,000, was doing business "that will show a profit of £5,000 a year." On making inquiries the other day, I ascertained that the works of this prosperous company had been closed for a month, and that on August 11 a resolution for voluntary winding up was passed.

"VIGILANT'S" LETTER BOX.

1. Inquiries addressed to me, which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through my "Letter Box." A coupon will always be found at the foot of the third page of the cover of TRUTH.

2. Three different stocks or shares are the limit for an inquiry covered by one coupon. If it is desired to make an inquiry respecting a larger number of stocks or shares an additional coupon or coupons (one for every three stocks or shares) must be forwarded. Inquiries in regard to Rubber shares must not be included in letters relating to other classes of securities.

3. Name and address, which must accompany all inquiries, should be written on the communication.

4. A nom-de-plume or initials (the former preferably) should be given if it is desired that the real name shall not appear in the paper.

5. Inquiries should be put as briefly as possible, plainly written and numbered.

6. Communications received after Friday may not be replied to in the following issue.

Railways.

ITMAD UL DAULAT.—1. It would take an article to reply to as many of your questions as are capable of being answered. You had better read my remarks in TRUTH of August 17 upon the outlook. It is manifestly impossible to say what will happen years ahead, but I think it is unlikely that Trunk Ordinary will ever reach the price of Canadian Pacifics. 2. No; it is limited to 675,000 acres. 3 and 4. There is room for all three. 5. It has to meet the interest upon some £9,000,000 4 per cent. bonds, with power to add. 6. The new line, of course, invests the ordinary stock with greater possibilities; more than that I do not care to hazard. Broadly speaking, I do not think you would be paying excessive prices for either if you bought now.

TIRTH AN KARA.—1. A sound investment, but I regard Great Northern Deferred as cheaper. 2. Ask the bank.

Mines.

ADMIRAL.—I do not care to advise you to retain your shares. They are, I believe, a one-man market, and it may be difficult to sell at any price later on. ARGENTINE.—As I have pointed out more than once in these columns, no mining share can be regarded as a safe investment. The shares you name, however, have very fair lock-up chances. ALDERLEY.—They appear to have fair speculative chances.

BAHADUR.—Hold for a better market and, in the event of a moderate recovery, realise. BEDFORD.—Prospects are very uncertain, and you must decide for yourself whether you will hold, and thereby run a certain amount of risk.

CONSTANT READER (Harrogate).—I think there is a fair chance of your being able to secure a moderate profit before the end of the year.

DURHAM RANGER.—Do not subscribe any more money in connection with Sutherland Reefs.

FURNISH.—1 and 2. I prefer Souths and South Blocks. 3. Zinc Ordinary are a promising speculative lock-up. F. B.—See second part of answer to "Nosie" under Mixed Securities. I see no reason to expect much advance in the shares.

GWALIA.—They seem a fair selection, but it is impossible to estimate the life of such a mine. 2. I am not attracted by them. 3. A fair speculation.

HARPUR.—1. I see no reason to expect much early improvement, but they might be retained for the dividends. 2. In the event of a moderate advance in course of the next month or two, better realise. 3. They are promising lock-ups, but I do not expect much early rise.

LAMBRUIN.—Towards the end of the company's existence the dividend rate may decline. I believe it still has the shareholding you mention.

PHILOSOPHER.—1. The company's offices are at 20, Copthall Avenue, E.C. 2. I know of no special reason for the low price beyond the fact that the market has practically dried up for the time being. 3. They may revive later on with other members of the group, and I should be inclined to hold rather than accept the present price.

SPES BONA.—I think there is a fair chance of Fitzroys recovering to the price you paid sooner or later.

WARWICKER.—You could make a more promising selection just now.

Mixed Securities.

ALLIANCE.—1. Decidedly speculative; may go ultimately higher, but fully valued for the present. 2 and 3.—Hopeful lock-up speculations. If you desire capital appreciation rather than early dividends, better buy the ordinary.

B. G.—1-3. Your money could be employed more hopefully than in these. 4. A hopeful speculative lock-up. They are above your price now. 4. The oil shares might be held for a recovery. BORDER.—Practically nothing known here about the concern, and there is no market for the bonds. They were peddled out along with other non-marketable stuff by the Investment Registry, Limited, an outside concern frequently criticised in TRUTH. 2. These seem a fair holding. 3. The Clyde 5 per cent. debentures are a fair speculative investment, but 100 was, in my opinion, too much to ask for them. BLOATER.—You might, if the amount will run to it, buy £100 Quebec Central 3 per Cent. Second Debenture Stock and £100 7 per Cent. Income Bonds. See article in TRUTH last week. If you have only about £100 available, Metropolitan Electric Trams 5 per Cent. Debenture Stock would suit.

D. S.—The Liverpool stock would be safe. Do not buy the Industrial.

INTERESTED (Limerick).—1. A purchase would be a fair speculation for a small profit. 2. A sound concern, but dividends liable to severe fluctuation. 3. Better not buy at the present high price.

KING PROPAH.—1. It is quite impossible for me to say what the assets will realise. I see no reason to expect any rise in the quotation. 2. Secure a moderate profit. 3. Hardly a share I would recommend. There is not a free market for it.

LORENZO.—1. I have not seen a price for British Buttes for some time. 2. Sell Waring and Gillows. 3. The Paris bond is a well-secured investment, but the chance of drawing a prize is remote. 4. I do not expect an early dividend on the Rhodesians, and would sell them on a moderate rise. 5. At the time of writing the shares are being talked higher by the market, but, as you suggest, a purchase would be speculative. I am not prepared to fix a definite price.

MADRASSI.—1. I do not care for them, and would sell. 2. I doubt if they will go below 80, and sooner or later should show a recovery from the present level. MAORI.—At present I do not see sufficient justification for a sale.

NOSIE.—1. A hopeful speculative lock-up. 2. The shares do not stand higher because prospects are uncertain. 2. It is, I believe, under good management.

SKIBO.—1 and 3. You could make better selections than these. 2. A fair speculation. SLATE.—Nos. 1 and 3 might be held. 2. Sell in the event of a moderate rise. ST. CLARE.—1. As a long lock-up the shares have fair prospects, but you might have to wait some years. 2. Gold Coast Amalgamated, Champions, Bauchis, and Ashanti Goldfields. 3. Randfontein Central, Wit Deep, East Rand Proprietary, Brakpan. SURGEON, R.N.—All three fair investments, with a dash of speculation about them. SNOOKS.—1. There is no such paper published, though several good weekly financial papers are available. 2. I can only recommend you to watch my Notes from week to week.

TEMERAIRE.—All three good holdings.

WILTS.—Yes.

Rubber.

ADMIRAL.—Retain for a recovery, which I expect to take place within the next two or three months. AMBLESIDE.—1. I think it is probable that a substantial recovery in the price will take place next month, but I cannot say anything definitely as to dividend. 2. Keep both for the present. Beverley will commence tapping rubber next year, and latest advices state that the tea crop is doing well. 3. Hold for recovery and appreciation. ABBOTT.—All three are good speculative investments which may be kept for dividends. APOLLO.—I expect to receive some information direct from the estate in a few weeks' time. Hold your shares and write again three weeks hence. ADVANCE.—1 and 2. This is a poor concern, but I do not advise you to try to sell yet; wait until about the middle of September. 3. At the time of writing the respective prices are as follows: "Fine Hard Para," 8s. 4d. per lb.; "Plantation Hevea," 7s. per lb.; and "Funtumia Elastica," 6s. per lb. It must be remembered, however, that the quotation for the last-named varies greatly according to its quality, this price being for the best. The Mabira Company, whose estates produce the best "Funtumia," a short time ago were selling their output at a price above the quotation then current for "Plantation," but on the other hand a low-grade "Funtumia" to-day would not fetch more than about 2s. 6d. per lb. Thanks for appreciative remarks in second letter. ALBA.—1. Yes. 2. Pataling, Selangor, and Linggi. ACORN.—I should not sell any of them just now, but I should get rid of 1 on a market revival. 2. Has speculative possibilities and will probably pay a fair dividend in two years' time. 3. Retain these at all events until you have received two or three dividends. ADSUP.—1. Hold these for a profit. 2. See first reply to "Ambleside." ALBERT.—1 and 3. See reply to "Apollo." ANTONIO.—I should hold them all for recovery. You ought to be able to make a profit eventually on 1 and 2. AUGUST.—From several points of view this was an unsatisfactory flotation, but you had better hold on for a time. Thanks for the offer of the prospectus, of which I possess a copy. ALOES.—1. See reply to "Barge." I do not care to suggest a selling limit at present. 2. A promising estate, in good hands, but not much market for the shares. If you hold them you may look upon them as an improving rubber investment. 3. You must write a separate letter; see Rule 2.

A. B. C.—Many absurd rumours have been circulated, but you had better disregard them and keep your shares for the present. Accounts.—When the estate is in full bearing the estimated crop of 7,500,000 lbs. at a net profit of 2s. per lb. will provide 200 per cent. dividends. Rubber shares are valued, not on current dividends only, but on the total of, say, seven years' probable profits.

Bedford.—I do not look upon your list as an entirely satisfactory holding. 1. In good hands, but you will have to wait a long time before you get a substantial dividend. 2 and 4. I condemned these companies when they were issued, and I see no reason to alter my opinion. When markets improve sell your shares. 3. A good 6 per cent. investment, not likely to appreciate much in price. 5 and 6. Both should prove to be good rubber investments. Baker.—1. A dividend is expected on these during the next few months. 2. See second reply to "Ambleside." 3. Of course these are speculative, but I should advise you not to sell just now, as I think they may go better with improved markets. Baxter.—I think very well indeed of this share at present price. A good dividend should be earned next year, when the price should be substantially higher. Bahadur.—1. Keep these for the guaranteed dividend, and average at or near par. 2. The same remark applies. 3. Yes. All three are considered cheap now. 4. Better wait now as the price has recovered considerably from the lowest point touched. Barge.—The monthly returns are gradually increasing. I advise you to hold for a recovery, which should set in with a revival of activity in the Rubber share market. Birmingham.—1-3. At the present price the shares are a cheap purchase. Buy now. See reply to "Baxter." Bayswater.—Keep them all for the present. Write again in a few weeks' time mentioning the exact prices at which you bought. Badger.—Yours is a curious list, but that is not to be wondered at as you "do not know where or how" you got some of the shares. 1. If you obtained these at par you had better cut a small loss. 2. This is a fair concern with a large area, which will probably be cut up into subsidiaries. Retain for the present. 3. If you have an allotment of these, sell them if you can do so without loss when markets become harder. 4. I know nothing about this company. 5. Ought to do well, and at the present price the shares look cheap. 6. Beverleys or Northumberlands should meet your requirements. Bosquet.—1. See reply to "Apollo." 2. It will be well to average these. Boz.—1 and 2. An interim dividend on Kinta Kellas is expected within the next few months, but it may not be paid in September.

Carlingford.—A dividend is expected on 1 before the end of this year and on 2 towards the end of next year. Cicero.—You might buy some more to average. Countryman.—1. Your query regarding Malacca was answered in Rubber Notes last week. 2. A good rubber investment. Cresta.—I should not look upon this as a permanent investment. The company is not in the front rank, and I think it would be well to exchange the shares during the next market revival. Choh.—These are all good to hold for dividends, but you appear to have bought 2 at a rather high figure. The last report, however, showed the position of the company to be satisfactory, and I think it is likely that your price will be again reached as more trees come into bearing during the current year. County.—1. The company is expected to be producing towards the end of this year, when the price should begin to advance. 2. I have a favourable opinion of Allagars, but I advise you not to buy the others. Caius.—1. Retain what you hold for a profit, but unless the price declines somewhat it is hardly worth putting more eggs into one basket by averaging. 2. It is thought that the company will be earning a profit in about a year's time, and the management is in good hands, but I think that the present price discounts the first dividend, at all events. There is not a free market for the shares. C. R.—I tell you to hold your shares, as they will be a good investment, but of course it is immaterial to me whether you take my advice or that of any of your other numerous counsellors. Cullen.—1 and 2. Sell whenever there is a market. 3. I do not believe this; but you had better wait for the meeting. Chine.—These should all stand higher before the end of the year. Keep them for the present, but repeat your inquiry at the end of next month. Capercos.—1. This is a promising company, but, of course, somewhat speculative. 2. None, I believe, has yet been put on the market. 3. I understand that this company has done some excellent deals, but all Trust companies are somewhat out of favour at the moment, as there are so many bargains to be picked up amongst plantation shares. Cicestrian.—Although the shares have good prospects you hold too many speculative descriptions, and your broker takes a reasonable view. Wait for a favourable opportunity to reduce your holdings of 1, 3, 4, 6, and 7, and then distribute the money over three or four of the Malayan companies recommended in my articles. Compass.—Average if you can. The additional capital is required to finance advantageous purchases of cheap raw material. Fees are never accepted.

Demerara.—Probably will be quoted at a higher price then, but I do not care to suggest a definite selling limit. Dubious.—You have made an excellent selection. All the shares, at present prices, should turn out well, but as you ask me to pick out one, I suggest a purchase of Selangors. Dresden.—This is a sound company, but no dividends are expected until 1913. Devonshire.—In the circumstances I should sit tight, but not average unless prices decline still further. You certainly got in at the top, but you will have a better opportunity than the present of getting out without loss. Dunbar.—1. As you obtained the shares at par you would be foolish to sell now. See reply to "Ambleside." 2. See first reply to "County." 3. Keep these for a profit.

Even.—1. See reply to "Apollo." 2. See reply to "Baxter." Engineer.—Retain both for the present, but do not average either. A market revival should give you an opportunity of effecting a satisfactory exchange. Essex.—Not a very satisfactory lot. 1. You have a sporting chance of seeing your money back. 2. Hold for about 4s. 3-6. Hold for the present. You do not say what the shares cost. You have broken Rule 2. Elasticus.—I cannot add to what I said some months ago, when I told you that this company was a very dangerous wild cat. Eagle.—1. The company have made the call as they can employ it in the business just now at an exceedingly profitable rate. They are able to place all the rubber they can treat. 2. See first reply to "County." E. K. (Cork).—Retain them for the present. See first reply to "Ambleside." With regard to your P.S., the present is a good time to buy. I shall be pleased to make some suggestions if you will let me know the amount you wish to invest, and also whether you are looking for dividends in the immediate future or require a somewhat more speculative share with a prospect of capital appreciation.

Freda.—1. I should average. 2. Hold for a time. Fides.—1. I have an unfavourable opinion of this concern, and advise you to get rid of your shares when markets improve. 2. This is a much better company, the shares of which are not overvalued at present price. I have no definite information with regard to the dividend. Far East.—1. I should not buy them. 2. Probably in September. 3. See reply to "Boz."

G. M. M.—Do not sell now. See first reply to "Ambleside." Greystones.—Keep them all for the present. Write again in two months' time. Giff-Will.—I should have been very much surprised if you had made money by gambling in the way you mention. "Bear" selling is a dangerous game to play. As you have now become a "bull," and are carrying-over, I am sorry that I cannot advise you.

Heather.—Do not sell any of your shares for the present. 1. See first reply to "Ambleside." 2. Has a strong directorate, and should do well eventually, but I have never recommended the shares. 3. May go better later in the year, in which case sell. 4. You might buy a few more to average. 5. This is a very unsatisfactory company. It will be well to sell these shares as soon as you can when markets begin to move. Hayrick.—I have never recommended this share, but the market talks them better. I prefer Bandjarsarie, notwithstanding the higher price. Tempeh is another Java company with speculative possibilities at present price. Horatius.—Divide the risk by purchasing the tea-cum-rubber shares.

Impecunious.—1-3. See reply to "Baxter." As you appear to have bought the shares at a higher price you might average.

Jumbo.—1. See first reply to "Ambleside." 2. I have no knowledge of this company. Jean.—1. Do not sell at present. In the next market movement, should the quotation approach the price you gave, write again. 2. I have still a favourable opinion of these. 3. At the price you gave you can afford to wait. See first reply to "Ambleside." Juno.—These are good enough to hold for the guaranteed dividend, but I do not expect any appreciable advance in the quotation during the next few months. Jelly.—1. I do not think there is any cause to worry from the point of view you mention. See first reply to "Ambleside." 2. See reply to "Apollo." Java.—I do not advise you to buy these shares. The concern is not regarded as a satisfactory one, the vendors having taken too much cash. Jamaica.—This is a very fair concern. I cannot tell you what profit you would get if you sold now, as you do not say what price you gave for the shares, but assuming that they were allotted to you, the present quotation would give you 15s. per share profit. Jinkee.—1. Before attempting to answer this query I should like to know exactly what is in your mind. What do you mean by "working capital in hand?" 2. Batu Tiga are now tapping about 55,000 trees, and Sumatra Para about 39,000. Joy.—1. Yes. 2. One of the directors is probably the greatest expert on Ceylon rubber cultivation. 3. There are now other low-priced shares which will pay a dividend earlier, e.g., Beverley Tea and Rubber. 4. Can be bought and sold at the current quotation, but there are not many transactions taking place just now.

Kirkee.—All three are good enough to buy for investment with a view to good dividends in the future. Kim.—1. Malacca debenture holders have the right until November, 1914, of exchanging each £10 stock for one ordinary fully-paid share. 2. The reason is that next year double the number of trees will be in bearing, and in the following year four times as many as at present. Kinta.—1. Both shares should be higher at the end of the period named. 2. I do not think you will have to cut a loss if you are bound to sell then, but cannot suggest selling limit just now. Korea.—See reply to "Barge."

Le Grand.—I should keep 2 for investment. See reply to "Baxter." 1 and 3. I should also retain these for the present, but should sell when I could do so without much loss. La France.—From your list for purchase at present prices I should select 1 3, 5, 7, 9, and 10. Legis.—1. You need not worry about your holding in this company, which is a thoroughly well-managed concern, with excellent prospects. 2. See reply to "Boz." 3 This is a good company, but the price you gave somewhat discounts the future. However, I advise you to hold for recovery and a small profit. Louvigny.—1. See reply to "Apollo." 2. See first reply to "Ambleside. 3. I have no information as to the sales, but shall mention the matter in "Rubber Notes" later on. The shares are worth buying.

Mac.—1. I have not a good opinion of this company, and advise you to exchange your shares at a favourable opportunity. 2. As to whether you should sell or keep these depends upon the price you gave. The past history of the company is anything but a brilliant record, but in some quarters it is thought that the corner has been turned. I should not sell now, but when I could make an exchange without much loss I should do so. Mental.—1. Yes. 2. I should not wait. Mugmug.—1. One of the best shares in the rubber list. 2. Will prove a good investment, but no dividend probable until the end of next year. 3. I think you will see a profit on these in the near future. Man.—Do not sell. The estates are said to be in a better condition than at any time previously in the history of the company. Medico.—1 and 2. Not until the end of next year. 3. Do not buy any more for the present. See reply to "Apollo." Macsporran.—Retain what you have for recovery, and buy some Beverleys. Mac, Midford.—1 and 2. See first reply to "Ambleside," and retain your holding. 3. I do not think there is the least necessity for you to be anxious on this point. Muddler.—Do nothing in the matter. You will probably land yourself with responsibility for costs which may amount to more than the value of your shares if you have anything to do with the business. Keep quiet and let someone else pull the chestnuts out of the fire—if there are any. Max.—You should number your queries. Keep the shares and see first reply to "Ambleside." Madagascar Preference are a good purchase at present price. With regard to the last-named share, see reply to "Apollo." Malchus.—See first reply to "Fides." Mott.—1. Yes. Good to hold for appreciation and dividends. 2. Surely you have seen my constant warnings against these sharps. There is a further reference to them in another column. Massa.—1. No dealings in London, and I have no special information. The district is fairly good, and the company respectable, but I should prefer a Malayan company. 2. Exchange into Garing or Glen Barvic. 3. I return the prospectus. The venture does not appeal to me. I prefer Malaya. Maxwell.—1. It does not pay to plant balata, but the company has the benefit of its old indigenous trees, and is wisely growing rubber as an additional source of revenue. 2. Yes, although in the autumn I may suggest an exchange. See article.

Notlob.—Retain both for recovery. Nancy.—In order that I may advise you to the best advantage, you should let me know (1) the amount you wish to realise, (2) the prices you paid for the shares in your list, and (3) the number of shares you hold in each company. I will keep your letter before me so that this week you need not send more than one coupon.

Opeidon.—In the existing circumstances I advise you to retain all these shares. I think it is likely that you will eventually see a profit in every case. Osta.—From your situation I think it is probable that you have not received copies of the circulars issued to their shareholders by the Kamna Company. Write to the secretary of the company at 21, Ironmonger Lane, London, E.C., for copies of these, and retain your shares until you have had an opportunity of studying the report to be made on the property by Mr. Lillingston. Ormidale.—1. Yes; quite good. The next dividend will be greatly increased. 2. The exchange into Batu Caves might be made if you wish, but I should wait until after the meeting.

Puzzled (Hamburg).—I am glad to know that you did not intend to be sarcastic; but in reply to your further letters I can only repeat that the present is not the time to sell or to fix selling limits. Pharaoh's Daughter.—Thanks for letter. 1. Yes. 2. Yes. I expect the quotation to improve gradually to the prices you name. Peter.—1. I should average. The commencement of operations has been somewhat retarded, but shipments should be made during the next few months, and then the shares will become more active. 2. Average now. See first reply to "Ambleside." P. P. K.—I do not quite understand what you mean by a "recovery to par," as the price is at a premium. I expect these shares to participate in any general recovery which is likely to follow the present market stagnation. Putnam.—1. Worth holding for the guaranteed dividend. 2. A promising share, but no free market. 3. Not a satisfactory property. You ought to say whether you hold the shares already or propose to buy them. Potato.—As you can wait for a couple of years I think you would do well to average. Pierre Louys.—1. They will probably go better, but they will not touch that price this year. 2. Yes, if you are buying to average. You should have mentioned the price given for the original purchase. 3. Yes.

R. C. S.—The company is no doubt a poor one, but I advise you not to use the documents which have been returned to you, but simply to await developments. Rex.—Yes, a purchase now should turn out well later. Rub-it-in.—Begin now. Spread the money over the following shares:—Linggi, Malacca Debentures, Singapore Para, Madagascar Ordinary, Sapong, and Beverleys. River.—You have a very good list, and really the best course to adopt will be to part with those shares which show the least depreciation when you are compelled to sell. The course of markets may then be different from prices ruling at present, and for this reason I hesitate to make a selection in advance. Defer selling until the commencement of the Stock Exchange account prior to the date when the money is required. Rotherhithe.—Hold both for recovery. With regard to the first-named, see reply to "Boz." Rifle.—The shares you mention are a good speculative investment, which in a few years' time may yield the rate required, but they do not now constitute a "safe investment yielding, say, 10 per cent. per annum." If you think of purchasing it will be well not to wait. Red Gauntlet.—The broker's explanation is undoubtedly the correct one. Write to the company pointing out the undue delay, and ask for a definite date when the certificate will be ready. Rush.—1 and 2. It is quite possible that some of the trees have been deliberately tapped to death in the process of thinning out those parts of the estate which are too thickly planted, but I do not advise you to sell your shares. You do not say what price you gave. 3. The commission you paid was quite reasonable. The percentage of brokerage on shares is higher than that for stock on account of the greater amount of work involved in preparing transfers and so forth.

Stair.—1. This is not a share that I could recommend. You had better sell when you can do so without much loss and buy a more marketable share. 2. I should not average this holding. The property is not looked upon as a very satisfactory one. 3. This is a reasonably capitalised company, the shares of which should prove a good rubber investment. Saint Marnock.—1. Do not sell now. See Rubber Notes last week. 2. In good hands, but I do not expect much movement in the price for some time to come. Soton.—1 and 2. Retain your shares. A good dividend should be paid next year. 3. Probably within the next month or two. Subaltern.—1. I do not care to suggest selling limits at present. 2. No dividend expected, at all events until the end of next year. Shares.—1 and 2. See first reply to "Ambleside." 3. See reply to "Apollo." Sissa.—Hold for a profit, which should be obtainable within the next six months. Slainte.—1. Very disappointing, but the autumn should bring a great improvement both in price and outputs. 2. Thos. Barlow and Brother, 38, Eastcheap, London, E.C. Solis.—1. Keep these shares and average now. See first reply to "Ambleside." 2. See reply to "Boz." Sculptor.—1. See reply to "Barge." 2. See reply to "Apollo." 3. See first reply to "Ambleside." Shunned.—1-5. You must try to be patient for another week or two, when definite information should be forthcoming with regard to the subsidiary. 6. The people connected with the company are quite respectable, and at present I certainly do not agree with your conclusion. Spero.—1. A very fair concern, but no great rise in the shares in the immediate future. 2. Should go better with a renewal of market activity. 3. A good company of its kind, perhaps the best. 4. Worth holding. Returns for last six months progressive. 5. I should not buy just now. 6. Not dear at present price. With regard to your P.S., it depends entirely upon what they mean by activity. Seaview.—1-5. Hold all your shares for better markets. 6. This is a good company. 7. You must not believe all that you hear. In this case the rumour is sheer nonsense. Sulphur Water.—Thanks for letter to contents of which I have helped myself liberally. The share is cheap, but yields not so great as on virgin soil.

Telog.—1 and 2. Both good properties, but no dividend on either until 1912. 3. I do not recommend this. 4. Worth keeping for the guaranteed dividend. 5 and 6. Both fairly good trust companies. You do not say whether you hold the shares or think of buying them. Toots.—All good speculative investment shares, which should appreciate when the rubber share market revives. Keep them all for higher prices. I do not care to suggest selling limits just now. Towser.—1. A fair Ceylon company; may earn about 4 per cent. in two years' time. 2. It is said that there will be a speculative advance in the price of this share shortly. 3. Cheap at present price. Thank You.—1. This is not a share that I should select at the moment. Although I have not an unfavourable opinion of the company, I think that there are cheaper bargains in the market. 2. Your method of valuation ignores the important factor of increased outputs in the future, but this prospective increase has a present value. T. S. K.—1. I do not think well of this company. Sell when you can do so without much loss. 2. You will have seen my Notes of last week since you wrote your letter. 3. I should keep these for investment, but I do not think a large dividend will be paid for the current year. Tweedside.—The company has a large number of trees which will not come into bearing before 1912, and until that date approaches I do not expect to see any marked improvement in the price of the shares on their merits. You had better retain your holding for the present, however, as if speculation in the shares revives you may be able to get out without loss.

Unex.—Of the shares named I should choose Linggis, Madagascar Ordinary, and Northumberland Rubber and Tea. Ulysses.—1. I know of no special reason for it. 2. Yes, if you can buy at that price. Ubique.—1. Yes. 2. Not yet. 3. See second reply to "Ambleside." 4. The secretary might be able to let you have a copy of the prospectus; his address is 30, Mincing Lane, London, E.C.

Vec Mac.—I trust that I have correctly deciphered your pseudonym. With the exception of London Asiatics I would not touch any of the shares you hold. At present you would have considerable difficulty in obtaining a price for 1, 2, and 3, but when you can do so you had better get rid of them. Vaughan.—Do not sell now. Pay the call without hesitation and write again in two or three months, when I may be able to suggest a limit.

Well.—1. You paid a high price for these, and I very much doubt whether you will see your money back within the next two or three years unless the shares have a speculative jump irrespective of dividend prospects. I think that such an advance is possible, and therefore I advise you to keep your shares for the present. 2. The market consider these to be a cheap speculation, but you ought not to have too many eggs in one basket, and without seeing a complete list of your holdings I do not care to advise you to exercise your option. Woodend.—This was a most unsatisfactory promotion, and the shares are now unsaleable. If a market is made in them later on you had better clear out. Wareham.—1. See first reply to "Ambleside." 2. Keep these as an investment. 3. It depends upon the price you gave. I think good dividends will continue to be paid for the next few years. Worried.—I should hold both for recovery. I think you will see your price in each case during the next six months. Winkum.—1. (a) The advice previously given holds good. (b) Retain your Kinta Kellas. See reply to "Boz." 2 and 3. I have never recommended these, and cannot do so now, but I do not advise a sale under existing market conditions. W. E. N.—The address you require is as follows:—The Premier Reforming Co., Ltd., 56, Moorgate Street, London, E.C.

Zenith.—I do not regard this as a promising concern, and I cannot advise you to increase your holding.

Miscellaneous.

Amy.—1. Fairly secure. 2. Very speculative. Acorn.—Sell (a) and (b); keep (c). A revival in the autumn would not be surprising. Askwith.—1. I have held a poor opinion of them from the outset. The price certainly suggests doubts about the continuance of interest payments in full, and I should be inclined to cut the loss. Alpha.—No. It is a strong concern, and you had better hold. A. R. G.—Thanks; the circular has attention. A Tradesman.—Am obliged for the circular; but you will find the offer was dealt with in Truth of August 17. A. C. (Calcutta).—1. The concern has so far not come under my notice, and I am consequently unable to offer an opinion. 2. It would be best to get an introduction through your banker or solicitor. Abbey.—See Note last week.

Brewer.—1 and 2. It seems a sound concern, but I should be inclined to leave the shares to those having local knowledge of the trade. 2 and 3. Keep them. B. B.—1. Present prices seem high, but trade is good, and whether there will be any early set-back to your figures is doubtful. 2. The company is so over-capitalised that a material rise is unlikely, but they may go up a shilling or two. Bank.—1. It seems a profit worth securing. 2. Not now. United Alkali Ord. might suit. Bell Hill.—1. Not a concern with which I am familiar. 2. The prospectus read rather well, and the chairman at the statutory meeting was very sanguine. Unless he is badly at fault the shares should be worth keeping. 3. Send a separate inquiry for a reply under Rubber. B. C.-H.—1.-2. The shares are undesirable, and the outside firm is one to be avoided. Your friend should do his business with a broker who is a member of the Stock Exchange. 3. As I do not read it I am not in a position to express any opinion. Your further inquiry shall be answered next week under the heading of "Insurance."

Co. Down.—The reports about the property are very conflicting. If you buy it should be only as a gamble. Cairo.—A fine property, but company is carrying a big dead weight of capital. At present price shares very much of a speculation. Clutha.—1. Yes. 2. They may go a little higher, but have already risen substantially. 3. It seems a profit worth taking. Constant Reader.—1. A so-called bank which you will be well advised to avoid. 2. Yes. Coventry.—Sell all three.

Dyewares.—1 and 2. Neither can be regarded as a first-class investment, and you paid full values. At present prices better hold. 3. The concern has frequently been criticised in Truth. Its advice cannot be regarded as disinterested. Delta.—The shares should be left alone.

Emberton.—I regret that I am unable to give you the information for which you ask. To do so would, indeed, be a violation of the Lotteries Act.

Feedall.—There are, of course, enormously long odds against any individual holder of such bonds drawing a prize, and I have always condemned them as most unattractive gambles. The exchange you suggest would be desirable; read my Rubber Notes.

Jamaica.—It is under good management. Shares at the present stage very speculative, but might be held. Josef.—I do not recall having heard of the concern. If you have any papers relating to it I should like to see them. J. J. B.—Have nothing to do with it. The methods adopted for pushing the shares are sufficient to condemn the concern. Justice.—No; Financial Opinion is an obscure publication more or less closely associated with certain notorious bucket-shops. Joey.—Can only suggest that you should write again and threaten to put the matter in the hands of a solicitor if the document is not forwarded at once.

Kingfisher.—1. My general opinion of the paper is very unfavourable, but the article referred to is evidently written with knowledge. You had better sell the shares if you can.

Mentone.—1. Whether you will ever see your money back is doubtful. I should be inclined to sell. 2. Realise them. 3. See Rule 2. Maskeen.—1. Better hold. 2. Yes; a rise before the year is out is not unlikely in this group. Mac.—Very much of a gamble. They might as well be sold. Malchus.—1. These might be held. 2. Not a share I care for. Mott.—1. No. 2. See Rule 2. M. B., Macroom.—See my rule as to coupon.

Nathan Royd.—I do not see that the liability offers a strong reason for selling, but if you do not care to accept it better realise; otherwise I do not see why should part.

Orient.—I think the shares are worth holding.

Pokesdam.—Have nothing to do with the Industrial Development Corporation or its offers. Putnam.—Stocks of the class are under a cloud just now, but I would not part with either at present prices. Punch.—It is a case where you should act only under legal advice. Puzzled (Fence Houses).—1. The shares are, I am afraid, a hopeless gamble, but unless you are prepared to prove wilful misrepresentation in the prospectus you cannot escape the calls. Pictory.—You have been foolish, but you cannot claim the return of the option money. The firm has been repeatedly exposed in Truth. 2. It is under good auspices, and may do well in time.

R. R. F. F.—1. I do not advise either of the shares. 2 and 3. See Rule 2.

Scrutator II.—Thanks; a further reference is made to the Financial Outlook in another column. Salop.—The present price is strangely high. Personally, I should be inclined to accept it. 2. Sell. Stair.—1. I adhere to my previous advice. City of London Brewery 4 per cent. debenture stock would be a sound purchase. 2 and 3. Better keep these. Sapper.—1. Port of London 4 per cent. B stock. 2. I do not recommend it. Sail.—Sell 1 and 2. 3. The name is familiar, but I have not so far had occasion to criticise the concern. Speculator.—Have nothing to do with the National Share Exchange, which is a notorious bucket shop that has many times been condemned in Truth.

Tea.—1. Either would make a very fair investment. 2. An article intended to anticipate such a question was published on August 3. Theatre.—I regret that I have no special information as to the position and prospects of these companies. As to the directors of the other concerns, you could obtain the names from the companies, or from Somerset House.

Virgilius.—1. Better sell them. 2. I simply referred to the advisability of taking profits quickly.

VIGILANT.

All Rights reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

THE WOMAN WHO WASN'T.

SOME men are born bachelors; some by devious routes attain bachelordom; and some have bachelordom thrust upon them. Philip Trevenner attained bachelordom in so singular a manner that the story is worth relating.

I think myself, looking at the matter dispassionately, that Providence, on the "eye for an eye" principle, was simply paying him back in kind for his many—let me call them for want of a better word—peccadilloes.

They were never serious on Trevenner's side, these peccadilloes, and they were invariably respectable; but their name was legion, and each was a little work of art in its way, because Trevenner possessed temperament and imagination, and a refined dislike to rough edges and unfinished effects. He was disgracefully good-looking, too, and his manners were what nice elderly ladies call "winning;" so it goes without saying that he had been spoilt. His ways, indeed, had all been pleasantness, and most of his paths peace; and the women who adorned and beautified those paths and had taken a large share in the spoiling had been irreproachable women. Practically he might have married anybody worth marrying. I could mention a dozen of them. Some went off and married men they didn't care for to level up their self-respect; one evanesced into a convent, and a few recovered.

We all felt the iniquity of the thing, and now and then we lodged a protest; but if buttonholed on the subject and made to declare the why and the wherefore of his flower to flower progress, Philip's formula was invariably the same.

"My dear chap, she's quite charming; but I couldn't, y'know. I don't know how it is, but there's just something wanting."

In point of fact, he had found everything in the girls with whom he religiously philandered—everything but the one essential—the one elusive, inexpressible essential which would have bound him in chains stronger than iron, and dearer than his immortal salvation. And so it came to pass that he flitted his expectant way from bloom to bloom, always drinking but never intoxicated.

When he came out to Jamaica his reputation preceded him, and right-minded people were very much on their guard. He stayed with me (I was planting bananas at the time, and praying God to avert hurricanes), and he battened on the magic sensuous beauty of the place in a way that couldn't fail to flatter an old inhabitant.

For Insurance Announcements, see page 563.

Why Pay Rent? Take an Immediate Mortgage, free in event of death, from the Scottish Temperance Life Office. Repayments usually less than rent. Mortgage expenses paid by the Company. Prospectus from London Office, 3, Cheapside, E.C.

The glory of the night, which is perhaps more potent and irresistible in Jamaica than anywhere in the world, drew him out to revel in it when he should have been asleep, or at any rate rocking pacifically with his penultimate cigarette. Of course, he was a poet—most very susceptible men are poets, or would like to be. And being a poet, he kept a pilot eye abroad for the affinity for whom his fastidious soul yearned, and this perpetual quest gave an immense interest to life. He took it very seriously.

"There is nothing worth pursuing," he told me earnestly one day, "but the Unattainable."

"And she doesn't seem to be in any particular hurry," I made scathing answer.

"I don't know," he replied more slowly still, and his eyes, too blue for any woman's peace and absurdly well lashed, grew wide and introspective. He appeared to forget the cigarette between his fingers, and the intuition which speaks at such moments told me that he was on the verge of making some disclosure.

"Let's have it!" I suggested.

Philip detached his gaze from the palm-fringed hill-line, and fixed it on a pepper bush immediately in front of us. The shining scarlet pods glowing amid grass green leaves appeared to rivet his attention for a full two minutes, and then he spoke.

"I think," he said very slowly, "I'm not quite sure, but I think she's come."

I said, "Angels and Ministers of Grace defend us!" and stood up. And Philip replied, "Quite so. I'll probably be able to tell you more to-morrow."

I'd said too much—just too much—he was jarred. He took up his terai, and running down the iron steps, he swung off between the hibiscus bushes, waving a "so-long" up at me as he passed beneath.

* * * * * * *

"Well?" I inquired again next day. I made the inquiry cautiously over plates full of grape fruit skins, and amid little smears of guava jelly. We had been demolishing Blue Mountain coffee, snaps, and fruit at eleven, and calling it breakfast.

Solomon, my particular weakness in coloured servants, was out of the room.

Philip nodded. "It's gospel truth," he said. "Goliath has fallen."

"And the Unattainable?" I gasped.

"Is going to be attained, somehow, someday, somewhere——"

He spread out his hands and looked—how shall I express it?—well, just as Philip Trevenner could look at his best.

"Describe her," I insisted. I had several notions in my head, ranging from the Governor's daughter, who was engaged to a person of title and importance at home, to a beautiful quadroon named Melia who had run through two husbands, and led her third a hell of a life in a tiny village about six miles from where we were sitting.

At length Philip did describe her. He described uncommonly well. Very reluctantly, as the description proceeded, I realised that he had been right. All the women who had come his way had fallen short. Every light fancy of his thirty-one crowded years had pointed onward to this coveted goal. At the end of an avenue of sweet disappointments he had found the one thing needful.

"I can't place her," I said at last, rejecting several might-bes who hovered in my mind. "Complexion pearl pale: that suits most good-looking women out here; but eyes which ask all things, but give nothing, save a little gentle mockery, and seem different colours in different lights, and a clean-cut face which Burne Jones might have conceived only in his sublimest dreams, and a mouth like the mouth of Rossetti's Blessed Damozel as it ought to be—no, I can't place her: yet why can't I place her? I know the resources of the island as well as any man.

"You don't suppose you are bewitched, Trevenner?"

"Indeed I do," Philip cried, "as never man was bewitched yet."

"And this bungalow? You struck up north from Mount Diabolo, you say, and rode for hours through a regular jungle: then tied up the horse and climbed, and came upon it at last in a clearing?"

"In a clearing," he repeated; "and the moonlight held it all in soft, silver arms, and the bougainvillea and some great white flowers—funereal looking flowers whose name I don't know—smothered everything. The servants must have been in their quarters asleep, for I never heard a breath of them. There was a tender scent about that got into one's head, and a sound of kissing in the grass."

"Tree toads," I growled.

"No, it wasn't tree toads."

"Never mind—go on."

"And I began to feel a bit lost and apprehensive—when she came, opening the long window which was closed, and walking down the steps very quickly and smiling. She was dressed in yellow, and it was just the colour she ought to wear. Some quite pretty women can't wear it, but she—it sounds whimsical, I know—but it went with her smile. I held my hat in my hand. It would have been sacrilege to put it back on my head; and then all suddenly the smile was gone, and she opened her eyes wide, and mocked me a little—and was a woman. Then we talked——"

"An edifying conversation, I trust?" said I, irritably.

"I don't know if it was edifying or not," he mused; "she had just the tiniest tinge of foreign accent. Good Lord! how that improves a woman's voice! We sat in a little seat in the garden—a little broken seat. She called it a garden, but it was rather a wilderness; but then she explained to me that the wild fig-tree which grew at the side of the bungalow destroyed all fertility, and she had a superstition about having it touched."

"And her name?"

"I didn't ask."

"Does she live alone?"

"Yes."

"Did you make love to her?"

"Is thy servant a drunken private that he should do this thing?"

"Well, as a rule——"

"You fool! Oh! you born fool! This isn't the rule—it's the exception. I didn't even touch her hand."

"What did she tell you?"

"Oh, about her life and the difficulty of managing niggers. I asked her if she knew you."

"Did she?"

"She said she thought the name seemed familiar to her."

For a man whose grandfather, yes, and whose great-grandfather had helped to make the island, with respective galaxies of slaves which would put the Queen of Sheba to the blush, this was good hearing! I tried not to look too flattered.

"She was awfully interested in Kingston," Philip went on; "she so rarely goes down. She has never seen the tramways."

"Never—I beg your pardon—never seen the tramways? Merciful Heaven, how old is she?"

"About twenty-three."

"I've no explanation to offer," I said, "unless it's brain—or tar."

"I could swear it's neither," he cried. "She's better educated and better informed than the majority of women one meets in a London season. Why, we happened to wander on to French politics. She's got the causes which led up to the Reign of Terror all at her finger-tips—and such fingers too!"

"Just a globule of tar here and there often makes for intellect," I remarked, judicially. And then Philip Trevenner rose, and the red light of fury looked out at me for the first time from his serene eyes.

"If her forebears were blacker than sloes and madder that hatters, I'd take her!" he shouted out. "She's the woman by whom I've unconsciously measured every other woman I've known. She's the woman who, God be praised! has kept me from committing matrimony, because I was meant for her, and she was meant for me."

Then he went away and got his horse (or my horse, as a matter of fact) and rode off through the hibiscus bushes, and set the horse's head towards Diabolo. As for me, I sought out and set in order many servants; and the sound of my rebuking voice might have been heard down to the post office, for I was very bothered indeed.

But busy as I was, I did not go off to my banana tracts as I had planned to do. Instead I sent for Solomon and conferred with him behind a locked door. Now, Solomon is upwards of eighty, and his wool suggests the hoar frost of an English November. Moreover, he was born in slavery, possesses a staunch soul, and a wisdom which he has not transmitted to his numerous progeny. He served my father and his father before him, and to him I opened my heart just as much as it is ever safe to open one's heart to a West Indian nigger.

"Solomon, what is there over Diabolo way, where the hills run up, and cocoanuts are scarce, and no folks care to live because the ground is not profitable?"

"Coffee grow fine dere, Buckra; many try coffee."

"No, beyond the coffee line, right away above the villages."

Solomon shot out troubled lips and added wrinkles to an already over-wrinkled brow.

"Dere's some speak fool's talk ob de Obi man," he whispered, with a cautious look at the locked door. "Obsurd, sah! Dis son hab nebba dealings with such; but clap-a-tongues will rattle, sure."

"No, it's no Obi man; think again."

Solomon thought, and as a belated result of his reflections his lips came apart, disclosing two gold-crowned teeth—the pride of his life.

"Look yow," he said, lifting a brown, emphatic finger, "when our folk shet thems in o' night and make duppy-talk, dem offen gat a-whispering ob de Yaller Missus."

"The Yaller Missus," I repeated, for now things were beginning to shape, and my soul was stirred to a profound though fearful curiosity. Yet I would not appear excited, for Solomon, in common with his kind, would have trailed off into trivialities had I seemed to hang on his words. I laughed derisively.

"Buckra, de tale am true—so true as I serve yow, sah, and de Buckra your fader and de Buckra his fader."

"Bah!" I jeered. "I can get such tales from the hen roost any morning."

I lit a cigarette and began to consume it with a contemptuous expression of face.

My disdain stimulated Solomon. A nigger, though rarely truthful, hates to be disbelieved.

"Sare, lissen! One time, a hunderd years ago, dere come into Moneague from ober sea a young Missus—pow'ful gran'-lookin' she was, dat she was. All de folks clatter 'bout 'er, yass, dey clatter like turkeys. But she no say nodding at all. She hab money. She go for build a pow'ful fine bungalow up ober de hills. Ver' quiet she lib, sayin' no man howdy, but de folks dey nebber go comprehend her. Dis ting annoy dem. One sez 'e sez 'she hab de ebil eye.' All follow cluck cluck like-a chickens 'she hab de ebil eye.' Dis sayin' grew, an' spread an' spread an' grew. Then come 'long a drought, an' de pickneys take fever and de yams dry up. So dey make her cuss-cuss: many cuss-cuss dey make. Last dey creep off for find de Obi man for ask him tell dem what tey do. De Obi man 'e get some ashes for study dey. 'Yow go kill her,' say de Obi man; 'yow go for burn de house too, so de duppy am driv away. Den your pickneys will no fall sick an' your yams will grow like-a pumpkins.' So dey say him tenkey and come 'way."

Solomon pausing for his words to penetrate, I spoilt the effect by asking sharply if they obeyed the Obi man.

"Yass, Buckra, dey kill her for sartin, cause ob de ebil eye. Den dey grow skeered and run 'way, so de house am nebber burnt. Den de figs and de wait-a-bits and de odders dey come climb-climb round 'bout it—an' nobody want to find it now."

"So that is the story of the Yaller Missus?" I said, yawning. "Who do the folks suppose she was, Solomon?"

"Nobody could say for sartin, Buckra, but my fader 'e sez sez 'e she was a prinzess from France in de days of head-chopping. She come 'way here, because they want for make her marry with a man she no lub; but she came here for wait the man she lub—an' 'e never ar-rive."

"Um," I said, "that will do."

* * * * * *

On the next day I elected to follow Trevenner. There is not in the world, I should suppose, a more distasteful task than to track a man without his knowledge; but I accomplished it, and because of the many turns and the very thick verdure of the route he led me, I accomplished it well.

I saw him tie his horse at the bottom of a steep, densely-wooded hill, and I tied mine not far off. Then I tracked him with difficulty through the undergrowth to the clearing.

In the clearing things were even as he had said. The moonlight hugged the scene to its silver bosom, and large white brugmansias, with their very sickly smell, warred with masses of bougainvillea for possession of the place. The bungalow did not show its extreme age at nightfall. Moonlight rejuvenates things. The silence was a burden, because silence in the tropics is so very rare.

As I crouched behind a clump of bushes I saw Trevenner's face. He had removed his hat, and held it with his riding whip in one hand. It was transfigured, expectant, and completely satisfied.

First he gave a low call, and then he strode forward very quickly. He strode forward till he stood below the broken balcony of the bungalow, and then he stood looking up, and by his expression I knew that all the world had receded, and that his vision was filled with the one picture worth seeing.

But I saw nothing.

"How long you've been!" he cried. I could hear him quite plainly, and then his gaze followed nothing down the steps, and he walked, smiling and talking with nothing till he reached a little broken iron seat—waited a moment as if for nothing to sit, and then sat himself. To see him sitting there—his arm slid along the back of the seat, talking earnestly, soulfully, with all his handsome face aglow, to nobody, was hideous beyond compare.

Crudely expressed and coldly written, the thing sounds silly enough; but I say solemnly and deliberately that had his companion been a gibbering skeleton I could have borne it better.

The horror—the unspeakable, naked, hair-raising horror of the Thing which is, but is not seen, laid hands upon me, so that I was constrained to yell and fly. But I kept myself together, and from the shelter of my bush I sat out the whole grisly drama. I think (I never spoke of it afterwards to Trevenner), but I think he must have asked for a kiss that night, and that it—the nothingness—put him off with a glance and a laugh.

I think he wanted it—the nothingness— in his arms so badly, that the yearn of it almost broke his heart.

His eyes said as much.

I think they had come to an understanding, and that it—the nothingness—promised him a great deal—soon.

The gruesomeness of it became at last an irritation. I shut my eyes, then opened them quickly, and, straining till a sharp pain pricked at my eyeballs, I tried furiously to make concrete that awful indefinable nebulous patch of night which held all Trevenner's hope. But it was of no avail. I was neither a poet, a dreamer, nor a lover. To the practical man the night is just the night, and nothing more. But Trevenner still gesticulated, making impassioned speeches to the empty air, and the stars stared down at him, whilst a strong moonbeam fell across his ankles giving just the fleeting impression of the soft train of a woman's yellow dress. I think it—the nothingness—dismissed him at last. He went reluctantly with longing backward glances, behaving precisely as an actor who was rehearsing a love-scene alone might behave.

Just by my bush he stopped and waved his hat, then he stepped out of sight. And as for me, I did what I had sworn to my heart to do, before Solomon had forged half through his "Yaller Missus" narrative. I, with centuries of civilisation behind me, was grossly pagan enough to obey the Obi Man. It cost me more in wear and tear than a six weeks' cholera bout which I had battled through some years before. With petrol from a tin canister which I had brought for the purpose, I smeared the wooden supports of the balcony. Then cold to the marrow of me, I stepped inside the bungalow into a square room, where mouldy tatters still showed that curtains had once been, and I sprinkled petrol freely here and there. Thereupon I ignited a little torch I had made, and scattered flaring matches plentifully, and I prayed for the repose of a soul and the safety of a body. The whole place was simply bone-dry. Before I got quite clear the flames crackled and blazed, and as I mowed my frantic way through the undergrowth they seemed to shriek; and I wondered in the shaken brain which just possessed power to carry me away if I were a murderer, or only a Good Samaritan.

Guilt, which I yet knew in my less harried moments to be no guilt, weighed heavy on my soul through the remainder of that oppressive night and all the next day. I did not dare to reason with Trevenner, or confess to any part in the ugly business of that ugly evening.

He was at his best and brightest. In his face was the holy ecstasy of the bridegroom who gives of his highest without reservation, indivisibly.

"Old man," he said to me over the mid-day meal in which we were feigning an interest, "d'you know you seem to me to-day like some small grey echo from a very remote little world that was all barren and flat and desolate. From my soul I pity you, and I pity all that world too."

I growled, because a handy piece of mango sticking in my throat at the moment precluded speech.

"There's been something awry with love ever since Adam, being wilful, spoilt its perfection," he went on dreamily. "It seems to me that I, of all men, have been allowed to recapture that 'first fine careless rapture.' I'm awfully obliged to the Providence which ordains these things. Here's to the Eden we all dream of but rarely realise!"

He lifted a glass of Madeira, and putting it to his lips laughed at me across the brim.

"I won't drink it," I said, obstinately. "Edens aren't wholesome—they never last, and it's better they shouldn't."

"At least you'll drink to her?"

I got up.

"I've no more time to waste," I said, a little shakily.

"Good old Briton!" he murmured, lazily. "I've brought time-wasting to a fine art—time-wasting and love-making. My grandmother was a Frenchwoman."

I was striding from the room, but at this announcement, which touched some uneasy chord of memory, I stopped.

"A Frenchwoman?" I repeated, for it was news to me.

"Yes, a daughter of the Marquis de Faure, guillotined in the Reign of Terror. Sanson pronounced his head the handsomest trophy of all his labours."

Trevenner laughed. "We used to have his portrait," he said. "He was like me—only his amours were more cosmopolitan. They ranged from a princess to a little blanchisseuse, who eventually betrayed him to the Tribunal."

I came back into the room, for a great understanding had been suddenly vouchsafed me.

"Trevenner," I said, with an earnestness that must have been almost pathetic. "Don't go—up there to-night. Let me run down to Kingston first—and find out more—don't——"

"Touch pure water when every nerve in your body aches with thirst? My dear cautious ascetic, go and tell your billion upon billion stars not to shine."

I knew that coercion was useless. Trevenner would believe no story of mine. He must work out his own salvation. And he did. . . . . .

The manner of that working out is hidden from me, for it seemed better that he should fight such beasts as must rend him alone. So he rode off when night fell with a song on his lips, a song in his heart, and his face—it was St. Stephen's face at his trial—Sir Galahad's face with his quest accomplished—there is no describing it. Remember, at the best of times he was a very handsome man.

* * * * * *

With the dawn which I had sat up to greet he came back, staggering like a drunkard. He had lost his horse, which subsequently wandered home by itself, and for three days and three nights I cursed myself, and wished I had left ill alone. But he kept his reason. After six weeks of fever, the like of which I have never seen, he even kept some remnants of his good looks. But all his youth went, and when he began at last to creep out into the sunshine, one saw that his hair was iron-grey.

He never told me to what conclusion he came on the night when he looked to climb to the very pinnacle of bliss and instead fell down headlong, but ever after he avoided women as a conscientious teetotaller avoids the lure of the whisky flask.

BOOKS.

MR. INGRAM'S interesting book "The True Chatterton" (1) has set me wondering at the amazing magic of archaic or dialectic words. Words, in fact, like wines seem to derive an exquisite flavour from their age or from their climate. Translate, e.g., one of Burns' exquisite lyrics into English and it will seem almost commonplace, although the words you interchange are precisely equivalent. For that matter, Burns himself, when writing poetry in English, seems shorn of half his magical power. Chatterton, too, writing in modern English, is surprisingly ineffective as compared with the author of the "Rowley Poems," while these poems themselves, when translated adequately into modern English, lose half their magic. The difference between reading these Rowley poems in their archaic dress and in modern English is like the difference between seeing "fair Melrose by the pale moonlight" and seeing it by the light of common day. The truth is Chatterton in these poems was almost more ingenious than inspired, but then his imitative ingenuity was amazing. His wonderful ear, too, helps to account for the disillusioning effect of even such a translation into modern English of his archaic verse as Professor Skeat's. "Professor Skeat," says Mr. Watts-Dunton, "seems to miss that peculiar musical movement governing Chatterton's ear, which often renders it impossible to replace by any modern word whatsoever an archaism or pseudo-archaism of his, whether invented by himself or found." Almost all the antique words in his archaic poems Chatterton got out of Bayley's and Kersey's dictionaries or Speght's Chaucer, compiling from them a glossary, in one column of which he set a modern word and in a parallel column its antique equivalent. Then he would occasionally and audaciously invent an accommodating word to lengthen or shorten a verse or to supply a needed rhyme. He would even alter the spelling in the same stanza of the same word to suit another rhyme! It is odd that the believers in Rowley, and they once were many, neither observed these audacities, nor his carelessness in omitting to accent the final "e" or "es" as the poets of "Rowley's" day did, nor even his carelessness in dating a poem on "The Battle of Hastings" a century before it took place! How again could any critic, or, for that matter, any reader mistake the modern ring of the

(1) "The True Chatterton." A New Study from Original Documents. By John H. Ingram. (London: T. Fisher Unwin. 10s. 6d. net.)

(2) "My Memories." By the Princess Caroline Murat. With an Introduction by Robert Leighton. (London: Eveleigh Nash. 15s. net.)

(3) "Glimpses of East Africa and Zanz bar." By Ethel Younghusband. With fifty-eight Illustrations from Photographs and Map. (London: John Long, Limited. 12s. 6d. net.)

(4) "Leaves from a Garden." By the Author of "Leaves from a Life." (London: Eveleigh Nash. 10s. 6d. net.)

(5) "The Road Back." By Sidney Warwick. With a Frontispiece by Gilbert Wright. (London: Cassell and Co., Limited. 6s.)

(6) "The Test." By Jane Adams. (London: John Long, Limited. 6s.)

(7) "The Lost Valley," and other Stories. By Algernon Blackwood. With eight Illustrations by W. Graham Robertson. (London: Eveleigh Nash. 6s.)

song attributed to Sir Thybbot Gorges and to the fifteenth century:—

> As Elinour by the green arbour was sitting,
> As from the sun's heat she harried—(hurried)—
> She said, as her white hands her hosen were knitting,
> "What pleasure it is to be married!"
>
> My husband, Lord Thomas, a forester bold,
> As ever clove pin or the basket,
> Does no kind of comfort from Elinour hold—
> I have it as soon as I ask it.

Fancy a fifteenth century poet cantering along in this free-and-easy style! On the other hand, our finest contemporary critic of poetry, Mr. Watts-Dunton, suggests that Coleridge borrowed from Chatterton the "Christabel ring, the ring which Scott only half caught and which Byron failed to really catch at all"; while of the spirit of Chatterton's poetry he says, "it would be difficult to name any of his successors in whom the high temper of romance has shown so intense a life," and, indeed, when Chatterton's influence through Coleridge, Keats, and Shelley on all subsequent poets is considered, it will seem impossible, as Mr. Watts-Dunton contends, "to refuse to him the place of the father of the Romantic School." And this father of the Romantic School of poetry died of suicide or of starvation, or more probably of suicide as his only escape from starvation at the age of eighteen! Did any other age or country ever produce so precocious and so unappreciated a genius? It is painful to read once more in Mr. Ingram's memoir the poignant contrast between Chatterton's life of slow starvation in London and his buoyant and boastful account of that life in his letters to his mother and sister. The ordinary bookseller's hack in that day in London was a sufficiently pitiable creature. Goldsmith has described him:—

> Here lies poor Ned Purdon, from misery hurled,
> Who long was a bookseller's hack;
> He led such a damnable life in this world
> I don't think he'll wish to come back!

But neither Ned Purdon nor Goldsmith himself nor any other bookseller's hack of that day, whether with or without genius, ever endured what Chatterton endured, because none with such a consciousness of unappreciated genius was cursed with a pride so shrinking, unsociable, and sensitive. Mr. Ingram is savagely but really not unduly severe upon Horace Walpole, who cuts a despicable figure in his relations with the poet, and who, indeed, is chiefly responsible for the mortification of the poor boy's pride and hopes. Walpole was himself so conscious of this responsibility that he lied freely and boldly about his correspondence with the poet, and did all he could after the lad's death to blacken his memory. There never was a clearer or baser case of "odisse quem laeseris" than Horace Walpole's persistent and venomous depreciation of Chatterton's genius, and blackening of his character after the poet's tragic death. His denunciation of the boy as a "villain," "scoundrel," etc., etc., because he tried to impose the Rowley Poems on the world, came well from the forger of the venomous letter purporting to have been written to Rousseau by Frederick the Great. "The King of Prussia's 'letter to Rousseau' and the 'Memorial' pretended to have been signed by noblemen and gentlemen, were fabrications, as Walpole himself confessed, only to make mischief," says Disraeli in his "Curiosities of Literature"; and he adds, "it well became him whose happier invention, 'The Castle of Otranto,' was brought forward in the guise of forgery, to have so unfeelingly reprobated the innocent inventions of Chatterton." As for Walpole's critical disparagement of the works of Chatterton, Mr. Ingram should remember Milton's "of whom to be dispraised were no mean praise," and that Chatterton shared with "trifling Johnson and piddling Goldsmith" the literary disapproval of a critic who proclaimed Christopher Anstey's "New Bath Guide" as the supreme poetic work of the day!

It amused me in many of the reviews I have seen of the Princess Caroline Murat's "My Memories" (²) to find her lofty lineage dwelt upon—the grand-daughter of Murat and of Napoleon's sister, Caroline. What is there lofty in such a lineage? The Buonapartes were all vulgar more or less, and Caroline was perhaps the vulgarest of the family, while Murat was a bounder of bounders. The tone and temper of "My Memories" is precisely what you might expect from such "lofty lineage"—petty, spiteful, and vulgar, both in the ordinary and in the music-hall sense of the word. It may be said in extenuation and with truth that the society the Princess moved in and reports upon was as low in its tastes and habits as it was high in its position. Let us take, e.g., the Princess's models of propriety and of refined taste—the Princess de Metternich, say, who, you are told, was "a woman of refined taste and a model of propriety." Well, this lady was in great request at all the Empress's entertainments because Thérèse's risky songs and Rogolbosche's indecent kicks were > equally familiar to her, and her burlesque imitations of both were so clever that they became a huge advertisement of the originals, sending people flocking in night disguise to the Mabille gardens and the Petit Moulin-Rouge.

It is true you are assured that the Princess de Metternich never committed herself, but you are assured also that she was grotesquely plain. Then we rise higher to the Empress Eugénie, who "was too strict and circumspect herself to permit any looseness of talk or of conduct, and scandal was rigidly discouraged even if it could not be suppressed." But even this imperial model of propriety > used to go into her favourite corner of the drawing-room, and there, surrounded by her most intimate friends, she used to get the Prefect of Police to tell anecdotes. The Prefect's tales, as you may imagine, were highly spiced, and her Majesty enjoyed the most adventurous situations. The more highly-flavoured was the story the more did our Sovereign appreciate it.

Again, the Empress, when tired out in a paperchase, allows herself to be carried home by two of her courtiers astride a pole! In telling this and other like stories of the Empress the Princess permits herself comments that one would be sorry to quote. Apart from such comments, however, the impression left upon you by the Princess's reminiscences of the Court of the Second Empire is that of its fatuousness and frivolity.

> I live over again [says the Princess] the years from 1848 to 1870—the years when I really lived—when each day brought some new pleasure, some fresh excitement. The days when the first thought in the morning was "What shall we do to-day to amuse ourselves?" the last thought, "How shall we amuse ourselves to-morrow?" In a word the days of the Empire.

It is sad to think that the fate of a great people should lie in such feeble and foolish hands as they virtually did when the Emperor, broken down by premature old age and by the attacks of the most agonising of diseases, lost control of his own destiny and of that of France. Five years before the fall of the Empire and the subjugation of France, the Duke of Morny, who had hitherto steered the ship of State, died, and the tiller passed into the hands of the Empress. It was Shrove Tuesday when the mourning for Morny had eclipsed for the moment the gaiety of the Court:—

> Suddenly, in her natural exuberance of spirits, her Majesty had a quaint idea; doubtless some fancy, a memory of her bohemian youth, passed through her brain. Sitting astride a chair and grasping its side bars as if they were the reins of a horse, she, by her looks, invited the others to do the same. Soon ladies and gentlemen alike mounted their wooden steeds, and a regular Shrove Tuesday cavalcade ensued, going round and round the large room after the Empress to the accompaniment of the trumpeting and the boisterous calls of the hunting-field.

This is how the new reign which succeeded that of Morny was signalised and symbolised! Whatever truth there may be in the story quoted from these "Memories" in all the papers, of the Emperor in 1870 tearing to pieces the decree of the declaration of war, and of his being, when prostrate and semi-conscious with exhaustion, forced by the Empress to sign a duplicate of the decree, there can be little doubt that she took upon herself a responsibility to which he felt himself physically and mentally unequal. Indeed, you cannot understand how he could have been permitted in his desperate state of health to take the field and forbidden peremptorily (when all was lost) to return to Paris. The Empress at least must have known what a wreck he was, and must have realised that a man to whom it was insupportable anguish to mount a horse, ought not to have been forced into a momentous war and even forced to take the field himself.

> More than once [says the Princess] when in intimate conversation with those he trusted, the Emperor deplored that he had been kept in total ignorance of the gravity of the report made in consultation by the surgeons some days before the declaration of war—a consultation in which the surgeons concurred in the opinion, already given by Professor Lee, that an operation was urgent and should no longer be delayed.

When the operations were at last performed the Emperor died, as every one knows, under the third; but even now no one seems to know for certain how or why. The Princess says he succumbed from an overdose of chloral prescribed by Sir William Gull, while it is usually supposed that he died from blood-poisoning. It has always seemed to me surprising that the "fierce light which beats upon a throne" should be thus "dark with excessive bright." Kings and emperors seem to have no private life, everything they do from their rising to their resting seems to be reported in the minutest detail in every newspaper; yet of the real manner of their lives or of their deaths there are always a dozen conflicting versions! Before parting from these interesting "Memories" I cannot help saying that the Princess notes only one side of the account of the Buonaparte family with France. She never wearies of deploring the loss to that country of the Empire. But what did the Empire cost France? To come down even to sordid details, surely France has been more than generous in leaving the Empress £80,000 a year, which, according to "My Memories," is her present income.

Mrs. Younghusband's "Glimpses of East Africa and Zanzibar" (3) is an unsophisticated and delightful record of the experiences of an officer's wife in such places as Mombasa and Zanzibar, and of such peoples as the Swahilis, Masai, Goanese, and Arabs. "I only try to describe in simple words what I saw and found out for myself," and she certainly gives you a vivid impression of the kind of things which would strike an observant English lady with a love of sport in those regions and of the point of view from which she would observe them. The picture is not inviting to a lady who cares nothing for sport. Insects of all kinds, Brobdingnagian in size and numberless as the sands, harass or horrify you night and day: monstrous centipedes that dig their foul feet into your flesh, no less monstrous millipedes, snails seven inches long, proportionately gigantic crabs, cockroaches as big as bats, ants in armies a mile long marching in a never-deviating line over everything and every one, whose bite is a burn; hideous, hairy, bloated, crab-sized spiders, locusts, and, of course, mosquitoes, etc., etc., etc. Only in the East can one understand why the Devil is called in the Bible Beelzebub, i.e., king of flies. By the way, is it possible that the mosquito can be cheated by the ruse Mrs. Younghusband describes? "Carefully tuck your net well in under the mattress all round your bed, then sleep on the sofa. The mosquitoes will spend their night trying to find a way into the netting." She does not suggest any ruse for the diversion of a leopard under the bed—one of her pleasant experiences!

There are undiscovered regions at our doors revealed to us by the author of a charming book I have just laid down, "Leaves from a Garden" (4). The author strikes at starting a sad and even a dreary note, but presently, while the key is still minor, the tune is merrier or at least cheerfuller. We emerge out of the dark valley of shadows, if not into sunshine, at least into moonlight, and indeed it is this lambent, mellow light which seems to bathe all the scenes and personages—garden and gardeners, rector and his daughters and his parishioners—in this "Our Village" of another century than Miss Mitford's.

Your interest in Sidney Warwick's "The Road Back" (5) and in "The Test" (6) of Miss Jane Adams is damped by your lack of sympathy with the heroes of these novels. All the same, "The Road Back" is an unusually clever study of a prodigal on his extremely slow return journey from living with and as the swine. The other characters in the novel—and there are a distracting number—are also well drawn, and often excite a sympathy you fail to feel with its hero. How often, I wonder, since Mr. Anstey wrote in the eighties "The Giant's Robe" has the theft of another man's novel been the pivot of a plot? It has never in my wide experience been put to such ineffective use as in "The Test." The hero, who steals the novel, marries the heroine, from whom he steals it, and is as unhappy and makes her as unhappy as we feel they both thoroughly deserve to be. It is just possible, but not probable, that the American reading public, for whom "The Test" was originally written, may find something admirable in the hero and heroine and interesting in their fortunes. Of all the eerie stories Mr. Algernon Blackwood tells in "The Lost Valley" (7) I like best that of Professor Parnacute, who was rewarded for releasing a frowsy and broken-hearted thrush from its cage by the release, temporarily at first, and permanently at last, of himself from the cramping and sordid cage of his own body. Next to this I enjoyed the exquisite fantasy of "The Man Who Played upon the Leaf." "The Wendigo" is, perhaps, too horrible, and "The Price of Wiggins' Orgy" too farcical, but every other story in the volume testifies to Mr. Algernon Blackwood's magic mastery of the supernatural.

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

---

A particular and pathetic interest attaches to the late Mr. Frank Podmore's latest and last book on spiritualism, shortly to be published by Mr. Unwin. "The Newer Spiritualism" is its title, and in it Mr. Podmore has dealt with recent evidence published by the Psychical Research Society and its bearing upon the hypothesis of life after death. The first section of the book discusses the claims of the manifestations of the noted Italian medium, Eusapia Palladino, to be considered psychical or merely physical, and the possibility of deception is made clear from parallel phenomena demonstrably deceptive taken from the past history of spiritualism. The second part of the book deals with messages received through trance or automatic writing purporting to come from spirits of the dead. Mr. Podmore does not pronounce definitely that spirit communication is impossible, but he has not lost sight of the fact that the immense amount of fraud mixed up with the whole business makes any "evidence" hard to credit, and at the most chiefly valuable as throwing new light on the structure of the human mind and possible extension of human faculty.

Another volume which Mr. Unwin publishes this week really ought to have been available a month ago. It adds to the "County Coast" series a volume dealing with the coast of Cornwall by Mr. Arthur L. Salmon, who knows the West of England so well. It is just the book for the tourist who wants to see everything and to be told everything about what he sees. Mr. Salmon starts from Plymouth, and through Looe, Fowey, Falmouth and Penzance to Land's End makes his way back on the rugged north coast by St. Ives, Tintagel, Boscastle, and Bude. There is a wealth of historic lore and literary associations, besides scenic beauty, to be exploited on a tour like this, and Mr. Salmon has done them all justice.

The 10th of September being Tolstoy's eighty-second birthday, Messrs. Constable have selected that day for publication of a biography of the great Russian philosopher's later years. It is the first consecutive detailed and authoritative account of the last three decades of Tolstoy's life, and includes an account of his repudiation of his property, his life among the peasants, his famine relief works, his excommunication, as well as of his writings and his family life. It appears in English because there is much in it which would be distasteful to Russian officialdom, and its authority is vouched by the fact that Tolstoy has read and advised upon the statement of his views on religion and art, while the Countess Tolstoy has read and corrected the proofs. This seems to have been barely necessary, as Mr. Aylmer Maude is the author.

A good deal of curiosity is being experienced as to the authorship of "Pause," the shilling volume of essays, fragments—call them what you will—which makes such a startling appearance in its red, white, and black on the bookstalls. It is an adventure into the eerie, and well worth reading, but why such a mystery about the authorship? Seeing that Messrs. Greening are the publishers, and that on their list of authors is the one person who in modern literature emulates the example of the fat boy in Pickwick, one surely need go no further than Guy Thorne, otherwise Mr. Ranger Gull.

Of the novelists with a purpose there is none more trenchant than Mr. Upton Sinclair, though it may be doubted whether he will ever produce as great a sensation as he did with "The Jungle." Still, his latest story, "Samuel the Seeker" (Long, 6s.), is well worth reading, if only for its effective story-telling. The book deals with yet another phase of American economics. This time it is a glass bottle trust, and not the meat trust, which supplies Mr. Sinclair with material for his indictment of American commercial methods. In the economic unrest which at the present time pervades America, Mr. Upton Sinclair is no negligible force, and if only for his presentation of the socialist point of view, his writings are bound to attract attention over here.

ART.

IT is significant of the craze for all things Chinese and Japanese that the chief survivor of a plethora of art exhibitions should be Chinese in character. While the china collector is always with us the appreciator of the kakemono is a comparatively modern product. Yet the Baillie Gallery, following closely in the steps of a number of predecessors, provides for the delectation of the few odd millions residue of all-London, not only a fine, if small, collection of china, but a number of the brown silk rolls for which London professes such intense devotion.

It is not easy at present to gauge the depth of such appreciation. Time alone can show whether it is merely a craze or whether it marks a spirit of more enlightened toleration and understanding. Now and again truth will out. At the British Museum exhibition of Chinese paintings, for instance, I noted two visitors, presumably of the artizan class, who appeared to be admiring the famous Ku K'ai Ch'ih makimono. I made a mental note on the growth of artistic comprehension among the working classes. Drawing nearer in the hope of over-hearing intelligent comment, the following took place: "Well, Bill, I don't know what they're making such a fuss about." "No, more do I, Tom. Why, if my boy Johnny was to draw like this I'd say to him: Johnnie, I'd say, here's sixpence for you, and now you run away and try and do better next time."

But though Bill's sentiments may be the genuine expression of the feelings of many who gush over Chinese art, it is undeniable that at present the gusher lives up to his professions by visiting such exhibitions as that in Bruton Street, and that familiarity breeds a certain knowledge of the subject. The Chinese kakemono painted on the familiar brown silk demands for fuller appreciation a good deal more knowledge of Chinese thought and allusion than is possessed by the average individual. It is, nevertheless, possible, even without this, to admire the fine broad treatment of landscape in "Fisherman Under a Rock"—the naturalism of the fish, flowers, and birds, and ponies here exhibited. "The Girl with the Hawk" is a strong piece of characterisation, though I did not discover the hawk, as is also the beggar god—a delightful scoundrel of the vagabond type.

Of the porcelain, the visitor's eye is immediately attracted less by some specimens of the early Han pottery than by no fewer than eighteen parrots in every shade of glaze and character. The large heads, the knowing eyes, the formidable beaks remind the visitor of quite a number of his acquaintances and make him devoutly thankful than these parrots at least cannot talk. A beautiful hawthorn jar and a fine blue bowl, a Madonna-like goddess and child, are among the more interesting exhibits of a very interesting show.

* * * * * *

Judged by its main characteristics, there is little doubt that the present age would go down to posterity as the Simian age—or the age of imitation. Most of us spend our time in pretending to be that which we are not; we make imitation jewels, imitation kid tops, imitation lace, imitation silk; we drink milk substitutes, and we are delighted with the just-as-good. It is little wonder that we should every year behold the spectacle of photographs that aspire to be pictures.

After a visit to the exhibition of the Royal Photographic Society of Great Britain in Pall Mall, I shall not attempt to define the place of photography in art. And this for the very simple reason that photography is not art at all, but artifice. There is no doubt a certain amount of taste and a much greater amount of skill shown in the young women yearning at the setting sun, in the portrait interior with its ever-present Japanese print; even such charming reproductions as "The Soul of a Rose"—in which the plaid dress strikes a really artistic note—may be very like a picture, but a picture it is not, any more than a blue-book, however well arranged, however adapted, is a creative work, even of a limited kind.

Nor does the further development of colour photography bode well for the future development of photography generally. On the contrary, it is likely to lead the misguided photographer still further into the morass of mistaken function. For photography after all has a very real use, as may be seen in the delightful and otherwise unobtainable representations of birds and beasts in their haunts, and in science of every kind. The "Kingfishers" of Miss E. L. Turner, the "Little Owl" of Mr. C. W. Knight, "The Whiskered Tern Alighting on Its Nest," by Mr. Farren, are excellent examples of the revelations of nature produced by the science—not art—of photography. The purely scientific and technical photographs, to which one gallery is devoted, are worth all the "artifice" of the rest of the exhibition. Nor does such a fortuitous photograph as "Carcosa: Moonlight," by Mr. Wild, in which moonlight has played for the moment the part of selection, prove that photography can ever play the subjective rôle which is the basis of all true creation.

* * * * * *

It is typical of the injustice of things that the vast amount of patient work and research evidenced in Mr. Gerald Davies' "Renascence Tombs of Rome" (Murray, 21s. net) should have to give way before the interest of the many and beautiful photographs which illustrate the volume. Uniform with Lord Balcarres' "Evolutions of Italian Sculpture," the book is, perhaps, too much specialised to attract the attention of the average reader. To the student of sculpture, however—and in spite of the dearth of sculpture in this country he still exists—it should prove a gold mine of information. Mr. Davies describes the difficulties of the research in such a field. Not only have the destruction of documents and the destruction of many of the Roman basilicas and churches blurred the way of the explorer, but in many cases fragments, "laid aside for many years, have been put together again with scant regard to their original position." The book is divided into two parts, the first dealing with the history of sculpture from about the twelfth to the sixteenth century, the second detailing churches and tombs in Rome. Perhaps the greatest point of Mr. Davies' book is that in opening up a new field: it makes the reader feel how very large that field is.

TRUTH will be sent weekly to any address in the British Islands for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or £1 9s. 1d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). The subscription to Canada (Thin Edition) is: 7s. 7d. for 3 months; 15s. 2d. for 6 months; £1 11s. 6d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). To the Colonies and Foreign Countries (Thick Edition): 3 months, 8s. 8d.; 6 months, 17s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 15s. 10d. (including Christmas Number). All cheques and P.O.O.s should be made payable to THE MANAGER OF TRUTH, and addressed to Truth Buildings, Carteret Street, London, S.W.

MUSIC.

THE DECLINE OF THE FESTIVAL.

WHAT is the matter with the provincial festival? It is common knowledge that all is not as it should be. North, south, east, and west the tale is the same—declining receipts and an increased struggle for existence. Take the festivals which fall due this year. Cardiff is a comparatively new one, but has not prospered too well so far. Gloucester, like the other Three Choirs meetings, has been on the down grade financially for some years past, while at Leeds the profits have similarly declined continuously, having steadily dropped from over £3,000 in 1899 to £304 in 1904 and £460 in 1907.

Quite a number of reasons for this state of things have been suggested. Hard times, say some—taken in conjunction with a steadily increasing expenditure under other heads. There are so many more ways of spending money nowadays than formerly. Motoring is one, golf is another, bridge is a third, and in the result music suffers. Then the festivals no longer have the entire field to themselves. In former days they stood alone and provided practically the only music heard in their respective localities throughout the year. To-day concerts are given at other times as well. This is all to the good in one way, but it does not help the festivals, which have to some extent brought about their own undoing by cultivating and developing a local taste for music.

Others point to the programmes as the main cause of the trouble. Too much "Messiah" and "Elijah," they say. Those venerable works, it is argued, have ceased to attract, and the public want something fresher and newer instead. Some take just the opposite view. Too many new-fangled, ultra-modern works, which do not appeal at all to the multitude. It may be that old and new alike are found more or less wanting by latter-day audiences. While "The Messiah" and "Elijah" are losing their former drawing power, little has been produced to take their place. I fancy that this is indeed the case, and the explanation resides partly in the fact that composers in general have been giving less and less attention of late years to the particular kind of music which festivals require. The festivals want more particularly fine choral works, and these happen to be just the things which the average modern composer never thinks of writing unless he is tempted by a fat commission, in which case it is ten to one against a satisfactory work resulting.

As a consequence, the festivals are largely dependent on works of this class produced by native composers, and these are more worthy than stimulating as a rule. Not to put too fine a point upon it, they are more often than not deadly dull, as is proved by the fact that the greater number of them, having been performed once, are never heard of again. Elgar, perhaps, constitutes something of an exception, and the popularity of the "Dream of Gerontius" shows that there is still a large following for this class of work when it is one of the right sort. But neither "Gerontius" nor any other modern work of this kind can be said to have filled the place formerly occupied by such old favourites as "The Messiah" and "Elijah." As to the works of other kinds relied on instead—ultra-modern foreign symphonies and symphonic poems, immature essays on similar lines by the younger school of native composers and the like—these have proved, as a rule, still less suited to the needs of the case. Take such a work as Busoni's concerto for two pianos, which was given at Newcastle last year. What could be much less likely to appeal to a provincial audience than such a work as that?

Really it is not at all easy to say what a festival audience does want. Probably something popular and commonplace would give the greatest pleasure to the greatest number, for provincial concert-goers are not as a rule very cultivated—it would be absurd to expect otherwise. They are not allowed to have really popular music, however, for it is a point of honour that the programme shall be drawn up on the most "serious" lines, and I cannot help thinking that not a little of the declining favour of the festival is due to this cause.

Then there is the question of the soloists. Festival singers to-day are not what they used to be. "They never were," it may be replied; but for once in a way the complaint is really justified. There are many singers taking leading parts in festivals to-day whose very names are practically unknown to the public. This means diminished interest in the performances—for popular audiences often attach more importance to the performers than to the works performed. Yet I have not heard that singers are ready to take lower fees than their predecessors. On the contrary, the fees paid to soloists and expenses in general tend steadily to increase, and this is yet another factor in the problem. At the same time seats are usually so highly priced that the humbler amateur gets hardly a look in, while to make matters worse when a profit is realised it is usually handed over to some local charity—instead of being put aside to build up a reserve fund, as it should be. Altogether the festival problem is a many-sided one.

---

A number of new works have been heard at the Promenades during the last few days, but none of any great note. Rimsky-Korsokoff's suite "The Eve of Christmas," arranged from an opera of the same name, is brilliant and picturesque with plenty of glitter and colour in the scoring after the manner of its composer, but the actual material of the music is of less account. Another work heard on the same evening was a piano concerto by Mr. York Bowen, which without saying much that was new made quite a good effect with the young composer as soloist. A suite for strings by Arthur Foote offered obvious temptations to the humorist to describe it as a somewhat pedestrian work, but it really contained some quite pleasant music, notably the second section entitled "Pizzicato and Adagietto."

The Fantasie Concertante, for viola and orchestra, by J. Rogister, heard on Saturday, was presumably the choice of Mr. Wertheim, who played the solo part, though he really ought to have known better than to have inflicted such a very dull work on his hearers. But then what is the poor viola player to do? More than one great composer has had a special affection for the viola—Berlioz was one, for instance, and Brahms was another—but the fact remains that its repertory for solo purposes is extremely limited, and it is better heard in combination than alone. Was it not Grétry who cried after hearing a viola solo for the first time, "A Louis for an E string!"? Much more interesting was the ballet music from César Franck's opera "Hulda," included in the same programme. Opera was not Franck's métier, and even Mr. Beecham would probably shrink from producing the whole work, but this ballet music contains some beautiful pages, which it was very pleasant to have the chance of hearing.

The London Choral Society announce several new works for performance during the forthcoming season, including two compositions for chorus and orchestra by Miss Ethel Smyth and two short cantatas by Mr. Bertram Shapleigh. In the way of more familiar works they propose to repeat parts two and three of Bantock's "Omar Khayyam" along with parts one and two of Coleridge Taylor's "Hiawatha" and Verdi's "Requiem." The concerts will be held at the Queen's Hall, as usual, and Mr. Arthur Fagge remains conductor of the Society.

Admirers of Mischa Elman will learn with interest that he has been exempted from military service by the Russian authorities. In this respect he has been more fortunate than one of the most eminent of his rivals, namely, Herr Kreisler, who, however, has been heard to ascribe not a little of his excellent health and stalwart physique to his experiences as a conscript in the Austrian Army.

SCRUBB & CO., Ltd., caution the public against the many injurious imitations of SCRUBB'S AMMONIA that are being offered, and draw attention to their having affixed the signature of SCRUBB & CO. to each bottle, without which none is genuine.

THE THEATRES.

"The Eternal Question," at the Garrick.

MR. HALL CAINE'S new play is but a new edition of "The Eternal City" produced seven years ago at His Majesty's Theatre. There is more question in it now but no more answer, and I find it no more satisfying than the original production. At the same time there is always something weirdly fascinating to me about this dramatist's work. His philosophy is so childlike; he enunciates platitudes with such sublime assurance; he attacks great problems with such an air of settling them once and for all, and yet at the finish you come away, and the only sentences ringing in your brain are those you would rather forget. Mr. Guy Standing now plays Sir Herbert Tree's old part of Baron Bonelli, the sinister Italian Prime Minister, who is very down on demagogues, and who flaunts his beautiful mistress, Donna Roma Valonna, in so unblushing a manner. Whenever he wants evidence against the demagogue in chief, David Rossi, he drags her forth to give it, but the fly in his ointment is that the lady falls passionately in love with Rossi and upsets all his schemes. I never quite see why Roma Valonna should be so hard on her protector. She has accepted everything from him. For three years she has surrounded herself with luxuries which he has paid for, and she has quite willingly played the rôle of a great lady of "the under world." However, Rossi appears in the scenes, and she knew him when she was a child, and she loves him at first sight. He has cruelly insulted her in the streets of Rome, but she lies to him about her relations with Bonelli and he believes her, and instead of betraying him to her protector as she had intended to do out of revenge, the ill-fated pair make passionate love to each other in the palace with which Bonelli has provided the woman. And now comes in "The Eternal Question." David Rossi is "as straight as a lance and as pure as a block of marble," but Roma, alas! has three years to forget, and these three years she does not mention. When she pleads with Bonelli to let her marry Rossi he is unpleasantly candid, and tells her very nastily that she is "a dead woman" in "a blind alley"—that for women who have walked her way there is no future except by remaining under his wing. The eternal question is, therefore, can she expect a happy future?

I will not describe to you how, after this, Rossi is wanted by the police and how Roma is ingeniously tricked into betraying his hiding place, but the clever Bonelli manages it all through tricking a guileless Pope into making the girl talk. The great scene in the play comes when Rossi, who has been arrested, escapes, and then finds first that the girl has given him away, and next that she has been the Minister's mistress. In a desperate struggle between the two men Bonelli is accidentally killed, and then Rossi leaves the girl after cursing her to his heart's content. You can hardly expect a happy ending after all this, nor do you get it, though in the first version, as far as I recollect, virtue (?) did triumph. At this moment Miss Tittell-Brune (who plays the unfortunate Roma with considerable dramatic power) decides that there is no future for her except in the grave; so to save her lover she declares that she killed Bonelli, and to me it did not seem very gallant of Rossi to bolt and leave her with the dead man to explain his death. Accordingly in the last scene you find her in a prison cell waiting the end. Rossi, however, visits her here disguised as a Capuchin friar. He is now sorry and repentant. Love has triumphed. Whatever his Roma has gone through, he is quite confident that she is a good woman at heart, and that, to use our author's phraseology, "In the heart of a Magdalen there may be the soul of the mother of God herself." Roma, alas! though, is despondent. "If women of my sort," she says, "could end their lives in comfort, where would be the inducement to other women to be good?" and though I hope that some women find other inducements to lead decent lives, I see her point of view. One curious thing about the end of the play is that though the warders let in a Capuchin friar to see their prisoner they evince no surprise whatever when on coming to let him out they find that he is no friar, but Rossi. They merely calmly lead the two off to execution or for trial—it is not clear which, nor did I care very much, being rather tired of their eternal arguments and soul torturings.

Mr. Hall Caine really has a gift for writing melodrama, but he will insist on being a great moralist, and yet all his literary eloquence leaves you as you were. He tries to be intensely up to date, but remains curiously old-fashioned. The sinister Prime Minister, capitally played by Mr. Guy Standing, who revels in forgery, lying, and subterfuge to gain his ends, and cynically flaunts his over-dressed mistress, is a most conventional stage type, and the long speeches in which he expounds his heartless views on the woman question contain nothing new. On the whole his point of view is the only answer we get to the eternal question, because Roma is apparently only going to live down her past in the grave, which is the sort of thing that anybody can do. Mr. Vernon Steel, who plays Rossi, gives an excellent performance as the impassioned dreamer; while Mr. Hallwell Hobbes shows once more what a distinguished talent he has in his beautifully finished study of the worn and aged Pope Pius XI. Even those who might object to seeing the Pope dragged into a melodrama must have been almost reconciled by his delicate and pathetic rendering of the character.

Mascagni's music, magnificent uniforms, riots, off, papal processions, impressions of torchlight meetings of Socialists at the Colosseum—all these details help to give a fine series of stage pictures, and may carry the play to success, but it is with Mr. Hall Caine the moralist that I quarrel. We have heard so much in advance about the ethical significance of this play and of the author's fervid pleading on behalf of woman. Yet what does it all amount to? A young woman elects to become the mistress of a wealthy man. We never hear that he has behaved badly to her; on the contrary, he showers luxuries on her, and when we meet her first she is quite contented. Then she deliberately sets out to fool a man in order to give him into her protector's hands. Instead of fooling him she falls in love with him, and one thinks of Sardou. Not unnaturally, her patron resents her going over to the opposition, especially as Rossi is one of those enthusiasts who constitute a political danger, and the patron is a hard-headed politician. One may be sorry for Donna Roma Volonna, and yet at the same time see that she has been riding for a fall, while the subsequent developments shed no new light on the position of fallen women. They merely make old-fashioned melodrama. That is why I wish that Mr. Hall Caine would leave what he calls "the underworld" alone and use some other theme for his sensational appeals.

"The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary" at Terry's.

Aunt Mary in Miss Warner's play is a delightful old soul with a scapegrace nephew. She lives in the country and "foots" the bills; he lives in New York and runs them up. That is where the difference comes in. At last, after having disinherited him because she thinks he has behaved badly to a certain young woman, she comes up to town because one of the nephew's friends sends her word that Jack is down with measles. Of course, there is nothing wrong with him in reality, but once the "boys" get the old lady in town they trot her round, and she likes it; in short, she goes the pace with the best of them, and, geo-whizz! she thinks it bully. If you don't like the American language in all its purity keep away from Terry's Theatre. As a result, when she goes back home she tries to pretend that her bedstead is a motor-car, and is wheeled about in it (snakes! but this makes you just scream!), and she also goes in for smart clothes and smoking. Miss May Robson, who plays the part, is a clever comedy actress, but she overdoes the whole thing, and makes what is really a quite lovable old soul into a grotesque; but if you like simple—very simple—humour and American pathos in chunks you will have quite an enjoyable time. There is one other delightful character in it, and that is Lucinda, Aunt Mary's factotum, played by Miss Nina Saville. She is a treasure. Mr. Jack Storey makes the nephew sufficiently good-hearted, breezy, and irresponsible, but one wonders at times whether New York really nurtures in its bosom such curious specimens of young manhood as these bright and breezy boys. There is an unimportant little complication in the play, but it is soon "unsnarled," and to show you how Aunt Mary's rejuvenation has been appreciated the other side, where Miss Robson has played it three years, I will quote from a little brochure sent out:—"The play is as pure and refreshing as the ozone-laden breeze that might blow across the meadows one sees through the windows of Aunt Mary's 'settin' room.' The lines just scintillate with wit and humour, and Aunt Mary 'probably most likely' is the center of it all—a big-hearted woman of generous impulses, just bound up in her scapegoat nephew." Well, I don't think I can do better than "let it go at that."

* * * * * *

T. W. Robertson's "David Garrick" has been drawing full houses at the Coronet with Mr. Frederic Sargent in the part of the actor who is forced to try and disillusion Ada Ingot of her love for him, and Miss Viva Birkett as the girl. Mr. O. B. Clarence is excellent as old Ingot. To-morrow night "School" will be revived.

* * * * * *

Miss Winifred Emery and her company, which includes Mr. Lyn Harding (fresh from his success in "The Speckled Band"), have just successfully started a long tour of Mr. William Devereux's "Sir Walter Ralegh." Miss Emery's "Queen Elizabeth" is quite one of the best things she has done, while Mr. Harding's Sir Walter is so good that one may hope later to see it in town.

SPORT.

RACING NOTES.

THE weights for the Cesarewitch and the Cambridgeshire will be published to-morrow, and a list of quotations on these handicaps will speedily appear. Anyone who is gulled by any such "daily betting" will be simply led to perdition, as it is perfectly certain that no stable commissions will be sent out for several weeks to come, and there will be no genuine market on either race for some time. The Cesarewitch has become a post betting race, and there is no reliable speculation over the Cambridgeshire until after the decision of the earlier event. This year the perils of early backers are greatly increased owing to most of the horses which are likely to be fancied having engagements at Doncaster, Manchester and Kempton Park, and several of them are quite as likely to run at one or other of those meetings as at Newmarket.

Princesse de Galles, by Gallinule out of Ecila, who won the rich Coronation Stakes at Ascot last year for King Edward, has left Newmarket for Sandringham. She is in foal to Marcovil. It was hoped that Princesse de Galles would have won a T.Y.C. handicap before her retirement from the Turf. Another of the late King's mares, which has also been turned out of training, is Perla, by Persimmon out of Loch Doon, which was well backed last season as a two-year-old for more than one race, but she was always beaten.

M. E. Blanc's two-year-old Lord Burgoyne is evidently a very smart colt, and it is lucky for the English lot that he is not entered for the Middle Park Plate. Last week Lord Burgoyne won the rich Futurity Stakes at Baden Baden, and he had the worst of the weights with all the other starters. Lord Burgoyne, who is by Persimmon out of Lady Burgoyne, is engaged in next year's Derby and St. Leger.

Several sporting writers are disquieted because the Ebor Handicap has ceased to be known as "Great," which, by the way, is the nickname which was given to George IV. by the Court set. The York race is now known merely as the Ebor Handicap Plate. When this race was established early in the forties (mainly through the influence of Admiral Octavius Harcourt), it was a sweepstakes, with £200 added. This was then considered a very generous endowment, and there were only two other handicaps to which £200 were given. The largest sum added at that period to any handicap was £300, which was given to the Cesarewitch, but this was an annual present from the late Emperor Alexander II. as a memorial of his visit to England in 1838. This endowment is in glaring contrast to the miserable sum of £10 which is all that is added this year by the Jockey Club to the most important long distance handicap of the season. There are now so many handicaps of £1,000 that there is no affinity with reason in any longer describing the Ebor Handicap as "Great." This race never achieved any very great prestige even in its most palmy days, and the Chester Cup and the Northumberland Plate were then the most important handicaps at the northern meetings.

Persephone has been a dreadfully unlucky filly, and her defeat in the Prince of Wales Plate was a great disappointment to her stable. It was thought that the six furlongs at Goodwood was a longer distance than she at present cares for, but that she would have won there easily at five furlongs, so she was confidently expected to win at York over the shorter course. Prince San, who had shown good form earlier in the season, started favourite, and he won cleverly for Mr. Basset from Lord Derby's filly, after having made all the running. The great tip at the finish was the Dame d'Or colt, who was backed for a lot of money, and he will win a race before long. There had been seventy-three acceptances for the Prince of Wales' Plate, but only four horses started. Prince San's performance was a most creditable one, as he had much the worst of the weights, and he is evidently a smart colt. Prince San's next engagement is the Criterion Stakes at the Newmarket Houghton Meeting, and two days later he is in the Dewhurst Plate, with Pietri, Cellini, and other notable winners of the season. The Convivial Produce Stakes—formerly the principal two-year-old race at the York August Meeting, was regarded as a good thing for Meleager, and odds were lavishly betted on Mr. Neumann's colt, but he was easily beaten at the finish by Mary Carmichael, whose previous performances had been very unsatisfactory, as she appeared to be a jade, but it is possible that she is only now beginning to run into form. She is evidently a nervous and irritable filly. There was a fairly large field for the Gimcrack Stakes, and odds were betted on Pietri, who won easily, in spite of a penalty, and the performance was the more creditable inasmuch as he got off very badly. Mushroom was very much fancied, but he had no chance against the winner. Pietri's excellent form justifies the opinion which was expressed in TRUTH—when he was being described as "over-rated" and as "an impostor"—i.e., that when all right he would discover himself to be one of the very best two-year-olds of the season.

The Ebor Handicap would have been a certainty for Mirador if all had gone well with him. In the absence of Mr. Astor's horse, Royal Realm was made a hot favourite, and at the start the ridiculous price of 7 to 4 was taken about him in a field of fourteen. Backers appeared to have gone perfectly crazy, for even on his very best form Royal Realm could not be regarded as a good thing at the weights. Marajax and Anchora were heavily backed, and the five-year-old was a general tip at the finish. St. Victrix was also much fancied, but he refused to start, and took no part in the race. King's Champion was the latest Newmarket tip. There was a most exciting finish, and Claretoi just won by a head from Anchora, the winner having started at the nominal price of 40 to 1, but he was not backed, and his victory was an exceedingly fortunate one. If the race could be run over again the result would certainly be different. It was most unsatisfactory to see the Ebor Handicap won by a moderate six-year-old with only 6 st 10 lb on his back, while another lightly weighted old horse was second. It is lucky for owners who have an eye to the Cesarewitch that Lord Derby did not keep Queen's Journal for the autumn, as that handicap would have been a certainty for her at the weight which she would have been given.

Greenback is evidently much out of form, and he is no doubt still suffering from the effect of the cough with which he was recently afflicted. On the Newbury running Greenback ought to have finished well in front of Willonyx, but Lord Villiers' colt was beaten by him in the Great Yorkshire Stakes. A horse which has been coughing may soon look all right again, but when he comes to be raced in earnest it turns out that he still is all wrong. It would have been wiser to have kept Greenback for the St. Leger. Rosedrop won by a head from Willonyx, which is certainly not St. Leger form. I gave Sir W. Bass's mare a plumper for the Oaks, but she does not seem to me to stand much chance of winning the Doncaster race on last week's running.

The racing at the Yorkshire meetings has not been so good as usual, but there is likely to be some interesting sport at Doncaster, although the fields are not expected to be generally large. Several important country houses, which have usually sent considerable parties to the races, are to be closed next week. The announcement that there will be no party at Welbeck Abbey was superfluous, considering that the Duke and Duchess of Portland have not entertained for Doncaster for twenty years, as they are always in Scotland during the race week.

The Champagne Stakes will be by far the most important event of the week after the St. Leger. Thirty-six two-year-olds accepted for this race out of an original entry of eighty-nine. The best of the animals left in are Mr. Neumann's Cellini, Mr. L. de Rothschild's Pietri, Duke of Portland's Wrinkler, Mr. Pilkington's Prince Palatine, Mr. C. Carroll's Night Rider, and M. E. de St. Alary's Nerestan. There will probably be some heavy betting between Cellini and Pietri, and I shall predict the success of the Gimcrack Stakes winner. If the Champagne Stakes resulted in a complete surprise, Nerestan might be the hero of the race, as he was very highly tried early in the summer, and he has been left at the post in two of his races. The winner of the Champagne Stakes will be able to meet Seaforth at even weights in the Middle Park Plate. The Tattersall Sale Stakes is not likely to bring out Seaforth, and Mr. Whitney's colt by Persimmon out of Dame d'Or may win. The Rous Plate should be won by Lord Rosebery's Black Potts or Night Rider. The list of acceptances for this race include Sir W. Bass's Mary Carmichael and Mr. R. Mills's Romeo. The Prince of Wales Nursery, of £1,000, on Friday, will probably bring out a much larger field than any of the weight-for-age events, but it is a very dangerous race to meddle with, the course being a mile.

There are fifty-five three-year-olds in the Scarborough Stakes on Thursday, and Lord Derby may win with Decision or Swynford. There are fifty-eight entries for the Doncaster Stakes, including Lemberg. Lord Durham should win with Rochester or Charlemont. Eighty-two fillies are engaged in the Park Hill Stakes, including Sir W. Bass's Rosedrop and Maid of Corinth, Mr. Astor's Winkipop, Sir R. Waldie Griffith's Thalia, and Mr. Nelke's Yellow Slave. This race may be left to Winkipop.

It seems unlikely that Bayardo will be started for the Doncaster Cup, and Mirador certainly will not be included in the field. Bachelor's Double will be able to beat all the lot now left in. It is rather hard that Glacis should be obliged to carry a penalty for a win which took place more than two years ago.

I noticed the other day an assertion that in the Doncaster Cup Bayardo will have a chance of retrieving the reputation which he "destroyed" at Goodwood. This reminds one of the story of Serjeant Arabin informing a prisoner at the Old Bailey that he intended to give him a chance "of redeeming a character which you have irretrievably lost." There was no disgrace in Bayardo being beaten by Magic at Goodwood, considering the difference in the weights. The merits of the Manton horse have been extravagantly overrated.

The St. Leger prospect has been very much altered for the worse during the last week by the withdrawal of Neil Gow and the ignominious collapse of Greenback at York. I shall be surprised if Lemberg is able to stay the course if there is a strongly-run race, and the Derby winner does not appear to have been sent long distance gallops. He seems to be training for Doncaster on a very easy system. Swynford is now a firm second favourite, but some of the best judges at Newmarket are of the opinion that Lord Derby's colt had but a poor chance of defeating Neil Gow if all had gone well with the Two Thousand winner. Swynford has certainly made a great improvement during the summer, and there was a sound excuse for his poor running in the Derby. He has been sent several strong gallops over the full St. Leger distance, and gave much satisfaction. He has never appeared to tire towards the finish, but has always pulled up fresh and in good form. The rain which has fallen is much in favour of Swynford, who might not do well for long on hard ground. He is apparently endowed both with fair speed and genuine stamina. Greenback is announced to be a certain starter, but on the York running he can have no chance, and he appears to have entirely lost his form. Greenback ought to be "thrown up" after Doncaster, and next season he may be all right again. I do not fancy either Winkipop or Rosedrop. Everything will depend next Wednesday upon the pace. If the field merely canters for a mile before the race really begins then Lemberg will very likely come with a rush and beat all his opponents for speed. It may be hoped, however, that such arrangements will be made by some of the owners concerned as will ensure a strong pace from start to finish. In this case I expect Swynford to win, but nobody should bet on this race until the numbers are up and the starters have been looked over.

Seventy foals have been entered for the Rous Memorial Stakes at Goodwood (1912), and one of Lady Conyngham's lot of four is a half-brother, by Collar, to Seaforth. Lord Derby has engaged an own sister to Cocksure II., and Lord Falmouth has a colt by Isinglass out of Quintessence. There are 168 entries for the Champion Breeders' Foal Stakes of £1,250 at Derby (1912), and the race is not likely to be a costly event to the fund, as the first entrances amount to £504. The Breeders' St. Leger of £1,350 for 1913 has obtained 128 entries. Both races have been liberally supported by the public breeders, who are attracted by the bait of £275 between the nominators of the placed horses, and Mr. H. Cholmondeley has engaged sixteen of the Sledmere foals. There are 127 entries for the Berkshire Foal Plate of £1,000 at the Newbury Summer Meeting, 1912. The Hurst Park Foal Plate of £1,500 (run July, 1912) has obtained 148 entries. The Duke of Westminster has in both these races a half-sister, by Troutbeck, to Flying Fox, and a half-sister, by Spearmint, to Troutbeck. The races to be run at Lingfield in July, 1912, have also done well, there being ninety-five entries for the Lingfield Park Stakes of £700 and 114 entries for the Great Foal Plate of £1,000.

---

THE GOLF AMATEUR DEFINITION—CRICKET.

The golfing world, to judge by the notes of golfing writers in diverse papers and also by the articles in Golf Illustrated, is becoming seriously agitated about the definition of an amateur golfer. As a matter of fact, I do not believe the average club man cares a rap about it. But as golfers become inevitably disputatious folk and love nothing better than to argue over rules and their meanings it is just as well that they should have the constructional problem of the definition of a golfing amateur whereon to whet their appetites and exhibit the brilliancy of their golfing intelligence. At present the battle is raging over the payment of expenses for a player attending a meeting. I am afraid I was the cause of the trouble. In answer to a correspondent I said a lady having her expenses paid by her county union to play in a county match was not playing for a consideration. Thereupon Golf Illustrated said such payment by a club was a consideration, but if the money was privately subscribed it was not. I said nonsense—one payment was just as much a consideration as another. Then Golf Illustrated became angry, and developed a genius for misconception or misrepresentation, so far as Truth was concerned. For instance, in its last issue it says Truth triumphantly points out that amateurs' expenses are paid in other sports. What I did point out triumphantly was that Mr. Horace Hutchinson said that many amateurs have their expenses paid for the championship, that he could see no objection to their being paid as they were in cricket, and that there was nothing in the rule to prohibit it. I had never concerned myself with the question as to whether or not such payments by individuals or by clubs was or was not beneficial to golf. All I had said was that the definition of amateurism did not in my view forbid such payments, but if it did forbid payment by clubs then it equally forbade payment by individuals. The one was just as much a consideration as the other. Now Golf Illustrated admits that the framers of the definition never had the question of expenses in their minds when they used the word consideration. From this it follows that the leading journal in the game was endeavouring to extend the meaning of the word, and so cause the status of players to be injuriously affected. In other words, an extended instead of a restrictive meaning was to be given to a penal clause. This method of interpretation is certainly contrary to all conceptions of justice. Wherefore I do triumphantly point out that Truth was right and Golf Illustrated was wrong, and this on the admission contained in that journal.

Now I come to another and a controversial matter, and that is whether or not clubs should pay such expenses. For example, should they pay a member's expenses for the amateur championship? At present they do not do so. And yet this is the point around which controversy rages. It is a good point for the silly season, and it is being debated with all the vigour of reality. One would almost imagine that amateurism in golf would go to the dogs if such payments were made. As a preliminary observation let me say that I regard those who are piously thankful that golf amateurs are not as other amateurs because clubs do not pay expenses as being nothing more nor less than pharisaical humbugs. It is clear that each game requires its own definition of amateurism. There is no innate conception of amateurism. The amateur is an artificial creation devised to distinguish between those who do and do not make a living out of any particular kind of work or sport. Perhaps one ought to add with regard to work, this work must be of such a character that one does not require a degree or diploma to practise it. One talks of amateur photographers and painters. The amateur in one sport may be the professional in another. Generally in sport the word amateur means that the player shall make nothing by playing the game. Thus an amateur should not get money for giving his name to a golf club or a tennis racquet or a cricket bat. Now, in golf the circumstances are peculiar. In no other sport where there is a definition of an amateur can a man play for money. But he can in golf. He can play for the sweepstakes organised by the club. The question of private betting I purposely exclude. The club pays over cash which he and other members have staked. I do not object. But I do say that when you are suggesting that golfers are such amateur purists because clubs never pay their expenses you are talking absolute nonsense.

Now why all this pother about clubs paying expenses? Supposing they did. Where would the harm come in? It is balderdash to talk about the sentiment or spirit of the game or of amateur sport, and for this reason. A man may go to a player, say a crack man in an artisan club, offer him a fiver or a tenner to play in the amateur championship, so that his expenses may be covered, and proceed to back him and make money on the deal. All this is pure amateurism. Now where is the harm in the members of an artisan club devoting part of their funds to sending a crack player to compete in the amateur championship? Their books will show that he has been paid only his bare expenses, and that he has made nothing out of it. I call that rather strict amateurism. Of course, some will say that clubs will send men to play to advertise themselves—indeed, I have seen it suggested by one writer of golfing notes. Of all the imaginary objections this is about the most imaginary. No doubt it is a very real horror to some folk. But, then, there is no objection to the club advertising itself by permitting its course to be used for a competition for a thousand-guinea pot offered by some golf journal as an advertisement, and competed for by these very amateurs who are so afraid that somebody may have his expenses paid by a club as an advertisement. Really, the more one considers this question of clubs paying expenses, the more one realises that there is no harm likely to accrue either to the game or to individuals if it were done. Whether or not such payments are ever likely to be made I do not know and do not care. But if they are made there will be no need for perturbation. The game will still be played, and backers will still find layers for the big competitions.

And yet this discussion may be of some use to those delegates to whom has been deputed the task of defining an amateur—or, rather, of re-defining him. They may realise that the best policy is to leave well alone. As it stands the definition is a good working one. It permits any amount of freedom. It is not irksome. It allows the salaried secretary of a golf club to compete as an amateur, and permits the indigent to pay his way by winning sweepstakes. It does not forbid a man to receive his expenses from his friends if he cannot afford to pay them himself. Nor does it prevent a club paying them if it feels so inclined. To place further restrictions on the word amateur would raise difficulties which do not exist. Invidious decisions would have to be given, and one can imagine a future Travis from the U.S.A., if he were the runner-up, objecting to the amateur status of the winner. The smaller the definition the less the trouble. "If you are not a professional you are an amateur" is the best way out of the trouble. The present definition is reasonably sound, and it allows considerable latitude to everybody. Golf is a game which does not require to be hampered by class definitions, and to disturb the existing definition would be to raise a hornets'-nest of trouble before which the Land Taxes, Tariff Reform, and the House of Lords would pale into paltry insignificance.

* * * * * *

The Minor Counties Cricket Association was really going to show the first-class counties how championships should be arrived at. They would have none of the crude methods of their seniors. And yet in the result their ends are just as farcical as those of the first-class counties might be with their present system. In the minor counties five points are given for a win, and three for a win on the first innings when only one innings is played. Now amongst the minors Berkshire and Norfolk meet in the final. These two counties have not played such strong teams as Glamorgan or Surrey II. Berkshire have scored the same number of points as Glamorgan, but they play Norfolk because of another silly rule which says that under these circumstances the club with the best batting average goes on top. Glamorgan has played a stronger card than either of these counties, and has protested against Berkshire playing Norfolk because the Glamorgan bowling averages are better. And really this would seem to be reasonable.

But surely this incident illustrates the hopelessness of working out any championship rule. One team is generally top dog by the end of the season, and as to where the others are, what does it matter? Public opinion can generally place the first two or three teams. Wherefore when Kent went to the Oval to give battle to Surrey public opinion expressed itself by sending a large number of people to see the two best counties of the year playing. The game, for the benefit of Apted, the ground man, was brimful of interest from start to finish. There were two schoolboys, one in each team, Knott for Kent, Campbell for Surrey, and both are going up to Oxford. Knott is not orthodox. Campbell is. Both are splendid fielders, and each made good catches in the deep field, and each made very useful scores. Bird again showed a genius for making runs and taking wickets at a critical period of the game. The two teams provided a fine nucleus for a gentlemen's and players' eleven. Bird, Kirk, Carr, and Mason are all rather useful bowlers, and three of them first-class bats. Add Hooman and Hutchings and over half the team is completed, and all are young men. Warner has struck the top of his form. He played right through the first innings for Middlesex against Hants and scored 145.

MOTORS AND MOTORING.

SOME CHAUFFEUR PROBLEMS.

THE chauffeur is a thorny subject. He has been the centre of much controversy. Since automobilism began, his critics and his defenders have waged war over his more or less inarticulate person. He and his employer alike have been held up as the best and the worst of men—as martyrs to one another's misdoings and meek and patient bearers of one another's burdens.

Hear the owner's side first. According to him, or some of him, at all events, the average motorman is the embodiment of all that is worthless and contemptible in human nature. He is a lazy, lying, thieving rascal who divides his time between smoking cigarettes, giving his lady loves "joy rides," taking illicit commissions, and plundering his master in every other way which his ingenuity can suggest. On a princely wage of 50s. a week (plus the aforesaid "extras") he wastes his substance in riotous living, what time the car entrusted to his care goes to rack and ruin. He describes himself as a skilled mechanic, but in practice is a botcher of the first order, with an invincible penchant for strong drink, and an incurable repugnance to sustained exertion. He is insolent when spoken to, untidy in his person, unpleasant in his language, and generally about the completest specimen of incompetence which the industrial system affords.

The indictment is severe, but hardly more so than that which the chauffeur in his turn prefers against his master, whom he cites as an example of the grasping and inconsiderate employer at his worst. According to this view of the matter, the poor chauffeur is an individual consistently overworked and underpaid. He is called on in addition systematically to bear the blame for shortcomings and mishaps entirely beyond his control. He is required to have his car ready for service and spick and span inside and out at all hours of the day and night, and if he ever gets time to sit down to a meal he regards it as an occasion to be remembered. Against the skilled mechanic's week of fifty-four hours and all overtime paid for, with Sundays free, his seven-day week consists of 168 hours and Sunday the hardest day of all. For a miserable pittance of 30s. or £2 he is made responsible not only for the costly and delicate mechanism which he controls, but also for the lives of his master and his master's family. From morning till night he toils uncomplainingly in the service of his master, who repays his fidelity by the basest suspicions and most injurious accusations.

Possibly there is a certain element of exaggeration in both pictures. All chauffeurs are not rogues; every master is not a brute. But, as Herbert Spencer has remarked, there is a soul of truth in things erroneous, and so there is some amount of justification, probably, for the complaint of both masters and men. Undoubtedly many chauffeurs leave much to be desired on various grounds; but, then, so do a large number of their employers. Seriously, the question of commissions and what are euphemistically known as "presents" is one of the most difficult ones affecting the relations of owner and driver. Of course all such gifts (unless disclosed) are absolutely illegal, as falling within the scope of the Secret Commissions Act, but that statute is practically inoperative. How, then, is the thing to be prevented? There is not much difficulty, since the owner can get everything at one establishment, pay the bills himself, and see to it that no loophole for illicit payments is afforded. Then there is the question of wages. Here the complaint of the chauffeur is that owners too frequently will not pay highly enough for the skilled services which are required, but prefer to economise by getting instead the half-trained amateur. This brings up the fact that there are two totally distinct classes of chauffeur—both equally worthy of respect—and it is necessary to distinguish them. There is, in the first place, the thoroughly skilled man who is primarily a mechanical expert, and secondly there is the ex-coachman type of driver who merely has enough knowledge of the rudiments of mechanics to keep his car going on the road, but who is quite incapable of attempting any serious work in the garage. Both types have their advantages but many prefer the second on the whole, since what is lost in expert knowledge is generally gained in civility and manners, while as cars are made nowadays general intelligence and fair mechanical aptitude are really all that is necessary in most cases to keep them in order. But the more completely equipped expert is doubtless a comfort if one of the right sort can be obtained—in which connection the aphorism of a well-known owner may be recalled: "Never get rid of a good chauffeur for anything short of wilful murder."

The question of status has also to be considered. Undoubtedly the chauffeur occupies to some extent an anomalous position in the domestic hierarchy. If he cannot be accurately described as standing a little lower than the angels he is obviously entitled, in virtue of his special training and higher intelligence, to reckon himself superior to most of his companions in the servants' hall. Mr. Bernard Shaw's chauffeur, the immortal 'Enery Straker in "Man and Superman," quoted Beaumarchais, it will be remembered; but then perhaps he must be reckoned a supermotorman. It is certain, however, that this question of status is a somewhat delicate one, which requires to be handled with consideration and tact if the susceptibilities of this modern variant of the "gent in leggins'" are not to be offended.

"TRAINED" RUBBER.

There is as much difference between Goodrich rubber and the ordinary loose compound as between a trained athlete and a brewer's drayman.

Goodrich Tyre rubber is tough and close in grain, resilient, trained to the hour, the very muscle of rubber. . . . A few hundred miles of loose flinty road does not deface it with innumerable cuts, hungry for grit and thirsty for moisture. . . . Goodrich rubber is not at the mercy of small circumstances like that. Strains which reduce the average "beefy" tyre to pulp leave it unmarked, full of fight, ready to carry on its defensive mission to casing and air chamber to the furthest limits of Tyre endurance.

for confirmation,

"ASK THE ROAD"

about

Goodrich Tyres

Manufactured by

The B. F. GOODRICH Co., Ltd.,

7, Snow Hill, London, E.C.

A cri du cœur from "A Disgusted English Mechanic" in one of the motoring papers:—

Three summonses in six weeks for driving a motor-car at a speed exceeding the legal limit! Monstrous! Why are we persecuted to such an extent, and by whom?

I hesitate to add fuel to the fire by pointing out to the disgusted one that if he will insist on breaking the law he must take the consequences. Doubtless he is of opinion, as are a good many others, that the law in this case is worthy of its proverbial appellation. But, then, the remedy for this is to get the law altered. Meanwhile those who play at bowls must expect rubbers.

The Continental Tyre and Rubber Company write that a second edition of their "Road Atlas for Germany and Middle Europe" is now ready, and has been corrected and brought thoroughly up to date. It contains key map, forty-six different sections, and seventeen special maps, and covers the country from Copenhagen, in the north, to Milan, in the south, and from Paris, in the west, to Warsaw, in the east. The price is 4s. per copy. The address of the company is 102-108, Clerkenwell Road.

The many fine performances to the credit of Talbot cars in Australia have borne practical fruit in the selection of a car of this make by the Queensland Government for use in connection with the surveying of the proposed route for the Queensland Transcontinental Railway. The car which has been chosen is the 15-h.p. model, with an approximate brake horse-power of 28. Mr. Amos, of the Queensland Railway Survey staff, is in charge of the expedition, and a start was to have been made from Cunnamulla on the 24th inst. to Hungerford, where the real journey will begin. It is expected that the trip will cover about 4,000 miles.

Not for the first time the suggestion has been made that to prevent collisions at corners cars should carry light masts bearing a flag by day and a lamp at night which could be seen above the hedges, and thus give warning to drivers. The notion sounds a trifle crude, perhaps, but there is no doubt that such a device, if adopted, would tend to promote safety. As it is, the vast majority of corners have to be taken "blind," entailing not only an inevitable amount of risk, but also an unnecessary slackening of speed. What enhances the risk is, moreover, the fact that, to put it paradoxically, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it does not exist. This engenders carelessness, and then one fine day comes the inevitable retribution. The right remedy is, of course, to cut all hedges down at such points, but here, of course, the landlord is apt to raise objection. The matter is one of those which might engage the attention of the Road Board.

WOMAN.

BRAINS AND BEAUTY.

IT is a frequent reproach against women who use their brains that they are all very plain. One would suppose that no woman of intellect had ever been anything but a hag, to read the letters which appear in the Press on the subject. The contention is always that the plain women, having been unable to "hook" a husband by their looks, have nothing left to them but to think and work, sourly and disappointedly. The chase of the husband, it is understood, comes first. If the thinking woman be married, no doubt "Englishman" or "Bachelor Boy" supposes that she has not been able to keep the affection of her husband. It amounts to the same thing.

In America pretty waitresses marry so quickly that a St Louis firm is advertising for ugly ones. In England, it seems, the chief matrimonial mortality is among the willing and good-mannered waitresses in popular restaurants. According to the manager of one such company, the plain girls are the best workers; they "are not continually stopping to admire themselves in the glass." Meanwhile, an indignant lady writes to a Sunday paper to tell a gentleman that the Suffrage procession was neither a beauty show nor a marching matrimonial bureau. I missed the first part of the correspondence, but it seems that this gentleman had not seen a Helen of Troy in the procession, and was of the opinion that only pretty women should have been allowed to walk in it. If that is the only way to appeal to his taste, he ought to follow Beauty Competitions round the world, and not concern himself with less serious matters.

A pretty woman is as often a fool as an Adonis is a fop. Beauty and brains are separate things, and they hardly ever go together in women, because brains have a way of moulding the features into strength. This is all very well with a man, in whom strength is considered beauty, but in a woman it jars with our preconceived notions. In Greece, it seems, brains used to make a mould which was magnificently beautiful; it is not so in these days. We have a few curates with Greek profiles, a few beauties of the classic type; but one seldom hears of their possessing exceptional brains. If Darwin had been a woman letters would have appeared in the papers suggesting that women of science were dreadfully plain, no doubt because, being plain women, they took up science as a pis-aller. The idea that the size and formation of the brain forbade smooth, high brows and a small mouth would never have occurred to these critics.

There is an old proverb to the effect that "Beauty buys no beef." In these days women have to buy beef, consequently they have to develop their brains. There are quite enough pretty women in the world to keep the poets and painters going; but the greater number are plain (the majority always has been), and thinking women are usually classed with these because they have thought and character in their faces, and we are used to looking for beauty only in outline and colouring. Plain women are the best workers, according to the manager of a restaurant, and, if the truth were known, according to the managers of a good many more serious establishments. Perhaps the truth is that the best workers are not beautiful—a distinction with a difference.

Helen of Troy was stupid; one cannot read her history without adoring her for the mixture of beauty and silliness which produced Homer, and, after many centuries, dipped Marlowe's pen in the divine fire. Of neither Catherine the Great, nor George Eliot, nor Queen Elizabeth, nor Harriet Martineau would anybody have been likely to write:

> Oh, thou art fairer than the evening air
> Clad in the beauty of a thousand stars.

Beauty that > hangs upon the cheek of night,

> Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear, is seldom for the thinkers and workers of the world. To be "a lovely lady, garmented in light from her own beauty," whose "beauty made the bright world dim" is, as a rule, reserved for those who devote themselves to being beautiful. Mme. Récamier has been cited as an exception; but both her beauty and her brains have been questioned. On the whole, it seems that she was a very pretty and graceful woman, with exceptional charm, who studied the art of listening. Brains have their own beauty, but it is not of the sort to appeal to the man who goes to see a procession of earnest and hard-working women in the spirit of the man who goes to a cattle-fair, and appraises them quite in the manner of the purchaser. It is this sort of man who helps to make the pretty waitress a simpering little idiot. He does not pester with his "chaff" the plain girl, but the pretty one knows very well that on the becomingness of her fringe depends the size of her tip; so her frequent use of the looking-glass is extremely natural. The same principle applies to other environments than the restaurant. But it does not hold with regard to matrimony, or how could one account for the many wives whose looks are fair to middling, or even less?

The gift of great beauty is rare, and, as has been said, it is its own excuse. Prettiness is very common, but it does not usually go with brains, in either sex. But charm is independent of brains, beauty, income, or anything else; and when we come down to the matrimonial basis of calculation which prevails among those who write to the newspapers, I think we shall find that charm wins the day. As the American poet says:

> 'Tain't her nose; it's jest her way.

MRS. A'S DIARY.

Felixstowe.

Thursday.—There is much wool and little cry—of fashion down here. The woollen coat is ubiquitous, and its crown of comfort is a round cap to match, very nearly, but not quite.

In the adjustment of the woollen cap the earnest psychologist might find clues to the female problem. One girl looks like a dissolute brewer under its scarlet tufted influence; another selecting a calm, bland blue presents the perfect type of young English lady, not a hair is unruffled, and the cap is equipoised; a third appears as an impudent boy beneath a jauntily upturned white brim; and the eyes of a fourth twinkle provocatively under a purple roll deliberately twitched higher on one side than the other. Just a misguided few wear the cap inside the hair, indicative of an improper sense of the fitness of things. But they are human documents all, writ large on woollen caps, which happily have escaped, as yet, the patronage of the portly matrons who battle bravely with the rudest breezes assisted by a motor veil tied over hats whose details are, I am convinced, better hidden than revealed.

Friday.—The croquet tournament proceeds on its tedious way, and every one whose success I substantially prophesied has been placed immediately on the list of the vanquished. There are few frocks in the field, and the elastic band of comfort and convention precludes all chance of grace. The choice of a temporary resting-place for the hoop-clip wavers between the thigh and the hat-brim, but good comradeship is a prominent circumstance in this croquet coterie, and a genial manner expressive of sympathy is much worn by triumphant antagonists. Tennis players please copy.

Our prize epicure, D——, put in a welcome appearance at lunch time to-day. He waxes fat and kicks against all food restrictions. He hailed from an hotel at Eastbourne, where he reported the voice of the grumbler heard loud in the land, crying resentment when the drinks were warm and the meats were cold, and when the cream was thin and the cutlets fat. The irrepressible glutton there suspected the local farmyard of harbouring an octopus, while the kindlier wit protested that none but the brave could face the fare. It was unanimously deplored that the abiding waiters had left their native land equipped with only three English words, "Tick or glear."

Here comfort is conspicuously present, the attendance is excellent, and the water is hot at all hours. This morning the sea wore a beauteous blue and gold frock, and to-night a well-known "two bisquer" adorned a creation of blue satin, mauve-tuniced and twinkling with iridescent sequins. In the hall, too, I recognised as admirable a jet sheath to a black charmeuse foundation; and a short pink satin veiled with grey ninon held with cords at the base was becomingly exploited by a damsel with a Madonna coiffure; and a prize for grace was well deserved by a tall, fair girl in peach-coloured météor crêpe, silk-braided to match, with a square lace chemisette, cut to reveal a tight black neck ribbon, whence a Cartier pendant dangled its diamonds daintily.

I find D——, as ever, an unfailing preventive against boredom. He has the gossip and the literature of two countries at his command, and he is no niggard with either. I anticipate instruction combined with amusement during his short stay here. To hear him order his food and appraise the feminine residents gave me cause to wonder whether man is really the helpless, simple, negligible quantity of my self-satisfied imagination.

Saturday.—I watched the croquet all the afternoon, becoming intimate with the correct genesis of a bisque and the correct exodus of a loser, and speculating on the whyfors of the many spectators. I gossiped on clothes with an obvious expert in pale pink voile with soutache trimming, and a satin-hemmed black chiffon scarf of much decorative value. Together we appreciated a black and white checked dress fashioned with a side-fastened tunic belted with patent leather, and worn with a lawn collar, and a narrow brimmed black straw hat encircled with an aggressive wreath of upstanding white wings. We discussed the desirability of following the latest decree of Paris and adopting wool-work and beads as ideal adornments for chiffon evening dresses, which must be further enhanced by fur borders. This is an elaborate programme, too serious to be accepted or rejected at first sight or hearing; a longer acquaintance and some deliberation are essential to a wise decision. It is easier to patronise without prejudice the latest blue serge autumn model, which displays on its three-quarter coat revers of cretonne braided in black, its double skirt pockets and belt showing like treatment, minus the cretonne. The black velvet hat of the costume's completion may well be trimmed with one of the new white lace aigrettes.

A blue serge skirt and coat with braided cretonne revers.

My chance companion earned my respect by the attention she granted to my words of little wisdom. I hope I shall meet her again under like illusion of their value.

Nita lost her game of croquet the while, and her ill-served partner showed his magnanimity by tossing into her lap a bunch of Brobdingnagian Muscat grapes—not sour. Then the prize epicure sauntered up to approve them, and we fell in with his proposition of a short motor drive.

Over the Deben River in a weird old-fashioned ferry, whose chains creaked with its ponderous effort, we tripped in great style, and chanced upon a disfigured old church in a near village, and found a headstone inscribed to some dear woman, whose bereaved relict, with all good intention no doubt, announced amongst other virtues that she was "by birth low, but by grace, intelligence, and marriage had been raised in the estimate of society"—an amazing epitaph!

And then we drove back to the hotel, in good time to be very late for the dinner ordered by D—— with much deliberation and tender forethought for his tastes; and later to sit and hearken to more chatter of bisques, and play, and form, and luck, and some congratulation on a proposition carried joyously for another croquet tournament on September 19. Some folks are never satisfied; and the try-again doctrine is deep-set in the breast of the beaten Britisher.

Monday.—Two letters arrive to me from abroad, assuring me that at least the gambling tables have left some of my relations the wherewithal for 2½d. stamps.

Maud reports Dieppe very gay and full, and the frocks all white when they are not of blue and red cretonne, or dark blue charmeuse. She declares the popular hat inspired by the head-dress of the Red Indian, narrow and high, and hedged round with fearsome feather quills; and she promises to write again shortly. Joan is delighted with the club-like atmosphere of Etretat, and is gambling to her heart's and pocket's content. Every one is in short dresses, she informs me, and no one fails to possess a golf-jacket, and woollen flowers and woollen feathers are the latest importations from Paris, but the multitude wears the woollen cap draped in a chiffon veil. Lilian remains dumb at Dinard, and Robert is on a yacht with an unpronounceable name lying at anchor near a village with an undecipherable address in bonnie Scotland.

He complains bitterly of the "banks and braes," resents being fooled again and again by an occasional gleam of sunshine, and seems to be perpetually a "demned moist unpleasant body." His one abiding joy is an anonymous nymph who swims daily in his vicinity in a violet silk bathing costume. Somehow she contrives to be visible when the blue mountains are blurred by the driving rain and mist. Yet my tame sailor-man is longing for the open sea in the intervals of craving to tread the heather; and he winds up his record of rebellion against his fate with, "Why is the food here so beastly, and why are the residents so abominably dressed? Their skirts and their hats are unspeakably ugly. Nattiness is an unacknowledged virtue, and any flopping freak in tweed passes muster. A binocular vision is all-sufficing for these dowdy damsels, who should be severely censured for their sins of omission of their æsthetic duties; and were it not for the mermaid, I'd readily fling the ship's telescope into the sea."

I don't care for communications from Scotland at this time of year unless on labels bearing obituary notices of birds, beasts, or fishes.

---

Mrs. A.'s Letter-Box.

I have been persuaded to counsel through these columns all wise women who send me their dress difficulties to solve. But their inquiries must be clearly addressed to Mrs. A., "Truth" Office, Carteret Street, S.W.

GENIE.—Don't add any other fur, bind the edges with antelope skin braided in a dark brown, and have cuffs to match; it will never be a great success, but this is the only method to render it still wearable. Thank you very much for your most complimentary letter.

J. K.—You will be quite safe with the narrow straight skirt; but for evening wear I prefer the short train; chiffon tunics are still fashionable, and so also are the transparent sleeves cut in one with the bodice, which you can easily freshen by a new piece of lace, and a small bunch of roses, a pink and yellow, and a crimson, tucked into the top of that deep belt.

ECONOMY.—Have the dress dyed whole, and then re-made. Bind every border with braid, use braid buttons, and cut the coat shorter. Line with new brown satin, and have a brown ninon blouse with coarse ivory lace, gold-embroidered, introduced for small neck yoke and collarband transparently treated. No, indeed, I am sympathetic, and very pleased to help.

THE INFANT SCHOOL.

The question of educating very small children is, in these days of scientific inquiry, a somewhat vexed one. Many parents declare of their first-born—it is true with a certain self-congratulation for their broad-mindedness—that he shall not over-strain his already preternaturally developed faculties by beginning his education before the age of seven. The result of such a declaration is usually that the next child begins reading at the age of three in order to obviate the difficulties encountered by his hygienically non-educated brother on going to school. On one side are those who declare that a child cannot too early begin the acquisition of useful habits; on the other those who complain bitterly that school has knocked out of poor Tommy all that striking originality that once was his. All agree that in these days of small families, a child should have companions as near his own age as possible.

At first sight the kindergarten would seem to supply satisfactorily a deeply-felt want. In default of the home-made companion, children enjoy the company of their school-fellows; in one way or another they are kept constantly employed, proud mammas receive constant evidence of their skill in sundry woven baskets, paper-mats, clay-models, and, finally, they are quiet and out of the way for a certain period in every day. Thus, in families where both parents are fully occupied, and even in the case of only children, there is a good deal to be said for the kindergarten in spite of its many disadvantages. For disadvantages there are in an institution in which Christmas shows and the like, carefully arranged so that each infant has its innings, blind fond parents to the fact that the individual child has not developed as might have been expected.

I have known a good many bright and eager children, who, purged of their naughtiness by a year or two in a kindergarten, developed into the dull, heavy school-child with no faults and no virtues. The reason is not far to seek. In many ways a child's character develops with freedom from conformity to conventional rules and habits. In a kindergarten a tremendous moral force is brought to bear upon an all too crushable material. Before the child has even had time to choose between his duty and his preferences, he is squeezed down the path of duty, and is pruned and shorn until his original ego has lost most of its sprouting power. Further, the most valuable trait in a child's character is his imagination and his development of himself. The child who sees in a pile of wooden bricks, a robber-castle with the baron looking out of the window, is worth twice the child who can only take pleasure in an imitative structure painted to look like stone. In the same way the substitution of kindergarten games and employments for those evolved by the child in his nursery are very apt to be the insistence on a crutch for a man who can naturally walk by himself. I am strongly of opinion that work should be work, and play play, and that to work at play is just as bad as to play at work. A very young child is incapable of the sustained attention demanded by set hours and set employments, however fascinating. And whereas parents imagine that a child is being taught unawares—just as they imagine that he can learn three languages at the age of two and not suffer from it—they may rest assured that every acquisition of knowledge by a child demands its price, and that that price will be paid in some form or another. It is the part of the wise parent to see that economy in prices is preserved.

There is no doubt that kindergartens depend very much upon individuals. I know of one which manages to preserve very fairly well the balance between knowledge and price in its pupils. But, then, it has none of the pedantry which insists that a child shall draw models, not as he sees them, but in squares, as though he were doing a design for Cluny lace. Nor does it result in the hiatus that exists between the average kindergarten and the subsequent school. Finally, it recognises that when small children grow sleepy or inattentive, the reason is physical, and not moral, and should be treated as such. The kindergarten has done a good deal for small children, if only in turning parental attention to them, but it is apt to be far too rigid in system, and rigidity is worse for the small child than perhaps anything else in the world.

SYKES-JOSEPHINE'S "HAUTE NOUVEAUTÉ" CORSETS are ideal; being built on anatomical principles an elegant and graceful contour is created. Mesdames are specialists for Fashionable, Surgical, Gestation, Restoring, Obesity, and Hunting Corsets. Only address, 280, Regent Street, London. 'Phone: 6348 Gerrard.

WORK AND PLAY.

The Kaiser has been pronouncing upon the duties of women once more. He makes the same old mistake—of supposing every woman to be a wife and mother. The sphere of such a woman's duties is usually, as he says, in the home and the education of her children in high moral qualities. To be the Kaiser's ideal woman a girl must first secure a husband, then produce a family, and then devote herself to the care of them till her death. The duties of unmarried women are not as a rule mentioned by any man; neither the Kaiser nor Mr. Chichele Plowden seems ever to have heard that some women do not marry, and that a whole million of women in the United Kingdom can only come by a family at the expense of their reputation.

* * * * * *

In connection with a recent appeal from Princess Christian and Lady St. Helier for funds for the association which supplies spectacles free to school children, it is interesting to note a passage in the report of the City of York Education Committee. It is stated that a great deal of eye-trouble among school children can be traced to defective lighting of school-rooms, the wrong positions of desks in relation to windows, and the colouring of the room. The ideal colours are laid down as: ceiling, white; walls, green or bluey green, light above and darker below; floors of natural wood, or white, green or blue square tiles for passages, etc.; movable blackboards painted drab at the back, and turned back to front when not in use, fixed blackboards to have a screen. Red and black are condemned, even to the use of red pencils and red chalks, and for out of doors a plot of green is strongly recommended. Stationery should be cream or blue, and unglazed. A few precautions of this sort in the schools of Great Britain would cost but little, and would do more in preventing eye trouble than the kindliest of societies can do in curing it.

* * * * * *

That gentlewomen unfitted for other professions should enter domestic service is a contention I have always upheld. Only the absurd sense of caste has prevented people from seeing it as the obvious solution of the question of the "distressed lady." That a good many have quietly done so is proved by the fact that a club is opening this week in Cliveden Place, Eaton Square, for the recreation and social enjoyment of ladies in domestic service. One wishes it all success, but there is an unwelcome flavour about the preliminary accounts of the club. There is altogether too much of the "lady-servant" about it; mistresses are to be called "clients," and talking "shop" will be discouraged. No gentlewoman would mind referring to "her mistress" or wearing a cap—no gentlewoman of the real breed, that is. Gentlehood does not depend on such things, and cannot be affected by them. If domestic service is a worthy occupation, it ought to be accepted as such, and not be hampered with these rather snobbish euphemisms. In other ways the club is apparently that rare bird—a thing which really fills "a long-felt want" without having first created it.

Another club just opened for women is the Home Farm, which is affiliated to the Park club, and provides tuition in poultry-farming, bee-keeping, bread-making, spinning and lace-making. Tennis and croquet are among its amusements, and a few bedrooms are available for butterfly members who only want a holiday. It is just eleven miles from Hyde Park Corner, and is apparently a rural and yet utilitarian paradise.

* * * * * *

The Women's Sick and Wounded Convoy Corps goes into camp this week in Dorsetshire. Their field days have proved so instructive that a whole week in camp seems the easiest and pleasantest way of putting their drills to the test. They will be superintended by a R.A.M.C. captain and by a woman doctor. Everything will be done by members of the corps, from pitching the tents to cooking, and the transformation of hurdles into stretchers, of country carts into moving hospitals, etc., will all be demonstrated and practised.

* * * * * *

The lady master of hounds seems to be becoming a recognised institution, and as representative of this select class of women Miss Marjory Foster, who is master of the Vale of Lune Harriers, has reason to take special pride in the success of her pack at Peterborough, where they gained the silver cup for the three best couples shown. Miss Foster took over the mastership after the death of her father, Colonel Foster, in 1908, and since then has shown some excellent sport. The uninitiated may not know that hare hunting is of even greater antiquity than fox hunting.

* * * * * *

The illustrated papers bear witness to the growing popularity of riding astride among horsewomen. The fashion has undoubtedly everything in its favour except prejudice. At the Duke of Devonshire's big shoot at Bolton Abbey the Ladies Maud and Blanche Cavendish rode astride, and many other society girls are following the same practice on the moors, even if they do not care to appear thus in the Row.

* * * * * *

A remarkable series of pictures has been published in the Ladies' Field representing Mlle. Daisy Speranza, the lady champion of the Puteaux Club, in the act of playing tennis. Each "pose," it is maintained, is typical of the "poetry of motion." Mlle. Speranza is certainly graceful, and for such a young player (she is only eighteen) has achieved wonders. But it is a moot point whether the attitudes caught by snapshots of our English players can be described in rapturous terms. Englishwomen yield to none in the energy they throw into their games, but—the truth will out—gracefulness is hardly their strong point when they are engaged in a really strenuous tussle.

LETTER FROM MADGE.

Dearest Amy,—A fortnight ago I wrote telling you that Marion had resolved never again to have a servant who belongs to the Girls' Friendly Society. This resolution was owing to the indiscreet conduct of an associate who had invited her (Marion's) parlourmaid to meet her at a railway station on three separate occasions at 1 p.m., a very inconvenient hour. I am consequently charged with "condemning" the society. But in my comments on the matter to you I remarked that the G.F.S. is very useful indeed in certain circumstances, and that it is regrettable that indiscreet members should do anything to prejudice it in the eyes of employers. Is this condemnation, or is it praise?

The G.F.S. is a society that does much excellent work, and it is not the only institution that suffers from the occasional indiscretions of its members.

You say that the cholera scare has alarmed you, and that you want me to recommend a good filter. We have this cholera scare every year. It comes in with apples and plums, fruits that are eaten in their immaturity by rash and inexperienced persons. This year, it is true, there are other reasons for the alarm, but our sanitary inspectors are well up to the work of shielding the country from attack. At the same time, you are perfectly right to get the best filter that is to be had. There are other microbes than those connected with cholera. I do not want to deal in horrors, but there is a typhoid bacillus occasionally found in water, to say nothing of other microbes. Some doctors say that all water used for drinking should be boiled first, then filtered, but this would seem unnecessary if the Berkefeld filter is used. An exhaustive series of experiments has been undertaken recently by an experienced bacteriologist, and the tests applied were of a most rigorous character. The result was to establish the efficiency of these filters beyond a possibility of doubt, so severe were the tests and so satisfactory the results.

But of course the necessity remains, as it must with any filter, of sterilising the Berkefeld every fourteen days. The mistake made by most of us is in expecting our filters to go on performing the task of purification for an indefinite period. Sterilisation by boiling should be carried out regularly once a fortnight. The Berkefeld in these conditions can be relied upon to yield germ-free water—free from even the very minute microbe that is called Bacillus prodigiosus, on the same principle, I presume, that the tallest officer in the British Army is known as The Baby.

Going to spend the day with friends at Weybridge one morning last week, I found chaos itself installed at Waterloo Station. An enormous extension has recently taken place, and a consequent reorganisation of platforms, etc., and this troublesome process was evidently at its height on Wednesday last. Though porters and policemen all directed me with some precision, I found their instructions of no use whatever, and after a quarter of an hour of wandering about the great station I at last resolved to ask a carefully selected passenger to come to my aid. Luckily I had plenty of time in hand, so with much inward amusement I placed myself near a barrier and carefully waited for a man who should look both capable and kindly. I had to wait some time, for it is not every one who not only combines the two qualities but shows in his appearance that he does so. Some were in a fearful hurry. Others wore scowls of various intensity. Others, like Cassius, had "a lean and hungry look." You can picture your Madge watching them pass and at last pouncing on her victim. Yes! I found him. He was in country clothes with a Homburg hat of precisely the right tone of grey to suit his nice grey hair, and it had the least bit of a tilt to one side, just enough to prove that its wearer had that tinge of vanity that would make him enjoy being polite to a woman. "Do forgive me," I said, "but as none of the officials can tell me where to find the platform for the Weybridge 11.20, I am obliged to ask your help." And he found the stationmaster for me. Can you believe it? The stationmaster did not know. But he put me in the way of finding out, and after twenty minutes' search at last I got my train.

Telling a friend about this next day I was selfishly consoled to hear that he had been through a similar experience, had lost his train, and had returned his ticket to the booking office accompanied by a few satirical remarks. Let us hope that Waterloo Station may soon have settled down to its usual serenity, and that the wayfarer may not, in addition to other difficulties of locomotion, have to undertake unexpected voyages of discovery.

How delicious was quiet Weybridge after the pandemonium of the station, the hammering of carpenters, and the noise of sawing added on to the usual whistling of trains, snorting of engines, and bumping of luggage on the porters' trolleys.

Paddington is the pearl of London stations, so well managed and so contrastingly clean, but even it is thrown slightly out of its usual composure by the gradual elimination from the Great Western Railway of second class carriages, to be completed next week. Meanwhile there have been occasionally second class tickets issued and no second class carriages available, so passengers have paid second and had to travel third.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

Dearest Madge,—The most crowded week of the year in Dublin has come and gone, and we may fairly claim to have risen nobly to the occasion. The general impression remains of multitudes gathered together, of all sorts and conditions, home-grown and from across many waters, and with the one common aim of getting the best to be had in the way of festivity out of a festive "week." On the first day (Tuesday), with wise provision, we went to the Horse Show in unusually great numbers. The season had taught us the lesson of making hay whilst the sun shone. Wednesday—the State day—found us, as usual, in still greater numbers. Not that it was much of a Viceregal State day, for there was no procession to speak of and no Viceregal "house party" to dazzle us. However, we did very well for ourselves without Viceregal assistance. Important house parties were more numerous than ever. Amongst the leading entertainers were Lord and Lady Ardilaun, Lord and Lady Powerscourt—amongst whose guests was a Royal Spanish Prince—Lord and Lady Iveagh, Mr. E. and Mrs. Guinness, Lady Holmpatrick, Sir Horace Plunkett, Lord Cloncurry, the Commander of the Forces and Lady Lyttelton, Captain and Lady Beatrix Wilkinson.

You can imagine all the social light and leading included in these parties, and the opportunity which the guests of our sex gave us of seeing real taste and elegance in dress amidst a wild welter—to use a poet's word—of extravagance in fashion, and the grotesqueness to which the less socially exalted are prone through some mysterious law of nature. Never in our time had the grotesque such an opening as now. One can be thankful, however, that fashion has turned to the smaller mercy of the hobble skirt instead of in the direction of the crinoline.

Amongst the crowds it was difficult to sort out and label; the pity is that all are not numbered and ticketed on such occasions. An old friend of long years' standing was easily recognised in Lord Coventry—a guest at Foxrock of Sir H. Plunkett—also Lord Charles Beresford, on his native heath, a breezy, burly personality. Lord Plunket, making his first public appearance in Ireland on his return from governing New Zealand, and Lady Plunket were with the Iveagh party. Another ex-Irish Governor, Sir Henry Blake, was with Mr. P. Bernard. Lord Midleton and his wife and daughter were Iveagh guests. Mr. Birrell was not to be seen, but an ex-Chief Secretary, Mr. Gerald Balfour, renewed acquaintance with Ball's Bridge in its high carnival time. The King's Master of the Horse, Lord Granard, was just back from his foreign missions in time to visit the Horse Show of his native land, no doubt of much interest to him through his office. Count de Madre and Sir William Bass were of special interest to a polo-loving race; indeed, the polo matches of the week drew almost as great crowds daily to the Phœnix Park as those assembled at Ball's Bridge. However, in a strenuous and motor age, have we not almost brought being in two places at once within range of practicability? Mr. Marconi was also to be seen, and some members of the Inchiquin family, to which his wife belongs.

Lord Ardilaun, as president, did the honours of the Horse Show admirably. The party staying with him and Lady Ardilaun included Lord and Lady Bandon, Lady Bessborough, and Lady Gwenedth Ponsonby, Lord Kenmare, and Lady Cicily Brown, and many others of the elect. Kingstown Harbour was also full for the week, many yachts having large "house parties," amongst them Lord Inverclyde's Beryl and Sir Archibald and Lady Campbell's Iris.

The novelty of the military jumping competition crowded Thursday at the "show." The weather had begun its "tempers," but, still, smiling faces looked from under variegated head-wear, and wraps were closely folded over the brilliant toilets, which had to be imagined. Friday brought the first Phœnix Park race day, and, alas! also a real Irish wind. "Weather" dress alone suited the occasion; the difficulty was to hold on to wraps and even to tightly motor-veiled hats. Grania declared that, "far from the meeting being a full-dress occasion," it took all she was worth not to have it "an undressed one." She added, however, with the philosophy of the historic Brian O'Lynn, "it is a novelty, and that is always something."

Our kingdom was, indeed, given over to the horse last week, the polo matches of this year being exceptionally exciting, in addition to the usual events of the week. Such thrills as some of them gave us, such excitement as they provided for all sorts and conditions of a sporting people! This week we have a flying man taking the place of the fabled Pegasus, and having his starting-point on the Leopardstown Racecourse.

Don't ask how our finest finery got through the weather of the week. To adapt Heine: "It has borne it, only ask me not how."—Yours ever,

CLARE.

I am perfectly sure you will like the recipes I am sending you this week. You will find Kalteschale of mixed fruits delightfully refreshing:—

Peel and cook a couple of sharp apples; mash them in a basin with four ripe bananas, the juice of an orange, a half-pound pot of apricot jam, 6 ozs. of sugar, and a wineglass of Graves. The fruit should stand for an hour; then rub it through a hair sieve and freeze the purée to the consistency of very thick cream. Dish it in a large glass bowl with whipped cream on the top and serve dainty Genoese cakes separately.

Oysters à l'Americaine.—Select large plump oysters, blanch and beard them, dry them on a cloth, and season them with salt and pepper, after which roll the oysters in flour, then dip them in beaten egg and bread crumbs. Have a plentiful supply of lard hot in the pan, in which put the oysters. Fry them very lightly on both sides and drain them. Reduce the strained liquor of the oysters to half a gill; mix it with as much thick cream; add salt, pepper, and a squeeze of lemon juice; stir it until hot; pour it in a silver dish and pile the oysters on the top.

Stewed Soles, the Dutch Way.—Fillet the soles and cut each fillet into four pieces. Put them into a stew-pan with enough boiling gravy and a gill of Madeira, some white pepper, grated nutmeg, and the zest of a lemon. Stew all together slowly for thirty minutes, add some cream, and thicken it with a lump of butter rolled in cornflour. Allow all to simmer for ten minutes, then squeeze in the juice of a half-lemon. Dish the fish and serve hot.

Oysters Served on Skewers.—Put some butter into a stew-pan and small mushrooms skinned and stalked, pepper and salt, three cloves, some parsley, a dust of flour, and some sweet herbs; then throw in some large bearded oysters. When all is thoroughly heated, put the oysters on silver skewers, a mushroom between each, dip them into heated butter, roll them in fine breadcrumbs, and broil them over a slow, clear fire. Put into the stew-pan a little thick rich gravy. Serve the oysters on the skewers, and pour gravy round them. Serve with them half-lemons.

Stuffed Oysters in Shells.—Scald the oysters in their own liquor, chop half the number, and add to them parsley and an anchovy chopped, fine breadcrumbs, the grated rind of a lemon, pepper, salt, grated nutmeg the yolk of an egg, a pat of butter, and a little cream. When all is thoroughly heated throw in the whole oysters, then fill some buttered shells with the mixture. Screen the whole with fine breadcrumbs, put on little bits of butter here and there, squeeze over them the juice of a lemon, and set them in a Dutch oven before the fire. When the crumbs are of a golden colour then the oysters are done.

Apple "Gâteau."—Put half a pound of flour on the rolling board, make a hole in the centre, mix in a good pinch of salt, a quarter of a pound of butter, and half a small tumbler of cold water. Work all well together, flatten it down and roll it into a large ball with the hand, then leave it to stand twenty minutes. Roll it out to one-third of an inch thick, and spread it on a buttered tin, folding the edge over to make a thick rim round. Cut about three good-sized apples, cored and peeled, into thin slices, and arrange them in circles from the edge to the centre, lapping each row a little over the one before it. Sprinkle them with powdered sugar, and bake them about thirty minutes in a quick oven. Serve hot or cold. Almost any kind of fruit can be used for this tart—cherries, strawberries, stoned plums, or rhubarb. In winter use cold cooked prunes.

Chocolate Cake.—Half a pound of sweet chocolate, half a pound of white powdered sugar, a few blanched sweet almonds, the whites of eight eggs beaten to a snow. Melt or pound the chocolate, chop the almonds, and add both to the sugar. Mix the whites well with these, and add three tablespoons of flour. Bake the cake nearly three-quarters of an hour in a quick oven in a well-buttered mould.

This cake can be made in half quantities and at the same time as the following crême, for which the yolks of eggs are needed.

Crême au Chocolat.—Melt a quarter of a pound of sweet chocolate in a little water over the fire, mixing it quite smooth. Add four well-beaten yolks of eggs, and a quarter of a pint of cream or milk. Mix and stir well until it reaches the boil, then take it off at once.

Fried Oysters.—Have ready an omelette batter seasoned with mace, grated nutmeg, pepper, and salt. Beard the oysters and dip each into the batter with a skewer; then lay them in a pan of boiling fat. Cook them to a golden colour. Drain them and place each one on a slice of lemon and dish. Garnish them with tufts of watercress.

Ever your loving cousin,

MADGE.

NOW IN THE PRESS.
CURTIS GARDNER'S
NEW BLUE BOOK FOR INVESTORS.
Compiled by the Author of "The Business Blue Book."
CONTENTS.
Some Experiences in the City. Modern Investment. The Consol Market. Foreign Market. Home Railways Market. American Railroads Market. Colonial Railways. Foreign Railways. The Miscellaneous Market. Banking Companies. The Bank Act of 1867. Brewery and Distillery Shares. Iron and Steel Shares. Financial Trusts. Lighting Companies Shares. Insurance Companies Shares. Land and Investment Companies Shares. Shipping Companies Shares. All about Rubber. Industrial Shares as Investments. The Mining Markets—South Africans; South African Gold Output; South African Dividends; Group Control; West Australians; West Africans; Rhodesians; Miscellaneous. Something about Oil. Mining Investments. The Art of Investment. The Ideal Investment. Exchange of Investments. Booms and Slumps—useful hints. The Small Investor—his requirements. Hints on Profit taking. The Mysterious Bank Rate. What Stock Exchanges really are. The Stock Broker—his business. How Stocks and Shares are Bought. How Shares are Sold. How Payments are made. Odd Lots of Shares. The Transfer Deed. Contangoes and Backwardations. Options. An Explanation of Underwriting. Tape Prices Explained. Special Settlements. Official Quotations. Trustee Investments. The Law and the Investor. Stock Exchange Holidays. Stock Exchange Terms.
ORDERS should be BOOKED NOW of the Publishers or all booksellers.
Published by Price 2s. 6d. net; post free, 2s. 10d.
CURTIS GARDNER & CO., Ltd., Spencer House, South Place, Finsbury, London, E.C.
Telephone: 6598 London Wall (two line). Wires "Clienship, London."

BOLLINGER'S
CHAMPAGNE.

HIGH-GRADE POSITIONS.
..We have always a large number of High-Grade Positions open in Clerical, Technical, Organising, and Travelling capacities—positions carrying salaries of from £150-£1,000—and we want to hear from really High-Grade Men who are capable of filling them. If you are a man possessed of Special Ability, write us to-day—or call.
HAPGOODS Ltd., 163-167, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. Barton Arcade, 53, Deansgate, Manchester.

"TRUTH" can be obtained in IRELAND
from EASON & SON, Ltd.,
Middle Abbey Street, Dublin; 17, Donegall Street, Belfast,
and at the Railway Bookstalls.

EMPIRE HOTEL, BATH.
EMPIRE HOTELS
The Empire Hotels are the only first-class hotels who freely quote their lowest and absolutely inclusive terms for all their hotels.
Beautifully situated in Orange Grove. Close to Abbey, Baths, and Pump Room. One of the most beautiful and comfortable of modern hotels. Inclusive terms from 12/- a day. Telegrams "Empire, Bath."
Write for list of Empire Hotels and details of unique residential scheme.

The GREENING Books

Two Important New Novels Now Ready.

PRINCESS GALVA.

By DAVID WHITELAW, Author of "Moon of Valleys," etc.

THE BLINDING LIGHT.

By COLIN COLLINS, Author of "The Human Mole."

Ask for both at your library NOW.

OTHER GOOD HOLIDAY FICTION.

| | |
|---|---|
| FOR NO MAN KNOWETH | Vere Campbell. |
| ALLAH THE AVENGER | Cowley Whitehouse. |
| JOHNNY | Herbert George. |
| A PRISONER IN SPAIN | William Caine. |
| MISTRESS CYNTHIA | May Wynne. |
| THE FALL OF A SAINT | Eric Clement Scott. |
| RAGNA | Anna Costantini. |
| THE CONTINUOUS HONEYMOON | Gurner Gillman. |
| THE DUKE'S VENGEANCE | Michael Kaye. |
| THE GAY LORD WARING | Houghton Townley. |
| FOR PRINCE OR POPE | Jas. Gissingham. |
| A FOOL'S ERRAND | Anthony Hamilton. |

SIX SHILLINGS EACH. At all Libraries.

GREENING & CO., Ltd., 91, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

3/9 The WHS Self-filling 3/9

FOUNTAIN AND STYLO PENS

So simple a child can fill them

A thoroughly reliable writing instrument at a popular price. No complicated mechanism. Manufactured of the best materials, the Pens are fitted with iridium tipped 14-carat gold nibs, and in 3 styles of barrel, thin, thick & stub, and each style of barrel can be supplied with either fine, medium, or broad pointed nibs.

The Stylo is fitted with adjustable spring needle and is non-leakable.

To be obtained from all the leading Stationers, or post free, on receipt of P. O. for 3/10, from W. H. SMITH & SON, 186 Strand, London, W.C.

3/9 FULLY GUARANTEED BRITISH MANUFACTURE 3/9

THE

NINETEENTH CENTURY AND AFTER.

SEPTEMBER.

Free Trade in its Relation to Peace and War. By the Right Hon. the Earl of Cromer, O.M., G.C.B., G.C.M.G., K.C.S.I.
The Blight of the Land Taxes. By Charles Newton-Robinson.
The Mystery of the "Status Quo." By Lucien Wolf.
Canada Growing Up. By Captain Cecil Battine.
The Problem of Army Remounts. By the Earl of Cardigan, D.S.O.
Middle-Class Life Two Hundred Years Ago. By C. S. Tomes, F.R.S.
Poor Law Babies—in London and Berlin. By Janet E. Lane-Claypon, M.D., D.Sc.
The Centenary of Mrs. Gaskell. By Lewis Melville.
Heredity and the Direct Action of Environment. By Sir E. Ray Lankester, K.C.B., F.R.S.
Sedan and the Human Aspect of War: a Recollection. By Bernard C. Molloy (formerly Captain in the French Army).
Towards Educational Peace. By the Rev. Professor Inge.
The Genius of Gibbon—I. Gibbon the Man. By the Rev. A. H. T. Clarke.
Wanted—a Gallery. By Wilfrid Scarborough Jackson.
Superfluity and the Superwoman. By Margaret L. Woods.
The Commencement of Pasture. By Colonel Kenney Herbert.
Folk-Lore in Word-Lore. By the Rev. Dr. Smythe Palmer.
The Liberian Problem. By Sir Harry H. Johnston, G.C.M.G., K.C.B.

London: SPOTTISWOODE & CO., Ltd., 5, New Street Square.

"Give attendance to reading."—St. Paul.

METHUEN'S POPULAR NOVELS

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Kindly write to Messrs. METHUEN for their new Announcement List of Autumn Books. You will be interested in it. Kindly also note their list of forthcoming Novels.

A SPIRIT OF MIRTH, by PEGGY WEBLING, is ready. It is a charming book and will be very popular. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Second editions are ready of LAURISTONS, KINSMEN'S CLAY, THE LOST HALO, THE LITTLE COMPANY OF RUTH, ALISE OF ASTRA, THE AFFAIR OF THE ENVELOPE.

Messrs. METHUEN will issue to-morrow SIR PULTENEY: A Fantasy, by E. D. WARD, fcap. 8vo, 1s. net. THE CHARM, by ALICE PERRIN; WIND ALONG THE WASTE, by MAUDE ANNESLEY; JEMMY ABERCRAW, by BERNARD CAPES. Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

| | |
|---|---|
| NINE TO SIX-THIRTY | W. Pett Ridge |
| INTO THE NIGHT | Frances Nimmo Greene |
| HARMEN POLS | Maarten Maartens |
| THE HYENA OF KALLU | Louise Gerard |
| LAURISTONS | John Oxenham |
| KINSMEN'S CLAY | Mary Crosbie |
| THE LOST HALO | Percy White |
| LITTLE COMPANY OF RUTH | Annie E. Holdsworth |
| ALISE OF ASTRA | H. B. Marriott Watson |
| THE AFFAIR OF THE ENVELOPE | E. Wigram |
| THE HOUR AND THE WOMAN | C. Nicklin |

Messrs. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS

Messrs. METHUEN will publish to-morrow A HISTORY OF VERONA, by Miss A. M. ALLEN, Illustrated, 12s. 6d. net, and THE ENGLISH HOME, by BANISTER F. FLETCHER and H. PHILLIPS FLETCHER, Illustrated, 12s. 6d. net.

| | |
|---|---|
| THE BALLAD OF READING GAOL (1s. net) | Oscar Wilde |
| THE TOWER OF LONDON (10s. 6d. net) | Richard Davey |
| PERSIA AND ITS PEOPLE (10s. 6d. net) | Ella C. Sykes |
| JACK'S INSECTS (6s.) | Edmund Selous |
| AVON AND SHAKESPEARE'S COUNTRY (10s. 6d. net) | A. G. Bradley |
| MOUNTAIN ADVENTURES (7s. 6d. net) | G. D. Abraham |
| NEGRO IN THE NEW WORLD (21s. net) | Sir Harry Johnston |
| THE DOLOMITES (7s. 6d. net) | S. H. Hamer |
| RAMBLES IN SURREY (6s.) | J. Charles Cox |
| GOLDEN DAYS IN MANY LANDS (10s. 6d. net) | Winifred H. Leys |
| TURNER'S SKETCHES AND DRAWINGS (12s. 6d. net) | A. J. Finberg |

THE LITTLE GUIDES are necessary to every traveller. Each 2/6 net. A new Little Guide to SURREY is now ready.

Kindly ask for METHUEN'S SIXPENNY BOOKS everywhere. The last number is PAPA, by Mrs. C. N. WILLIAMSON, and the last volume of their Sixpenny Dumas is SAINT QUENTIN.

METHUEN & CO., LTD., 36, Essex Street, London, W.C.

Just Published. Price 2s. 6d. net. Postage 4d.

The last word on the Bacon-Shakespeare controversy.

BACON IS SHAKESPEARE

By SIR EDWIN DURNING-LAWRENCE.

Demy 8vo, 304 pages, with 64 illustrations.

LONDON: GAY & HANCOCK, Ltd., 12 and 13, Henrietta Street, Strand, W.C.

STAMMERERS and all interested in the subject should read a book by one who cured himself after suffering forty years. "Stammering, its Treatment; and Reminiscences of a Stammerer." Post Free.
B. BEASLEY, Dept. H., Tarrangower, Willesden Lane, Brondesbury, N.W.

STERILE MARRIAGE: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By a late Senior Physician to a Hospital for Women.
Post free, 3s. 9d.
Shelley & Co., Limited, 38, Gracechurch Street, London.

"Truth" Foreign Hotel List and Business Guide.

BADEN-BADEN.—HOTEL MINERVA. Fst.-cl. fmly. hotel. Lichenthal-Alee. Btfl. lge. pk. Open-air restau. Rooms with bath.

BASLE.—THREE KINGS HOTEL. The unique, beautiful quiet pos. on the Rhine. Universal rep. L. A. BOSSI, late Gd. H., Territe.

BLANKENBERGH (Belgium).—KURSAAL HOTEL. 1st-class, leading pos. on beach. Large restaurant, ex. cooking. Mod. comf.

COLOGNE.—EXCELSIOR HOTEL ERNST. The nwst. and most up-to-date hotel in town. The same prop. as Baur au Lac, Zurich.

COLOGNE.—HOTEL DISCH. First-class leading hotel. Patronised by Eng. and Amer. New bath suites. Mod. charges.

COPENHAGEN.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class. Leading hotel. Up to date. Connected with Carlton and Ritz hotels.

DRESDEN.—HOTEL BELLEVUE. The leading Hotel, pat. by Eng. & Amer. soc. All latest improve. R. RONNEFELD, Gen. Man.

DRESDEN.—GRAND UNION HOTEL. Nearest first-class Hotel to Cen. Stn., open location, Grdn. on front & back, mod. terms.

DRESDEN.—SENDIG HOTEL. Europaischer Hof. First-class. Sendig Hotels Schandau, Nurn., Wies., are all of best reputation.

DUSSELDORF.—HOTEL ROYAL. Thoroughly first-class. Aprts. & single rms. with baths.—H. Hengst, Dir., prev. H. Europe, Hamburg

EMS-BAD.—HOTEL BALMORAL. Fst.-cl. fmly. hotel & pen. Mod., comf. Lift, bath. Quiet pos. in own l. grounds, nr. wells & forest (mod. terms).

FLORENCE.—HOTEL MINERVA. Quiet and central. Patronised by English and Americans.—G. CANDRION, Proprietor.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL REGINA ET VICTORIA. First-class. Every modern comfort. Lately improved and redecorated.

CHEMISTS.—H. ROBERTS & CO. English and American chemists. Via Tornabuoni, 17.

HAMBURG.—LLOYD-HOTEL. The nearest first-cl. hotel, facing Cen. Stn. (Townside). Every mod. comft. Lge. Restnt. Terms. mod.

TAILOR.—HERMANN JAHN. 8-10, Schmiedestrasse. First-class Eng. and Amer. Tailor. Perfect fit. Finest English Goods in Stock.

HEIDELBERG. — SCHLOSS HOTEL, HOTEL BELLEVUE. Leading hotels near Castle ruins. Unique position, splendid views. All latest improvements.

HOMBURG (Bath).—RITTERS PARK HOTEL. The leading hotel. Patronised by Eng. and Amer. society. New building opened this season.—C. RITTER.

HOMBURG (Bath).—HOTEL VICTORIA. First-class. One of the leading hotels. Magnificent garden. Also 4, Villas.—J. BAEHL, Proprietor.

INNSBRUCK.—JACOB ZINK, Karl Strasse 13, First-class Gent's Tailor, also Sporting Outfits.

INTERLAKEN.—HOTEL BEAU-SITE. English family hotel, near central station and steamboat landing. Quiet position. Splendid views. Large garden. Modern comforts. Terms moderate.—J. WURTH, Proprietor.

LAUSANNE.—ALEXANDRA GRAND HOTEL. First class. Most up-to-date. Splendid view on the Lake and Mountains.

LAUSANNE.—CARLTON HOTEL. Splendid sit. Close to English church. Mod. comfort, moderate charges.—H. MULLER, Pr.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL VICTORIA. The nearest first-class family hotel to the Rly. Station. Newly built, up-to-date every respect.

TAILORS.—KOCH & RIEBEL. High-class English Tailors, 17, Boulevard de Grancy, Lausanne.

LOCARNO (Lake Maggiore).—THE GRAND HOTEL. Open the whole year. Best resort on the Italian lakes. Also winter season.

LOCARNO.—HOTEL DU PARC. The most modern family hotel. The favourite residence for English families.

LUCERNE.—GRAND HOTEL NATIONAL. Hotel de Luxe.

LUGANO.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. Fst.-clss. Unrvld. patn., with ltst. imprvmnts. Htl. faces Eng. ch.—Pr., P. BROCCA.

LUGANO.—SEEGER'S HOTEL & Boarding House. First-class, large shdy. grdn. charming. view, lake, mountains & town. Mod. terms.

MAINZ.—HOTEL DE HOLLAND. The leading family Hotel, facing landing of steamers, overlooking the Rhine and Mountains.

MERAN (S. Tyrol).—HOTEL FRAU EMMA. New, first-cl., finest. vw., comf.; same owner Ht. Wildsee Prags, Pustertaler Dolomiten.

MILAN.—HOTEL DE LA VILLE. Fst.-cl., nr. Cathedral. Post, Telegraph, & Rly. Office in hotel. Centl. Heating suites with baths.

MONTREUX (Territet), Switz.—GD HOTEL & ALPES Well-known rendezvous of Eng. and Amer. clientèle.—A. AHLBURG, Dr.

MONTREUX.—GRAND HOTEL EDEN. First-class. Built 1905. Unrvd. pos. overlooking lake & Alps. Close to Kursaal. Patrnsd. by English & Americans. Garage. Own park.—FALLEGGER-WYRSCH, Prop.

MONTREUX (Territet). — GRAND HOTEL EXCELSIOR AND BON-PORT. Fav. Eng. house. Apmts. with baths. Most sheltd. pos.—L. BARONI, Mgr.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL NATIONAL. First-class Ideal English Winter Hotel Newly renovated. R. TURNER, new Manager.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL DE L'EUROPE. First-class Eng. fmly. htl. Rently. enlgd. Mod. tms.—Madam BETTSCHEN, Prtress.

MUNICH.—HOTEL ENGLISCHER HOF. First-class. Finest pos. Opp. P.O., Roy. T., Roy. P. H. & c. water running each room.

NAPLES.—PARKER'S HOTEL. The English and most comfortable; splendid view of bay; enlarged and redecorated.

NAPLES.—EXCELSIOR HOTEL. Hotel de Luxe.

CHEMISTS.—H. ROBERTS & CO. English and American chemists. Via Vittoria, 21-22.

NICE.—TERMINUS HOTEL. Only first-cl. htl., opp. stn. Branch houses: HOTEL SUEDE & HOTEL BERNE. Vacuum cleaner.

TAILOR.—F. MacGOWAN. English and American Tailor for Ladies and Gentlemen. Established 1879. 19, Avenue de la Gare, NICE.

OSTEND.—HOTEL DU LITTORAL. First-class family hotel, facing the sea. The most select in every respect.

OSTEND.—CONTINENTAL & SPLENDID HOTELS Leading on beach. 400 beds ea. Hotel de Plage is htl. & restau. de luxe.

OUCHY-LAUSANNE. — HOTEL DU CHATEAU. The only first-class hotel close to landing of steamers. Beautiful view. Most comfortable.

PARIS.—HOTEL DE L'ATHENEE, Rue Scribe. One of the leading hotels.—E. AMBRUSTER, Manager-Proprietor.

PARIS.—HOTEL MEURICE. Rue de Rivoli (opposite Tuileries Gardens). "The Hotel de Famille de Grand Luxe."

PARIS.—HOTEL St. JAMES & ALBANY, opposite Tuileries. Favourite rdvous. of Eng. & Amrns.—Pr.-Mgr., A. LERCHE.

PARIS.—HOTEL MONTANA. (Avenue De L'Opera). Up to date, with all latest and modern improvements.

ROME.—EXCELSIOR HOTEL. Hotel de Luxe.

ROME.—HOTEL QUIRINAL. First-class. Sit. on famous Via Nazionale. Up to date in every respect.—BUCHER-DURRER, Prop.

CHEMISTS.—H. ROBERTS & CO. English and American chemists. Corso Umberto 417-418.

ST. MORITZ.—THE BELVEDERE. English Family House, residential quarter, numerous suites of rooms with baths.

ST. MORITZ.—PALACE HOTEL. The most fashionable. Baths with suites of rooms.—Prop., CASPAR BADRUTT'S ERBEN.

TRIBERG (Black Forest). — SCHWARZWALD HOTEL and KURHAUS WALDLUST. First-class leading hotels. Near the waterfall, and the great forest.

VIENNA.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Kärntnerring next to the Opera. The most leading hotel in the town. Own fishing and shooting.

VIENNA.—MATSCHAKERHOF. I., Seilergasse 6. Pat. by the Austro-Hun. Nobility. Splty. Vienna gd. cookg. Best wines. Shoot & fish

TAILOR.—JOHANN MANNINGER. I. Krugerstrasse 5. High-class Tailor. Latest fashion, perfect fit.

WIESBADEN. — FOUR SEASONS HOTEL and BATHS.—Finest pstn., opp. Kurhaus and Opera. Own mineral spring.

WIESBADEN.—HOTEL NASSAU. The English home, with magnificent bathing & medical establmt. Situated at the Curplace.

WIESBADEN.—PALACE HOTEL and BATHS. Up-to-date family hotel. Every room with tel. and running h. and c. water.

TAILOR.—JEAN MARTIN. Langgasse 41, Gents' Tailor. First class and perfect fit guaranteed.

WURZBURG.—HOTEL RUSSISCHER HOF. First-class fmly. hotel. Every mod. c m. GEO. OTT, Man. Dir. Pur. to the Roy.

ZURICH.—HOTEL BAUR AU LAC. Latest improvements. The same proprietor as Excelsior Hotel Ernst, Cologne.

ZURICH.—DOLDER, THE GD. HOTEL, May 15 to October 15. The WALDHAUS open all year, quietest position, finest view.

ZURICH.—GRAND HOTEL VICTORIA. First-class family hotel, facing station, open all the year. Pat. by English & Americans

ZURICH.—HOTEL & PENSION EDEN AU LAC. New comf. family hotel facing the Lake. Up-to-date in every respect.

Foreign Pensions.

BAD NAUHEIM.—ELEONOREN-HOSPIZ. First-class fmly. hse. at the Kurpark close to the bth-hses. Mod. prices. Open all yr.

BRUSSELS.—PENSION ROEGIERS, 94, Rue du Prince Royal (Avenue Louise). All comfs. Excel. cooking. Largegrdn. Trms. mod.

BRUSSELS.—Miss POOLE, PENSION des ANGLAIS, 83, Rue Lesbroussart (Avenue Louise). Fst. cl. Every comf. Excel. cooking.

DRESDEN.—PEN. WILLKOMMEN, Sedanstrasse 6. Fst.-cl. Best & healthst. pos. Only pen. entirely for ladies. H. HARNISCH Pr.

DRESDEN.—PENSION KEMPF. Sedanstrasse 3. Eng. & Amer. visitors will find here a comfortable home & excellent cooking.

DRESDEN.—PENSION DONATH, Lüttichau Strasse, corner Struve-Strasse, near Central Station, Theatres, and Gallery. Comfortable, up to date. H. COLLIN, Prop.

FREIBURG (Black Forest).—PENSION UTZ INTERNATIONALE.—First-class fam. pen. Fine position. Excellent cuisine. Modern comfort. Moderate terms. Reduction for families.—Frau L. UTZ.

HAMBURG.—PENSION ALSTERUFER. Alsterufer 7. Fst-cl., fine pos., fcg. Alster, new. fur. Every mod. com. Best ckg. Nice gdn.

HAMBURG.—PENSION GUTMANN. Alte Raben. strasse 10. Harvestehude. Fst. cl. Most select position. Modern comfor.

HAMBURG.—KLOPSTOCK PEN. Klopstockstrasse 2. 2 min. from Dammtor Ry. Stn. Rooms with or without pen. Excel. cookg.

LAUSANNE.—PENSION SEILER. First-class, finest part, nr. Eng. Church. Most up to date & comf.—H. SEILER-WINTON, Pr.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL PENSION EDEN. First-class family house, fine pos. Every modern comfort. Very moderate terms.

LUCERNE.—PENSION VILLA MARIA. First-cl. fmly. hse., select, charm. pos. overl. lake & mtns. Every mod. comf. Terms mod.

MUNICH.—PENSION PFANNER, 2 Finkenstrasse. Fst.-cl. fam. pen., cent. pstn., ex. cuisine, cent. heatg. FRAU PFANNER, Pr.

MUNICH.—PENSION WAGNER, Akademiestr. 9. Opp. Kunstakademie. Eleg. fur., baths, mod. tms. Fr. MARIA WAGNER, Pr.

NAPLES.—PENSION BAKER, 10, Via Caracciolo. The leadg. English pension, fine sit., fcg. bay, magnificent view of Vesuvius.

ROME.—PENSION CARGILL, Via Collino 23.—Select, com. fam. pens., quiet sit.; lofty, sunny rooms.—Eng. Prs., Miss CARGILL.

VIENNA.—PENSION HIGH LIFE. I. Rosenbursenstrasse 4. Cen. pos., close G.P.O., Prater, & Exhibition. Newly fur. Every mod. com.

VIENNA.—PENSION TRIS. I. Laurenzberg 1. Opposite G.P.O. Newly furnished Rooms, with or without Pension; good cooking.

WIESBADEN.—PENSION ANGLAISE, Sonnenbergerstrasse, 37. Est. 1880. First-class, near Kochbrunnen, Kurhouse, and opposite Park. All modern comfort.

WIESBADEN.—PENSION VILLA RUPPRECHT, Sonnenberger Str. 17, opposite Kurpark and Kurhouse. First-class. Thermal bath. Prop. FRAU DR. RUPPRECHT.

GREAT SALE
OF Ladies' and Children's
WINCEY NIGHTDRESSES
At Messrs. COPLAND & LYE'S.

Ladies' Nightdresses.

Made of Fine Cream Scotch Wincey (a material which combines comfort with durability). Simple style, made with small collar edged with feather frills.

Full size, 9/11; Outsize, 11/9.
If by post, 4d. extra.

The same style of Nightdress may also be had with an edging on collar and cuffs of fine Torchon. Price 13/11.

Children's Cream Wincey Nightdresses.

In a full range of sizes, made in simple style with small collar edged with a feathered frill.

SIZES AND PRICES:—

| 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 5/11, | 6/6, | 6/11, | 7/6, | 7/11, | 8/6 | 9/6. |

Or if by post, 3d. each extra. To fit from 3 to 14 years.

SALE CATALOGUE POST FREE.

Carriage Paid in Britain on Orders of £1 and upwards. All Goods delivered free within 10 miles of Glasgow.

COPLAND & LYE,
Caledonian House, Sauchiehall Street, GLASGOW.

"Truth" Hotel List.

BELFAST.—GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL.—The Finest Hotel in Ireland. 200 rooms. Electric light throughout. Passenger lifts to all floors. Magnificent public rooms and suites of private apartments. Most central position. Very moderate tariff. Omnibuses from Hotel attend all steamers and trains. Telegrams, "Grand Central, Belfast."

BEN RHYDDING HYDRO HOTEL, Wharfedale, Yorkshire. 500 ft. alt. On the edge of the Moor. Home farm. Bracing air, lovely scenery. 9-Hole Golf Course, adjoining grounds, free to visitors. Fine new Lounge. JOS. I. KIRBY, Managing Director.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors. GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

DUBLIN. — HOTEL METROPOLE, SACKVILLE STREET (next General Post Office). Convenient for Railways, Steamers, and Amusements. Modern and luxurious. Electric Light and Passenger Lift. Sanitation officially certified. High-class Restaurant attached. Moderate Tariff. Descriptive matter on application to the Manager.

GLASGOW.—WINDSOR HOTEL.—A First-class Family Hotel, PATRONISED BY ROYALTY. Excellent cuisine. Every Modern Comfort and Luxury. Electric Light. Passenger Lift. CENTRAL POSITION, WITHOUT NOISE OR TRAFFIC. MODERATE TERMS. A. M. THIEM, Proprietor, also at Hydro., Peebles.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position. Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER, & CO., Colonial House, Water Street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

LIVERPOOL.—EXCHANGE STATION HOTEL.
Owned and Managed by the
Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co.
NEAREST FIRST-CLASS HOTEL TO THE LANDING STAGE.
Telegraphic Address: "Station Hotel, Liverpool."

LONDON.—WELLINGTON HOUSE, BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W. — The Ideal RESIDENTIAL HOTEL. Delightful combination of hotel life and private flats. Self-contained suites. Récherché Restaurant; magnificent public rooms. Valeting, attendance, light, baths, inclusive. No extra charges. 2341 Vict. W. M. NEFZGER, Gen. Man.

MALVERN has more landscape beauties and the most invigorating air in the Kingdom. Only 2½ hours from Paddington. THE IMPERIAL HOTEL faces due South and the famous hills. Every comfort at moderate charges. Cheerful lounge, electric light, garage and pit. Brine baths as at Droitwich. Vichy massage, douches, and hydrobaths. For tariff apply to the Resident Prop., F. MOERSCHELL.

MARGATE.—WHITE HART HOTEL.
Most picturesque position. Every comfort, no ostentation.
All English meat and poultry. No gas stoves. Reasonable terms.
Original Headquarters Auto. Club, also Motor Union.
Address, Proprietor.

MARGATE.—NAYLAND ROCK HOTEL.
Old established for families and gentlemen. Premier position. 20 yards from and facing sea. Nearest hotel to golf links. Noted cuisine. Vintage wines. En pension and à la carte. Wedding receptions. Special dinners. Illustrated tariff. T. E. FORMAN, Proprietor.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely new Management. New Sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
W. WORSTER, Manager.

MATLOCK BATH "The Switzerland of England"
ROYAL HOTEL AND BATHS
High-Class Residential Spa.
ORCHESTRA. Telegraphic Address: "ROYAL." Telephone: 193.

PEEBLES HOTEL HYDROPATHIC.
SUMPTUOUSLY APPOINTED. Magnificent Situation. Charming Scenery. GOLF, 18-Hole Course near. MOTORS. Outdoor Games. Complete HYDRO and ELECTRIC BATHS. Resident Physician. Send for Illustrated Tariff.
A. M. THIEM, Resident Director.

TORQUAY.—GRAND HOTEL.
MOST MODERN, BEST EQUIPPED, UNIQUE POSITION, FACING BAY AND CHANNEL. UNRIVALLED VIEWS. SOUTH ASPECT. NEAREST STATION AND SEA. ELECTRIC LIGHT & LIFT. GARAGE.

THE FAMOUS BROMO-IODINE CURES.
WOODHALL SPA. VICTORIA HOTEL.
Pump-room in Hotel grounds. Famous Bromo-Iodine Waters and Baths for Rheumatism, Gout, Neuritis, etc. Wonderful results. Charming gardens. Golf, Tennis, Croquet. Tariff of Manager.

TOURS BY THE R.M.S.P.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| £9 .. .. | SPAIN. | £53 .. .. | CEYLON. |
| £10 .. .. | PORTUGAL. | £62 .. .. | RIVER PLATE. |
| £15 .. .. | AZORES. | £63 .. .. | STRAITS. |
| £21 .. .. | MOROCCO. | £75 .. .. | CHINA & JAPAN. |
| £21 .. .. | CANARY ISLANDS. | £89 .. .. | CHILI. |
| £21 .. .. | MADEIRA. | £102 .. .. | ROUNDS. AMERICA. |
| £24 .. .. | EGYPT. | £110 .. .. | ROUND WORLD. |
| £40 .. .. | WEST INDIES. | £124 .. .. | AUSTRALIA. |
| £50 .. .. | BRAZIL. | | |

Apply to THE ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET COMPANY,
London: 18, Moorgate Street, E.C., and 32, Cockspur Street, S.W.

"TRUTH"
Can be obtained at THE GALIGNANI LIBRARY,
224, RUE DE RIVOLI, PARIS.

LEAMINGTON

A Centre of Health and Interest.

Dry soil and equable climate. Famous remedial Spa, with modern electric and other Baths, under skilled management. Bulgarian Health Milk, from pure Cultures. Exquisite gardens in centre of town. Music, Boating, and Golf. High-class shops.

Booklet free from the Town Clerk, Leamington Spa.

The HACKNEY FURNISHING Co. Ltd.

Parties Furnishing should visit their West-End Premises, situated in the finest position in London,

103 & 103a, OXFORD STREET, W.

Next door to Henry Heath's and facing Newman Street.

View our Model Flats.

Three Minutes from Tottenham Court Road and Regent Street.

Their New Galleries are acknowledged to be the most Artistic combined with Elegance in London.

Parties can Furnish on their Deferred Payment System as follows:—

GENERAL TERMS.

| Worth | Per Month | Worth | Month | Worth | Month | Worth | Month |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| £10 .. | £0 6 0 | £30 .. | £0 17 0 | £50 .. | £1 8 0 | £200 .. | £4 10 0 |
| £20 .. | £0 11 0 | £40 .. | £1 5 0 | £100 .. | 2 5 0 | £500 .. | £11 5 0 |

Free Life Insurance. Free Fire Insurance. No Security. No Deposit.

Head Offices and Showrooms } 1, 2, 3, 4, Town Hall Buildings. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, The Grove, adjoining Mare St., London, N.

Catalogues and full particulars post free.

A. M. Stewart, Managing Director.

St. Clements Press LIMITED,

PORTUGAL STREET,

KINGSWAY, LONDON, W.C.

Works Open Day and Night.

Wires: "Printshop, London."

Telephones:

National—5800 Holborn (2 lines.)

Printers of "TRUTH" and 50 other Publications.

Amusements.

GAIETY THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. George Edwardes. EVERY EVENING at 8, a Musical Play, OUR MISS GIBBS. Box-office open daily 10 till 10.

DALY'S THEATRE.—EVERY EVENING at 8.15, Mr. George Edwardes' Production, THE DOLLAR PRINCESS, a Musical Play. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY at 2.15. Box-office 10 to 10.

ST. JAMES'S. Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER, Sole Lessee and Manager.
Every Evening at 9.
THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST. By Oscar Wilde.
Mr. ALLAN AYNESWORTH
in his original part.
Preceded at 8.30 by A MAKER OF MEN, by Alfred Sutro.
MATINEE (both plays) EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2.30.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE. THE ARCADIANS. EVERY EVENING at 8. MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2. Lessee and Manager, Robert Courtneidge.

VAUDEVILLE, STRAND.—Under the Management of Messrs. A. and S. Gatti. TO-NIGHT, at 8.30, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES' New Musical Production, THE GIRL in the TRAIN. MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2.30. Tel., 3815, Gerrard.

ALHAMBRA.—"FEMINA," GRAND BALLET, LEONORA, FAICO, BRITTA, OLYMPIA DESVALL, THE UESSEMS, THE ROYAL COLIBRIS, ON THE SANDS, JURY'S PICTURES, etc. Evenings at 8. Managing Director, Alfred Moul.

EMPIRE.—"THE DANCING MASTER," FRED FARREN, PHYLLIS BEDELLS, etc. CLARK and HAMILTON, and Specially Selected Varieties, etc. Evenings at 8. Manager, Mr. H. J. Hitchins.

PALACE.—THE FAMOUS BALALAIKA ORCHESTRA, MYRMA, NAT. M. WILLS, A WOMAN'S REVOLT, KAUFMANN TROUPE, SIX AMERICAN DANCERS, LES TROMBETTA, BIOSCOPE, &c. EVENINGS at 8. MAT., SAT., at 2.

MASKELYNE AND DEVANT'S MYSTERIES, ST. GEORGE'S HALL, W.—DAILY at 3 and 8. New Holiday Programme. PSYCHO, Mr. Maskelyne's famous automaton. THE SCARAB, New Magical Farce. Mr. Archie Naish, Humour at the Piano. MEMORA, the Human Encyclopædia. Mr. Owen Clark with novel Magical Problems, etc., etc. Seats, 1s. to 5s. 'Phone, 1545 Mayfair.

Concerts.

PROMENADE CONCERTS, QUEEN'S HALL. NIGHTLY, at eight.
THE QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA. Conductor—Mr. HENRY J. WOOD.
1s., 2s., 3s., 5s. ROBERT NEWMAN, Manager, 320, Regent Street.

Exhibition.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION. — Lifelike Portrait Models of the World's Most Famous Men and Women. Tableaux, Scenes, and other attractions. Cinematograph Performances throughout the day. Open 9 a.m. till 10 p.m.

EFFERVESCENCE PURELY NATURAL

MATTONI'S GIESSHÜBLER NATURAL MINERAL TABLE WATER.

at all Chemists, Wine Merchants, Stores, Hotels, &c.
Sole Agents: INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd., London, Liverpool, Bristol.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.

Crowns, Bridge-work, Inlays, and all Latest Methods at lowest Fees.

FIVE YEARS' WARRANTY.

Mr Labouchere in Truth writes:—"One of the largest practices in the world Can do everything science and experience suggest to satisfy every customer."

Write for Pamphlet.

GOODMAN'S, Ltd., 2, LUDGATE HILL (Facing St. Paul's).

BRIGHTON: 10, Castle Square.

Goddard's For Cleaning Silver, Electro-Plate &c. Sold everywhere 1/- 2/6 & 4/6 Plate Powder.

STAMMERING PERMANENTLY CURED. Adults and boys taken in residence or as daily pupils.—Booklet of particulars and testimonials from Mr. A. C. SCHNELLE, 119, Bedford Court Mansions, London, W.C.

"TRUTH"

Can be obtained at Galignani, No. 8, Avenue Massena, NICE.

"TRUTH" PUZZLES.

"TRUTH" DOLL AND TOY SHOW.

PRELIMINARY NOTICE.

It seems early days yet to be reminding my readers of an event which is still some months ahead. But the fact that some 4,000 of dolls have already arrived from the manufacturers, and are crying aloud for clothes, impels me to direct the attention of TRUTH'S lady friends to their condition, and to the fact that they will be required for exhibition at the Albert Hall in the middle of December, prior to distribution among the London Poor Law Schools and Hospitals.

I hope that many ladies will take pity on the poor dolls, and forward their applications as soon as possible. The usual prizes for the dressing of the dolls will, of course, be awarded after the Show.

HOME-MADE TOYS.

The exhibits in this class last year did not come up to expectations. This year special efforts will be made to stimulate amateur toy-makers to take part in the Competition. With that object in view the Editor of TRUTH has decided (assuming the entries warrant it) to give a Special Prize for

HOME-MADE DOLLS' HOUSES,

in addition to the usual Prizes offered in the Home-Made Toys Class.

He desires me now to direct particular notice to this, as he is of opinion that the making of Dolls' Houses is an art in which amateur talent is likely to find congenial scope for its exercise. Moreover, a Dolls' House is a peculiarly serviceable sort of plaything for children, both because it is one in the delights of which several can share simultaneously, and also because it is better able to withstand the wear and tear of daily use than smaller and more fragile toys.

A further and more detailed announcement of the Show will appear in due course. Meanwhile, let readers of TRUTH make a careful note of the date, which is Wednesday and Thursday, December 14 and 15, 1910.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret Street, Queen Anne's Gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom-de-plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on postcards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand, whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,646.

As all my readers are doubtless aware, there is a scheme on foot to institute a London memorial of our late King, Edward VII. I understand that the matter is already under the consideration of a representative Committee, who have been elected for this purpose; but, so far as I am aware, no definite scheme has yet been decided upon.

I cannot say that I envy these gentlemen their task. The difficulties of arriving at a form of memorial, which is in itself appropriate and also likely to commend itself to general approval, are too obvious to require emphasising. But TRUTH'S Puzzle Competitors have some practice in grappling with difficult problems, and it seems to me that here is an excellent opportunity for them to show their mettle.

I therefore offer hereby the usual Prize of Two Guineas for

THE BEST PRACTICABLE SUGGESTION FOR A SUITABLE LONDON MEMORIAL TO OUR LATE KING, EDWARD VII.

Each competitor is at liberty to make three, but not more than three, suggestions; and all suggestions must reach TRUTH Office by the first post on Monday, September 12.

"TRUTH" PRIZE No. 1,638.

THREE BEST NOVELS FOR HOLIDAY READING BY LIVING ENGLISH AUTHORS.

The result of collating all lists sent in for this competition works out as follows:—

(i.) "Tess of the d'Urbervilles."—HARDY.
(ii.) "The Garden of Allah."—HICHENS.
(iii.) "Far from the Madding Crowd."—HARDY.

No competitor has succeeded in giving all three of the above, but six competitors have given two out of the three. So the Prize of Two Guineas must be equally divided between these six.

Their noms-de-plumes are: MANCUNIAN, SCOTUS VIATOR, CHERUB, ALICUJUS, HOPEFUL, and TROT.

"TRUTH" PRIZE No. 1,639.

THREE BEST RESIDENTIAL PROVINCIAL TOWNS IN THE UNITED KINGDOM, OF OVER 50,000 INHABITANTS, IN ORDER OF MERIT.

The result of the plebiscite in this competition works out as follows:—

(1) Brighton.
(2) Edinburgh.
(3) York.

Three competitors, viz.:—PETRUCHIO, MOUNT PHO, and ALICUJUS have succeeded in giving the above three towns in right order.

The Prize of Two Guineas will, therefore, be equally divided between them.

FURTHER PRIZE AWARDS WILL BE ANNOUNCED NEXT WEEK.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALPHA BETA and COMET.—I have to thank these two correspondents for obliging suggestions for Puzzles, which I will take into consideration.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1643.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

FORECASTS OF THE RESPECTIVE POSITIONS OF THE FIRST-CLASS COUNTIES AT THE END OF THE PRESENT CRICKET SEASON.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 82.70 |
| 2. Surrey | 55.29 |
| 3. Lancashire | 55.17 |
| 4. Middlesex | 54.60 |
| 5. Sussex | 47.30 |
| 6. Yorkshire | 45.20 |
| 7. Hampshire | 45.00 |
| 8. Essex | 33.76 |
| 9. Northants | 33.50 |
| 10. Notts | 33.20 |
| 11. Leicester | 32.17 |
| 12. Gloucester | 23.75 |
| 13. Warwick | 23.50 |
| 14. Worcester | 23.10 |
| 15. Derby | 10.20 |
| 16. Somerset | — |

Mrs. B.

| | Played. | Won. | Dn. | Lost. | Percentage. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 25 | 21 | 2 | 2 | 84·00 |
| 2. Middlesex | 22 | 13 | 5 | 4 | 59·09 |
| 3. Lancashire | 28 | 16 | 7 | 5 | 57·14 |
| 4. Surrey | 27 | 15 | 4 | 8 | 55·55 |
| 5. Sussex | 25 | 13 | 3 | 9 | 52·00 |
| 6. Hampshire | 24 | 11 | 3 | 10 | 45·83 |
| 7. Northamptonshire | 19 | 8 | 4 | 7 | 42·10 |
| 8. Nottinghamshire | 20 | 8 | 8 | 4 | 40·00 |
| 9. Yorkshire | 27 | 10 | 10 | 7 | 37·03 |
| 10. Essex | 17 | 6 | 4 | 7 | 35·29 |
| 11. Leicestershire | 16 | 5 | 5 | 11 | 31·25 |
| 12. Warwickshire | 19 | 5 | 6 | 8 | 26·31 |
| 13. Gloucestershire | 20 | 4 | 4 | 12 | 20·00 |
| 14. Worcestershire | 22 | 3 | 9 | 10 | 13·63 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 21 | 2 | 3 | 16 | 9·52 |
| 16. Somersetshire | 18 | 0 | 2 | 16 | — |

Madge.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 81.50 |
| 2. Surrey | 56.95 |
| 3. Lancashire | 55.70 |
| 4. Middlesex | 54.20 |
| 5. Surrey | 46.20 |
| 6. Hampshire | 44.70 |
| 7. Northants | 39.38 |
| 8. Yorkshire | 39.20 |
| 9. Essex | 34.95 |
| 10. Notts | 34.70 |
| 11. Leicester | 32.20 |
| 12. Warwick | 31.75 |
| 13. Gloucester | 23.70 |
| 14. Worcester | 23.60 |
| 15. Derby | 10.70 |
| 16. Somerset | — |

Veni.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 76.00 |
| 2. Surrey | 59.25 |
| 3. Lancashire | 50.00 |
| 4. Hampshire | 45.83 |
| 5. Middlesex | 45.45 |
| 6. Nottingham | 45.00 |
| 7. Northampton | 42.10 |
| 8. Sussex | 41.66 |
| 9. Yorkshire | 37.03 |
| 10. Essex | 33.33 |
| 11. Leicester | 31.25 |
| 12. Worcester | 22.72 |
| 13. Warwick | 22.22 |
| 14. Gloucester | 20.00 |
| 15. Derby | 10.52 |
| 16. Somerset | 5.88 |

Nettie.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 80.00 |
| 2. Lancs. | 57.14 |
| 3. Sussex | 52.00 |
| 4. Surrey | 51.85 |
| 5. Middlesex | 50.00 |
| 6. Hants | 47.82 |
| 7. Northants | 42.10 |
| 8. Notts | 40.00 |
| 9. Yorks | 37.03 |
| 10. Essex | 31.75 |
| 11. Leicester | 31.25 |
| 12. Gloucester | 25.00 |
| 13. Warwick | 22.22 |
| 14. Worcester | 18.18 |
| 15. Derby | 10.00 |
| 16. Somerset | 5.55 |

Alpha Beta.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 80.00 |
| 2. Middlesex | 59.09 |
| 3. Lancashire | 57.14 |
| 4. Surrey | 51.85 |
| 5. Sussex | 44.00 |
| 6. Hampshire | 41.66 |
| 7. Yorkshire | 40.74 |
| 8. Northampton | 36.84 |
| 9. Nottingham | 35.00 |
| 10. Essex | 29.41 |
| 11. Leicester | 29.41 |
| 12. Warwick | 22.22 |
| 13. Gloucester | 20.00 |
| 14. Worcester | 18.18 |
| 15. Derby | 10.52 |
| 16. Somerset | — |

Guilsborough.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 80.00 |
| 2. Surrey | 57.75 |
| 3. Lancashire | 53.70 |
| 4. Middlesex | 50.00 |
| 5. Sussex | 41.66 |
| 6. Hampshire | 40.00 |
| 7. Northampton | 40.00 |
| 8. Notts | 40.00 |
| 9. Yorkshire | 38.50 |
| 10. Essex | 33.33 |
| 11. Leicestershire | 31.75 |
| 12. Gloucestershire | 25.00 |
| 13. Warwickshire | 22.22 |
| 14. Worcestershire | 20.00 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 10.00 |
| 16. Somersetshire | — |

Chris.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 80.00 |
| 2. Surrey | 59.29 |
| 3. Lancashire | 57.14 |
| 4. Middlesex | 54.54 |
| 5. Sussex | 48.00 |
| 6. Hants | 41.66 |
| 7. Yorks | 40.74 |
| 8. Notts | 40.00 |
| 9. Leicester | 37.50 |
| 10. Northants | 36.84 |
| 11. Essex | 29.41 |
| 12. Warwick | 21.05 |
| 13. Gloucester | 20.00 |
| 14. Worcester | 18.18 |
| 15. Derby | 9.04 |
| 16. Somerset | — |

Palatine.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 84.61 |
| 2. Surrey | 66.66 |
| 3. Middlesex | 63.63 |
| 4. Lancashire | 57.14 |
| 5. Hampshire | 54.16 |
| 6. Sussex | 50.00 |
| 7. Nottinghamshire | 45.00 |
| 8. Northamptonshire | 45.00 |
| 9. Essex | 44.44 |
| 10. Yorkshire | 42.31 |
| 11. Leicestershire | 38.09 |
| 12. Worcestershire | 37.50 |
| 13. Gloucestershire | 36.36 |
| 14. Warwickshire | 31.81 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 16.16 |
| 16. Somersetshire | 5.00 |

Outsider.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent. | 80.00 |
| 2. Surrey | 59.25 |
| 3. Lancashire | 57.14 |
| 4. Middlesex | 50.00 |
| 5. Sussex | 44.00 |
| 6. Hants | 41.66 |
| 7. Yorkshire | 40.74 |
| 8. Notts | 40.00 |
| 9. Northants | 36.84 |
| 10. Essex | 35.29 |
| 11. Leicestershire | 31.25 |
| 12. Warwickshire | 26.31 |
| 13. Gloucestershire | 26.00 |
| 14. Worcestershire | 22.72 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 9.52 |
| 16. Somerset | — |

Pirihitene.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 80.00 |
| 2. Surrey | 59.25 |
| 3. Lancashire | 57.14 |
| 4. Middlesex | 54.54 |
| 5. Notts | 45.00 |
| 6. Yorkshire | 44.44 |
| 7. Sussex | 40.00 |
| 8. Hampshire | 37.50 |
| 9. Northamptonshire | 36.84 |
| 10. Essex | 35.29 |
| 11. Leicestershire | 31.25 |
| 12. Warwickshire | 26.31 |
| 13. Gloucestershire | 25.00 |
| 14. Worcestershire | 22.72 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 9.52 |
| 16. Somerset | — |

Rhona.

| | Matches Won. | Percentage. |
|---|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 22 | 84·61 |
| 2. Surrey | 17 | 60·71 |
| 3. Middlesex | 12 | 54·54 |
| 4. Lancashire | 15 | 53·57 |
| 5. Sussex | 12 | 50·00 |
| 6. Yorkshire | 13 | 46·43 |
| 7. Hampshire | 11 | 45·83 |
| 8. Notts | 9 | 45·00 |
| 9. Northants | 7 | 35·00 |
| 10. Essex | 6 | 34·44 |
| 11. Leicester | 5 | 31·25 |
| 12. Warwick | 4 | 22·22 |
| 13. Gloucestor | 4 | 20·00 |
| 14. Worcester | 4 | 18·18 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 2 | 10·00 |
| 16. Somerset | — | — |

Uranium.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 84.61 |
| 2. Surrey | 59.25 |
| 3. Lancashire | 51.72 |
| 4. Middlesex | 50.00 |
| 5. Hampshire | 47.82 |
| 6. Yorkshire | 44.44 |
| 7. Sussex | 44.00 |
| 8. Northamptonshire | 40.00 |
| 9. Essex | 38.88 |
| 10. Nottinghamshire | 38.09 |
| 11. Leicestershire | 33.33 |
| 12. Worcestershire | 27.27 |
| 13. Gloucestershire | 23.80 |
| 14. Warwickshire | 23.80 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 13.63 |
| 16. Somersetshire | 5.00 |

Arlos.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 80.00 |
| 2. Lancashire | 57.14 |
| 3. Surrey | 55.55 |
| 4. Middlesex | 54.54 |
| 5. Yorkshire | 40.76 |
| 6. Sussex | 40.00 |
| 7. Notts | 40.00 |
| 8. Hampshire | 37.50 |
| 9. Northamptonshire | 36.84 |
| 10. Essex | 35.29 |
| 11. Leicestershire | 31.25 |
| 12. Warwickshire | 26.31 |
| 13. Gloucestershire | 25.00 |
| 14. Worcestershire | 22.72 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 9.52 |
| 16. Somerset | — |

Riam.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 84.00 |
| 2. Surrey | 55.55 |
| 3. Lancashire | 57.14 |
| 4. Middlesex | 54.54 |
| 5. Yorkshire | 40.76 |
| 6. Sussex | 40.00 |
| 7. Notts | 40.00 |
| 8. Hampshire | 37.50 |
| 9. Northamptonshire | 36.84 |
| 10. Essex | 35.29 |
| 11. Leicestershire | 31.25 |
| 12. Warwickshire | 26.31 |
| 13. Worcestershire | 22.72 |
| 14. Gloucestershire | 20.00 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 9.52 |
| 16. Somerset | — |

Army.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 84.00 |
| 2. Lancashire | 57.14 |
| 3. Surrey | 55.55 |
| 4. Middlesex | 54.54 |
| 5. Sussex | 45.83 |
| 6. Yorkshire | 44.44 |
| 7. Hampshire | 41.66 |
| 8. Nottinghamshire | 40.00 |
| 9. Northamptonshire | 36.84 |
| 10. Essex | 35.29 |
| 11. Leicestershire | 31.25 |
| 12. Gloucestershire | 25.00 |
| 13. Warwickshire | 21.05 |
| 14. Worcestershire | 18.18 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 14.28 |
| 16. Somersetshire | — |

X. Y. Z.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 84.00 |
| 2. Surrey | 57.77 |
| 3. Lancashire | 57.14 |
| 4. Middlesex | 54.54 |
| 5. Sussex | 48.00 |
| 6. Hants | 45.83 |
| 7. Northamptonshire | 42.10 |
| 8. Notts | 40.00 |
| 9. Yorkshire | 36.15 |
| 10. Essex | 35.29 |
| 11. Leicestershire | 31.25 |
| 12. Warwickshire | 26.31 |
| 13. Gloucestershire | 20.00 |
| 14. Worcestershire | 18.18 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 9.42 |
| 16. Somerset | — |

Simplex.

| | Played. | Won. | D'n. | Lost. | Percentage. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 25 | 20 | 3 | 2 | 80 00 |
| 2. Surrey | 27 | 16 | 5 | 6 | 59·25 |
| 3. Lancashire | 28 | 16 | 7 | 5 | 56·28 |
| 4. Middlesex | 22 | 11 | 5 | 6 | 50·00 |
| 5. Sussex | 25 | 12 | 4 | 9 | 48·00 |
| 6. Hampshire | 24 | 10 | 4 | 10 | 41·66 |
| 7. Yorkshire | 27 | 11 | 8 | 8 | 40·74 |
| 8. Nottinghamshire | 20 | 8 | 7 | 5 | 40·00 |
| 9. Northamptonshire | 19 | 7 | 3 | 9 | 36·84 |
| 10. Leicestershire | 16 | 5 | 0 | 11 | 31·25 |
| 11. Gloucestershire | 20 | 6 | 4 | 10 | 30·00 |
| 12. Essex | 17 | 5 | 4 | 8 | 29·41 |
| 13. Warwickshire | 19 | 5 | 6 | 8 | 26·31 |
| 14. Worcestershire | 22 | 5 | 9 | 8 | 22·72 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 21 | 2 | 3 | 16 | 9·52 |
| 16. Somersetshire | 18 | 0 | 2 | 16 | — |

Foxglove.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 84.00 |
| 2. Surrey | 59.25 |
| 3. Lancashire | 57.14 |
| 4. Middlesex | 54.54 |
| 5. Sussex | 48.00 |
| 6. Hampshire | 43.47 |
| 7. Northamptonshire | 42.10 |
| 8. Notts | 40.00 |
| 9. Yorkshire | 37.03 |
| 10. Essex | 35.29 |
| 11. Leicestershire | 31.25 |
| 12. Warwickshire | 26.31 |
| 13. Gloucestershire | 20.00 |
| 14. Worcestershire | 18.18 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 9.52 |
| 16. Somerset | — |

Baroko.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 84.00 |
| 2. Lancashire | 60.71 |
| 3. Surrey | 60.00 |
| 4. Middlesex | 60.00 |
| 5. Sussex | 54.16 |
| 6. Yorkshire | 50.00 |
| 7. Hampshire | 50.00 |
| 8. Essex | 46.66 |
| 9. Northampton | 44.44 |
| 10. Nottingham | 44.44 |
| 11. Leicester | 35.71 |
| 12. Gloucester | 27.05 |
| 13. Warwick | 26.31 |
| 14. Worcester | 17.64 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 11.76 |
| 16. Somerset | — |

Wild Duck.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 84.71 |
| 2. Surrey | 60.14 |
| 3. Lancashire | 58.62 |
| 4. Hampshire | 56.94 |
| 5. Middlesex | 55.93 |
| 6. Sussex | 51.81 |
| 7. Essex | 50.16 |
| 8. Yorkshire | 48.14 |
| 9. Notts | 41.10 |
| 10. Northamptonshire | 39.15 |
| 11. Leicestershire | 31.18 |
| 12. Gloucestershire | 27.91 |
| 13. Worcestershire | 27.18 |
| 14. Warwickshire | 21.14 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 15.10 |
| 16. Somerset | 11.44 |

Northlander.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 78.26 |
| 2. Lancashire | 58.62 |
| 3. Surrey | 57.69 |
| 4. Sussex | 52.00 |
| 5. Middlesex | 50.00 |
| 6. Hampshire | 45.45 |
| 7. Notts | 40.00 |
| 8. Yorkshire | 38.14 |
| 9. Northamptonshire | 36.84 |
| 10. Leicestershire | 33.33 |
| 11. Essex | 29.41 |
| 12. Warwickshire | 21.05 |
| 13. Gloucestershire | 20.00 |
| 14. Worcestershire | 15.00 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 10.00 |
| 16. Somerset | — |

Ben Ezra.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 80.00 |
| 2. Surrey | 59.25 |
| 3. Middlesex | 59.09 |
| 4. Lancashire | 57.14 |
| 5. Yorkshire | 44.44 |
| 6. Essex | 44.00 |
| 7. Northampton | 42.10 |
| 8. Hampshire | 41.66 |
| 9. Sussex | 40.80 |
| 10. Notts | 35.00 |
| 11. Leicestershire | 29.41 |
| 12. Warwickshire | 22.22 |
| 13. Gloucestershire | 20.00 |
| 14. Worcestershire | 19.04 |
| 15. Derbyshire | 10.00 |
| 16. Somerset | — |

Kofuku.

| | Played. | Won. | Lost. | D'n. | Percentage. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1. Kent | 25 | 21 | 2 | 2 | 84·00 |
| 2. Lancashire | 29 | 17 | 5 | 7 | 58·62 |
| 3. Surrey | 26 | 15 | 7 | 4 | 57·69 |
| 4. Middlesex | 22 | 12 | 5 | 5 | 54·54 |
| 5. Northants | 19 | 8 | 8 | 3 | 42·10 |
| 6. Yorkshire | 27 | 11 | 7 | 9 | 40·74 |
| 7. Sussex | 25 | 10 | 10 | 5 | 40·00 |
| 8. Notts | 20 | 8 | 5 | 7 | 40·00 |
| 9. Leicestershire | 16 | 6 | 10 | 0 | 37·50 |
| 10. Essex | 17 | 6 | 7 | 4 | 35·29 |
| 11. Worcestershire | 23 | 5 | 7 | 10 | 22·72 |
| 12. Warwickshire | 19 | 4 | 9 | 6 | 21·05 |
| 13. Gloucestershire | 20 | 4 | 12 | 4 | 20·00 |
| 14. Derbyshire | 20 | 2 | 15 | 3 | 10·00 |
| 15. Somerset | 18 | 0 | 16 | 2 | — |

Hyde.

TRUTH BY POST.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Payable in advance.

| | 3 MONTHS. £ s. d. | 6 MONTHS. £ s. d. | 12 MONTHS (Including Xmas Number). £ s. d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| To the British Islands ... ... | 0 7 0 | 0 14 0 | 1 9 1 |
| To Canada (thin edition) ... ... | 0 7 7 | 0 15 2 | 1 11 6 |
| To the Colonies and Foreign Countries (thick edition) ... | 0 8 8 | 0 17 4 | 1 15 10 |

All Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to the Manager of "Truth" and addressed to Truth Buildings, Carteret Street, London, S.W.

GENERAL

Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corporation

Limited.

ESTABLISHED 1885.

Assets - - - - £1,650,000.

Claims Paid - £3,000,000.

LIFE and PROPERTY INSURED, and Every Liability Covered at Low Rates.

LIVE STOCK & PLATE GLASS DEPARTMENTS NOW ADDED.

☞ The Bonds of this Corporation are accepted by all Departments of His Majesty's Government.

Insurance Agents and Gentlemen having spare time on their hands will find this Corporation's terms and methods of work particularly advantageous.

Prospectuses and every information free by return post.

CHIEF OFFICES:

GENERAL BUILDINGS, PERTH.

KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.

F. NORIE-MILLER, J.P., General Manager.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

Members of the Stock Exchange are not allowed to advertise for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than their own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, nor in any way under the control of the Committee.

Members issuing Contract Notes are required to use such a form as will provide that the words "Member of the Stock Exchange, London," shall immediately follow the signature.

A List of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,

Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.

Committee Room, Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

Banking Announcements.

BANK OF EGYPT, LIMITED.

Telegrams—"SPHINX, LONDON." Telephone—312 LONDON WALL.

Incorporated by Royal Charter in 1856, and Registered as Limited in 1897.

CAPITAL £1,300,000 in 60,000 SHARES OF £25 EACH (10,000 BEING UNISSUED SHARES).

£12 10s. per Share is paid, and the balance can only be called up in the event of the Company being wound up.

CAPITAL PAID UP—£625,000. RESERVE £660,000.

Board of Directors.—The Lord Rathmore, George T. Biddulph, Esq., The Hon. S. Carr Glyn, The Lord Grenfell, G.C.B., Sir Colin Scott Moncrieff, K.C.S.I., R. L. Barclay, Esq.

Bankers.—The Bank of England; Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co.; Messrs. Barclay & Co., Ltd. Solicitors.—Messrs. Bircham & Co.

Auditors.—Messrs. Price, Waterhouse & Co. Secretary.—Arthur Nichols, Esq.

BRANCHES at: Alexandria, Cairo, Port Said, Khartoum.

AGENCIES at: Mansoura, Tanta, Zag-Azig, Fayoum, Beni-Souef, Minieh, Assouan, Suez, Suakin, Damanhour, Girgeh, Chebin, Elkom, Esneh, Luxor, Tahta.

The Bank issues Drafts, Letters of Credit, and negotiates and collects bills on Egypt and the Soudan. Buys and Sells Egyptian and other Securities, and transacts every description of Banking business. Remittances made by cable, and current accounts opened. Deposits taken for fixed periods; rates on application.

Egypt House, New Broad Street, London, E.C.

THE UNION BANK OF AUSTRALIA, Ltd.

Established 1837. Incorporated 1880.

| | |
|---|---|
| Paid-up Capital .. .. .. .. .. .. | £1,500,000 |
| Reserve Fund .. .. .. .. .. .. | £1,310,000 |
| Reserve Liability of Proprietors .. .. .. | £3,000,000 |

HEAD OFFICE—71, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.

Drafts are granted on the Bank's branches throughout the Australian States and Dominion of New Zealand. Telegraphic remittances are also made. Bills are purchased or sent for collection. Deposits are received for fixed periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

BIRKBECK BANK. ESTABLISHED 1851.

Southampton Buildings, High Holborn, W.C.

ALMANACK, with full particulars, POST FREE.

C. F. RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY

(LIMITED),

HOLBORN BARS, LONDON, E.C.

INVESTED FUNDS - - £75,000,000

ALLIANCE

ASSURANCE CO., Ltd.

Head Office: Bartholomew Lane, LONDON, E.C.

Accumulated Funds exceed £17,000,000.

Chairman:

Rt. Hon. LORD ROTHSCHILD, G.C.V.O.

THE OPERATIONS OF THE COMPANY EMBRACE ALL BRANCHES OF INSURANCE.

DEATH DUTIES.—Special forms of Policies have been prepared by the Company providing for the payment of Death Duties, thus avoiding the necessity of disturbing investments at a time when it may be difficult to realise without loss.

INCOME TAX.—Under the provisions of the Act, Income Tax is not payable on that portion of the Assured's income which is devoted to the payment of annual premiums on an assurance on his life. Having regard to the amount of the Tax, this abatement (which is limited to one-sixth of the Assured's income) is an important advantage to Life Policyholders.

Full particulars of all classes of Insurance, together with Proposal Forms and Statement of Accounts, may be had on application to any of the Company's Offices or Agents.

Applications for Agencies invited.

ROBERT LEWIS, General Manager.

FOUNDED 1871. EMPOWERED BY SPECIAL ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

THE OCEAN

CHAIRMAN: SIR THOMAS HEWITT, K.C.
GENERAL MANAGER & SECRETARY: RICHARD J. PAULL.

ACCIDENT & GUARANTEE CORPORATION LTD.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

POLICIES AGAINST LIABILITY FOR ACCIDENTS TO THE PUBLIC.
Horse Driving, Motor Car & General.

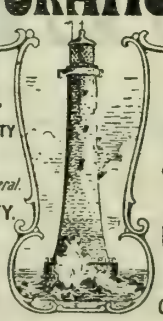
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

EXCESS BAD DEBT.

MOTOR CAR.

BOILER & LIFT INSPECTION AND INSURANCE.



FIRE BURGLARY.

ASSETS EXCEED — £2,000,000.

CLAIMS PAID OVER — £8,000,000.

LICENCE & MORTGAGE INSURANCES.

GUARANTEES OF FIDELITY.

HEAD OFFICE. MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

A "CAPITAL & INCOME" POLICY

is a SOUND INVESTMENT. Capital created, then Income paid until Capital required. No medical examination.

Full particulars forwarded by post.

THE NATIONAL BENEFIT TRUST, Limited,

10, FINSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Vacancies for first-class representatives.

Refuge Assurance Company Limited.

Chief Office: OXFORD STREET, MANCHESTER.

London Office: Refuge Assurance Buildings, 133, Strand, W.C.

Premium Income exceeds £2,601,000

Total Claims paid, £13,330,000 Funds exceed £6,838,600

SCHWEITZER'S

Cocoatina

THE PERFECT PURE COCOA WHICH DOES NOT

constipate

Of Grocers, Chemists, and Stores.

H. SCHWEITZER & CO., Ltd.,
143, YORK ROAD, LONDON, N.

For GOUT, GRAVEL, RHEUMATISM, &c., drink

VICHY-CELESTINS (State Spring)

Can be used with light Wines, Spirits, or Milk.
Sole Agents: INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd., 26, Upper Thames-st., E.C.
Of all Chemists, Grocers, Stores, &c.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
SIR MORELL MACKENZIE,
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
MISS EMILY FAITHFUL,
THE LATE GEN. W. T. SHERMAN, and many other persons of distinction, have testified to the remarkable efficacy of

Himrod's Cure for Asthma.

Established over a Quarter of a Century.

Prescribed by the Medical Faculty throughout the world. It is used as an inhalation and without any after bad effects. A free Sample and detailed testimonials free by post. In tins, 4s. 3d. British Depôt—46, Holborn Viaduct, London; also of NEWBERY & SONS, BARCLAY & SONS, I. SANGER & SONS, W. EDWARDS & SON, MAY, ROBERTS, & CO., BUTLER & CRISPE, JOHN THOMPSON, Liverpool, and all wholesale houses.

THE OLD FOLKS AT HOME

may not be abreast of the times in every respect but they are certainly up-to-date in this, that they are fully alive to the supreme merits of Beecham's Pills as an unrivalled medicine for disordered states of the stomach, liver, and bowels. Lifelong experience has taught them that they cannot do better than the World's Family Medicine when suffering from, or when threatened by, any kind of digestive trouble, biliousness, sick headache, and general want of tone. You should follow their example. Whenever you are out of sorts, or are attacked by ailments like those mentioned just do as the "Old Folks at Home" would—take

TAKE

BEECHAM'S PILLS.

Prepared only by Thomas Beecham, St. Helens, Lancashire.
Sold everywhere in boxes, price 1/1½ (56 pills) & 2/9 (168 pills).

¶ "They are one of the wonders of the world, these stories, and people are never tired of asking who writes them."

This is the comment of the Editor of the Bystander on the SIXTEENTH SERIES of

QUEER STORIES

FROM "TRUTH."

The Justice of this Criticism is fully borne out by the following Extracts from Reviews of this Latest Volume:

SCOTSMAN.—"Have long enjoyed well-deserved favour."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A selection from this well known and deservedly popular feature in our popular contemporary. All its stories are wide awake."

REFEREE.—"It contains thirty stories, all of which are interesting, and some of which are very good indeed."

THE JEWISH WORLD.—"A splendid exchange for a shilling."

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.—"Very engrossing. They are 'queer' stories in that practically every one ends in an unexpected way, and contains a good surprise."

BAZAAR.—"This latest series should have as large a circulation as those which have preceded it."

SPORTSMAN.—"We need not commend them; they are well known to be entertaining."

ULSTER GUARDIAN.—"There are no short stories to compare with those which appear weekly in TRUTH, and we cannot think of a better shillingsworth of holiday fiction than one of the volumes. . . . which contain thirty of the brightest and best of these famous stories."

SUSSEX DAILY NEWS.—"A brilliant shillingsworth. Practically every one of the thirty stories it contains is of much more than ordinary interest. They are of that happy magnetism which compels the reading of the whole story once the first page has been scanned."

WORCESTER HERALD.—"Brighter reading for the railway carriage or the odd half-hour anywhere cannot be found."

THE NORTHERN WHIG.—"244 pages of true enjoyment."

CORK EXAMINER.—"Extraordinary value for the modest sum charged for the book."

NOTTINGHAM GUARDIAN.—"Comes opportunely to serve for holiday and seaside reading."

SPORTING LIFE.—"Better holiday fare it would be difficult to find. The stories are, needless to say, varied and bright, and form an exceptionally good shillingsworth."

FINANCIAL TIMES.—"May be recommended to those who are taking their holidays."

HOSPITAL.—"We strongly recommend this excellent shillingsworth."

FINANCIER.—"Well up to the level of excellence established by the first volume of this always entertaining series."

(By Post, 1s. 3d.) PRICE ONE SHILLING (By Post, 1s. 3d.)

"TRUTH" Office, Carteret Street, London, S.W., and at all Railway Bookstalls, Newsagents, etc.
Publishing Office: 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Printed for the Proprietor by ST. CLEMENTS PRESS, LTD., Portugal Street, Kingsway, W.C., and Published weekly by H. LABOUCHERE at 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret Street, Queen Anne's Gate, S.W. Entered as Second-Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1758. Vol. LXVIII. Wednesday, September 7, 1910. Price Sixpence.

Contents.

| | PAGE |
|---|---|
| Entre Nous | 565 |
| Scrutator:— | |
| The Terrible Teuton Again | 575 |
| The Shady Side of Assam | 577 |
| An "Outside" Oculist | 577 |
| Passengers in Advance | 578 |
| Notes from Paris.— | |
| The Spanish Premier | 579 |
| Letter from the Link-man | 581 |
| Mammon:— | |
| Round the Markets—Three Home Railway Bargains — Argentine Railway Dividend Prospects — The Rubber Outlook—Seven Years' Purchase as a Basis for Investment—The Rhodesian Trust and the Market—Nigerian Tin Corporation—The Waihi Slump — The Abortive Banking Amalgamation — End of the McKinley Trusts — Mr. Moraitiny's Metamorphoses —"Vigilant's" Letter-Box | 582-591 |
| Insurance | 592 |
| Company Meetings | 593 |
| Queer Story:— | |
| Dennis Starpool's Windfall | 596 |
| Books | 598 |
| Art | 600 |
| Music | 601 |
| The Theatres | 602 |
| Sport | 603 |
| Motors and Motoring | 607 |
| Woman:— | |
| Our Neglect of Beauty | 608 |
| The Co-education School | 609 |
| Mrs. A.'s Diary and Letter-Box | 610 |
| Hints to "Truth" Doll-dressers | 611 |
| Work and Play | 612 |
| Letter from Madge | 612 |

| | |
|---|---|
| "Truth" Puzzles | 625, 626 |
| Amusements | 624 |
| Banking Announcements | 627 |
| Publishers' Announcements | 614, 616 |
| Selected Foreign Hotels | 618 |
| Foreign Pensions | 619 |
| The Truth English Hotel List | 619 |
| Insurance Announcements | 603, 606, 614, 627, page iv. cover |

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Inquiries to which an answer is desired by post must in all cases be accompanied by the Coupon printed on the third page of the cover of Truth and by a stamped envelope.

Replies cannot be given by post or by telegram to inquiries relating to Investments, Insurance, or other matters within the department of the City Editor. Such inquiries can only be answered in the paper, and they must comply with the rules printed under the heading "Vigilant's Letter Box" in the section of Truth entitled "Mammon."

ENTRE NOUS.

THE King and Queen will take up their residence at Windsor Castle for the autumn and winter early in October, when they leave Balmoral. If the King visits Rosyth when on his way south next month he will be the guest of Lord Rosebery at Dalmeny Park.

---

Queen Victoria always resided at Windsor Castle between three and four months in the year. King Edward disliked Windsor, and during the last reign the Court was in residence at the Castle for only four or five weeks every year. Now, however, Windsor will have a turn again, as both King George and Queen Mary are fond of the place, and it is probable that the Court will be in residence at the Castle for about five months of the year. Everything at the Castle is now in perfect order, all kinds of alterations and improvements having been carried out during the last nine years.

---

Queen Alexandra prolonged her stay at Sandringham for considerably over a fortnight after the day which was originally fixed for her journey to Scotland. It is not expected that her Majesty will make any long stay at Mar Lodge, and, according to present arrangements, she will leave shortly for Denmark, intending to join the Empress Marie at the Royal villa on the Sound, near Klampenborg. Queen Alexandra is not going to Norway this year, but Princess Victoria will go to both Copenhagen and Christiania to spend a few weeks with King Haakon and Queen Maud. It is probable that the Empress Marie and Queen Alexandra will pay a visit late in the autumn to the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland at their country seat in Upper Austria, near Gmunden.

---

The report that the King has already "granted" Frogmore Lodge to the Duke and Duchess of Teck is incorrect, nor has this place as yet been "offered" to Prince and Princess Alexander of Teck. I hear that His Majesty kindly proposed to place Frogmore at the disposal of the Princess Royal and the Duke of Fife, who now have no country residence except Mar Lodge.

---

The Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia spent last week at Elie, on the coast of Fife, where there are some excellent golf links, and during their stay they paid a visit to Balcarres, Lord Crawford's place near Kilconquhar, which is noted for its beautiful terraced gardens and grounds. The Duke of Connaught went to Ireland after his visit to Lord Vernon in the island of Arran, and last week he was the guest of Sir John and Lady Leslie, at Glasslough, co. Monaghan.

---

The Leslie family, traditionally a strong Unionist one, has now produced a strong Nationalist amongst its members. Mr. Shane Leslie, strongly Gaelic, like Mr. Gibson, Lord Ashbourne's eldest son, outwardly expresses the faith within him by an Irish change in his name (John), as Mr. Gibson does by exchanging modern garments for the Irish saffron kilt. What's in a name, or, for that matter, in the wear of a garment? The Nationalist parliamentary leaders, Messrs. John Redmond, John Dillon, and John Devlin, have made no changes in name or garment, but they have contributed to many others.

---

Princess Christian, who has been staying for several weeks in the Isle of Wight on a visit to Princess Henry of Battenberg at Osborne Cottage, left London on Friday for Aix-les-Bains. Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein has gone to Germany, and she is on a visit to Prince and Princess Louis of Battenberg at the Chateau of Heiligenberg. Princess Christian will pay some formal visits in Germany when she leaves Aix-les-Bains.

---

It was stated in print last week that "a curious complication has arisen from the marriage of Princess Beatrice of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha and Prince Alfonso of Bourbon-Orleans, as it was contrary to the Royal Marriage Act of 1772, inasmuch as the Princess did not previously obtain the consent of King Edward," signified under the Great Seal, and she was prohibited from marrying a Roman Catholic. "It follows that her marriage is not valid in this country." This is a nonsensical mare's nest. When the Duke of Edinburgh succeeded to the Duchy of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha his children became subject to the family statutes of the ducal clan, and German susceptibilities would have been offended if the daughter of one of the Sovereign Princes had been obliged to seek the consent of the King of England before she could be married. The eldest daughter of the Duke of Edinburgh (the Crown Princess of Roumania) married a Roman Catholic many years ago. It is not worth while to consider the possibility of the Princess succeeding to the throne, inasmuch as there are over twenty lives before her.

---

The King has appointed Mr. Victor A. C. Harbord to be a Page of Honour to his Majesty in the place of Mr. G. R. Lane, whose term of service has expired. Mr. Harbord the elder is a son of Colonel Charles Harbord, and grandson and ultimate heir of Lord Suffield, and his mother is a daughter of the Dowager Marchioness of Headfort by her first marriage with Captain Eustace Wilson-Patten, only son of Lord Winmarleigh. The office of Page of Honour was much coveted in the old days, when it carried with it a commission in the Guards, which, of course, could then be sold for a very large sum.

---

I hear that Lord Knollys has consented to retain his office as principal private secretary to the King until after the Coronation, so that he will not resign this post until about the end of next July.

---

A weekly contemporary makes the strange and idiotic suggestion that Sir Dighton Probyn should be appointed Paymaster of the Household. It is not likely that Sir Dighton Probyn would accept any new post whatever at the age of seventy-eight, and this particular office certainly would not be likely to attract him under any circumstances. The statement that the Paymaster of the Household has an official residence in St. James's Palace is incorrect, and no "apartment" is annexed to this post. The Paymaster has nothing to do with St. James's Palace. The office is one of the posts in the Board of Green Cloth under the Lord Steward, and Buckingham Palace is the headquarters of that department.

---

Count Albert Mensdorff, who left the Austro-Hungarian Embassy at the end of July for the Continent, returned to England for ten days in order that he might pay a visit to their Majesties at Balmoral Castle. Count Mensdorff left London on Sunday morning for Ischl. It is understood that the Emperor Francis Joseph will be represented at the Coronation next June by the Archduke Frederick, uncle of the King of Spain, as the Archduke Francis Ferdinand has no taste for State ceremonials, and is always glad to avoid them. The Archduke Frederick is the richest member of the Imperial Family, as he inherited the bulk of the vast property of the Archduke Albert. Count Mensdorff occupies an exceptional position among the Corps Diplomatique, as his grandmother was a sister of the Duchess of Kent, and therefore an aunt of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, so he has always been treated at Court as a relative. His elder brother, the Prince Dietrichstein and Nicolsburg, is one of the great territorial magnates of Moravia.

---

The appearance of Sir Hubert Llewellyn Smith, Permanent Secretary of the Board of Trade, on the British Association platform at Sheffield is a welcome departure from the ostrich-like traditions of Civil Service officialdom. If other permanent secretaries would show themselves outside Whitehall, the country would be better informed as to what is in the official mind, Ministers would be less worried by questions in Parliament, and public business would get along quicker than is now possible.

---

MEASURING THE MIND.

(An echo of last week's meeting of the British Association.)

The body, I knew, you could measure;
But now with amazement I find
That Science is able, at pleasure,
To measure the mind.

Great qualms it will surely awaken
In various types of mankind
To think that now steps can be taken
To measure the mind.

There's my doctor. His visage would strike you
As Solon's and Plato's combined;
But I'm not at all sure that he'd like you
To measure his mind.

There's my lawyer. Acumen unbounded
Seems to lurk his expression behind.
Yet I'm doubtful of what might be found, did
You measure his mind.

Some Judges there are who the face have
Of models for Wisdom designed.
But a different hue might the case have,
If you measured their mind.

There are statesmen in loftiest stations
Whose fame would depart, like the wind,
To the limbo of lost reputations,
If you measured their mind.

There's a poet—but this is too awful;
Let's all who have axes to grind
Insist on its being unlawful
To measure the mind.

Sackville Mechano-Therapeutic Institute.—Radiant Heat and Light Treatments. Electric Baths. Massage. Hospital-trained Nurses. Hours 10 to 7.30.—28, Sackville St., Piccadilly. Tel. 7402 Gd.

Lord Howard de Walden is to arrive at Ayr on his yacht next Monday, and he will be in residence for a short time at The Dean, his place near Kilmarnock, where he is to be joined by Lord and Lady Ludlow. A garden party to the tenantry on his estate is to be given at The Dean next Wednesday. Lord Howard de Walden inherited a large estate in Ayrshire, including extensive and very valuable urban property at and around Kilmarnock, from his great aunt, Lady Ossington, to whom had passed this portion of the vast property of her brother the late Duke of Portland when he died in 1879. Lord Howard represents the fourth Duke of Portland, who married one of the three daughters of General Scott, who was famous because he had won over half a million at cards, and had the rare sagacity to keep his gains. Another of his daughters married George Canning.

---

Lord and Lady Home are residing for about three months at Douglas Castle, Lanarkshire, whence they will proceed to The Hirsel, the family place in Berwickshire, for the winter. The Douglas Castle shooting party (headed by Lord Dunglass) obtained a record bag for Lanarkshire last Wednesday, when they killed 482 brace of grouse and a large number of blackgame and hares on the Netherton, Hillend, and Maidencots moors.

---

On the same day the Duke of Buccleuch's party at Langholm Lodge had a record bag for Dumfriesshire over the county march beats, consisting of over 400 brace of grouse and numerous blackgame.

---

A daily paper announces that the Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe will entertain shooting parties at Floors Castle, "the Duke having reserved the greater part of the moors for himself and his friends, but he has let some to Mr. Fuller Maitland and Mr. McNeile." There is no grouse moor at or near Floors Castle, and the Greenhill and Bowmont Water shootings, which are let to Mr. Fuller Maitland, are on low ground, as also is Powden Barony, let to Major McNeile. There will be no shooting parties at Floors Castle until the late autumn, when the Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe are to entertain numerous guests for partridge and pheasant shooting and for salmon fishing in the Tweed. The Duke's grouse shootings are at Byrecleugh, in Berwickshire, where he has about 6,000 acres of excellent driving moors.

---

AZOTOBACTER AND PSEUDONOMA.

(Another echo of the British Association.)

When thou tak'st a lump of sugar in thy tea
(And beet sugar it is almost sure to be),
Don't forget that kindly factor,
The germ, Azotobacter,
Which toiled to make the beetroot grow for thee.

When thou mak'st thy morning breakfast-porridge sweet
With this self-same luscious sugar of the beet,
Give honour's due dip'oma
To the microbe Pseudonoma,
Which helped Azotobacter do the feat.

A novel "grace" we e'en, perchance, might weave,
And say—if in these theories we believe—
"May the germ Azotobacter
And his microbe fellow-actor
Be thanked for what we're going to receive."

The Unionist Press is much more indebted to Mr. Lloyd George than it seems to appreciate. At a moment when news is practically non-existent, and political leader-writers are all thrown out of work, he has provided it with pages upon pages of cheap and useful copy, and unlimited material for invective and sarcasm. It was hardly wise to send out the land valuation forms at this particular season of the year. The landowners complain of this as an additional grievance; and a man may well grumble who has to fill up a few dozen copies of Form 4 in what he expected to be his holidays. But they should remember that their grievances would never have got such a splendid airing in any other months than August and September.

---

There is a great deal of undiluted nonsense and a great deal of mere party claptrap in the letters with which the columns of the Times and other Opposition journals have been filled. But in the main I quite sympathise with them. This is not from a fellow feeling. I happen to own a few square yards of the soil of my native land; but one copy of Form 4 takes the whole of them comfortably, and, the circumstances being simple, I have managed to fill my form up without professional assistance and without any severe tax on my mental resources. I am not quite clear whether a thin deposit of gravel at one corner of my property and a substratum of chalk 20 ft. down ought to be scheduled as minerals, but I have given myself the benefit of the doubt.

---

What seems to me essentially wrong in principle is that the labour and expense of making these returns should be thrown upon property owners merely to facilitate their being subsequently taxed. Even in the case of small properties there must be numbers of people to whom the "instructions" (save the name!) contained in Form 2—particularly the subtle definitions of "full site value," "total value," and "assessable site value"—are no better than so much Greek, and who will feel bound to get assistance in ascertaining what is meant, even though they are not required to work the calculations out themselves. There must be numbers of people of limited means—I know one—who own bits of property in different parts of the country, and are put to monstrous trouble and expense in procuring all the information which they are required to give, while the expense involved to owners of large estates is appalling to think of. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners—the largest landowners in the country—have had to set up a new office with a large staff for the express purpose of dealing with these returns. That gives some idea of what the business means to men like the Duke of Westminster.

---

The betterment tax and the death duties are, in my humble judgment, legitimate taxes. An official valuation of land for the purposes of such taxation may be desirable. The separation of different elements of value on the lines attempted by Form 4 may be a necessary incident of scientific valuation. But if the State requires for its own purposes a new and improved Domesday survey it ought to be compiled by the State at its own expense. If the expense would have made too big a hole in the taxes, that is an argument against doing the thing at all, but certainly not a justification for throwing a great part of the cost and labour on the landowner, whether he be a rich or idle man, or, as happens quite as often as possible, a poor or busy one. Even as it is, the cost to the State will be so heavy that it will be a long time before we get our money back.

Jeffrey & Co.'s New Artistic Wall Papers are on view at their Show Rooms, The Wallpaper Gallery, 31, Mortimer St., W. To be had of all Decorators. Factory: 64, Essex Rd., Islington, N.

---

What is more, the valuation will be itself of very doubtful value. The qualifications of the valuers are often an unknown quality; where known, frequently a minus quantity. Their work will be done against time; how the hundreds of thousands of forms are going to be dealt with at all in the course of a few months is beyond comprehension. A horde of officials, armed with arbitrary powers, is let loose on a large body of defenceless citizens, without any reasonable attempt to ensure their competence for the work they have to do and without time to do it properly even if they are competent. That gross hardship will frequently be inflicted on individuals is inevitable in these circumstances. The whole thing is a scandalous muddle, the natural result of the harum-scarum fashion in which last year's Budget was produced and put through Parliament, and if the Government suffer for it, it will be their own fault.

---

An interesting point in connection with the Finance Act inquisition is noted by Mr. Laurence W. Chubb, of the Commons and Footpaths' Preservation Society, in the Local Government Review. Landowners are required to give particulars of any public rights of way or rights of common or public user on their estates. In cases at any rate where such rights are doubtful or disputed, this will place the landowner in an awkward dilemma. He cannot very well hereafter challenge a right of way if he now formally admits its existence in order to depreciate his property. Obviously, therefore, these returns may in future afford local authorities valuable information on the subject of footpaths, commons, or village greens.

---

A correspondent writes:—

I observe that one of your readers objects to the nomenclature "Yankees." What else can they be called? "Americans" won't do, for they form only a minority in America. They do not belong to the United States, for there are also United States in Brazil and South Africa. They are not even the only North Americans, for there are still Canadians to share that title. And "subjects of the United States of the Southern Portion of North America" is too long for hustlers. If they object to be called Yanks, they must invent a less cacophonous style.

---

A friend of mine who has been staying at the Grand Hotel, Harrogate, happened to receive a present of a brace of grouse, which he had cooked in the hotel kitchen and served at dinner instead of the poultry provided on the day's menu. In his next bill he found himself charged with "Grouse, 13s.," and was informed that 6s. 6d. was the regular charge for cooking a bird. The manager professed to be unable to make any reduction, as this tariff was fixed by the directors.

---

I think this deserves a distinguished place in the records of extortion practised at hotels—or, indeed, anywhere else. Nobody grumbles at having to pay "corkage" when he drinks his own wine at an hotel, and no one would grumble at being charged a reasonable price for cooking game or any other food that he provided himself; but to charge the full market price of food, when it is merely substituted for what the hotel has to provide and is paid for, is scarcely distinguishable from simple brigandage. I wonder what the directors of this Harrogate hostelry would charge a guest who used his own towels in his bedroom instead of those provided by the hotel. I wonder still more whether this method of fleecing your visitors is found to pay.

---

I have received from Lord Algernon Gordon-Lennox copies of correspondence which has passed between him and the Kennel Club with reference to the case of Mrs. Ashton Cross, which was dealt with in Truth at some length a few weeks ago. Unfortunately it only comes to hand just as I am going to press, and I am consequently unable at the moment either to publish the correspondence or to go into it at any length this week. But I may state the substance of it, which is that Lord Algernon, after studying the proceedings before the Kennel Club Committee, felt so strongly that the decision was unjustifiable that he sent the papers to Sir Robert Finlay; that Sir Robert Finlay gave his opinion that the finding of the committee was not justified by the evidence; that on this being laid before the committee they declined to reconsider their decision; and that Lord Algernon thereupon resigned his vice-presidency of the club. I will give next week further details of this correspondence, which is decidedly interesting. In the meantime I am glad to know that I am not the only person who regards the action of the Kennel Club Committee as wholly unjustifiable.

---

A sporting paper has been discussing the authorship of the famous street ballad on the murder of Weare by Thurtell, which excited the admiration of Sir Walter Scott. The lines have always been attributed to Theodore Hook, and the story of their having been written by Thackeray or Croker is the wildest nonsense. Thackeray was a schoolboy when the murder took place, and the authorship of the Letters of Junius might as reasonably be attributed to Croker, who was not given to compositions of this nature.

---

The remarkable series of letters now appearing in the "Times" on "Indian Unrest" are from the pen of Mr. Valentine Chirol, who has been temporarily detached from Printing House Square to report on the situation in India. Mr. Chirol's career has been interesting. Beginning life in the Foreign Office, which he found too humdrum for his inclinations, he enrolled himself as a volunteer in the artillery of the Servian Army when Servia went to war with Turkey in 1876. Thenceforth he devoted himself to journalism, and is now the greatest living authority on Far and Middle Eastern questions, not even excepting Lord Curzon and Dr. Morrison.

"Sanitas" is the Brand or Hall Mark of value for Disinfectants of all kinds, for use in the House, Stables, Kennels, &c. Pamphlet free. The Sanitas Co., Ltd., Limehouse, London, E.

THE DUCKLING-SWAN.

(An allegory, with key appended.)

There was a certain poulterer in days now long agone
Who cast admiring glances a favoured duck upon;
And the neighbours said a-chuckling,
"He is proud of yonder duckling."
But he cried, "Pooh! Duckling? Nonsense. You are blind. The bird's a swan."

They said: "A nice fine duckling. But duckling still. That's flat."
He replied: "A swan, I tell you. If she's not, I'll eat my hat."
"Nay, duckling," they retorted.
"Go to Billingsgate!" he snorted.
"She's a swan, a swan, d'ye hear me? And a first-class swan at that."

"No; duckling," they insisted. The poulterer slapped his thigh,
And he gazed upon his neighbours with a sternly withering eye:
"She's the biggest, finest swan, sirs,
You ever looked upon, sirs;
All who say that she is not are guilty of a lie!

"But if you doubt my statement"—his eye right scornful shone—
"Be so good, you silly numbskulls, as this pamphlet just to con."
He to them the pamphlet handed
And the title-page they scan did,
Inscribed, "A hundred reasons why my duckling is a swan."

Now of these hundred reasons we may leave out ninety-nine:
For the hundredth was enough, per se, to settle it in fine:
"She's a swan of the first water,
Old Avon's worthy daughter,
Because the poultry yard," it said, "where she was hatched is mine!"

Then the neighbours, fairly cornered, to that poulterer bent the knee.
He had hatched the duck; he'd said so; hence, of course, a swan was she.
They had got his ipse dixit,
Which was quite enough to fix it
For ever and for ever. Hallelujah! Q. E. D.

THE KEY.

"My leading lady fairly takes what cockneys call the bun.
She's the Terrys, Neilson, Woffington, and Siddons all in one.
'Tis true. And here's the token,
I—I H-ll C-ne—have spoken;
I have said so, and it is so—while eternal (questions) run."

---

The grievance of the unemployed teachers trained in the L.C.C. training colleges referred to in TRUTH last week is denied by a correspondent who, writing as a "disinterested unprofessional," argues that the L.C.C. is justified in demanding exceptional ability in its teachers in view of the salaries paid, and, by implication, that teachers who have been trained by the ratepayers and fail to come up to the standard required have consequently no cause for complaint. I am afraid that my disinterested unprofessional correspondent failed to appreciate the point of my remarks. The grievance, so far as I comprehend it, is not in regard to the high standard demanded. It lies in taking youths of both sexes and wasting seven years of their lives and their parents' and the ratepayers' money in training them for a profession which there is no prospect of their entering.

---

My correspondent says he has gathered from scholastic reports that "the method of selecting entrants to the London colleges has been found to be so unsatisfactory that many of the ex-students are found to possess no natural aptitude and little ability for the profession." Exactly, and this is the state of things which is condemned. Obviously it is waste of the student's time and waste of the ratepayers' money to run colleges for training in the profession young people who show no aptitude for the profession. If the absence of that natural aptitude cannot be detected until the pupil has undergone seven years' training, and cost in round figures £300, there is something radically wrong about the system which permits such a state of affairs. It is the grossest extravagance to train ten teachers in order to select the best of the ten for an appointment, and the nine who are left to find another profession have legitimate cause for complaint.

---

The Prime Minister has presented the Rev. A. W. Ballachey, vicar of All Saints', Grimsby, to the rectory of Algarkirk, near Boston. This benefice is in the gift of the Bishop of Lincoln, but the patronage passed for this turn to the Crown, in consequence of the vacancy in the See. The appointment of Mr. Ballachey is understood to have been made at the request of Bishop Hicks. Algarkirk has hitherto been the richest living in the diocese, the net incumbency being nearly £1,700 a year, with house. Some years ago, however, Mr. Alfred Shuttleworth, of Lincoln, purchased the advowson, and presented it to the See, on condition that at the next vacancy £1,200 a year should be taken away to provide endowments for new parishes at Lincoln and at Grimsby. The net income of the rector of Algarkirk is now £500 a year, with house.

---

Canon Henson, rector of St. Margaret's, has entered upon a term of duty as canon in residence at Westminster Abbey, replacing Canon Barnett, who had been in residence for two months.

---

The Simeon Trustees have presented the Rev. T. A. Gurney, who has been vicar of Emmanuel Church, Clifton, during the last nine years, to the important living of St. Giles, Northampton, which is of the net value of about £360 a year, with house, and vacant by the preferment of the late incumbent to a benefice in the gift of the Crown. Mr. Gurney, who is an Evangelical of the Broad school, has a high reputation as a preacher and scholar, and he is a successful writer on theological subjects. He will be a distinct loss to the diocese of Bristol.

---

The Bishop of Exeter has appointed the Rev. A. H. Simms, vicar of St. Luke's, Torquay, to the Arch-

TRUTH CAUTIONARY LIST for 1910, 128 pages bound in cloth, price 1s. net, by post 1s. 2d., is now ready, and may be obtained from all booksellers and railway bookstalls.

deaconry of Totnes, vacant by the death of Archdeacon Wilkinson, formerly Vicar of Plymouth. The stipend is £200 a year. Mr. Simms has been working in Devonshire for a number of years. He is a very able preacher, a clever organiser, and a most popular parish clergyman. He has always been warmly interested in educational affairs. Mr. Simms has been twice Select Preacher at Cambridge, and he was beneficed in the diocese of Ely from 1896 until 1903. The appointment has met with approval in the diocese, except at Plymouth, where it is thought that one of the clergy of the "Three Towns" should have been selected for this office.

---

The late Prebendary Hingeston-Randolph had held the county living of Ringmore, South Devon, for over half a century. He was widely known both as a most vigorous controversialist and as a man of high culture, being distinguished as an antiquary, an architect, and a writer on ecclesiastical and historical subjects. He was also gifted with a marked capacity for practical affairs, and Archbishop Temple described him as "a financial genius," but his historical studies were the delight of his life. He was the son of Mr. Francis Hingeston, who held a Government appointment at Truro, and he assumed the name of Randolph in 1860, when he married the only daughter and sole heiress of the Rev. Herbert Randolph, who in his day was a well-known incumbent in the Scottish Episcopal Church. Mr. Hingeston-Randolph was a great favourite in his own neighbourhood, and he was much beloved by his parishioners, to whom he was always kind and generous.

---

Dr. Frew, who died last week at the age of ninety-eight, had been minister of the parish of St. Ninian's, Stirling, since 1835. He was known all over Scotland as a learned theologian and an eloquent and scholarly preacher, and he was held in the highest esteem by all classes.

---

Dean Rorison was one of the best known and most popular dignitaries of the Scottish Episcopal Church, in which his father had also been in his day a prominent figure. He was a man of wide sympathies, and always maintained most cordial relations with the Presbyterian clergy and with the Roman Catholics. He was full of sympathy and kindness. He was descended from one of the most ancient families in Galloway, and his ancestor, Andrew Rorison, was killed at Flodden. Dean Rorison was an admirable preacher, and he rivalled "A. K. H. B." as a raconteur. He had been Provost of St. Ninian's Cathedral, Perth, for sixteen years when he was appointed to the deanery in 1901, and all kinds of improvements had been carried out during his incumbency. He was devoted to Scotland, and refused several offers of important preferment in England.

---

There has been a curious outburst of clerical bigotry at Peterborough. Dr. Keeton, the well-known organist of the cathedral, was married some time ago to his deceased wife's sister. This "open and notorious violation of the law of the Church" excited the fanatical indignation of the Rev. A. B. Barnes, one of the minor canons, who wrote to the Dean, asking whether "the engagement of the organist would be terminated at no distant future," which really meant that he expected the dismissal of the organist because he has contracted a perfectly legal marriage. Dean Page (who is a sensible man) replied to Mr. Barnes's question in the negative, whereupon the aggrieved minor canon appealed to the Bishop as the Visitor of the cathedral. The Bishop wisely declined to interfere, so Mr. Barnes has resigned his minor canonry. The clergy must learn that "church discipline" cannot be allowed to interfere with the law of the land.

---

Among our social problems the newspaper boy has lately occupied a place rather out of proportion to his size. A good many people hold that he should not exist, at least in the shape of a newspaper boy. As long as he is with us in that shape, however, it is evidently desirable to make the best we can of him. From this point of view I was rather interested in an account sent to me the other day of a little organisation that is working at Lincoln under the name of the Lincoln Newsboys' Association. It provides the local newsboys—to the number of 120 or so—with a sort of club, where they can get light refreshments, shelter between the issue of "speshul editions," amusement in the evenings, baths, and other necessities of existence; and it does this at an outlay of about £50 a year, to which the boys themselves each contribute ½d. a week. It has been found, as might be expected, that this not only makes the boys happy and comfortable, but keeps them out of mischief and improves their moral, the best witness to that effect being the Chief Constable, who has taken a keen personal interest in the club. There is something here for the proprietors of the London halfpenny papers to think about.

---

A complaint has been sent to me by a correspondent in regard to the system in vogue at the Manchester Eye Hospital for the supply of spectacles to patients who attend that institution. According to him one firm has practically a monopoly of the supply. Not only are patients recommended to go to this firm, but the firm is also granted the privilege of having a spectacle stall on the hospital premises. If what my correspondent says is correct the policy seems somewhat short-sighted and unfair on the part of the hospital authorities. While no doubt they imagine it is in the best interests of the patients that glasses shall be supplied by a firm in whom they have every confidence, yet it is unjust inasmuch as it throws a stigma on the honesty and ability of all the qualified opticians in the city of Manchester who are perfectly able to fill the oculist's prescription. It is also unfair to patients at a distance, who are put to much additional trouble and expense in getting their glasses fitted. A charitable institution is not in the same position as a private practitioner in such a matter, and even the oculist who has his favourite optician would hesitate before insisting upon his patients going to the tradesman of his own choice.

---

I have to acknowledge the following amounts towards the Tress Barry Fund:—Amico, £5; Gerald, 10s. Also 10s. for the Toy Fund.

---

I have also received, towards Lady St. Helier's Children's Holiday Fund 10s. from Robbie, 10s. from H. Ernest Stansfield, and 10s. from Gerald.

Colonel Braithwaite, who has been General Staff Officer under the Director of Staff Duties at the War Office during the last eighteen months, is going to India at the end of November. He has been appointed Commandant of the Indian Staff College at Quetta, in succession to Brigadier-General Capper, who vacates that post in January.

---

Captain A. Paget, 11th Hussars, has accepted the appointment of aide-de-camp to Lord Dudley, Governor-General of Australia. Captain Paget has been for some time aide-de-camp to Lieutenant-General Sir Arthur Paget in the Eastern Command.

---

A correspondent suggests cutting down the excessive military staff which is employed in looking after the garrison in South Africa. I suggest going one better than this and cutting down the garrison as well as the staff, neither one nor the other being any longer required. The only reason given for keeping English troops in the country is that they bring money into a poor land; but the South African Union ought not to live on charity, and if its people want the luxury of English troops they should pay for them.

---

The English garrison numbers about 10,000 effective soldiers, who are scattered indiscriminately about South Africa in small, detached brigades without any regard to strategical requirements. The cost of supplying these troops with food, clothing, and warlike stores is enormously increased by their distribution. If the men are wanted, as Mr. Haldane hinted they might be, to form a seventh expeditionary division, they should be brought home, where they could be maintained at half their present cost, which amounts to nearly £1,500,000.

---

In no case ought Lord Methuen, a full general, drawing £4,000 a year, with an official residence, to be kept in command of a force which is equal to about two brigades. Nor ought Major-General Scobell to be retained at Cape Town to command one infantry battalion and two companies of Garrison Artillery. If, as I am credibly informed, the Navy Estimates are to be further increased next year by an additional three millions, we cannot afford to waste money in paying useless generals in South Africa.

---

Toties, quoties. Why has Colonel Sir David Bruce, Army Medical Service, been suddenly translated in the August Army List to the head of the column of substantive colonels? Sir David Bruce was promoted brevet-colonel in 1903, and in due course of seniority became substantive colonel in 1908. Until last month, following the usual practice, he took place according to corps seniority among the R.A.M.C. substantive colonels, with the date of his brevet rank following that of his substantive rank. Now he is shown at the top of the list with only brevet date, thereby jumping over fourteen colonels, all of whom obtained substantive rank before him.

---

Sir David Bruce is a distinguished man of science, his merits as such having been rewarded with a knighthood, a military C.B., and a brevet colonelcy. Is it fair to his comrades who have climbed the ladder before him that he should be further rewarded at their expense? Brevet promotion would cease to be valued as a mark of distinction if it were the cause of injustice to officers who have done as good work in other lines of professional service as their promoted comrade in his.

---

Owing to the hocus-pocus juggling which is now going on in the Director-General's office, Sir David Bruce comes first on the list for promotion to surgeon-general. He has reached this position not on his professional form as an all-round R.A.M.C. man, but by reason of his eminent services in research work. It strikes me, however, that he can hardly be as well qualified to take up the duties of a working surgeon-general as an officer like Colonel Robinson, who has been through the administrative mill and has had practical experience of men and things outside the laboratory and operating theatre.

---

A Service correspondent writes:—

I am sorry that you should have opened your columns to what can only be described as an attack on the Brigade-Major of the East Midland Territorial Brigade. Having done so, however, I trust that you will allow a few words to be said on the other side. I also followed the fortunes of this brigade during the recent manœuvres, and I have not the slightest doubt that the officers of the brigade would bear me out in saying that they are exceptionally fortunate in their brigade-major.

Territorial C.O.s do not profess to have the experience of Regulars, though your correspondent does not appear to have grasped this obvious fact, and they naturally look to their brigade-major for instructions and assistance. A Territorial brigade-major who looked upon his duties as identical with those of a staff officer to Regulars would be quite useless.

When we reach the remark about "reports on units" we can grasp the real motive of the attack of your correspondent, whose "many years' service" seem to have swathed him in red tape.

---

I find I was under a misapprehension in stating last week that the Army Council flag had never been unfurled, for a high authority informs me that the Quartermaster-General and Master-General of the Ordnance took the flag with them to Malta last winter, where it was duly saluted. My informant speaks of this as "the last occasion," but he does not mention when the first occurred, nor how many have intervened between the first and last. We have had an Army Council now for a good many years.

---

It has been left to Mr. F. S. Jackson, Assistant Judge of the Lord Mayor's Court, to discover a new and original argument in favour of compulsory military training. In disposing last week of a number of money-lending cases, he deplored the improvident habits of city clerks, who fall so easily into the toils of the bloodsuckers. However, he thought there was a gleam of hope for them:—

It would be a splendid thing for compulsory service to come about. This would teach such men discipline and obedience and make them self-reliant, and, therefore, better business men. What they wanted was bracing up in some way. As it was, they did not like to live a hard life and get out of debt, but went on paying exorbitant rates of interest.

What a profound knowledge of army life this sapient utterance exhibits! Officers, of course, are patterns of economy, never outrunning the constable or resorting to usurers. The rank and file are famous for their frugality. Military training eradicates the vice of extravagance and inculcates the virtue of thrift. O wise judge!

---

THOS. GOODE & CO.—Exhibition of old and modern WEDGWOOD, including many specimens never previously exhibited.—South Audley Street, London.

Rear-Admiral Patey is to succeed Rear-Admiral Bradford as Rear-Admiral in the Second Division of the Home Fleet on October 9. Rear-Admiral Patey was promoted to flag rank at the beginning of last year, and for some time he held the office of Assistant Director of Naval Intelligence at the Admiralty.

---

Commander C. Seymour has been posted to the Vivid, additional for the Wolverine, the new ocean-going destroyer now completing at Messrs. Cammell, Laird and Co.'s yard. I understand that, in consequence of the growth of displacement of destroyers, these will henceforward be regarded as a commander's command. This news will give satisfaction in what is at present one of the most congested of the executive ranks.

---

Commander Lawrence Tawney was last week succeeded by Commander E. G. W Davy in the command of the R.N.R. drill ship President. The post is for three years, and the idea that it is anything of a sinecure is quite wrong.

---

Admiral Chatfield, who died last week, had a long career in the Navy, extending from 1846 until 1891. He distinguished himself during the Crimean War, both in the Baltic and in the Black Sea, after which he was employed in various parts of the world, and did good service during the Ashanti trouble in 1874, and at the time of the Peruvian insurrection. He ended his service career as Admiral Superintendent of Pembroke Dockyard.

---

By the death of Major E. M. C. Ommanney, at Dajatalawa, the Royal Marines have lost one of their most popular officers, and incidentally a very keen and successful cricketer. Major Ommanney was serving in the Hyacinth, flagship of Rear-Admiral Edmond Slade, on the East Indies station. Major G. M. Heriot, R.M.L.I., has been gazetted to succeed the deceased officer in this appointment.

---

The Admiralty have done the right thing in their prompt abandonment of the cruiser Bedford. She is stranded in a corner of the ocean where typhoons and colossal seas are far from uncommon, and from which the nearest base for conducting salvage operations is very remote. Her bilge is so badly ripped that even given the most favourable conditions her recovery would have been a matter of extraordinary difficulty. The First Sea Lord is in the best position to appreciate the situation, as he personally superintended the abortive operations to recover the Montagu, in which £80,000 was spent. Public sentiment always demands an effort to save a stranded warship But whilst the loss of the Bedford is regrettable, she belonged to a class of relatively small fighting value. Too much was sacrificed to speed on small displacement in the design of the "County" group.

---

I hear on good authority that the abolition of the gun room may be expected in the near future. This will sever another picturesque link between the modern navy and a distant past. The Service will not be unprepared for this step. In the first place, there has been a steady diminution of late years in the number of big warships which have a gun-room mess at all. Secondly, the age of midshipmen, on finally passing into the fleet, is considerably advanced by the Selborne scheme, thereby rendering it more feasible to absorb the juniors into the ward-room.

---

Whilst the French Admiralty are establishing aviation bases along the coast, our administrators are testing the vulnerability of flying machines of every description. The scout, Adventure, has been detailed to carry out a series of shooting experiments against miniature dirigible balloons, aeroplanes, man-lifting kites, and the like. The conclusions established by these demonstrations are, of course, an official secret, but I have very good authority for saying that they do not tend to stimulate our Admiralty to follow the French example. It is believed that a bursting shell will so disturb the atmosphere as to destroy the equipoise of an aeroplane within a zone of 300 yards. A shrapnel bullet or two through the gas envelope of a dirigible will put her in serious difficulties. The best chance a flying machine would have of damaging a warship would be by night, and even then searchlights will have to be reckoned with.

---

The day following the exposure by Truth—a fortnight ago—of the extraordinary treatment of a corporal of Marines at Stonehouse for giving evidence which, at any rate, was supported by preponderating testimony, this man was warned for foreign service. He was then shipped off to Australia in the Peregrine. I understand that the other witnesses in this case have been put on the foreign service roster for disposal at the earliest opportunity. If this has not been done to get the non-commissioned officers and men out of the way appearances are very deceitful. It is a matter for great regret, which will not be confined to the Stonehouse Barracks, that the D.A.G. of Royal Marines did not make a prompt inquiry into the whole business, and there is now stronger reason than before why he should do so.

---

The letter by Sir James Gildea published in the Times in regard to the appeal by the Mayor of Portsmouth for a relief fund for the relatives of the men lost in H.M.S. Bedford called attention to a very mischievous and purposeless piece of charitable endeavour. No doubt the Mayor of Portsmouth is a well-meaning gentleman, but he ought to be aware that the Soldiers and Sailors' Families Association exists for the express purpose of dealing with such cases as those for which he appealed, and is in every way better equipped for making the necessary inquiries into them than he could possibly be. Of course, had the object been a purely local one, the Mayor might have had some excuse for soliciting subscriptions. But as a matter of fact four of the lost seamen came from Ireland, one from Wales, one from Yorkshire, two from Kent, one from Berkshire, eight from London and its suburbs, and one from some place unknown. There was not a single Portsmouth man amongst them, and this makes the action of the Mayor all the more extraordinary. Such appeals only lead to overlapping, and the waste of funds, and need to be discouraged.

---

Lord Crewe has decided to appoint Mr. R. B. Woosnam to be Chief Game Ranger in British East Africa, and he has made an excellent choice for this post. Mr. Woosnam has a large experience of African life, and he has done good collecting work for the British Museum and the Biological Society, and has brought home successfully a number of rare animals.

---

There is a promise of something more artistic in the new stamps now being prepared than the somewhat bald design which did duty during the last reign. As a stamp collector himself the King has taken a personal interest in the forthcoming issue, and as a consequence the new stamps will be much more decorative than the old. The King's head and the royal crown will be retained as essential parts of the design, but an important addition is the British lion.

---

I have received from the Secretary of the National Education Association the copy of an open letter which he has addressed on behalf of his executive committee to all local education committees in the country advising them as to their "methods of co-operation" with the Board of Trade Labour Exchanges. So far as I can learn, the National Education Association has as much title to thrust advice on education committees as Thyrsites had to lecture the Greek chiefs before the walls of Troy. Warned by the fate which befell this officious classical hero, the association would do well to withdraw a letter which is nothing more than a veiled attack on Mr. Churchill's scheme for organising labour, and is in striking contrast with Sir Robert Morant's straightforward circular now going the rounds of the provincial press.

---

The latter circular recommends the local education authorities to work with the Government Labour Exchanges through the advisory committees which are now being formed to assist the Board of Trade in preventing boys and girls from drifting into blind-alley occupations. Sir Robert Morant suggests that every pupil should be given a leaving card containing full particulars of his or her juvenile career and qualifications while at school, these cards being guides to superintendents of labour bureaux in placing applicants for work in suitable situations. The card system seems practical, and I see from the newspapers that it is being already adopted by some of the provincial education committees.

---

Now that the Government's national labour machinery is at work a wide field is open to education committees to make the best use of the raw material entrusted to their charge. What is wanted is to shape the children's education on more practical lines than hitherto so as to qualify them for employment which it is the business of the Government bureaux to find. For this purpose there must be co-operation between education authorities, care committees, and labour exchanges; but there is no room for the fussy interference of amateur associations.

---

Trade unionists ought to be grateful to the Shipping Federation for the summary style in which it has dealt with the irresponsible sectional strikes that have lately become so frequent in the north of England and Scotland. Obviously, if groups of men in this or that town take to repudiating the agreements into which their union has entered, the union ceases to be a union—at any rate for the most important purpose of trade unionism. The lock-out in the shipping trade is calculated, as the Federation no doubt sees, to enforce that discipline in the unionist ranks which the union leaders and officials are unable to enforce themselves.

---

After all the traditional talk of the dangers of labour organisation and the mischievous influence of trade union leaders, it is a strange stroke of irony that a combination of employers should take action to strengthen the hands of these very leaders and check insubordination among trade unionists! It is a situation, however, not without its dangers for trade unionism. Employers are beginning to discover that the organisation of labour has its advantages for them, and that it is a convenience to treat with leaders of big unions, who are usually intelligent men with a strong sense of responsibility. But what the employers see the men can equally see, and disaffection in the unionist ranks is very likely to follow. In fact, it evidently has; and though a lock-out may stifle it, it is not necessarily a cure.

---

A problem which has been much exercising the authorities at the Zoological Gardens of late is how to make good the deficiency of horseflesh with which the cats, big and little, are fed. At one time the supply was brought to the doors, but on a number of occasions recently even the knackers' yards of the metropolis have been unable to furnish a single carcass of fresh meat, and the lions have had to be satisfied with frozen beef. This is neither to the taste of the animals, who like their meat fresh, nor to that of the authorities, who have to pay more for it than horseflesh. The shortage is probably due in some measure to the development of motor traction; but it may also be connected with the high price of meat on the Continent. Whether the facts will furnish an argument for Tariff Reform or for Free Trade does not at present appear. "Your horseflesh will cost you more" does not seem a very inspiring cry for either party—at least until cats have votes.

---

THE INCOMPARABLE BLOATER.

(After Lord Byron and Sir J. Crichton-Browne.)

Away with your dishes imported from France,
Mysterious messes that reek of the stove;
One dainty alone can my palate entrance—
The herring or bloater's the food that I love!

Ye diners, whose stomachs expectantly glow,
Who reckon your feeding all pleasures above,
In copious streams your saliva would flow
If you tasted the bloater, the food that I love.

If at times your repast you're inclined to refuse,
As your eyes o'er the menu disgustedly rove,
Instead of o'erwhelming the chef with abuse,
Just order a bloater, the food that I love!

I hate the high triumphs of cookery's art,
Though gastronomes scorn me and gourmets reprove;
Be mine the best product of Billingsgate Mart,
The herring and bloater, the food that I love!

When age chills the blood, when our pleasures are past—
For years fleet away with the wings of the dove—
One flavour of gladness remains to the last
For those who eat bloaters, the food that I love.

The Wrexham Guardians have been a good deal perturbed by local criticism of their action in prosecuting three young girls who had absconded from the maternity ward of the workhouse. The girls had complained of ill-treatment, and though there seems to have been no very definite grounds for their complaint, there can be no doubt that it was not an excess of kindly consideration which induced them to take French leave of the institution. However, the guardians directed their prosecution, though they had returned the workhouse clothes, and the magistrates sentenced them each to seven days' imprisonment. "Discipline must be maintained" is the excuse put forward by the guardians, but there must be something lacking in the management of the institution if discipline cannot be maintained without calling in the assistance of Mr. Justice Shallow to transform unfortunate young girls into gaol-birds.

---

In a letter that has reached me from Singapore, the Straits Settlements Government is severely taken to task for its failure to carry out the King's wishes on his accession with regard to the remission of sentences on prisoners. My correspondent writes with so much feeling that if I did not know better I should suspect that he has a personal interest in the matter. It seems, however, that the inaction of the authorities really has excited a good deal of dissatisfaction, not only in the gaols but among the public at large, who consider that effect ought to be given to his Majesty's message in the Straits Settlements as well as in other colonies and India. There is an idea that the omission is merely due to official dilatoriness, officialdom in this drowsy land always showing great deference to the local motto, "Nanti boleh besok," or, "Wait; it can be done to-morrow." The delay is, however, obviously objectionable from the point of view of prisoners whose sentences are meanwhile expiring.

---

The Edinburgh bailies are to all appearances just about as convinced as the Great Unpaid of England that a fine is adequate punishment for the wife beater. A brute of this latter sort was brought before Bailie Macfarlane last week. Coming home to find his wife in bed, he armed himself with the tongs and struck her several times on the head and severely injured the arm with which she strove to protect herself. The worthy bailie fined him £5 for his evening's amusement, a wholly inadequate penalty for an offence which merely by good luck fell short of manslaughter.

---

Some light is thrown on the terrible amount of crime existing in Ireland by two newspaper cuttings furnished me by a correspondent. One of these refers to proceedings in Limerick police court against a whole batch of offenders. They were all of tender age. Some of them had been guilty of playing handball in the streets, and others had committed the equally heinous crime of trundling hoops in public thoroughfares, while one little girl had actually thrown a lump of mud at a wall. The Limerick wiseacres fined the parents of the children in each case, instead of telling the police that they might be better employed than interfering with children in their perfectly harmless play.

Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. —6,550 convictions last year. Complaints marked "Private" absolutely confidential.—Secretary, 105, Jermyn Street, London.

The other cutting refers to a prosecution at Castleblaney of seven licensed traders for hanging flags out of their windows on the occasion of a Nationalist demonstration. In this case the Bench were quite at a loss to understand what was the offence committed, and inquired of the police who had instituted the prosecutions. No answer being forthcoming to the inquiry, the magistrates adjourned the hearing of the case for six months. The interval will give the local police authorities time to reflect on the unwisdom of manufacturing offences out of perfectly innocent actions, and will also enable Mr. Birrell to give these Castleblaney idiots his views of their misplaced zeal.

---

A Weston-super-Mare cabman, charged before the local justices with cruelty to a horse, was proved to have beaten the unfortunate animal with a steel-cored whip upon an open wound on the back, from which pieces had been flicked away. A fine of £2 and costs rewarded this refined torture. It is a pity that the woodenheads who thought this penalty sufficient could not be themselves "touched up on the raw" with a steel-cored whip with a view to make them more sensible of the suffering thereby entailed.

---

In July a turfite opened a betting account with J. Pickersgill, Bedford Row Chambers, W.C., and after a losing week became entitled to a winning balance of £1 13s. 3d. When asked for a remittance Pickersgill replied that "anything on either side will be placed to credit under £2, and thus save small cheques." By August 1 the amount due to the customer was increased to £4 1s. 6d., but he has not received it, nor any answer to his applications. What surprises me is that people should go on betting with a bookmaker who refuses on mere trumpery pretexts to pay winnings, and is obviously only waiting till the client has incurred a loss which will put the balance on the other side of the account.

---

An advertisement appeared in the Daily Telegraph the other day for a young gentleman as assistant secretary to a company; "required to hold financial interest, shares, about £300." Those who answered the advertisement found that it emanated from the Rampart Unemployment and General Insurance Co., Limited, 255-260, Birkbeck Bank Chambers, a concern to which I devoted a couple of paragraphs on July 13. In the selection of an assistant secretary to an insurance company—especially a company tackling the knotty problem of unemployment insurance—one would expect knowledge and experience of insurance business to be made a sine qua non. It does not seem to have been so in the case of the Rampart—at any rate, the appointment was virtually offered to a young engineer on condition that he invested £300 in the company.

---

In one of its booklets this company describes its scheme of unemployment insurance as similar "to that which is running so successfully in Germany under the control and help of the State Government." The audacity of the comparison will be appreciated when I mention that the Rampart is registered as a private company (Mr. W. G. Leslie being managing director for life), with an "authorised capital" of £10,000. A private company escapes the obligation to publish a balance sheet, and in my opinion that is an objectionable arrangement in connection with an insurance undertaking. A bald statement as to its "authorised capital" is the only information as to the financial position of the Rampart which is given in the prospectus exhorting people to become policy-holders. That information is worse than worthless—being, indeed, calculated to mislead ignorant people—and the fact that an assistant secretary is required to put £300 into the business is hardly a recommendation of this insurance company.

---

My appeal last week for further information respecting the Buena Vista Fruit Co. and its Cuban land-peddling business was not unavailing. It seems that the gentleman erroneously described as a missionary from Cuba is the Rev. Wm. Minifie, D.D., formerly a Baptist minister at Bradford, at Bournemouth, at Newport, Mon., and then at Boston, U.S.A. The latter town is the headquarters of the company for which Dr. Minifie, whose present address is "Brentwood," East End Road, East Finchley, N., has recently acted as agent in this country. In letters now before me he writes of the company's proposition in the most enthusiastic terms, and I am told that quite a number of plots of land have been disposed of amongst members of his late churches in England. Why any weight should have been attached to his recommendation in a matter of this kind I do not know. It does not follow that a Baptist minister, even if he possesses an American D.D. degree, is a wise and competent adviser as to an investment. Experience, indeed, shows that reverend gentlemen are often very unsatisfactory guides in business.

---

In the case of this Buena Vista Fruit Co., even if everything that it says about itself is true, I should still hold that the purchase of an acre of its land in Cuba is an utterly undesirable investment for the savings of people here, such as the domestic servant whose case I noticed last week. Really, however, the company damns itself by the literature it issues. One of its leaflets is actually devoted to a comparison between an investment in its lands "and the popular so-called investment in endowment life insurance, or annuity policies," the object being to show that the lands—on which fruit trees have still to be planted and brought into bearing—form a much better investment. That is a suggestion which can only be intended to influence ignorant and simple-minded people; and that they should be induced by such means to part with their money to this American company is to my mind a most mischievous and reprehensible proceeding.

---

Mr. W. Morgan and his North British Academy have come to London and opened a show at the rooms of the R.S.B.A. in Suffolk Street, Pall Mall. I gather from the Newcastle Daily Journal that whoever undertakes a journey to Suffolk Street in the expectation of seeing something distinctive of north-country artists and their work will be disappointed, since the North of England is practically unrepresented. My own critic who looked in at the gallery seemed to be chiefly impressed with the cheapness of the pictures, and came away with the idea that in the N.B.A. the furniture picture shops would have a formidable rival. All this makes me wonder still more as to the raison d'être of the N.B.A., and more than ever anxious to see the balance-sheet which Mr. Morgan guards so sedulously from the eyes of any one not of the fellowship. Two or three months ago, Mr. Morgan informed me that the Academy was no longer inviting additions to the roll of Fellows, but since that date invitations have been sent out to gentlemen in the colonies inviting them to send their guineas in return for the honour of being elected F.N.B.A.

---

DONE BROWN.

(By a disappointed Cockney sportsman.)

With the partridge, despite my best tries,
I shall ne'er win renown.
When a covey doth rise,
I shut both my eyes
And blaze away into the brown.

Last Thursday, the guest of a friend,
I went down from town,
A pleasant week-end
In the stubbles to spend
A-blazing away at the brown.

But the birds were so wild and so rare,
My hopes tumbled down.
All we flushed—most unfair—
Single partridges were.
I was done (and done out of my) brown.

---

SCRUTATOR.

THE TERRIBLE TEUTON AGAIN.

THE Daily Mail was horribly frightened last week by discoveries which Mr. William Maxwell has been making on the mysterious island of Borkum and around the mouth of the adjacent River Ems. No doubt the alarm will extend itself to some of the Mail's very numerous readers—indeed, that seems rather to be the object in view. In that event, I would recommend them to compose themselves, and regard Borkum and its exploded "secret" dispassionately. What is this precious secret? An obvious and necessary step in a policy which has never been concealed, whatever attempts the German Government, in common with our own and others, may take to keep its neighbours in the dark respecting the details of its armaments. Rightly or wrongly, Germany has undertaken to prepare for a possible naval war. Coast defences and fortified naval bases are as necessary a part of such preparation as battleships and torpedo boats. The estuary of the Ems is the boundary of the Empire towards the north-west. It offers a tempting object of attack to an enemy approaching the German coast by sea, and a convenient place for a hostile landing. Conversely, it is a useful harbour for German warships operating in the North Sea. That such a place should be left at the mercy of an enemy when the whole seaboard is being placed in a condition of defence and every means taken of strengthening the naval position of the Empire, would be contrary to everything that is known of the thoroughness and scientific foresight with which the German Government does its work. It can be no surprise to anybody, therefore, that an island which more or less commands the estuary should be fortified, or that the port of Emden should be improved and its defences strengthened. The surprising thing would be that these obvious precautions should be neglected.

Of course these and all other naval measures undertaken on the other side of the North Sea may be looked at in two lights. That is the unfortunate part of the present situation. If you start with the assumption, deriving it from your inner consciousness, that the German Government and people suddenly became possessed some years ago with the intention of attacking this country in order to conquer it on sea and land and reduce it to insignificance, you can only see in the whole of the naval preparations that have been made since that date so many steps towards carrying out this design at the earliest opportunity. On the other hand, if you reject that initial assumption, German naval armaments have no more significance in relation to ourselves than her military armaments have in relation to her Continental neighbours. I am one of those—I trust the majority of Englishmen—who decline to assume that either the German Government or the German people have any intention or wish to make an unprovoked attack on this country. This is not, as one of our Teutophobes would probably say, because I am a Little Englander, or a Socialist or a Nonconformist, or an anti-patriot, or an uncertificated lunatic, or any other sort of convenient cockshy, but because I decline to believe a thing which is inherently incredible, unless on the strength of definite evidence. It is inherently incredible that the German people and Government should at the present date, and in the face of the existing situation on the Continent, deliberately decide to embark on a gigantic war of aggression from no motive but cupidity. And what evidence is there that they have formed such an insane design? I have never seen any, unless in the vapourings of gasconading officers or irresponsible journalists. God forbid that any nation, ourselves included, should be convicted of felonious designs against its neighbours on such evidence as that!

On the other hand, that Germany should spend vast sums in fortifying herself against an attack by sea is—I will not say reasonable, for none of the armaments with which Europe is cursed at present have any relation to reason; but, at any rate, easy to understand. Her policy for the last half-century, dictated by the experience of centuries before that, has been to preclude the possibility of any foreign enemy setting foot on German soil again. Until the last ten years we cordially sympathised with this policy. Within that time we have changed our attitude, for reasons which no German can understand, unless it is jealousy of the growth of German industry, commerce, and wealth. With this change we have struck up a demonstrative friendship with France, the neighbour against whom Germany has most cause to be on her guard. In itself this friendship was calculated to arouse suspicions in Germany. She had not long to wait for evidence to justify her suspicions. At the first sign of friction between France and Germany we ostentatiously ranged ourselves on the side of France, and when the friction had developed into something like a crisis the announcement appeared in a London newspaper, on the side of the Government, that we had privately promised the French Government to land 100,000 men in Holstein in the event of a new Franco-German war. That announcement has never been officially repudiated to this day. Simultaneously with this we concentrated the bulk of our naval strength in northern waters. At the same time we set to work to construct a new type of warship of unprecedented size. We did this with extraordinary secrecy, and when it was done boasted of having stolen a march upon our rivals. We are constructing at vast expense a new naval base in the North Sea—precisely what is now offered as evidence of hostile designs when Germany does the same thing upon the opposite coast. For years past we have been busily reorganising and strengthening our military forces. Never before in time of peace have we made such efforts or spent so much money in training our regular troops to the highest standard of efficiency. Our Government boasts of having ready for mobilisation over 150,000 men—a force we have never before kept in readiness for war. British officers openly discuss the part which a British army is to play in the next war between France and Germany. An officer of the German Staff, reporting very favourably to his Government two or three years ago on the performances of our Army at manœuvres, observed that the question must naturally occur, where were these troops expected to take the field; and added that in the Army itself the impression was that its destination was the Continent. Try for a moment to look at all these things with the eye of a German, whose country has been for centuries the battleground of Europe; remember what an overwhelming combination of naval force a Franco-British alliance against Germany means; and then consider whether it is surprising that the German Government should be fortifying the point on its coast which is most exposed to attack from the west; that it should strain every nerve to increase its naval strength; that it should construct camps, railways, and military works round the frontiers of Holland and Belgium—the most convenient door through which a British force could march into Germany during a Franco-German war; that it should regard with suspicion any suggestion from our side that the time has arrived when the growth of naval armaments should cease!

In articles such as Mr. Maxwell has been writing for the Daily Mail all such considerations as the above are carefully excluded. That Germany may conceivably have cause to prepare against an attack from England is treated as a matter unworthy of notice. It is simply assumed that her preparations can only be prompted by the design of attacking us. Under this method of treatment the natural significance of facts is inverted without an effort. Germany is fortifying the nearest point on her coast to England. This does not mean that she anticipates attack from England, but that she is getting ready to attack us. She has "advanced," as the Daily Mail ingenuously puts it, so many miles nearer the mouth of the Thames! She is constructing strategic railways and works round Holland and Belgium. This does not mean that she desires to make her frontier safe on that side, but that she is preparing to seize Holland and Belgium in order to use their harbours for her attack on England! That she has within the last three years voluntarily entered into solemn engagements, not only with us but also with her other neighbours, for the maintenance of the status quo on the North Sea littoral, is one of those facts which are necessarily excluded from consideration by the assumption with which the argument starts. Presumably, if worth notice at all, it would only be as evidence of the Machiavellian treachery with which the preconceived designs of Germany are executed.

By such means the public mind of this country is poisoned. The result follows year by year in fresh additions to our naval estimates, because our Government is infected by the same poison, or has not the courage to make a stand on the side of common sense at the risk of lending a little party capital to unscrupulous opponents. I have just been credibly informed that we may expect next year an additional three millions of taxation for naval purposes. In Germany, of course, this will be interpreted as fresh justification for additional ships and fortifications. And so we may expect to go on, either until one or other of the two players retires bankrupt from the game, or until the rising tide of mutual fear and hatred, and the feeling that under such conditions war is a less evil than peace, bring the two into violent collision. Be the end what it may, the world has never yet seen such a stupendous exhibition of national folly.

THE SHADY SIDE OF ASSAM.

Mr. Ranald Davidson, who wrote a fortnight ago on the conditions of life on the Assam tea estates, sends me a rejoinder to my correspondent whose letter appeared last week. A controversy which merely consists of assertion and counter-assertion is not of much use or interest to the public, but as I do not wish any tea-planter to complain that his side of the case has not had a fair hearing I give Mr. Davidson's letter below, on the understanding that the discussion must stop here—at any rate for the present. Probably other witnesses will be wanting a hearing when recent issues of Truth get out to the East:—

Sir,—I had hoped not to have to trouble you again on the subject of Assam, but the writer of the letter in your last issue of August 31 again makes so many misleading statements and exaggerations that I must ask to be allowed a little space for reply. It is greatly to be regretted that your correspondent (whose identity is easily defined) should take pleasure in picking out and publishing details of isolated cases, irregularities, and scandals which may and do occur in every community; and the questionable taste and language employed in their description leave much to be desired, coming as they do from one who has not even been long enough in the country to master the simple spelling of the places he mentions. The treatment of European employees by their "companies" is a sore point with this gentleman, but I can assure him and others interested, without any fear of contradiction, that the large agency houses treat their men, as a rule, with every fairness, and in many cases with liberality, and that promotion, and not dismissal, may be confidently looked forward to by those deserving it, while the undesirable are weeded out—which is as it should be. I know of many cases where men have been twenty years in the employ of the same agency firm, and of some who have been over thirty, to the mutual benefit of all concerned. "Frantic efforts" are certainly not needed to secure the services of gentlemen as assistants, the supply being greater than the demand; and mechanics and practical gardeners are not now the class from which assistants are selected. Your correspondent's description of the gymkhana (not gymkana) lasting two days, whereat thirty men spent £200 (R3,000) on liquor will cause much amusement in Assam!

The portion of the communication, however, which is of real importance is the absurd allegation of ill-treatment and cruelty in connection with child labour, the paragraph in this connection being, however, worded in so subtle a manner that it may easily carry conviction to many, the real facts being very different. The importation of labour is such an expensive item in the production of tea that, treating the question from the standpoint of expediency, it would be the worst possible policy for any manager to ill-treat his labour and run the risk of making his garden unpopular. Such a procedure would inevitably lead to a manager's dismissal. The manufacturing season in tea is a time of push and stress, as is the harvest time in any other agricultural pursuit, and all hands have to be hustled; but in the case of the coolie—child or adult—every minute of overtime is well paid for, and the earnings of a coolie family are so good comparatively that, after very few years, they are able to retire to the villages and live in affluence for the remainder of their existence.

Infant mortality in India altogether is a very large and complex question, and one which has been, and is, engaging the close attention of all interested, both official and non-official employers of labour. To state, as is done in this connection, and to imply that this mortality is increased through the ill-treatment and neglect of the planting community as a whole is a statement little short of libellous, and one which may be emphatically denied, as I now do to your somewhat melodramatic and extraordinarily biassed correspondent. I may further add, for the information of yourself and readers, that tea garden labour has been, for at any rate the last forty years, "under strict official regulations and supervision," and that it would be an impossibility for such abuses and cruelty as indicated to exist.—I am, Sir, yours truly, Ranald D. Davidson.

Thatched House Club, St. James's Street, S.W.

Mr. Davidson would impress me more if he were not so anxious to score off my previous correspondent. The mis-spelling of names, for instance, is not a matter of any significance. It may be the fault of the printer, or mine. There is no doubt whatever about the length of time the gentleman was in the country, and it is absurd of Mr. Davidson to suggest that several years' residence there is not sufficient to enable a man to speak of matters which have been constantly under his observation for that length of time. As I stated last week, before giving publicity to the allegations about child labour I saw the writer personally; and he described to me what he had seen of the treatment of the children with a fulness of detail which to my mind precludes the hypothesis that he had invented it. There is no possibility of a man being mistaken about what he states he has seen again and again year after year. Personally this is a gentleman entitled to credit. It seems to me, therefore, more probable that Mr. Davidson is not personally familiar with all that occurs in all the tea plantations and tea-houses of the district, than that the other gentleman who claims to have seen these things has maliciously invented a pack of lies. However, I have given the two sets of statements. They seem to be in hopeless conflict, and the reader must choose between them by the light of his own judgment.

AN "OUTSIDE" OCULIST.

In the course of last year sundry uncomplimentary references were made in Truth to a Mr. William Mellor, who practises as an oculist at Manchester. My attention was first called to him by an extravagant account of his marvellous achievements that had appeared in the Manchester Daily Despatch under the eloquent heading "Wizard Oculist," and it was assumed in my remarks that this was really an advertisement published by Mr. Mellor. Subsequently his name was included in the collection of "Medical Quacks" in the Truth Cautionary List for the present year. I have reason to believe that injustice was thereby done to Mr. Mellor, and though he has not himself chosen to offer any correction of what was said about him, I should like to put the matter right, as it is of some public interest. The article in the Daily Despatch was not an advertisement, but the work of an injudicious member of the staff of the paper, and it seems to have accidentally got into print without the knowledge of the editor, who strongly disapproved of it. What is of more consequence, it was written and published without the knowledge of Mr. Mellor himself, who equally disapproved of it, as he has never laid claim to the quasi-miraculous gifts which were attributed to him. Mr. Mellor, though not a qualified member of the medical profession, has practised as an oculist in Manchester for many years, as, of course, he has a perfect right to do, and he has a considerable reputation not only for his skill and success, but for his fair and honourable dealing with his patients. He has studied his subject thoroughly, and while he has evolved his own theories and methods of treatment, he uses nothing in the nature of secret remedies. The word "quack" is one capable of many meanings, but as a term of reproach I certainly should not apply it to Mr. Mellor, knowing what I do now.

Although I refer to this matter now chiefly in the interest of Mr. Mellor, it is also of some interest to the public and the medical profession. I do not profess to have any personal knowledge of this gentleman's treatment, but I have heard a great deal about it from one who has spent a great deal of time in investigating the subject—the Rev. A. L. Greig, vicar of Shelf, Yorkshire. Mr. Greig became interested in this subject in consequence of one of his parishioners having been successfully treated by Mr. Mellor, and, knowing what had been said in Truth, he was led to undertake a lengthy investigation of the facts. He not only saw Mr. Mellor and discussed his treatment with him, but he obtained the evidence of a great many of his patients, and finally he came up to London and laid the whole case before me, after which Mr. Mellor himself paid me a visit. The result appears above

The Luxury of a Bath is incomplete without the addition of Scrubb's Ammonia, which refreshes and invigorates. Sold everywhere, price one shilling per bottle.

There is one point which gives remarkable significance to the evidence which Mr. Greig has collected. In the great majority of cases—in fact, in all those which I have gone into—the patients are people who have previously been treated unsuccessfully by duly qualified medical practitioners. As a rule, people go to Mr. Mellor as a last resort, when the doctors they have consulted have been unable to do anything for them. It is consequently very significant that Mr. Mellor has in so many cases improved the sight of his patients, in fact, in some cases restored it when it has been practically lost. (To avoid any possible misconception, perhaps I ought to mention that Mr. Mellor, as I understand him, does not undertake to treat cataract, unless quite in the incipient stage.) Another point which should be borne in mind is that loss of sight, whether whole or partial, is not a fact about which there can be any serious doubt. In most cases where new treatments and cures are offered for diseases which bother the medical faculty there is the initial difficulty of making sure that the patients really had the complaint which is alleged to have been cured. That can hardly be the case where the patient has been more or less blind for some length of time. I am extremely averse to giving currency to sensational statements, especially at second-hand, on matters regarding which a layman is not qualified to express any decided opinion; but in justification of what has just been said I mention one case which Mr. Greig appears to have investigated thoroughly. This was the case of two children, blind from birth, who came to Mr. Mellor from a school or asylum for blind children. There is no room for doubt about the previous history of these children. They are now at home, and Mr. Greig tells me that he has seen them and tested their sight. It is imperfect, naturally, but they can see enough to identify and describe objects by sight, and on Mr. Greig's evidence of what he has seen them do they can certainly be no longer described as blind. This is a very remarkable case, and Mr. Greig has verified others which are only a degree less so. It seems to me that they deserve careful examination by professional men who are in a better position to estimate their exact scientific significance than either a clergyman or a journalist; and I may add that Mr. Mellor is desirous of such investigation, and is quite willing to explain his treatment and the theories on which it is based. In all organised professions there is a prejudice against the "outside" practitioner, and in none is it stronger than in the medical profession. Up to a point it may be excusable and perhaps legitimate; but it is apt to become unreasonable. In the field of science there is always a possibility that a self-taught man, working in his own way, may light upon something which has been overlooked by those who have been academically educated. I do not say that the present is such a case, but I think that if any leading ophthalmic specialist would administer an anæsthetic to the professional prejudices and conventions and then make a dispassionate investigation of Mr. Mellor's method of treatment, it is possible that he might learn something which would be not only to his own advantage but of benefit to humanity. If he found nothing but a mare's nest, the time spent in the search would not have been wholly wasted, and he would not the less deserve the thanks of the public.

PASSENGERS IN ADVANCE.

It is pleasant, easy, comfortable, cheap, and up to date to send one's luggage in advance; but no system has yet been devised by which the most troublesome part of our luggage can be sent ahead. I mean Us. To find ourselves at Slocum, sitting at dinner by the open window, before we had left home, without any turmoil of last thoughts with the cab at the door, without any stations and crowds without the trials of travelling with a flurried wife or a fussy husband, as the case may be—why, it is a comfortable thought.

But we do our best towards this end ourselves. We are experts in crossing our bridges before we come to them. We count, kill, and cook our chickens before they are hatched. For all our complaints of the rapidity of the flight of time, we are always striving to ante-date the future. By the time that the dahlias and Michaelmas daisies have ceased to bloom in old-world gardens, spring flowers are in all the flower-shops of London. Fashionable folk are tired of strawberries in May, and prefer peaches in December. A well-dressed woman has primroses on her Christmas hat of fur, roses in the spring, chrysanthemums in the summer. The "August sales" have worked backwards through July to June, and "January bargains" are now obtainable in November. Christmas numbers of magazines appear in the early autumn, and when we get back from summer holidays we shall find Christmas cards in really enterprising shops. The mannequins of Paris loathe the summer, because they are kept so busy showing thick gowns and fur coats in the heat.

To be in season is nowadays to be hopelessly out of date. We have eliminated the present; there are only two periods—past and future. Recent novelists have shown a disposition to place the period of their books either before Adam or a century or so hereafter. We are always wanting to know what is going to happen next. On the day of King Edward's death people asked: "When will the Coronation be?"

This tendency of the age makes life desperately confusing. Looking ever ahead, we have no time to take stock of things as they happen. We only get blurred impressions of contemporary events, ideas, and people. No jockey sees the landscape clearly as he rides. Life balks suddenly at a hedge and pitches us over, and that is the first and last pause. We only get time to breathe when we have no breath to get. We are never out of the saddle until our boots are turned backwards in the stirrups. It is an insane method of living. It is as though a traveller should live exclusively in non-stop express trains, only getting out at the termini to deliver lectures on his impressions in the waiting-room of the station and take the next train back. No wonder our bodies are prey to strange new ailments and stranger new fashions. They are empty. Our brains have been delivered in advance.

The fact is that there are so many of us, all being taught to wonder who we are, where we have come from, where we are going to, why we exist, and so forth, that we are hopelessly dazed. The problem of existence has "knocked us into the middle of next week," and instead of trying to get back we endeavour to settle there permanently. Only one step further, and we shall be living backwards, like the White Queen in "Alice Through the Looking-Glass," who cried out, then bled, and then cut her finger. She was a passenger in advance of her life, that was all. Of course, it would be pleasant to have indigestion well over before enjoying our meals; but then we should also have to do the work after spending our cheque.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE SPANISH PREMIER.

AN Englishman writes to me from Spain: "I made the acquaintance of Señor Castalejos at Zumarraga. He speaks English almost as if to the manner born, gives at first sight a most favourable impression, which grows on one, and shakes hands in an open-hearted, affable manner. He struck me as straightforward and strong in the courage of a man who sees his way, has counted the cost and the risks of his course, and taken the odds. His form is simple, quiet, and might be that of a Spaniard who had been for many years in a diplomatic post at Washington, where the high horse does not do. The countenance is Spanish; but he has an air of business energy that one does not often meet with in Spain. The forehead is good, and the head well shaped, with close-cut hair. I don't know whether a physiognomist ought to take into account bushy eyebrows that nearly meet. But he ought certainly to try to ascertain what a pair of lively eyes with a fine sparkle may indicate. One sees easy strength in the face, taken as a whole. It is shaved, save on the upper lip, which a thick moustache covers—not a moustache en guerre, like M. Briand's or the German Emperor's, and without any waxed turn-up at the ends. He is satisfied as to the King's straightness and deep respect for the Constitution, and he thinks him 'a good Catholic.'"

The whole of the Spanish Premier's family pass the summer in the country at Otero, when they do not accompany him to San Sebastian. There they stay at the Palace Hotel. It is in one of those streets that run diagonally towards the Royal Bathing Pavilion, but does not look on the Concha. At Biarritz and Trouville the beach is everything. At San Sebastian it is not. Guests at the Palace Hotel pay about 25 pesetas a day for board and lodging. Senora Castalejos was talked of by the ladies there as très élégante though of a serious character, and a most judicious and attentive mother. She has three girleens with eyes as black as sloes, of curious intensity and truly the windows of their young Castilian souls, and a boy of six, Pepito. He is a sturdily built little fellow, and drives a motor which is of a size suitable to his age, but no mere toy vehicle.

When not at San Sebastian the family stay at Otero, at some distance from Madrid. The place has the advantage of a bracing climate, and in the background a range of mountains that pour down cooling air. A full flowing water-course, or river, passes through the property. This is a boon of nature rarely to be found in Spain. When public affairs admit of a Saturday to Monday run into the country, Señor Castalejos motors to Otero. He is sure to go over the boy's schoolroom exercises, and to examine and help him where he is weak. The other children cluster round father and mother like so many chicks. They wear overall pinafores of light white percale with a little embroidery at the cuffs and falling collar, short drawers, also with an embroidered edging, and long stockings and tall boots, for the Spanish climate is treacherous, and there are stinging insects in the parched country.

---

Events in Spain having rendered it advisable for the head of the Spanish Government to remain there, the meeting lunch is put off. The French Premier remains the guest of the Foreign Minister at the place he has bought, Ver-en-Montagne, in his native Jura, which he represents in the Senate. They have both been to the Khedive's favourite French Marienbad, to see unfortunate M. Ruau. He is in a private hospital at Vichy, the failure of the local water to set his liver right having brought on a cerebral breakdown. He was greatly courted as Minister of Agriculture by wealthy gentlemen farmers, landlords, owners of racing studs, and their guest at dinners of the liver-taxing and palate-tickling order. The last time he went to the great Bethény tournament of aviators he improvised a sonnet in honour of Baroness de Laroche's eyes. Her severe fall from her flier distressed him beyond measure. She is now all right again, and if her nerves are not quite what they used to be her face has lost none of its beauty. The title by which she is known in the sporting world, in which she has distinguished herself as cyclist, motorist, and flier is a self-created one. She belongs to a quiet bourgeois family who had to let her in early life have her own way in creating for herself a career. When known as Mlle. Delacroix, she danced as Pomare (a Mabille notoriety of the time of Louis Philippe) in a funny sort of piece at the Théâtre Réjane, and seemed to have a theatrical future. But she became motor-mad, and with some reason, inasmuch as she came out so brilliantly in the ascent of the Mont Ventoux match.

She now finds as a flier three serious rivals in the sky—for one can hardly say in the field. They are Mlle. Herveux, who so brilliantly distinguished herself at Toulouse, Mme. Koechlin, and Mlle. Dutrieu. The latter broke the record last Friday in flying with a passenger in duration and altitude, she having got so high as 400 metres. She only obtained her licence as an air-woman pilot last Tuesday. Mlle. Dutrieu has a strong, reposeful face, good-looking certainly, and the countenance of a woman who means business and may be relied upon to bring her undertaking to a successful issue. The mouth, if firm, is sympathetic. She manages not to look a fright in her close flier's hood, and fixes the goggles above her eyes when not wearing them in a way to make them ornamental. I think she is better off flying herself for honour and prizes than the trembling wife of an equally adventurous airman, whose heart, poor woman, is always in her mouth from terror as to his possible or probable fate. I have often seen faces resembling those of Mlle. Dutrieu among the Frenchwomen who drive milk-carts into Paris.

---

Shakespeare, in looking down from another world, has no reason to complain of being neglected in France.

There are now three different Hamlets, and, indeed, four, if we count the operatic one. The three are Mounet Sully, De Max, who is greatly the fashion, and Sarah Bernhardt, who has been successful in the character as a kind of third-sex curiosity. In her third-sex parts she most interests now admirers of the morbidezza of the late M Jean Lorrain's very queer stories. M. de Max made his début about twenty years back, after quitting the Conservatoire with first prizes in comedy and tragedy, the latter being for his interpretation of Hamlet. He is a Roumanian, and reminds old playgoers of Rossi without his florid manner. While as it were possessed by his rôle, when it is a good one, he is remarkable for his restraint and his comprehension of gradations in shading.

There are four stage Macbeths, or will be, in the ensuing season. We are then to have at the Opéra Comique a Macbeth set to music by Bloch, with Feodorovna sustaining the name part, and Mlle. Bréval as Lady Macbeth. The second one will be that of M. de Sainte Croix's Théâtre Shakespeare, in the form of a French adaptation by the manager. Mme. Georgette Leblanc has not yet made up her mind whether she had best take her adaptation, in which the Roman hand of Maeterlinck is plainly visible, to the Réjane or the Sarah Bernhardt Théâtre. It was last year given in this version, in the peripatetic style, at Sainte Wandrille. Wherever it may come out in Paris, Mme. Georgette Leblanc intends to be Lady Macbeth. M. Jean Richepin's adaptation of this tragedy at the Français will, at least, have one very interesting feature —that of "the divine Mme. Bartet"—as the sinister heroine transformed into a being of delicately sensitive nerves, albeit hard as steel, and of wifely devotion and ambition. For it is as a devoted wife that Lady Macbeth steeps her white hand in crime. She will be supported by M. Albert Lambert fils as Macbeth. This player is a delightful walking gentleman, and thought to be an ideal Romeo.

Of the Conservatoire pupils who played this year each once, and once only, in the Shakespearean translations of M. de Sainte Croix the following have come out of that school with high honours:—Mlles. Ducos, Revonne (now at the Français), Guyta-Dauzon (at the Odéon), Capazzi, Roselle, Dieudonné, and MM. Baumé, Mandaille, Rocher, St. Mars, and Morat.

"Hamlet" was one of the great attractions in the antique open-air theatres of the south this season, Mounet Sully appeared in the name-rôle at Orange and De Max at Carcassonne, where it was given by electric light. A young local poet had at Carcassonne the honour to read in the arena a hymn of his own composition glorifying the Bard of Avon, and a M. Carstilleur, also a Carcassonnois, wrote the prologue. It took the form of a dialogue, in which the sonorous voice of Madeleine Roch, of the Français—a grand voice in its way—contrasted with the sweet and silvery one of Mlle. Schmitt. A stage formed of heaped-up earth beaten into compactness, and bordered below the footlights with the vines planted three years ago, brought the players near enough to the audience. Things were so arranged that the Ghost was seen to flicker above a tower before he came down to the scene to lay his injunction on Hamlet. The ancient feudal walls and grim, square towers of Carcassonne cast an air of old-world sadness on the arena, and prepared minds for tragical events. All the architecture accorded with what is archaic, and even barbarous, in the conception and the development of the play, which was new to the southern spectators, as the scenery was new to the Parisian ones. Never was scenery or background more worthy of the master dramatist. Thanks to the use they made of electric light the Ghost did not too much seem a childish, old-world bogey.

Shakespeare was fond of music, and often availed himself of its help. It was therefore meet that it should have an effective place in the pomps and shows of the Court of Denmark, and serve to herald events of a tragical order. What most interested was the personation of Hamlet by M. de Max. He contrived to be strikingly, strongly, and beautifully original, and to seem steeped in melancholy. From this o'erclouded state flashed traits, thoughts, points, that he drew from the dialogue and monologue. It gave fine value to his sudden acts, sweeping emotions, distracting perplexities. There was no piling up of agony, straining of haggard eyes, no ranting. Reserved and prone to live within himself, the besetting difficulties of his situation alone forced him to unbosom himself. He speaks and accuses because the obligation from which there is no escaping is laid upon him.

The voice of M. de Max matches in sonority with that of Mlle. Roch, but is of peculiar timbre, which has a music of its own. She, as Queen of Denmark, was well in her rôle, which is hardly an interesting one, but helps to explain the very enigmatic Hamlet. The horror of the scene in which he dragged the body of Polonius from behind the tapestry sent a blood-curdling thrill through the arena. Yet the action of doing so was soberly played. Carcassonne gives unstinted praise to M. Marc Gérard as a gravedigger. Parisians and natives were much amused at the courtier-like comicality that M. Lambert père threw into the part of Polonius. No praise is there thought too extravagant for M. Magnat as the Ghost. Mlle. Yvonne Boucher pleased as the sadly, sweetly, plaintively, and, in the end, madly in love Ophelia, but the Carcassonnois think the character too sketchy and uncertain in its outlines to be quite satisfactory. In the south the eye is made to clearly define objects, and the mind is greatly formed by visual effects.

Antoine in another week will begin the rehearsals of Grammont's adaptation of "Romeo and Juliet." Music will lend its charm to the piece. Finally, Rostand has a fancy to engarland the "Lovers of Verona" in his florid verse.

---

The Rue de la Paix is pleased and proud at the Italian bishops feeling obliged to make war in the churches against the fettered skirt, as made on the other side of the Alps. This comes, they say in the grand dressmaking houses, of the Queen and Queen-Dowager having set their faces against modes imported from Paris. The fetter was in the Italian cities applied without tact or taste, and drawn too tight just above the ankles, so as not to give prominence, bulging and bulky, to the region of the hips. "Hence, doubtless," a forewoman in a Rue de la Paix house assures me, "the alarm of the Italian bishops. Where a Parisian artist de la couture merely hinted, the Italian one broadly accentuated." The great Paris dressmakers sought to half-hide the fetter while adopting it for its spiciness. They passed it often under a broad front pleat, and two side ones, and in places where it could be divined without being seen made it of a broad elastic band. Or they sometimes covered it with a flounce, or as you see in the gown on yonder mannequin, made it to consist of the arrangement of the skirt itself. Observe that the mannequin I point to has under her extremely wide Princesse dress a narrow skirt, almost a justaucorps of taffeta that reaches to the knee, and is the basis for a long flounce, forming, where it escapes from the upper skirt near the ankles, a long train. The upper or Princesse skirt, observe, is of extremely flexible satin, and has a velvet front. Further, observe how the satin part on the right is arranged in diagonal folds that are brought round in a graceful sweep to be knotted to others formed on the left side near the ground in a horizontal direction. A classical sculptor could have imagined nothing in which there was, at once, more art and métier."

---

Mme. Gémier (on the playbills of her husband's theatre Andrée Mégard) has come out of her motor accident better than had been feared. Bad is the best, however, as she lies at the Cheval Blanc at St. Brieuc with broken bones, lacerated nerves and muscles, and the prospect of being maimed for some time. But none of her injuries will show on the stage. Nor will the similar ones received by her sister. The chauffeur came out of the accident unhurt. Gémier had the news broken to him by a friend (why do people break news?) as he played in "Le Papillon" at Lille. He could not throw up his engagement, and had to grin and bear his calamity as best he could, looking to telephone and telegraph for what consolation they could afford.

Mme. Gémier is one of the boldest and most trusted motorwomen in France. I do not know whether you are acquainted with "the thin end of the wedge turning" at the end of the Avenue des Châteaux at Compiègne. The junction of two avenues forms there a close angle. To go round it at the third degree of speed is to her child's play. In motoring she always takes the steering wheel, and keeps the chauffeur to attend merely as a smith to the machine on the road or in garage.

The Gémier pair ranked among the players greatly appreciated by King Edward. He was much amused by Gémier's personation of an old, aristocratic prowler whose motto was: "Keep young though age creeps upon you." The King saw a resemblance in this character to an elderly peer, now defunct, who figured among the clients of the late Madame Rachel, of "beautiful for ever" fame.

---

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

ACCORDING to the ancients, dear Lady Betty, the voice of the people is the voice of a god; it has been reserved for the English to imagine that the voice of the people is the voice of the d——l.

The Public can do no right in this country; it has no intelligence in politics, no judgment in literature, no taste in art, no industry in labour, little to recommend it in private life, the Government is to lay every burden upon it, property is to thrive at its expense, and capital is to fleece it. The three accursed P's in England are the Public, Progress, and Popular Institutions. The despised multitude, however, founded the British Colonies and the United States of America, and from the many have sprung most of our greatest poets, painters, thinkers, inventors, discoverers, manufacturers, and pioneers in civilisation.

"It affords me great gratification to address so intelligent an audience," mumbles the semi-imbecile Tory candidate. In which country but England would such audacious affectation of superiority be tolerated? In the United States, the British colonies, Scotland, France, Germany, Italy, or Belgium? Later the "intelligent audience" is described in private by the egregious simpleton as an assemblage of louts.

The British public is the finest human raw material the world possesses, but the feudal system treatment of it is altogether inefficient. Handled rationally, as it is in the self-governing colonies, this raw material is the most valuable product of the country.

* * * * * *

The war-cure for progress is the latest expedient. There is an epitaph which the Tories should not overlook:—

"I was well, I wished to be better;
I took medicine, and here I am."

. . . . .

The Opposition politicians and journalists are blowing war-bubbles vigorously, hoping that one may burst and bespatter the Popular Party. So far the proceeding has only covered themselves with ridicule.

"A Scotsman" writes:—

"Edinburgh.

"Sir,—There is no partnership where the interests of all in the concern are ignored to suit the purposes of the 'Predominant Partner.' To enable the English to suppress the Popular movement in England, Scotsmen are to abandon free trade and are to be plunged into war. We are being driven to dissolve the partnership. Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Cornishmen, and the colonies are all Liberal, and the interests of each are to be sacrificed to assist the English Conservatists in suppressing Liberal principles in England! It is a monstrous proposition."

. . . . .

If it commends itself to the Opposition to exhaust their energies and resources in establishing "men-of-straw" and then endeavouring to demolish them, the proceeding should not be discouraged by their opponents, who, meanwhile, employ all available time and money in removing abuses. The farcical aeroplane incursion of some months ago, the impossible German invasion, and the Socialist terror are all obvious "men-of-straw." Scotsmen, however, quote in this connection the passage from Hamlet:—"Let the doors be shut upon him, that he may play the fool nowhere but in's own house."

. . . . .

The German Emperor is the War Lord; Lord Rosebery is the War-Cloud Lord.

. . . . .

TRY OUR
ALL-BRITISH WAR-CLOUDS,
WARRANTED
NOT TO BURST.
TO BE HAD FROM ALL CONSERVATIVES.

* * * * * *

"The Last of London" would be a sensational title. The inteiligent and industrious poor flourish in the colonies, where class distinctions do not prevail and the system of free opportunities is established. Compulsory military service would drive thousands of peaceable citizens to the latter. The Continent is more and more the favourite resort of the idle and injudicious rich; drained of its population at every pore, England, and consequently London, may eventually be deserted. The owl hooting about St. Paul's; the fox prowling in Piccadilly; the parks wastes; and the millions of houses crumbling would form the most desolate ruin imaginable!

* * * * * *

In these days "gentlemen" try to be business men, and business men try to be "gentlemen," and both fail signally in their endeavours.—Believe me to be, very truly yours, MARMADUKE.

---

THE R.M.S. "DUNOTTAR CASTLE," of the Union-Castle Line (the only large steamer 100 A1 at Lloyd's entirely devoted to Pleasure Cruises), is chartered for:—£12 12s.—Oporto, Lisbon, Cadiz (for Seville), Gibraltar, Tangier, September 16-30. £18 18s.—Naples, Montenegro, Dalmatia, Venice. Corfu, October 1-20. Also later cruises Palestine and Egypt.—Cruising Co., Ltd., 5, Endsleigh Gardens, London, N.W.

MAMMON.

ROUND THE MARKETS.

More Doing — Improved Monetary Situation — The Shipbuilding Lock-out—Masters' Action Approved—Yankees and Foreign Rails.

WHILE not positively active, the Stock markets last week gave evidence of a better inquiry in several departments, and the tone as a whole was not bad. The House is, in fact, rapidly getting over the holiday period, and the leaders of the various speculative markets are hopeful of brisker times. Broadly speaking, nothing of a far-reaching character has occurred to afflict markets. The serenity of international politics remains unbroken. As regards money conditions at home, they have undergone a change for the better. The Bank of England has commenced to lose gold to Egypt, but as there is no indication at present of a drain to the States, and as the central establishment has been successful in getting bar gold in the open market at its statutory price of 77s. 9d. per oz., the occasion for putting the Bank Rate up last week did not arise. Defensive action by the Bank may have to be taken later on, but in the meantime the position is comfortable enough, and in the next few weeks the open market is likely to be plentifully supplied with credits in consequence of large redemptions of Treasury Bills.

The lock-out by the Shipbuilding Federation has been a cloud upon the market for home securities, but it has not had any great effect in reducing values. Before long the effect of the employers' action, disturbing though it is for the moment, should be in the direction of giving greater stability to securities. For months past the spirit of revolt shown by certain cliques in the labour world against agreements to which they themselves were assenting parties has been a leading factor in retarding the needed revival of confidence on the part of investors in Home Rails and Industrials. If, therefore, the drastic step taken by the masters is effectual in putting an end to irritating sectional strikes, the air in the labour world will have undergone a needful clarifying, and an important bar to greater activity in domestic securities will have been removed.

American Rails, despite fluctuations, have preserved an undertone of strength. The market is at present looked after by men in a position to hold it up, though the political outlook is checking aggressiveness on the part of the bull party. Events that may help to shape the course of prices in the immediate future are the wheat and corn crops, due to-morrow, and the result of the Maine State elections on the 12th, which will afford an important indication of the strength of the Democratic rally. Mexican Rails have received a good deal of support, more especially Mexican Ordinary and Second Preference, and the preferred stocks of the National road. Argentine and other South American Railway stocks have benefited from investment buying, prompted chiefly by the fact that stocks are now full of dividend.

RAILWAYS.

Three Home Railway Bargains: Midland Deferred, Great Northern Deferred, and Chatham First Preference.

Although the public as a whole still looks askance at the Home Railway market, which is natural when it thinks of the losses made in that department during the last twelve years, and contrasts such experience with the profits made on Foreign Rails and Foreign Bonds in the same period, there has in the last week or two been some good professional buying of one or two stocks. What the professionals do to-day the public often does to-morrow. I am not going to repeat the case for Home Rails in general, because regular readers of my weekly Notes will hardly require to be posted afresh at this juncture. But a few points relating to three individual stocks may serve to prove my contention that there are bargains to be found in the Home Railway market.

Midland Deferred for the past two half-years has received a dividend of 3 per cent., namely, at the rate of 3½ per cent. for the December half of 1909 and at the rate of 2½ per cent. for the first half of 1910. The company's traffic returns continue to show great expansion. For eight weeks of the current half-year the estimated gain (and Midland traffics generally prove to be substantially under-estimated) is £62,000, or at the rate of over £200,000 for the six months. The company, thanks largely to its working agreement with the North-Western and other lines, has lately been economising in remarkable fashion. There are market men who say that the whole of any increase in gross receipts will be retained as net increase. This is perhaps too sanguine a hope, but if the company could obtain a net increase of £100,000 this half-year it would be able to raise the dividend on the deferred stock from 3½ per cent. to 4½ per cent., making the distribution for the whole year 3½ against 3. On such a basis Midland Deferred bought at 61 would give a yield of over 5¾ per cent. It may be, of course, that the company will elect to be extra liberal in the matter of reserves (in the June half of this year £90,000 was put aside to special reserve), but assuming an increase of only ½ per cent. in the dividend the distribution for the year would be 3¼ per cent. and the yield on the stock would amount to £5 8s. per cent. Even without making allowance for any advance in the dividend Midland Deferred offers a yield of practically 5 per cent.

The Great Northern pays the dividend on its deferred stock once a year, namely, in February. Last time that stock got 1¾ per cent. In the June half of 1910 the company, after putting aside £20,000 to reserve (an innovation for the first half of the year, although £20,000 was also set aside last December) carried forward an increased balance of £56,000, which means that the deferred stock to June 30 had earned 2½ per cent. It requires only an addition to net revenue in the current half year of £21,000 to give York Deferred 2¾ per cent., and there are reasons for hoping that this amount will be forthcoming. Traffics in the next nine weeks run against a total decrease of £60,000, so that with general business now good a run of increases is practically assured. To date for eight weeks the gross gain amounts to £17,300, equivalent to £56,000 for the full half-year. The company in the last few half years, thanks, largely to its friendly working arrangement with the Great Central and Great Eastern, has been making very successful efforts to reduce its expense ratio. With a gross gain probable of about £60,000 it does not, therefore, appear unreasonable to look for an increase in the disposable balance of £21,000. As the company in the second half of 1909 put £20,000 to reserve, any increase in net revenue this time should be available for the junior stocks. At 46 Great Northern Deferred, on a basis of 2¾ per cent. dividends, offers a yield of 6 per cent.

South-Eastern and Chatham stocks have lately been favoured by speculators on the greater prominence given to Kent coal exploration. Those who are ardent believers in Kent coal are ipso facto ardent believers in the Kentish railway stocks. Apart altogether from the possibility or otherwise of Kent becoming a Black Country, the position of the railways has of late undergone considerable improvement. The longer-distance passenger traffic, and particularly the cross-Channel traffic, are steadily developing, and the improvements lately effected at the new Dover harbour are full of promise for the railway. This year, too, an excellent hop crop should add not less than £10,000 to the receipts of the lines. For the investor who wants to be assured of an immediate income, Chatham first preference is the most suitable stock. The Chatham's year ends at June 30, and for the last financial year the first preference received 3¾ per cent. To bring the dividend up to the full rate of 4½ per cent. a net increase is required upon the joint Chatham and South-Eastern lines of £125,000. For eight weeks of the current half-year the combined system shows a gain in gross receipts of £27,000, and so promising a start, coupled with the scope the management has lately shown for economy, has already led some market men to entertain hopes of Chatham firsts receiving their full 4½ per cent. interest in respect of 1910-11. The company is entitled to two-fifths of the net earnings divisible between the two lines, and the actual sum required by it alone to satisfy the full claim of the first preference stockholders is £50,000, or say £46,000, allowing for the increased balance carried out at June 30 last. On the basis of the 3¾ per cent. paid last year, Chatham firsts at 80 return the very respectable yield of £4 14s. per cent.; on a 4½ per cent. dividend basis the yield at the same price would be £5 12s. 6d. per cent.

Argentine Railway Dividend Prospects—Cheap Central Argentines.

The approach of the dividend season has rekindled interest in Foreign Railway stocks. Most of the South American and other English-owned foreign railways make up their accounts to June 30 and submit them about October, so that at the present time many stocks are carrying the dividends for the final half-year or else for the whole year. In the Argentine group there is no doubt about the maintenance of dividends upon three of the four principal lines. The Buenos Ayres Western will almost certainly pay a final dividend at the rate of 8 per cent., making 7 per cent. for the year, and the Buenos Ayres Great Southern will distribute similarly, though the outlook for 1910-11, when the "Bags" has to convert £6,000,000 4 per cent. convertible shares into ordinary stock, is a trifle dubious. The Central Argentine, too, although it suffered a decrease in gross receipts for the year of £214,000, should have no difficulty in distributing a final dividend at the rate of 7 per cent., making 6 per cent. for the year, upon its ordinary stock, because the liberal allocations out of revenue upon maintenance and renewals made for some years past amply justify some retrenchment during a bad year. The company at the present time is doing better than any other Argentine Railway, thanks to the excellence of the maize crop in its territory. For only two months of its current year its gross receipts amount to £878,784, an increase of £119,205. At about 106 the ordinary stock carrying 3½ points of dividend is still cheap, while the deferred at 102 cum a full year's dividend of 6 per cent. is also distinctly attractive. The dividend on Buenos Ayres and Pacific Ordinary is a matter of conjecture. The company having paid an interim dividend at the rate of 3 per cent., its final payment will presumably be not less than 3 per cent. Some people talk of a higher rate, but, as I suggested when dealing with the position on August 3, it is hard to see how more than 3 per cent. can be paid without straining the company's finances, as happened a year ago. However, be the dividend what it may, I do not now look for much set-back in Pacifics, because the large undeveloped territory which the company has lately commenced to open up at heavy expense makes it reasonable to hope for progress in the matter of earnings for some years to come.

Cuban Railways—Position Analysed.

With the speculative possibilities attaching to Mexican Railway stocks I dealt a week ago, and since my remarks appeared buying has carried the values higher. There has been more doing, too, in Cuban rails, particularly in the ordinary stock of the United of the Havana. Early in the year, when this stock went to about 90, I advised a sale, as the market, in going for a dividend of 5 per cent., had, in my opinion, pitched its hopes too high. The stock subsequently dipped below 80, and to correspondents who have inquired lately as to what they should do I suggested that they might average. The stock in the last few days has picked up to 85. My estimate of the dividend for the past year, published in Truth of May 25, was 4 per cent., as compared with 2 per cent for 1908-9. I then suggested that the total gross receipts would show an increase of £155,000, and the published traffics to June 30 gave an increase of £156,677, sufficiently near the mark to make me stand by my dividend estimate of 4 per cent. Of course, Havanas at 85 and getting 4 per cent. would be high enough if prospects suggested that this was the limit. But latest advices from Cuba refer hopefully to the next sugar crop (the company's fortunes are bound up with sugar), and as a result of the last good season the import trade has received a fillip, so that during the present slack period of the year the company goes on reporting increases. To date since July 1 the gross traffics amount to £135,218, an advance of £15,347. Havanas have behind them the support of powerful people, and barring accidents to the growing crop they will probably go higher.

The Western Railway of Havana is a well-managed little property, whose shares appeal more to the investor than the speculator. This company depends principally upon tobacco for its revenues, and for a long time it has enjoyed a steady run of prosperity, during which time care has been taken to safeguard the financial position. In the past year ending June 30 a poor tobacco crop caused gross receipts at £248,417 to show a loss of £30,092. In good quarters, however, little doubt is felt about the maintenance of the final dividend at the rate of 8 per cent., making with the interim dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. a total of 7 per cent. for the year. Assuming such a distribution, this would be the sixth successive year in which the Western of Havana has paid 7 per cent.; for the previous four years the dividend was 6 per cent. At the present price of 11¼ the £10 ordinary shares give a yield of just over 6 per cent., and might well be bought for mixing purposes.

The Cuban Central is a line that for some years has pursued a struggling existence. It has always managed to meet the interest on its 5½ per cent. cumulative preference shares (though in 1903 a shortage incurred in the first half had to be made good in the second), but the Ordinary shareholders in the past ten years have received only three dividends, the total amounting to 5 per cent., or an average annual payment of ½ per cent. for the decade. Heavy capital rather than lack of expansion in receipts appears to be the explanation. Last year to June 30 gross receipts reached the record total of £464,739, an increase of £29,000, the company, like the United of Havana, benefiting from a good sugar crop. For 1908-9 the company put £20,000 to reserve, and carried forward £9,000, after paying the Preference interest. Assuming that one-half its gross gain in 1909-10 of £29,000 is retained as net gain, the company would be in a position to pay about 1½ per cent. on the £900,000 Ordinary shares, or, say, 2 per cent. allowing for some reduction in the balance forward. It is unlikely that the board will forgo the £20,000 allocation to reserves, for at present its total reserves amount only to £100,000, as compared with a share and debenture capital of three and a-half millions sterling, and the line, being so largely dependent upon the vagaries of one crop, is necessarily liable to quick changes of fortune. At the current price of 4¼ the Ordinary shares look high enough for the present, whatever their ultimate prospects. The 5½ per cent. £10 cumulative preference shares at 10¼ return 5¼ per cent., and are a very fair speculative investment.

RUBBER.

The Outlook—Seven Years' Purchase as a Basis for Investment—The Policy of the Trusts—Singapore Para Prospects.

Rapidly throwing off its holiday aspect Mincing Lane is now daily reassuming more of its accustomed air of business-like activity, and a canvass which I had occasion to make a few days ago of the opinions of some of the leading rubber men reveals the encouraging fact that the great majority take an optimistic view as to the autumn outlook. Returns of increasing plantation outputs and the declaration of some highly satisfactory interim dividends have combined with steadier quotations for the commodity and some increase in trade demands to give an improved tone to a market which had for some weeks been in a jaded and overwrought condition. Very soon the autumn batch of yearly reports and dividend announcements, followed by the speeches at the meetings, should give the market a further fillip, and nothing brings to the mind of the investor so intensely real a conviction as to the underlying soundness and prosperity of the rubber industry as the plain broad narratives of substantial facts and solid dividends which it has been our good fortune of late so frequently to hear at the annual meetings of the plantation companies. The view is held by brokers both in the House and in the Lane that if trade demands result in any advance in raw rubber we shall this autumn witness some substantial advances in share quotations. At present prices many of the shares possess attractions in the shape of present yields and future prospects which should be sufficient to satisfy the most avaricious investor. Some of the best shares, in fact, command little more than six or seven years' purchase—that is to say, if an investor pays one pound or two pounds for a share to-day he may, if he makes a reasonably wise choice, expect to have the equivalent of the whole of his outlay returned to him in the shape of dividends within the next six or seven years. And it may, I think, reasonably be held that the large margin of difference in yield in favour of rubbers over the average industrial ordinary share is not due (so far at least as the buyer at present quotations is concerned) to any serious difference in the security of the investor's capital.

The table which I append contains a list of shares in producing companies which well deserve the investor's attention. They have been selected because their current quotations represent about six or seven years' purchase on the assumption that the outputs will gradually increase to 500 lbs. per acre, and that rubber will yield a net profit during the present year of 7s. per lb., 6s. for 1911, 5s. for 1912, 4s. for 1913, and 2s. per lb. for the following years.

Rubber Dividend Estimates.

| — | 6 years' divs. | 7 years' divs. | 8 years' divs. | 9 years' divs. | 10 years' divs. | Present Price. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Batu Caves | 16 | 18½ | 20½ | 22⅔ | 25 | 17¼ |
| Batu Tiga | 5½ | 6½ | 7½ | 8⅝ | 9⅝ | 5 |
| Consolidated Malay | 23/- | 25/9 | 28/9 | 31/9 | 34/6 | 26/6 |
| Glenshiel | 6½ | 8½ | 10½ | 12½ | 14 | 6½ |
| Harpenden | 10 | 11⅞ | 13⅝ | 15⅝ | 17½ | 11 |
| Inch Kenneth | 15½ | 17⅞ | 19½ | 21 | 22⅝ | 15⅝ |
| Lanadron | 5 | 6 | 6⅝ | 7⅜ | 8¼ | 5 |
| Sungei Way | 6⅝ | 7¼ | 8⅞ | 10 | 11 | 6 |

In making the selection preference has been given to such shares as are obtainable on a seven years' purchase basis, without exposing the investor to the risks of an inflated acreage valuation. Anglo-Malay, Linggi, Selangor, Vallambrosa are all, in my opinion, likely to see higher prices this autumn, but, as I have more than once indicated in this column recently, in paying £600 for an acre of rubber the investor lays himself open to a possible, if not probable, future danger from which the buyer of shares in another company standing at half that valuation may be, perhaps, entirely free. Sensational prices for raw rubber no doubt favour the giant producing companies, but with more moderate prices for the crude article the investor will get dividends as highly remunerative, while his risks will be reduced to a minimum by investing in companies of the second rank. Some big fortunes were, it is said, made in rubber by buying Anglo-Malays and Vallambrosas when they stood at one-third of their present prices; and although those who direct the big rubber trust companies do not neglect Linggis and Anglo-Malays when prices fall to a tempting level, there would seem to be but little doubt that the general trend of their recent policy has been to let the public hold the big shares, while the trusts look for the bulk of their future profits to the capital appreciation which is most likely to take place in the shares which must now be described as belonging to the second and the third rank.

The Most Complete List of Rubber and Oil Share Quotations will be found in every Saturday's issue of "The Financial Times." 1d. daily. On sale everywhere.

The trusts, in fact, do not, in the main, hold for present dividends but for appreciation of capital, and as a share approaches the zenith of its acreage valuation the trusts exchange it for a share in a rapidly developing company which bears at a lower price. Recently the chairman of one trust company announced that his company's holdings consisted chiefly of shares which would pay them 10 per cent. when rubber had fallen to 2s. a pound net profit, and tables published in this column long ago have acquainted my readers with many of the companies which can readily withstand the stringency of this test.

Avoiding then for the moment any exhaustive examination of the intrinsic merits of the six-hundred-per-acre shares—and I freely admit that they are as dividend payers not by any means now over-valued—I give below a table showing the acreage valuations of some companies in which my readers are interested, and which may be regarded as standing at moderate valuations according to the respective stages of their development and of their producing capacity:—

Planted Acreage Valuations.

| Company. | Shares Issued. | Nom. Value. | Planted Acreage. | Unexpended Capital. | Price of Share. | Market Valuation per Planted Acre. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Batu Caves | 26,750 | £1 | 1,400 | £997 | 18 | £343 |
| Batu Tiga | 70,000 | £1 | 1,545 | £5,264 | 5 | £220 |
| Bukit Mertajam | 140,500 | 2/- | 2,508 | £30,000 | 3/6 | £70 |
| Glen Bervie | 30,050 | £1 | 1,100 | £14,211 | 2 pm. | £76 |
| Glenshiel | 30,000 | £1 | 1,140 | £4,381 | 6½ | £165 |
| Harpenden | 30,000 | £1 | 1,134 | £10,155 | 11 | £274 |
| Langkat Sumatra | 65,000 | £1 | 1,696 | £10,586 | 3⅜ | £153 |

Bukit Mertajam is not yet producing, but the others are dividend payers, and Batu Caves, which heads the list of values, is likely more than to justify that position by the substantial dividends which it promises to earn during the next few years.

Pending the announcement of details as to Singapore Para's new purchase I am not able to include that company in the table, but so far as I can judge from the particulars now at my disposal it appears that the acreage valuation on the new basis of the combined estates will work out at only £160 per acre, and when the estates are in full bearing a profit of 2s. per lb. should enable the company to pay 100 per cent. dividends. This should justify a substantial appreciation of the shares. Since I advised them a fortnight ago at 3⅝ there has been some very good buying, and they have changed hands at 3⅞.

The report of the Malacca meeting appears in the papers to-day, and next week I shall deal in this column with the company's position and prospects.

MINES.

The Rhodesian Trust and the Market—Kaffirs in Quiet Demand—Nigerian Tin Corporation—Champion's Interests.

Although dealers have not displayed much animation, and share values as a rule have not undergone any material change, business in mining descriptions has been on a fair scale during the past week, considering the time of year. In both Rhodesians and Kaffirs a little more outside interest is reported to have been evinced, and this has encouraged the professionals who have been looking for an expansion of public business as the holiday season draws to an end. The older tin descriptions have quieted down again, but for the Nigerian alluvial tin shares, in which the rise in the metal served to revive interest, there has continued a fair inquiry, and in usually well-informed quarters the view is taken that this group is likely to come in for increased public attention in course of the next few months.

Particulars of the much-talked-of Rhodesian trust are now available. In order that it may absorb the other four companies, whose names were given in last week's Truth, the Rhodesia Exploration and Development Company is to increase its capital from £450,000 to £2,000,000, and the new shares are to be issued in the following proportions:—

Seven Rhodesia Exploration for ten Rhodesian Banket.
One Rhodesia Exploration for two Etna Development.
Four Rhodesia Exploration for five Rhodesia Abercorn Shamva Trust.
One Rhodesia Exploration for two Gold Schists.

These allocations will account for 791,932 out of the 1,550,000 new shares to be created. Of the balance, 250,000 shares are to be offered for subscription at 45s. each to the shareholders of the companies concerned in the amalgamation. This issue, which will be guaranteed by Mr. Abe Bailey free of commission, will provide approximately £560,000, bringing the working capital up to about £1,600,000. The combined undertaking will thus start with good cash resources; besides, it will have shareholdings valued at some £1,400,000, large land and mining interests, and buildings and stands in Bulawayo, Salisbury, etc. One of the advantages claimed for the scheme is that it will lead to centralisation of control, and it is argued that "a powerful corporation, such as that which is in contemplation, will have exceptional facilities for acquiring new mining ventures, and disposing of properties to subsidiary companies as development work proves them to be of value." Obviously a concern with such resources as this combine will have should be a power in the world of things Rhodesian, but its prospects of success from the dividend point of view—which is what the shareholders have to consider—depend to not a small extent upon the management. At the time of writing I have not seen a list of those who are to be directors of the combined undertaking; when I do see the list I hope to find that it is not composed solely of those who have served under the old régime. I have not been very favourably impressed by the way Rhodesian enterprises have been managed, and now that a change is being made in one direction—namely, the amalgamation of five concerns into one—the opportunity should be taken to introduce some new blood into the directorial ranks. Shareholders should not overlook this point, particularly as they are asked to agree to the remuneration of the directors being increased.

As soon as the terms of the scheme became known, market men who had been talking of the arrangement as a bull point for the Rhodesian market altered their tone. Dissatisfaction has been expressed because the Banket Company is not to be given better terms, whereas the Shamva Trust is considered to be exceptionally favoured under the scheme. Such talk, however, usually forms an accompaniment to the launching of schemes affecting several separate concerns. Shareholders as well as directors are apt to think their particular geese are swans when it becomes a matter of fixing the value of their stock. In the present instance it does not appear that any great injustice is being done to any one of the companies concerned, and no doubt the scheme will be sanctioned in due course by the various groups of shareholders.

Now that the scheme is out, what is going to happen to the Rhodesian market? For some weeks the anticipations indulged in in connection with this trust have been a stimulating influence, and professional operations have resulted in a general rise in share values. Whether or not the upward movement is likely to be maintained seems to me to depend very much upon the attitude the speculating public adopts. If the public shares the view held in some quarters that the formation of the trust will lead to the more active development of the Rhodesian mining industry and to the better treatment of shareholders as regards the publication of information, it may come into the market again on a fair scale in course of the next few months. Otherwise, the professionals will have to keep the ball rolling "by taking in one another's washing," as the market saying goes, and that they are not very likely to do for long unless there is a fair chance of attracting outside support. Those who are so optimistic as regards the outlook for the Rhodesian market appear to overlook the fact that quotations already seem high, and also to ignore the possibility of some other speculative group attracting the attention of the public.

There has been some further French buying of Kaffirs during the past week in anticipation, it is said, of the results of the mines showing improvement in the early future. This expectation should be fulfilled, if the report as to the labour position mentioned in my last notes is confirmed by the official figures due to be issued in a few days' time. Kaffirs have been taking a back seat of late, but will probably come in for more attention before the year is out, if not during the current month. There is still a section of the public which prefers Kaffirs to any other class of mining shares, and in the event of the insiders giving the market a fillip outside interest will no doubt revive.

Circulars have been sent out during the past week by one or two of the companies interested in Nigerian alluvial tin mining, to which subject I have devoted a fair amount of time and space recently in order that my readers should not be uninformed when the predicted upward movement in share values started. Already most of the shares of the group have had a fair rise, but if the public takes the amount of interest in them expected, it will probably not be long before the present level is left some way behind. The Nigerian Tin Corporation (one of whose directors is Mr. Oliver Wethered, a member of the Dolcoath board) announces in a circular issued last Saturday that the blocks of shares it holds in the leading companies operating on the tin field show at present quotations a value much in excess of the issued share capital (£34,782). Besides, the Corporation has a substantial cash balance and three tin areas which have been selected for it by an engineer with Straits tin mining experience. Nigerian Tin Corporation shares have recently come up from under par to a small premium (at the time of writing they are $1\frac{3}{16}$), and should participate in any fresh movement in the group. The Corporation's principal holding is in the Naraguta, whose returns I discussed in the last two issues of Truth. The Champion Gold Reefs of West Africa is also interested in the Naraguta, and has shareholdings also in the Lucky Chance, Northern Nigeria (Bauchi), Juga Tin and Power, and Tin Fields of Northern Nigeria. The present market capitalisation of the Champion, at $2\frac{1}{2}$, is £500,000. This sum, I understand, is fully represented by the company's quoted shareholdings (taking them at current market prices) and its cash. In addition, the Champion Company has various other assets, including an interest in a large alluvial tin property, a gold proposition in Ashanti, and an interest in the Anchor Diamond mines in the Orange River Colony. Previous to the depression markets generally experienced a short time ago Champions touched $3\frac{3}{4}$, and under active business conditions may easily go there again; indeed they are being talked higher still in some quarters. Last week I mentioned the Lucky Chance as being one of the Nigerian companies that are already winning a little tin by hand labour. According to information which has just reached me, last month's output from one of the Lucky Chance's properties, called the Dubbo, amounted to just over 30 tons.

The Waihi Slump—A Definite Statement from the Company—What it may Mean.

Since my last week's article on the Waihi position was written the shares have further slumped to the extent of a sovereign. On Friday they dropped to $6\frac{5}{8}$—the lowest level they have touched since 1905—and at the time of writing are $6\frac{13}{16}$. The selling during the past week is reported to have been by country holders, who were no doubt frightened into realising by the persistent fall in the quotation caused by New Zealand selling. Apparently the colonial holders who have recently disposed of their shares had an inkling of the coming reduction in the output, now announced by the company in the following terms:—

As the grade of the ore being crushed is somewhat lower, it is anticipated that the returns made every four weeks will be less, and that they will probably come down to about £68,000 each before the end of the year. It is estimated that the average of about £68,000 can be afterwards maintained.

For some time past the four-weekly returns of the Waihi company have averaged nearly £74,000 each, and such a reduction as is now foreshadowed will evidently entail a reduction in the rate of distributions, which for 1909 totalled 18s. per share.

I believe there is an idea in some quarters that working costs will be reduced sufficiently to largely offset the fall in yield, but judging by the remarks made by the manager at the meeting last May no drastic scaling down in that direction is to be anticipated, and it may be as well also to recall the fact that the chairman pointed out that shareholders must expect the appropriations from revenue for expenditure on plant to be larger on an average each year. A drop of £6,000 each four weeks represents nearly £80,000 per annum, and a 4s. dividend on Waihis takes £99,181. To assume, therefore, that the company will reduce its annual distributions from 18s. to 16s.—that is by the amount of the bonus declared in respect of 1909—one would appear to err on the optimistic rather than on the pessimistic side. On the 16s. per share per annum basis the yield on the present price would be barely 12 per cent., a rate which, as I commented last week, "is not really sufficient to compensate one for the risk attaching to quartz mining."

The Waihi may possibly "make again," but that possibility is discounted already in the market quotation. It may not afford the shareholders any consolation to have the fact recalled, but it is certainly interesting to note that the chairman in his speech at the Waihi meeting last May referred to a position of affairs very similar to that which has recently arisen:—

> We do not (he said) pay close attention to Stock Exchange prices, and I venture to say that, as a general rule, the less directors have to do with the prices of shares the better for shareholders, but directly there is a fall in price, then we hear of it very quickly, and inquiries of all sorts flock in, though a rise is not usually supposed to require any explanation. And yet an unfounded rise is of itself sufficient to account for a subsequent fall.

Add an adverse change in the company's position and the "subsequent fall" naturally becomes the more severe!

INDUSTRIALS.

RALLY IN ANGLO-A—RUMOURED DAIMLER AND B.S.A. AMALGAMATION—BETTER INQUIRY FOR OILS.

Anglo-American Telegraph stocks have been one of the outstanding features in the Industrial section, and the sharp rise in the 6 per cent. preferred and the deferred lends colour to the unofficial statements that the difficulties lately in the way of a closer working arrangement with the American Telephone and Telegraph Company have been overcome, and that negotiations have been resumed. Another item of interest to the Industrial department has been a report that the Birmingham Small Arms Company and the Daimler Motor Company have come to a provisional arrangement for the amalgamation of their businesses. The report lacks official confirmation, but is regarded in good quarters as not unlikely. The Daimler Company has twenty-seven acres of unoccupied land which would be useful to the B.S.A. Company, cramped as the latter is for room, and it is said that some of the Daimler's patents could more advantageously be worked by the older company. Oil shares have displayed a firmer tendency on the whole. There has been a better inquiry for some of the Maikop descriptions, helped by the fresh strike announced on the property of the Maikop Spies Company, and while this demand has not been reflected to any marked extent upon share quotations, it has to be remembered that the jobbers, having for months past been forced to accumulate shares owing to the wholesale selling that followed the boomlet, have naturally been ready to take advantage of an opportunity of lightening their books. A revival in the oil market this autumn would not be surprising.

SOUTHAMPTON.—SOUTH-WESTERN HOTEL.—The New Dining room, elegant Lounges, Smoke-room, with Restaurant and Grill room on ground floor now open.—For tariff, apply to Manager.

THE ABORTIVE BANKING AMALGAMATION.

In the banking world an event of moment has been the cancellation of the provisional agreement for the absorption by Parrs of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Bank. As I mentioned a week ago, the terms offered to the Lancashire and Yorkshire shareholders were sufficiently attractive, but the protests uttered by "many highly valued customers" have proved effectual, and the amalgamation will not go through. This is not the first time the industrial North has successfully stood out against the attempts of London to gain additional control of her banking institutions, for some years ago the proposal of Lloyds to absorb the Manchester and Liverpool District Banking Company had to be abandoned in deference to the opposition offered by the latter's customers. On the whole I cannot feel much regret that matters have turned out as they have. Banking amalgamations while they took the form of the absorption by strong institutions of the little private country bank which kept reserves often inadequate and in times of trouble was a source of danger to its fellows brought many positive advantages to the community. Of late though the centralisation policy amongst the banks has gone much further than this, and seems to have developed into a competition amongst a handful of exceedingly powerful institutions for the control of the largest individual total of deposits. The amalgamation between the London and County and the Westminster was no case of an insignificant little bank being swallowed up by a big bank, and neither can the abortive proposal of the Lancashire and Yorkshire to link itself up with Parrs be so described. The former concern, although small by comparison with the London giant, is actually a very important institution which has for years enjoyed a healthy and prosperous existence under the management of men in personal touch with the needs of the two great industrial shires. In the circumstances one can quite understand the reluctance of the customers of the bank to any change in the present happy state of affairs. It is hardly necessary to say that Parrs, for management and financial strength, is a shining light in the banking constellation, also that the bank has important interests in Lancashire which afford proof that it knows a great deal about the needs of the County Palatine. But whether a London board which already is responsible for some £40,000,000 of deposits is well advised to add to such great responsibilities by taking over the control of another institution that has been and still is capably looked after by a group of men who devote themselves exclusively to the needs of the particular localities served by that institution seems to be the point at issue. That it was regarded as a cardinal point is proved by the fact that under the terms of the provisional agreement for amalgamation a local board was to be established to supervise the business of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Bank. This concession may appear to answer what I have described as the point at issue, but to me it only brings up the further question: if the business of the Lancashire and Yorkshire be of so special and important a character that it requires a local board to watch over it, why not go on as at present with the existing board and with the bank as it is now constituted? Well, the amalgamation has not gone through, and if the effect of Manchester's protest be to check the craze for huge combinations in the banking world, it will have served a useful purpose.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

PROGRESS AND WARE PROGRESS.

My little reference some time ago to the Progress Company and the Ware Progress Company, both of Chicago, has brought me a remonstrance from Mr. Edward E. Beals, treasurer and manager of the former and secretary of the latter concern. Mr. Beals gives me a good deal of information relating to the diversified enterprises of the Progress Company, which combines the publication of magazines and books and the running of "a self-help university" with the manufacture of "the greatest bathing and shampooing device of the century." He also sends an illustrated booklet showing that the Ware Progress Company has peach orchards in Georgia and a coffee and baking powder trade in Ohio. In the eyes of an old-fashioned Britisher this seems a quaint hodge-podge of businesses, but for all I know it may be quite common and work perfectly well in America. In consequence, however, of the receipt of circulars strongly urging a purchase of stock in these companies I counselled my readers to "'Ware Progress." I do not regard the stock of American companies of this class as desirable investments for people here, and in spite of Mr. Beals's protest I see no reason for modifying my previous advice.

The End of the McKinley Trusts.

In view of the information that has been given in Truth from time to time, my readers will not be surprised to hear that McKinley, Alexander, and Sons' famous system of Three Months' Trusts has come to a sudden end. Mr. H. G. Starck, who has figured sometimes as "secretary," sometimes as "manager," and sometimes as "proprietor" of this bucket-shop, has issued a circular announcing that he has been "forced to the decision to close all the Trusts." In one paragraph he says he "intends" that every member of the Trusts shall receive back their total subscriptions with 6 per cent. interest. In another paragraph he says definitely that "every client will be repaid his subscription in full, together with excellent interest," but this is followed immediately by a more cautiously-worded statement:—

> I have for this purpose handed over to Mr. C. W. Silversides, incorporated accountant, Terminus Chambers, 6, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C., all the assets, cash books, accounts, bank balances, etc., connected with these Trusts, together with such securities as I consider will be ample to repay without any undue delay every claim against my firm as mentioned above.

It will be observed that this is, after all, somewhat ambiguous. Mr. Starck may "consider" that the securities will be ample, but then it may turn out that he has overvalued them. The creditors are expected to exercise their patience while Mr. Silversides is inquiring into the accounts—an operation which will probably occupy some little time. Perhaps some may prefer not to wait, but to follow the example of other customers who have issued writs against McKinley, Alexander, and Sons. Certainly Mr. Starck's optimistic opinion as to the value of those securities is rather heavily discounted by the fact that profits in connection with Trusts already terminated have remained unpaid for two or three months after they became due.

Mr. Starck asserts that he has been compelled to close the Trusts in consequence of the strong prejudice that has been created against his business by the combined attacks of a section of the press. He adds that as actions for libel in respect of these attacks are still pending he is not entitled to comment upon the matter. I suppose I am in the same position, Truth being one of the papers which he is suing. Still, I hope that I may be allowed to say that I look forward with much interest to the trial of the case in which Mr. Starck—or will it be Mr. V. Carter West?—will have an opportunity of revealing the inner working of the abandoned system.

The Bucket-Shop Boom.

There is quite a boom in bucket-shops just now. Every week newcomers are added to my list, and the casual observer might imagine that the business is being overdone. The sharps know better. There is a practically inexhaustible supply of flats ready to send along their cash to anybody who spins the usual bucket-shop yarn. One of the latest circularisers dignifies himself with the title of the Mutual Finance and Investment Company, of 143 and 144, Holborn Bars. He coolly recommends a call option on Merlimaus at the rate of 3s. per share for thirty days as "a superb opportunity of obtaining magnificent profits." "On a rise of 10s. £6 returns £20," and so forth. Merlimaus happen to be shares of which I hold a good opinion myself. But they were never higher than about 8s. during the rubber boom; they now stand at 7s., and, needless to say, only a greenhorn of the greenest hue would throw his money away by paying 3s. a share for a thirty days' "call."

Apropos of my reference last week to G. A. Fleming and Co., 24, St. James's Street, S.W., a customer of this firm has given me particulars of his transactions with them. Everything went smoothly so long as the customer was losing money. As soon, however, as his account showed a balance in his favour trouble arose. G. A. Fleming and Co. did not pay up, and it was only with great difficulty that a portion of the amount due was extracted from them after a delay of four or five months. Other customers have also complained to me of the non-settlement of their accounts, but all the time the firm are raking in fresh victims by means of seductively-worded circulars. I may add that this is the same bucket-shop which figures in the Truth Cautionary List under its former title of the United Stock Exchange. I do not know the name of the principal, but it is significant that the United Stock Exchange was recommended to its readers by Financial Opinion, a sheet employed to lure people into the various bucket-shops conducted by the notorious Spiegel family.

"Is their advice of any value?" In all innocence this question is asked by the recipient of a series of circulars from Beveridge, Clarke and Co., of Manchester, who offer a choice of cover deals not merely in stocks and shares, but in cotton and grain ("with £6 10s. you can obtain an interest in all three markets"), or, if that is not good enough, "a guaranteed monthly trust." Yes, their advice is of value—to Beveridge, Clarke and Co. In its results it may also have a certain amount of educational value for their patrons.

"The Editor" of a diminutive sheet entitled the Stock Exchange News, of 8, Union Court, and 80, Bishopsgate Street Within, has recently been pressing for sale, "through our Investment Department," its shares of the Premier New Zealand Gold Mining Company at 1s. 10½d. per share. "It is quite apparent," he says, "that the directors intend to make the company a brilliant success." Certainly it is about time they did something. Turning to the "Mining Manual" for 1905, I find that this company was registered in 1898 with a capital of £50,000 in 2s. shares to acquire a gold mine in New Zealand, "but the transfer was not completed, and the company has (i.e., in 1905) no property." What the directors have been doing for the past five years I do not know, the reference books having deemed the company unworthy of further notice. The above-mentioned "editor" says it is quite evident that the directors are determined to develop a claim in the Transvaal, and he thinks the shares are a good mining investment! That is—well, not exactly my opinion. By the way, this circulariser gives the telegraphic address, "Dringola, London." In Sell's Directory "Dringola, London," appears as the telegraphic address of a firm of outside brokers—H. E. Sweeting and Co., 5, Bishopsgate Street Within.

Mr. Moraitiny's Metamorphoses.

Some correspondence which an unfortunate investor has handed to me is interesting for the light it throws upon the metamorphoses of my old acquaintance, Aristide Moraitiny or Moraitini. This enterprising Greek financier first attracted my attention in 1907 when he was the moving spirit in the Consolidated Securities Corporation. The speciality of that concern was the selling of "low-priced shares," which, as the deluded purchasers soon found, were mostly unmarketable rubbish. Very soon the Consolidated made way for a bucket-shop styled the Stock Exchange and Banking Co., Limited, which—as Moraitiny frankly admitted in a civil action—was a dummy company registered under the easy-going law of Guernsey. The Guernsey company vanished, and in June, 1908, an English company with the same title was registered at Somerset House, but it appears to have remained idle and inactive till the spring of the following year. In the meantime a cover-snatching business was being worked by Moraitiny under the nom de guerre of "Francis Gillet and Co." The latter disappeared, and about the same time there were signs of the awakening to life of the Stock Exchange and Banking Co., Limited, which was located at 7 and 8, Great Winchester Street, E.C., and which headed its letters and circulars with the imposing statement "authorised capital, £20,000." It was on the advice of this concern that the investor to whom I have referred bought certain shares which have turned out to be worthless. The correspondence in connection with the matter began early in December last, and it is noteworthy that about the middle of the month the word "limited" was dropped from the title of the Stock Exchange and Banking Co. The explanation of this is that the registered company was unobtrusively sinking into the oblivion of a voluntary winding up, its last expiring effort being a resolution directing the destruction of all the books and papers. The name of the Stock Exchange and Banking Co. (unregistered and unlimited) was used for only a short time, Moraitiny signing as managing director, and then in January last circulars announced that the business had been transferred to the Exchange Investment Offices at the same address. This was also an unregistered concern. It boasted of a "board of management" consisting of J. Vincent-Perrin, J. W. Hargreaves, J. Court, and W. Marshall; but Moraitiny in the modest position of secretary was the guiding genius of the business. As the reader may guess from this record, he is a very clever and versatile gentleman. His special gifts, however, are not exactly of the kind that make him a desirable guide for the average investor or speculator.

Stockbrokers and Sharps.

It is a pity that the Truth Cautionary List was not consulted by the compiler of the "United Kingdom Stock and Sharebrokers' Directory" (Spottiswoode and Company, Limited, price 4s. 6d.). In many respects the directory is a useful volume, but it becomes a source of danger to the unwary when the names of notorious bucket-shop sharps are carelessly inserted among the outside broking firms. The list actually includes such cover-snatching tricksters as the London Scottish Stock Exchange, the United Stock and Share Corporation, the National Share Exchange, John Talbot and Company, Charles Coventry and Company, and those habitual welshers, Eastwood and Company, Limited. A place is even given to "Laurie and Vincent"—one of the various aliases of a gang whose methods of business have been the subject of many complaints to the City police!

"VIGILANT'S" LETTER BOX.

1. Inquiries addressed to me, which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through my "Letter Box." A coupon will always be found at the foot of the third page of the cover of Truth.

2. Three different stocks or shares are the limit for an inquiry covered by one coupon. If it is desired to make an inquiry respecting a larger number of stocks or shares an additional coupon or coupons (one for every three stocks or shares) must be forwarded. Inquiries in regard to Rubber shares must not be included in letters relating to other classes of securities.

3. Name and address, which must accompany all inquiries, should be written on the communication.

4. A nom-de-plume or initials (the former preferably) should be given if it is desired that the real name shall not appear in the paper.

5. Inquiries should be put as briefly as possible, plainly written and numbered.

6. Communications received after Friday may not be replied to in the following issue.

Railways.

Centenario.—They are both very speculative shares, and at the present level of prices you would probably be better advised to confine yourself to the sound dividend-payers—for example, Union Pacific, Northern Pacific, and Atchison Topeka and Santa Fé.

Ludgett.—The coupon has not been paid, because the Government has been unable so far to find the money. I should not be inclined to dissuade you from cutting the loss.

Mines.

Ace (Leeds).—1. The price you paid was about the lowest they touched, and you should see a good profit in time. I am not prepared at present to fix a selling limit. 2. A purchase would be a pure speculation. Aberatwe.—(a) A further purchase would probably turn out well in time. (b) I believe the management to be efficient. A dividend is expected to be declared before the end of the year.

Boiler.—I think your money could be more hopefully employed than in the shares named, though they may have some recovery with other Kaffirs in course of the next few months. Bussaco.—A fair speculation for a moderate profit in an active market.

C. B. S.—A purchase would be very much of a gamble.

Dubious.—Hold. A dividend is expected to be declared before the end of the year.

H. T. J.—Sell both in the event of a moderate rise. Harpur.—1. Take advantage of any recovery to realise in order to exchange into the shares of a longer lived mine. 2. I see no reason to expect much advance, but they appear a fair holding for dividends. If you prefer market appreciation to early dividends you might exchange into Centrals. 3. I am not greatly attracted by any at the moment.

Iodine.—You will probably get better prices for the Kaffirs by waiting.

J. P. North.—1. About twenty years. 2. About thirty years on the basis of treating 35,000 tons per month. 3. Some eighty years on the basis of 120 stamps, but probably the plant will be enlarged. 4. It will probably be a few years before the company reaches the dividend stage. 5. A very fair speculative lock-up.

Leeson.—Very much of a speculation at the price.

M. K.—The mine is not likely to last as a producer more than two or three years.

Optimist.—I know of no special reason for recommending a purchase at present.

Romano.—1. A promising long lock-up. 2. I am not greatly attracted by them. Rational.—See my Notes in issues of July 27 and August 10. Rex.—Prospects do not appear bright. In the event of a small rise better realise, as you could employ the money more hopefully than in either of the shares named.

S. W.—Prospects very speculative, and I do not care to recommend the shares. Shansi.—I regret I have not sufficient information as to the concern to enable me to pass an opinion on the shares.

Tantallon.—I have not seen a price for the shares, and regret I am unable to advise you. Terrier.—Very much of a speculation. If you have the chance of securing a small profit it might be as well to take it.

Vidi.—They all have very fair speculative chances, and I think you should hold. Vox.—Some such arrangement as you suggest has been made, but I have not seen full particulars of the scheme. Witbanks appear a fair speculative holding for dividends.

War.—Nos. 1 and 3 have fair speculative chances, but I do not think much of No. 2.

Mixed Securities.

Arthur.—1. I would suggest New York Telephone 4½ per cent. bonds, which yield just over 4½ per cent. 2. No information about the company has been obtainable by the Press for some years, but the margin behind the preference has lately been seriously impaired. Unless you have definite news that the business is improving, it might be as well to get out. Aloes.—1 and 2 are new concerns, and there is at present nothing to go upon beyond the prospectuses. Both bonds are of a semi-speculative character. 3. The bonds bid fair to be all right. There are very few American bonds which give 5 per cent. Alabama, New Orleans, and Texas C debentures may be recommended (yield 5⅛ per cent.), and Erie 4 per cent. prior liens, yielding 4¾ per cent., are also rather attractive. Ardmore.—1. No. 2. A fair selection for dividends. 3. Very speculative. Auld Reekie.—I have a most unfavourable opinion of the promoters, the directors, and the company. It is a wild-cat of the worst kind. Can you let me have the statutory report?

Citizen.—Port of London 4 per cent. B stock. Charles Norris (Cap Martin).—1. The outlook generally has improved of late, and the shares might be held. 2. The company publishes no reports, and it is therefore impossible to say exactly what its position is. 3. Negotiations for an arrangement with the Government have so far proved abortive, but at the present price I should be inclined to hang on, as matters are unlikely to remain where they are indefinitely. 4. A well-managed little property. Hold the stock. 5. Better secure the profit. 6. Yes, keep them at any rate until the report. 7. A high-class investment, which, taking the long view, is below its normal price. 8 and 9. I see no reason to advise an immediate sale, though I think they are both rather over than under valued. 10. The company has gone into liquidation for reconstruction. 11. I am not in a position to say what the prospects of the deferred shares are. 12. Reports are not issued, but the company is evidently in a prosperous state, judging by its long and steady dividend record.

Force Crag.—a. Fair speculation for a moderate rise in an active market. b. A hopeful lock-up. c. What information do you require? Shareholders in most industrial concerns get official details once a year in the annual reports. The shares are officially quoted, present price 3-16—5-16.

Glenageary.—Port of London 4 per cent. B stock, Central Argentine Railway 4 per cent. debenture stock, and City of Bombay Improvement Trust 4 per cent. stock. Gullane.—1. A purchase would be very speculative. 2. On a small rise these shares should be sold. Girls.—Better take what you can get for Nos. 1 and 2, and exchange out of No. 3 on the first favourable opportunity. 4. A fairly promising share at present price. Retain for improvement. 5 and 6. I would not hold either of these; they are both unmarketable here.

Inquirer (Donegal).—1. It is a very fair investment, though I do not look for any very substantial rise. 2. See Rule 2. 3.

I do not advise you to buy at present. INDIA.—a. Resolutions for winding-up voluntarily with a view to reconstruction were passed in March. Liquidator, Mr. H. A. Wesson, 541, Salisbury House, E.C. b. The company is trying to raise funds by an issue of preference shares, but I would not subscribe any more money in connection with the concern.

LANARK.—1. I have not a good opinion of the shares. 2. I believe so.

MARGATE.—Three excellent stocks. I would suggest dividing the money between them. MILDENHALL.—Your alternative list is a good one, and I see no valid reason why you should not make the exchange.

NANCY.—All the rubber shares are good or promising with the exception of Nos. 16 and 17. The Rhodesians—Nos. 5, 6, 10, and 11—might be sold on any advance. As regards the others, I am not favourably impressed with No. 18.

R. H.—1. They look high enough. 2. As a lock-up, fair. 3. The market is likely to fluctuate a good deal in the near future. Watch for an opportunity to sell. 4. It is in the hands of strong people, and the debentures should be all right. RELLIM.—Both good investments.

SANDBANKS.—1. Last report disappointing, but exceptional circumstances explain the drop in profits. Shares worth holding. 2 and 3. Both promising concerns. I would not part with the shares now. STANLEY.—1. National Railways of Mexico 4½ per cent. prior lien bonds and Antofagasta and Bolivia 5 per cent. cumulative preference. 2. Yes. SEPTIMUS.—Hold all three. As regards 4, I would suggest Maikop Oil and Pipe Lines Ordinary. Separate letter required for Rubber inquiries.

VERAX.—1. Judging from the prospectus and the chairman's speech at the last meeting, the shares should be worth a higher price. 2. A promising speculative lock-up. 3. These may have a moderate rise in sympathy with other shares of the class before the end of the year.

WILLIE.—1. I see no reason at present to expect much recovery. 2. The recent record of this company has been poor, and the shares can hardly be considered an attractive investment. 3. Have heard nothing since the prospectus. WELL.—1. Write to Messrs. N. Keizer and Co., 31, Threadneedle Street, E.C. 2. There would appear to be a fair chance of some recovery in course of the next month or two. WINTON.—(a-c) Keep these for the present. As to d, it is not a share I care to recommend, and you might take an early opportunity to sell.

RUBBER.

A.—Hold the shares and repeat your inquiry three weeks hence when I shall probably be able to give you some definite information. ADOLPHUS.—I should hold them all until I could see whether they would pay good dividends. At the moment this is not clear, especially with regard to 1. ACE LEEDS.—1-2. Of these two, the first is undoubtedly the better purchase at the respective prices. 3. Opinions are divided, but the present month should to a great extent settle the question. AGNOSTIC (Totland Bay).—1. A good share which should receive a dividend next year. Hold. 2. Unsatisfactory, but may improve a little later when you should sell. 3. Not quite so bad as 2, but never likely to be very remunerative. AGNOSTIC (Manchester).—1. See first reply to "Daisie." 2. I think it is likely that you will see this price again before the end of the year. 3. I do not care to fix a selling limit now. See reply to "A." A. H. J.—Yes, this is an excellent share; I suppose you know that there will be no dividend at all events until the end of 1911. ARAP.—1. See latter part of reply to "Bombay." 2. Hold for a recovery. 3 Prospects seem fairly well discounted as only a small proportion of trees will come into bearing next year. Owing to smallness of paid-up capital there is practically no market for the shares. 4. If you average, do so only with the intention of getting out more quickly. 5. Not dear. 6. Fair proposition. Take a profit when you get the chance. 7. Hold for investment. 8. Not a bad company, but the shares are never likely to enjoy a free market. ALBERTAWE.—1. See reply to "A." 2. I fear that this is a long waiting proposition. Take a small profit when possible. ANXIOUS (Imperial).—1. See first reply to "Daisie." 2. See first reply to "Blackheather." 3. A fair proposition; a dividend may be paid next year. Hold for improvement.

BEACON.—Do not cut your loss just now. With regard to 1 and 2 see reply to "A." I have a poor opinion of 3, but advise you to wait for better markets before attempting to make an exchange. BLACKHEATHER.—1. Not to be regarded as a permanent investment. When markets recover, exchange into one of the shares mentioned from time to time in Rubber Notes. 2. A fair proposition, but one in which you should take a profit when available. 3. The prospectus reads well, and, with good management, excellent dividends should be forthcoming in a year or two. BERWICK.—1. I have a favourable opinion of this share, but at their respective prices I prefer 2. Do not touch 3. BLACK CAT.—My opinion is that the share is a good speculative investment. BERTHA.—Outputs are improving satisfactorily, and a dividend is expected within the next two or three months. BOMBAY. Keep all three for a recovery. Experimental tapping has already commenced on the Sungei Bahru estate; probably regular returns will be published towards the end of the year. BLACK.—1. Look under your pseudonym in the answers next week, when I hope to be able to give you a much fuller reply than I can now. 2 and 3. These are, of course, speculative, but a purchase now should prove remunerative. BEN HUR.—I suppose that you have a profit, and if that is the case I should try to sell during the next month or so as the market in this share is extremely limited. Even supposing a dividend of 50 per cent. is paid the first year, which is the estimated amount, the present price is high enough in view of the unmarketability. 2. A small private concern. Do not touch. 3. Singapore Para, Linggis, and Madagascar Prefs. BENO.—1. Hold until the end of the year, when the company will be producing and the price should go better. 2. See first reply to "Daisie." 3. Wait for the meeting which has not been held at the time this goes to press, and see Rubber Notes next week. 4. These should recover eventually. I advise you to hold them for better markets. BRAE.—I have no means of discovering anything about this company. You must have implicit confidence in your friend if you put your money into such a concern. I should say, "Don't." BOSWELL.—1. Hold these for the present. 2. I still entertain this belief.

C. N. (Cap Martin).—I should not sell now. There is no reason why the price should not eventually go to £8. 2. Do not sell these either. It is one of the best companies, and, on prospects, there is room for a big rise. CONSTANCE.—1. I think it is hardly likely that these shares will touch 35s. premium within the period you name, although they will probably improve. You ought to cable for definite instructions. 2. The broker could not deal in these in the usual way; he would have to make a special bargain. In other words, a jobber would not "make a price," but dealing, if possible at all, would be a matter of negotiation. 3. No reason to be alarmed; these will come all right. CRAIGELLACHIE.—Retain both for the present as they are likely to go better in the near future. COMPRESSED.—Hold these for a good profit. This is one of the most promising speculative shares in the market. The shares are fully paid. No report will be issued until the end of the year, but probably shareholders will be notified before then with regard to the value of the rubber sold. CRANBOURNE.—Thanks for enclosure, which has been returned to you. The report does not add greatly to our knowledge, and I think my reply had better remain as given last week. CARDIGAN (Leeds).—1. It is never seriously wrong to take a profit, but personally I should prefer to keep these shares for another six months or so, irrespective of market conditions. 2. If you can do so at about the price you name you had better average. COLONEL.—The price may improve somewhat during the next six months, but I should not describe the company as a "sound" one. See first reply to "Blackheather." CARISBROOKE.—See first reply to "Daisie." Definite news should be forthcoming shortly.

DAISIE.—1. I expect to see an advance shortly. A splendid profit has already been earned, but I cannot say anything yet about the payment of a dividend. Await developments. 2. I think the price will be considerably better before Christmas, as by that time the company should be shipping rubber. 3. I should still hold, as they will probably pay a much better dividend this year than last. DIOGENES.—You have selected a good list of shares, all of which are worth buying as investments at present prices. Your assumption in regard to the Ledbury dividend is not quite correct; the vendors' (fully paid) shares and the partly paid shares get the same percentage, not the same amount, per share. DANUM.—Your shares are those of companies in the front rank, notwithstanding that 2 is under a cloud at the moment. I should hold them all for dividends. DARTMOOR.—If you explained to the secretary that you intended to pay the overdue call at the end of this month, and that you were willing to pay interest for the extension of time, I do not think there is the least likelihood of your shares being forfeited. The matter will have to go before the directors, and probably there has been no board meeting for some weeks, but I agree with you that it is exceedingly discourteous and unbusinesslike on the part of the officials of the company not to have sent you an acknowledgment of your two letters, which were accompanied by stamped directed envelopes. DUBIOUS.—All three should stand higher within the next six months. 1. Pays good dividends now. 2. Will pay dividends in 1912, or before. 3. Has paid dividends for the past three years. DUKE.—I should hold on. They ought to pay a much better dividend this year than last.

ENQUIRER.—You do not say whether you hold the shares, but if you do my opinion is that you had better get rid of them at the first opportunity. E. O. J.—They have made an excellent profit. See first reply to "Daisie." EAST SUSSEX.—Hold both for recovery, which should take place shortly. ERIN.—1. Hold for dividends. 2 and 3. I agree that it would be well to sell these as soon as possible, but I am sorry to say that they will not realise sufficient to buy a marketable number of high-class shares. Do not sell for a week or two, then exchange into one of the low-priced shares mentioned from time to time in this column. E. S. (Southport).—As the fall has been so heavy you had better hold for a market revival, but see first reply to "Blackheather."

FREDDIE.—1. See first reply to "Blackheather." 2. I do not advise a purchase now when there are so many better-class shares to be bought at a low price. FINSBURY.—There have been no unfavourable developments. The definite information to which you refer should be published shortly. FORGETFUL.—1. I concur in your suggestion to sell these and buy Labu. 2. Although this is a favourite with investors in Scotland I have never recommended it. The vendors took all the purchase money in cash or debentures. The company may pay good dividends as anticipated, but I cannot advise you to increase your holding. 3. Wait for the report, which will be published about two months hence, before increasing your holding. FIDELIS.—Keep all three for better markets and average 3 now. Do not buy more of 1 and 2, but if you see a chance of getting out of these without loss, take it. FLEABANE.—1. This is not a company whose shares I should recommend. At the present price of about 12s. 6d. premium the valuation per acre is £138. 2. I should average now, as I am under the impression that the price will rise during the next six months. 3. These should prove a sound investment, but there will be no dividend until the end of next year or the beginning of 1912. Fairfield.—Do not worry about your holding in this company. The tendency will be for the shares to appreciate rather than to fall in price, as the company should enter the dividend-paying list within the next eighteen months, and will ultimately be one of the best rubber companies.

Gurkha.—This was a satisfactory flotation, and the shares at present price are good to hold for investment. Gaby.—I am not quite sure that I understand what you mean by "explain the issue." The company wished to increase their plant, and to do this were able to issue new shares at 10s. premium, the issue being underwritten by existing shareholders for 2s. per share commission. Gab.—1. Last year a dividend was paid in June. This year the same course has been followed, but there may be another in December. 2. I am unable to predict the rate. 3 and 4. A good concern, and the shares should improve with better markets. 5. If you have a good profit at that price you should take it, although the quotation may ultimately rise much higher. Garry.—1. Will be a very long time before a substantial dividend is paid, but if you have bought them you had better retain them for the present. 2 and 3. Both good to hold for a substantial improvement in the next six months. Galician.—1. I have never recommended this share, and I do not expect the quotation will rise to the price you gave for a long time, but I would not sell now. Although you gave too much for the shares the fall has now been overdone. 2. I regard this as a good rubber investment. 3. See first reply to "Blackheather."

H. T. J.—1-2. Yes, average both. 3. A very good company, but the price seems rather high. Hamish.—I should keep the shares for recovery, but should not buy more. I do not think the quotation will rise beyond your price this year unless the dividend, when paid, considerably exceeds the amount estimated. H. G.—Not a bad company, but you will not get a dividend before 1913. Hull.—Retain all these for better markets. With regard to 1, see first reply to "Daisie." Halfinch.—1-2. This company is in good hands, but it was brought out at the time when no one wanted shares in new Rubber companies. Probably the shares are held in very few hands, and this would account for their lack of a free market. I should take a profit. 3. Hold these for 4s. Hermit.—The company is a success, and I shall be surprised if the price does not rise considerably after the holiday season. I have not yet heard the price at which they have sold their output to date. Hopeful.—1. See first reply to "Daisie." 2. Will stand much higher at this time next year if estimate of output is attained. I should keep them.

Ingram.—1-3. I would keep all the shares you hold for better times. 4. This request has been complied with. Ibrox.—The next month or two is likely to bring favourable developments. Hold them all for the present. Inverness.—You have made a good selection, although in place of the first-named shares I should buy Linggis. Jack.—Keep them all for dividends with the exception of 5, which you should sell when you can. Jaggers.—The Special Settlement has not yet been applied for, and I cannot say when it is likely to take place. Why did you buy vendors' shares so soon after the flotation of the company? Juha.—1. See reply to "A." 2. Do not sell these yet. If present anticipations are realised you will make a much better profit. 3. Of course, these are speculative, but the outlook is good. 4. These should go much better during the next six months. 5. Of course, your communication is regarded as strictly confidential. Jinkee.—Thanks for letter: I understand. With regard to the first two companies, see Rubber Notes; the balance-sheets of the other companies which are now due will give reliable data from which the calculation you require can be made, so that it will be better to wait until they are published.

Kinta.—1. You must write a separate letter about this. See Rule 2. 2. This company is producing, and is likely to pay a dividend before the end of the year. 3. Sell these when markets improve. Kintyre.—1. Not a favourite of mine, and I do not care to advise you to increase your holding. 2. In excellent hands, and should do well in time, but there will be no dividend until 1912. I should hold these shares as well as those of the last company you name, which is a good concern, although in that case you will not receive a dividend before 1913.

Lucie.—1. A very good share. 2. Probably next year. 3. Yes, for a time, but not permanently.

Marzipan.—When you see a prospect of being able to sell without much loss watch your opportunity and get rid of these. Mancestrian.—I should await developments and have nothing to do with this scheme. Mallard.—I consider that you have made an excellent choice. 1. This is probably the best-appointed estate in Malaya, which accounts for the somewhat high price of the shares. 2. This is also a very well-managed concern. Both 1 and 2 are dividend-payers. 4. Is expected to commence paying dividends this year, but 3 will not begin to produce until next year. Mott.—1. Yes. 2. Merlimau or Sempah. 3. Yes, and is quoted daily in the Financier. McAndrew.—As no doubt you are aware, the company early in this year sold the whole of its output for 1910 and 1911 at prices considerably below that now ruling. The management is no doubt first class, but there is not a free market in the shares. If you hold the shares do not sell just now. Molinero.—1. A sound list. Hold them all for the present, and either average No. 4 or buy Glen Bervie, Glenshiel, or Batu Tiga. 2. Deliveries June 30 to August 31—England, 2,043 tons; America, 1,460; Continental, 340; against 1,644, 1,570, and 220 respectively last year. American figures for August show all-round improvement.

Nairn.—1. A very good company of its class. Keep for dividends. 2. I should advise you to take your profit for the reason that the market in the shares is so very limited. 3. This is not the kind of share that I should recommend, although the board is a strong one and the company may do well in time. Neil Gow.—If you "wait a year or so" you ought to make a good profit, probably before the end of that period. In any case information should be forthcoming during the next few weeks with regard to favourable developments. Nat.—I did not understand that you wished me to express an opinion on the subject. I thought you were simply giving me useful information, hence my reply. My own view is that earnings will be ample for the purpose. North Sea.—I think these shares will go better in the near future. Hold for recovery. Nessie.—There is no need to hurry about selling, but you should not think of keeping the shares as a permanent investment.

Orpington.—1, 4, and 5. All good companies. Keep the shares for dividends. 2 and 3. Will come right in the end, but output retarded owing to drought. 6. A good speculative investment. See first reply to "Daisie." Ousel.—I fully appreciate your remarks. 1. The estimate was semi-official, and the extra trees were marked for tapping, but the directors afterwards decided not to force production The prospectus estimate will be exceeded. 2. The area has been extended by new purchases instead of amalgamating. 3. It depends upon market conditions. 4. Yes, partly. Tapioca will not produce very much.

Path.—1. I think you would do better to hold what you have now. 2. A very poor concern. Get rid of the shares at the first opportunity. 3. Keep for the present and see first reply to "Daisie." Parnell.—1. Sumatra Para have paid dividends since 1907. 2. A dividend on Kamunings is expected this year. Pericles.—See reply to "A." Pat.—1-3. You do not say what you gave for the shares. The present price is 2s. to 3s., and I advise you to sell when you can do so without loss. Petriburg.—1. Keep the shares, which should turn out a good speculative investment. 2. Yes, buy the Merlimaus. Pompey.—1. Sorry cannot trace. Where did you find these shares? 2 and 3. Certainly keep these for a renewal of market activity, when the price should improve. Paignton.—1. A good company. Tapping will commence next year. 2. This is a more speculative share, although it is expected that tapping may begin this year. 3. Not a share that I should recommend. Tapping may commence during 1911. Perplexity.—1. A most unsatisfactory concern, but as you have taken the shares you are responsible for any calls the company may make until the shares are fully paid. 2. Is neither "safe" nor an "investment." Sell both of these at the first opportunity. P. H.—1. Sell when markets improve. 2. As the certificate has not been issued and the transfer was registered in March, you ought to write to the chairman of the company and demand to know the meaning of such an inexcusable delay. Proctor.—1. I expect certain information to be published soon that will cause the price to improve. 2. See reply to "A." 3. Further news as to outputs will appear before long. 4. Shipments are expected to begin towards the end of the year. Plunger.—If I were you I should cut my loss now and buy Beverley Tea and Rubber. Pratie.—Neither of these will ever be much good. Wait for improved markets and then get rid of them. Prince.—1. See first reply to "Daisie." I believe they should be averaged now. 2. I look upon these shares as a promising investment, and advise you to hold for dividends or a substantial profit.

Remuera.—1-4. I think the shares will ultimately reach 15s., although not so soon as anticipated, perhaps in two years' time. Roma.—I regard these as undesirable shares, which should be sold when markets revive. Rubberini.—1-3. These will never be remunerative holdings. See first reply to "Blackheather." Rocket.—1. I was referring more particularly to the Amazon Valley. See reply to "A." 2. One thing is certain—viz., that the position is much worse this year than last. Although it is just possible that the price may be put a little better in order to facilitate a new issue of shares, on merits the present quotation is too high. You had better sell now and cut your loss. 3. These should improve with better markets, but, of course, until they begin to produce they must be regarded as speculative. Reginald.—I fear these will never be much good from the dividend point of view. I should sell them all and buy Singapore Para. Rovert.—Do not cut a loss now. 1 and 3 are good speculative investments, while 2 is a very fair proposition, which, however, should be sold when markets revive. Rellim.—There is no market for the shares in London. My Edinburgh friends tell me that the shares may be bought for about 9s. premium, and that the management of the company is excellent, but it will be some years before the trees are in bearing. Perhaps you can confirm this information locally. Romano.—I should not hesitate to keep these for dividends, and would average now. Radium.—1. I think you would be wise not to do anything until after Mr. Lilingston's report has been received. 2. I should sell in the following order:—a, c, b, a2, and d. This is, of course, taking into consideration present prices, as well as possibilities. 3. I should not buy these just now. Roddy.—See first reply to "Daisie."

Sottobosco.—1. I should average. See first reply to "Daisie." 2 and 3. Keep both these for better times, but do not increase your holdings. Smiler.—1. Undoubtedly they have been holding aloof, but I do not attach great importance to the "bear" part of the article, as our friends on the other side are great at this sort of thing. 2. See reply to "A." 3. You might be able to sell, as you were able to buy, for the current account, but do not fail to be explicit in your instructions to your broker. Swatiska.—I do not care to fix selling limits at present for 1 and 2, which I expect to go better in the near future. I should sell 3 at the first favourable opportunity. STRAITS.—1, 2, 3, 6, and 9. As you have drawn a line through these, I assume that you do not desire my comments thereon. 4, 5, and 10. I should certainly hold these for better markets. 7 and 8. Make up your mind to get rid of these during the next few months if there is any advance in present prices. SPERO.—1, 2, and 4 are good to hold for dividends. Buy a few more of each to average. 3. I have called this a wild-cat from the inception of the company, and I have not changed my opinion. It is for you to say whether you will now cut your big loss or wait in the hope of the promotors trying to stimulate buying. If they do this, the price may improve a little. 5. Add to your holdings some Tea-cum-Rubber shares—Beverleys or Northumberlands. STEEL.—1. Do not sell your Kamnas now. Wait for the report of the independent expert who has been sent by the company to thoroughly examine the property. Have you not seen the circular issued by the company? 2. Hold these for a good profit. The price is likely to advance in the near future. SUCCESS.—1. Towards the end of this year. 2. I have no information. 3. See second reply to "Daisie."

THOTMES.—1-3. See first reply to "Blackheather."

UNAFRAID.—I should retain these. They ought to pay an excellent dividend next year. UNIT.—1. See reply to "A." 2. I expect a better dividend this year than last, and this should put the price better. 3. See second reply to "Daisie."

VIRIDIAN.—You need not apologise for writing frequently. I am pleased to advise you to the best of my ability. 1, 4, and 6. Whatever happens to rubber, these shares will be a remunerative investment. 2. Follow the advice given to "Plunger." 3. See first reply to "Daisie." 5. These are, of course, a speculative investment, but the company is expected to pay an excellent dividend for the current year. 6. I cannot answer this query fully until after the meeting. VULCAN.—1 and 2. I should not buy either of these shares. 3. Worth buying for the guaranteed dividend. 4. Vine and General Trust. VALLAMBROSA.—I have in my Notes dealt with your point at some length.

WIDE AWAKE.—Of course you are liable for the call under ordinary conditions, but whether you could evade payment owing to the misstatement in the prospectus is a question for a lawyer. To obtain this opinion and to see it through if an action were advised would cost vastly more than the amount of the call, so that your desire not "to throw good money after bad" could hardly be attained in that way. WILD DUCK.—1. These are, of course, speculative, but will probably go better when markets improve generally. 2. I am much interested in what you tell me, but I do not quite understand the position. Please write again. What became of the blank transfer? Are you quite sure that you are using the right term? In a "blank transfer" the name of the buyer is left out; how, then, could they sign a blank transfer when you had bought the shares? WILLIAM.—1. "Sit on them," as you say, for the present. See reply to "A" and first reply to "Rocket." 2. I believe that you will make a profit on these. See first reply to "Daisie." WAITER.—1. This is a well-managed company, as you suppose. All trusts are out of favour for the moment, but no doubt eventually you will see the quotation back to the price you gave, and in the meantime you will get good dividends. WINTON.—Hold 1 until after the meeting and see Rubber Notes next week. 2. Keep these until the beginning of next year, when results should cause an improvement in the price.

XERXEZ.—Yours is an excellent list, and your interests will not be prejudiced by waiting a little while if you really wish to sell. You will gather by my Notes this week that I consider cost price an important factor when fixing a selling limit just now, and therefore I shall be glad if you will write again giving me these details regarding your seven lots of shares.

YELSIAP.—I should not advise a sale of either just now. Both are likely to go better in the near future. YORK.—In future will you kindly write with a pen and ink. It is exceedingly trying to the eyes, although mine are still good ones, and a great waste of time to read letters in various handwritings when they are written with a lead pencil. You do not state the source from which the cutting you enclose is taken. I have not the least doubt that it is taken from a bucket-shop circular, and therefore I should not place a high value on the advice it contains, notwithstanding the author's claim to prescience. 1. You ought to see a profit on this share in the near future. 2. See reply to "A." 3. See second reply to "Daisie." 4. I should keep them for the present.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ABLANO (Dublin).—Not an institution I care to recommend for either purpose. Better stick to one of the old-established joint stock banks. A. B. C.—You cannot be a very regular reader or you would have seen my constant warnings against Duncan Forbes and Co. AN OLD READER.—Thanks; see reply to "J."

BERKS.—1. Outside brokers, whom I do not recommend. 2. Not having read them, I cannot say—indeed, among the swarm of obscure financial sheets I do not recollect one bearing the title you quote, though I think there is one something like it. BIDDY.—Surely you have seen my warnings against the Duncan Forbes bucket shop? BETA.—a. It is a sound company, but recent results have been poor and shares must be regarded as a rather speculative holding. b. This question is rather outside my scope. I can only suggest that before accepting the offer you obtain a copy of the company's balance-sheet.

CLOWN.—1. The shares are still very much of a gamble. Whatever the ultimate outcome the finances of the concern will probably require to be drastically overhauled before the company can settle down. 2. That remains to be proved. CYMRO.—1-6. I do not give advice or information regarding the relative merits, etc., of securities of this class, dealings in which are really illegal here. Apart from the illegality, the chance of winning a premium is so remote that I consider the speculation unattractive. 7. As I do not read it I cannot say. CANADA GOOSE.—1. Not an issue I care for. Better sell. 2 and 3. Both seem fair industrial holdings. CLEVELAND.—Sell them.

D. H. (Highgate).—My unfavourable opinion of Duncan Forbes and Co. has been expressed in recent articles dealing with the offers of this bucket shop. DANUM.—Better keep all three, though you gave a lot for them. DEALITE.—1. As a speculation a further purchase might turn out well in time. 2. See rule 2.

ETHETICS.—There is no market for the shares so far as I am aware. I would suggest that you address your inquiry to the Estates Gazette.

FREDDIE.—Capital authorised, £100,000 in 50,000 shares of £2; issued, £50,000; called up, £20,000, in 25,000 shares, 15,000 being £1 paid up and 10,000 being 10s. paid. The shares are not officially quoted, and so far as I am aware there is not a regular market for them. FREEMAN.—At present I have no particulars. FREVANITCH.—See reply to "J."

HOPEFUL.—Hold both.

J. G.—Bevridge, Clarke and Co. are bucket shop keepers, whom you will do well to avoid. J.—For years past my readers have been warned against Melville, Glyn and Co. and Cunliffe, Russell and Co. on the ground that those Paris firms sell premium bonds to unwary purchasers at prices enormously in excess of their current market value. The amount you have paid could be recovered by means of an action in France, for which purpose I can furnish you with the name of a Paris solicitor.

KIM.—I should be sorry to take the responsibility of recommending any firm which opens these monthly over accounts. It is a foolish system of speculation in which the customer is almost certain to burn his fingers. KING'S COUNTY.—1 and 3 are sound of their kind. I do not recommend 2. KYWANEE.—1. The chairman spoke in sanguine vein at the statutory meeting. Unless he is badly at fault, the shares ought to be worth a rather higher price. 2. See Rule 2. KONA.—An old-established and prosperous concern. The £10 shares, having £2 paid up, are quoted at 2⅞, and show a yield of 7½ per cent. In recent years fluctuations have not been wide. The shares are too well held to be dealt in very frequently, but they have an official quotation, and there should be no difficulty in selling. I regard the shares as a good investment, though dividends are, of course, liable to variation.

POLICY.—I know of no special reason for advising a purchase. PLUTO (Regent's Park).—Have nothing to do with him or the bonds. His methods of business have often been exposed in TRUTH.

RADCLIFFE.—The company, through initial mistakes, is carrying such a heavy weight of capital that it cannot be expected to pay big dividends. The preference at present are very much of a speculation. You might perhaps exchange into the shares of the British Australian Oil Company. R. E.—1. Yes. 2. See reply to "Cymro." 3. By arrangement with the firm you name. ROGERS.—I know no reason why you should not buy the shares as a speculative investment. REGULATOR.—I hold a very poor view of the shares, and would sell at any price obtainable. But I do not advise you to identify yourself with the people initiating the present agitation.

SHORTY.—Burmahs, Maikop Pipe Line and Transports, and General Petroleum Properties of Trinidad. No. 1 is a sound dividend payer; the other two promising speculative shares. SHIP.—1. Not a share I recommend. 2. Prefer Maikop Pipes. SYMBOL.—Thanks for the paper.

TELL ME.—1. The leading institutions are very conservatively managed, and I should not have much hesitation in holding. 2. Not for ladies. 3. Buenos Ayres and Pacific Railway 4½ per cent. consolidated debenture stock.

VERAX.—A very unfavourable view is taken of its financial position and prospects. Sell. VINDIAN.—You might sell part as suggested. Anglo-Argentine Trams 5 per cent. debenture stock would make a sound investment for the proceeds.

W. S. (Guernsey).—1. I know of no reason whatever for doubting its safety. 2. The great advantage of publicity as to its affairs, including the issue of balance-sheets, etc., certified by auditors in accordance with the requirements of the Companies Acts. WHAVEN.—1. Address 35, Great St. Helens. Company making slow but steady progress. Shares a hopeful speculation. 2. 61, Gracechurch Street, E.C. 3. Canterbury Road, Brixton, S.W. I do not recommend either 2 or 3. WILLIAM.—Yes, I believe they are perfectly reliable for this business.

ZONA.—Amalgamated Press 5 per cent. preference, John Barker 4½ per cent. debenture stock (1907), and English Sewing Cotton 5 per cent. preference.

VIGILANT.

TRUTH will be sent weekly to any address in the British Islands for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or £1 9s. 1d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). The subscription to Canada (Thin Edition) is: 7s. 7d. for 3 months; 15s. 2d. for 6 months; £1 11s. 6d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). To the Colonies and Foreign Countries (Thick Edition): 3 months, 8s. 8d.; 6 months, 17s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 15s. 10d. (including Christmas Number). All cheques and P.O.O.s should be made payable to THE MANAGER OF TRUTH, and addressed to Truth Buildings, Carteret Street, London, S.W.

INSURANCE.

Providing Money for Children—Premiums Ceasing at Parents' Death—Educational Annuities—With-profit Endowment Assurance—Guarding Against Contingencies.

THERE seems a continual demand for information about policies for the benefit of children. An entirely happy but fortunately not very unusual experience has just come under my notice. A grandparent sensibly thought that the best possible christening present for a child would be some sort of a policy, with the result that a policy paid for by a single premium will play due part at the christening ceremony.

One purpose of policies for children is to provide money for education, or for a start in life. This can be accomplished by some form of child's endowment. It can be arranged to pay the premium either in one lump sum or annually or half-yearly. The usual condition is that, in the event of the death of the child before the money payable under the policy becomes due, the premiums paid are returned to the person who pays them. Sometimes the actual amount of the premiums is returned, sometimes some interest is given in addition, while if desired it can be arranged that a slightly lower rate of premium is paid in consideration of no part being returned in the event of the premature death of the child.

If a single premium is paid the full benefit of the policy is secured for the child; if the policy is paid for by annual or half-yearly premiums, the child does not under some forms of assurance receive the full benefit unless the full number of premiums is paid. If the parent or other person responsible for paying the premium happens to die before the full amount is paid, it may be inconvenient for somebody else to continue paying premiums. When circumstances of this kind exist it is much better to pay a slightly higher rate of premium for a policy which guarantees the full benefit to the child and provides that after the premature death of the parent no further premiums have to be paid.

If the purpose of a policy is to provide for education, the sum assured may become due when the child reaches the age of fourteen or eighteen, or any other age selected by the parent. Policies of this kind frequently take the character of educational annuities. If the benefit is £100 a year for five years, commencing at age fifteen, it is manifestly merely five endowments of £100 each, of which the first is payable at age fifteen, the second at sixteen, and the fifth at age nineteen. An educational annuity, therefore, is in no way different in principle from a child's endowment, and may be bought either with or without the provision that the premiums cease at the death of the person paying them, if this takes place before the policy comes due for payment.

If the money is desired for giving a boy a start in life, or for providing a girl with a dowry at her marriage, the policy is of exactly the same character, with the exception that it falls due for payment at age twenty-one or twenty-five instead of at some earlier age which is convenient when education is the purpose of the policy. The longer the period during which the premiums have to be paid, and the later the date at which the policy matures, the smaller is the annual premium for the assurance of a given sum.

Policies of these kinds are usually non-participating contracts, and in a well chosen life office it is better to share in the profits. The result is that it is often more advantageous to buy with-profit endowment assurance than a child's endowment or an educational annuity. Naturally the premium for endowment assurance is at a higher rate than for a child's endowment, even when the latter is accompanied by the provision that the premiums cease at the premature death of the parent. Under endowment assurance payable say at the end of fifteen years or at death if previous, the sum assured may have to be paid within a few months of the policy being effected and when only one annual premium has been received. Thus the assurance company runs two risks. It may receive less than fifteen premiums, and it may have to pay the sum assured earlier than at the end of fifteen years. Under a child's endowment, with premiums ceasing at the death of the parent, it runs only one risk, namely, that of receiving less than fifteen premiums, but the sum assured under the policy does not have to be paid until the end of the fifteen years. Under a child's endowment which does not yield the full benefit unless the full number of premiums is paid, the company runs no risk at all; it merely acts as a savings bank.

The greater measure of protection involved in the endowment assurance policy of necessity calls for a rather higher rate of premium, but the greater advantage of participating assurance as compared with non-participating may easily make an endowment assurance policy with profits of greater value at the end of ten, fifteen, or perhaps twenty years than a child's endowment effected at the same annual premium as the endowment assurance. Something depends upon age and upon other circumstances as to which is the better plan to adopt, but it is always worth while for a parent to consider whether with-profit endowment assurance is not the best means of providing money for his child at any age, say, from fourteen to twenty-one. This is specially likely to be the case when the parent is fairly young, in which case the chance of death being comparatively small, the cost of insurance protection is relatively slight.

Whatever may be the precise method adopted for providing a sum of money for the future use of a child, there can be no doubt whatever about the advisability of using assurance in some form for the purpose. It is a certainty that education is necessary; it is also expensive. In the great majority of instances the money necessary for securing a good education is not easily forthcoming if no special provision is made for it until the time when the expenditure has to be incurred. It is much more convenient to pay a few pounds for many years than many pounds for a few years. Over and above this advantage the convenient plan of many small payments has the further benefit that compound interest is earned, and the actual cash outlay for a given expenditure on education is less when paid for in a convenient fashion than when paid for in the inconvenient way of finding the money out of income at the time it is necessary.

Over and above these considerations there is the further significant fact, to which I greatly fear most people fail to attach sufficient importance, that there is a considerable probability of a proper amount not being available for education unless it is provided for beforehand. In the first place, a parent may think that his income will increase and his expectations may be disappointed; in the second place, the parent may die before the expensive time of education begins, in which case the necessary funds may not be forthcoming at all, while a good education may be more imperatively necessary than if the father were living.

If a parent is quite certain that he will be able to provide for education if he lives, but may be unable to leave money for the purpose if he dies prematurely, he can for a very small annual outlay obtain a policy which provides a sum of money or an annual income for four or five years, subject to the condition that the insurance company pays the money if the parent dies, but pays nothing at all if the parent lives.

Here, then, are four different kinds of policies. The ordinary child's endowment is pure savings bank business. The policy that provides for the full benefit being paid to the child at the appointed time, but for the cessation of premiums in the event of the parent's early death is mainly a savings bank transaction with a small element of insurance protection. The endowment assurance has a still larger element of insurance protection about it, but when the endowment period is short the savings bank element is still predominant. The policy which pays for the education if the parent dies, but pays nothing if he lives, is entirely of a protective character with no savings bank element in it at all.

Why Pay Rent? Take an Immediate Mortgage, free in event of death, from the SCOTTISH TEMPERANCE LIFE OFFICE. Repayments usually less than rent. Mortgage expenses paid by the Company. Prospectus from London Office, 3, Cheapside, E.C.

For Insurance Announcements, see pages 614, 627, and page iv. cover.

Thus an object of the greatest importance can be profitably and successfully accomplished in a variety of ways, the wise choice amongst which depends upon the circumstances in each case.

---

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

[Inquiries on the subject of insurance are answered in this column every week. Every letter containing an inquiry must be accompanied by a coupon cut from the third page of the coloured cover of TRUTH.]

Retrachr.—1. It is probably sound, but scarcely in the front rank. 2. Scottish Life or Marine General. Well.—The company is sound, but the bonuses are poor; as you have paid for so long, you had better continue the payment of premiums. J. E. B., Huddersfield.—(a) The company has a good organisation, but has recently incurred heavy losses. It is fairly safe for policy-holders, but I should scarcely advise the purchase of shares at the present time. (b) No. J. C. J., Dolgelley.—Have nothing to do with the company you mention. If the prospectus you send is still being issued, its publication is illegal, since the paid-up capital is not stated. Braemar.—(1) Scottish Temperance Assurance Company. (2) Your existing policy is of little or no use for this purpose. Yam.—Presumably safe, but not in the front rank. Rational.—Your friend in the Civil Service had much better take his policy from the North British and Mercantile. I have certainly never expressed the opinion that members of the Civil Service could do better elsewhere. W. H. G.—In the circumstances you describe you certainly cannot do better than continue your policy in the Atlas at your present premium. I think your recent experience shows that the rate is a fair one. Belize.—I am not able to tell you the value of your Tontine Bonus Policy. The probability is that the society in which you are assured would now be able to give you a very close approximation to its value. B. C.-H.—Your man probably misunderstood the first agent. If you will look at his policy you will be able to see exactly what the nature of the benefit is. Egypt.—The Atlas is, of course, thoroughly safe and good; you should certainly continue the payment of the premiums. As to the other policy you want, the National Mutual of Australasia is probably the best. Ailsa Craig.—The Clerical Medical and General. An extra premium would very likely be required, for which the increased bonuses would partly compensate. You could doubtless arrange for removal of the extra premium on your permanent return to this country. Fax.—(1) So many companies are quite safe that it is mainly a question of age, sex, and terms, which you should go to. Write again, stating age and sex. It is hardly worth while to trouble with two companies. Philo.—The company is quite sound, and for your purpose likely to suit you extremely well. Ship Canal.—I should advise you neither to invest nor insure in the company you mention. Wally.—The London consulting actuary of the company is a man of very high standing, and he assures me that the company in which you are assured is entirely sound. You would therefore do well to continue the payment of premiums. I should judge that the best policy for your purpose is a Sinking Fund Policy in the Sun Life Office, who would very likely accept monthly premiums. J. P. North.—You cannot do better than state your requirements to the Economic Life Office, who will quote you good terms for the policy you want. Quis.—I am familiar with the matter to which you call my attention, and may very likely deal with it in the near future. In present circumstances I should not advise a purchase of the shares. G. O. C.—3. As an annual cash bonus the results seem good. Very few companies quote cash bonuses on endowment assurance policies for age 38, and it would involve much trouble to answer your question in detail. Unless it is a matter of real importance to you to know, I would sooner confine my reply to the remark that, though the results are good, I fancy something better could be obtained elsewhere. Negotiate and others.—Your inquiries shall be answered next week.

---

TRUTH will be sent weekly to any address in the British Islands for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or £1 9s. 1d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). The subscription to Canada (Thin Edition) is: 7s. 7d. for 3 months; 15s. 2d. for 6 months; £1 11s. 6d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). To the Colonies and Foreign Countries (Thick Edition): 3 months, 8s. 8d.; 6 months, 17s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 15s. 10d. (including Christmas Number). All cheques and P.O.O.s should be made payable to THE MANAGER OF TRUTH, and addressed to Truth Buildings, Carteret Street, London, S.W.

COMPANY MEETINGS.

MALACCA RUBBER PLANTATIONS.

The ordinary general meeting of the Malacca Rubber Plantations, Limited, was held yesterday at Winchester House, Old Broad Street, E.C., Mr. G. B. Dodwell (chairman of the company) presiding.

The Secretary (Mr. A. W. Copeland) read the notice convening the meeting and the auditors' report.

The Chairman said: Ladies and Gentlemen,—The report and accounts will, with your permission, be taken as read. From the report you will have observed that the net profit for the last year amounted to £72,860 16s., that the output of rubber was 236,969 lbs., realising an average price of 6s. 6d. per lb., and that the total area planted with rubber now exceeds 15,000 acres.

There was a time when the affairs of the Malacca Company were of importance only to our own shareholders. To-day—and the fact is not without its significance—I find, according to accounts which have appeared in the Press, that the whole market is very definitely interested in our results and our progress. These results have not immediately responded to our declared expectations, and have consequently aroused criticism. So much of that criticism has been of so generous a nature—expressive rather of regret than of censure—that your directors are conscious of an added incentive to continued effort.

You will not correctly appreciate the present position unless you understand and realise in its true proportion the work that has been done—a work that had its commencement in the transfer to your company, free of value, of the Kesang Rim Estate. This, you will remember, was found to be necessary in order to adjust an original deficiency in the number of your trees, and if, as was the case, the completion of that transaction imposed a formidable task upon one of your directors, he has the satisfaction of knowing that this estate is now one of your most valuable and promising assets.

It is, however, to the work of last year to which I wish to refer. In October of last year, after all our options had been secured, we cabled out to the effect that we would be responsible for the payment of further properties to the extent of £100,000, provided good value was offered. With the exception of a small planted area, which we acquired, the local management reported that there was nothing further available in our district the purchase of which they could recommend. At that time, ladies and gentlemen, there was no such thing as the general boom in rubber, which has exercised so disturbing an influence since the beginning of this year, and you have the satisfaction of knowing that by a system of anticipation—one might even venture to say intelligent anticipation—all our new estates were acquired last year before the vendors suspected anything in the nature of an impending boom. In May of last year you had two estates; in October of last year you had twelve estates. It was a bold policy, boldly carried out. You have gained enormously, but you have suffered a few casualties.

DIFFICULTIES OF EXPANSION.

The difficulties inseparable from such rapid expansion were unavoidable. It could not have been expected that such a large addition to your properties, involving so great an increase of responsibility upon our local management, could have been made without severely imposing upon their energy and capacity. Owing to the absence of proper supervision, due to the fact that so many members of the staff were engaged in taking over the new estates, a considerable number of your oldest trees on the Bukit Asahan Estate were not tapped with sufficient care, and the immediate influence upon subsequent production has created an effect quite out of proportion to the actual damage done.

At the beginning of this year I took the opportunity, while on my way to China, of spending three weeks in Malacca, and these trees were then being rested. It was thought that a comparatively short rest would have been sufficient, and that even if the estimate of production for the year were not to be entirely realised, that the deficiency would not have been very large. In fact, a longer period of rest has been considered to be advisable, but you will be glad to learn that, according to our latest cable advices, these trees are rapidly recovering. A small number of them have during the past month become again available for tapping, and the remainder are expected to gradually come in by the end of this year. It is, however, to be carefully noted that these trees have been requiring rest not because they have been over-tapped, but because they have been not sufficiently carefully tapped, and you must clearly distinguish between that which occurs as a consequence of insufficient supervision and the result of a policy which might aim at securing the largest possible amount of rubber at the risk of jeopardising the vitality of the trees. (Hear, hear.) No such policy has been adopted, or even contemplated, by your directors, and therefore the trouble which has arisen under the circumstances which I have stated is not likely to again occur. (Hear, hear.) I must add that it is undoubtedly the fact that we are taking a longer time than we had expected in training the tappers, but as efficient tapping is so essential, this must always be our first consideration. You can, however, now rely upon steadily increasing outputs. (Hear, hear.) Two hundred thousand trees—about one-thirteenth of our total number—are at present being tapped. The labour force is satisfactory, and everything is being done to make it efficient and contented.

Condition of the Estates.

The next question to which I wish to refer is the condition of your estates. A large amount of work has already been done towards getting all your estates into perfect order, and a considerable amount still remains to be done. By the end of the year, however, you may expect by far the greater part of your planted area to have been brought into a thoroughly efficient state. I spent the whole of my time visiting your properties, and it is difficult to convey to you an adequate idea of the magnitude of this undertaking. You are aware that the trees on all our plantations are free from disease—(hear, hear)—and that the quality of the latex is unsurpassed. (Hear, hear.) At the agricultural show held only a few days ago in Singapore your company obtained the first prize for unsmoked sheet rubber. (Hear, hear.) I came into personal contact with nearly all the members of your staff in Malacca; there are about fifty Europeans in your service out there, and a better set of men you will not find. With splendid energy and determination they are rapidly overcoming our few remaining difficulties. The installation of our own telephone system, placing all the estates in communication with the head office in Malacca, is nearly completed. The company's freehold properties, situated in the centre of the town of Malacca, have increased considerably in value since they were purchased. (Hear, hear.)

The Rubber Market.

And now, ladies and gentlemen, I wish to direct your attention to the remarkable change that has occurred in the market for raw rubber, so complete a revolution in sentiment as to be scarcely capable of explanation, unless it be upon the ground that the high values previously obtaining were largely the result of manipulation, and of this there is no sufficient evidence. Three or four months ago no doubt was entertained as to a maintenance of high values for this year and next year. Sales of 1911 and even 1912 crops were easily negotiable, and a basis for the valuation of the shares of producing companies was provided upon which all speculation rested. Without any warning, and for no apparent reason, the price of plantation rubber has fallen in the course of four months from 12s. to 7s. per lb., and in the meanwhile there has been no unexpected increase in production. It is at least worthy of remark that whereas three or four months ago you were all guessing how much rubber a motor tyre contained, and how many tyres a car used in a year, that now from the subdued feeling which prevails—the fashionable pose, as it were, of the market intellectuals—one might indeed infer that the employment of motor-cars had entirely ceased. (Hear, hear.) I speak in this way because it has never been questioned that by far the greater part of the increased demand for rubber during the last two years has been caused by the rapid expansion of the motor industry. From all that one hears the European manufacturers of motor-cars are extremely busy, but in the United States a period of unprecedented and feverish activity in the automobile trade has been followed by a reaction. Is there anybody in this room who doubts that that reaction will be followed by a recovery? In the United States there can be no such thing as a permanent set-back in any trade—(hear, hear)—and so far as the motor industry there is concerned it would appear to be capable of great extension.

Price of Plantation Rubber.

Again, there is a point in connection with the present value of plantation rubber, as compared with the price of hard fine Para, which is somewhat perplexing. When hard fine Para sold at 12s. per lb. this price created so little suspicion in the mind of the buyer that he willingly paid a premium for plantation rubber, because of its greater purity, hard fine Para containing about 15 per cent. of water or impurities. To-day, when the price of hard fine Para is 8s., the buyer is so convinced that this price is unreal, fictitious, nominal, and the mere consequence of wicked manipulation, that he will not consider it to be a true value, and proceeds to take a shilling off that price in order to arrive at the real value of plantation rubber. ("Absurd.") Now, whatever the price of rubber in the more immediate future is to be, it is obvious that the price of the shares of a producing company cannot remain unaffected while the commodity which they sell falls nearly 50 per cent. in the course of a few months, and in so mysterious a fashion.

Malacca Company's Exceptional Strength.

For the fall in rubber, which must inevitably occur in the course of time, as a legitimate consequence of larger production, no company is better prepared than the Malacca Company. (Hear, hear.) Half a million of your trees in full bearing should give excellent results after allowing for a considerable fall in the price of rubber from the existing level. You have a further two million trees in various stages of development. There is the exceptional strength of our position. (Applause.) There is another matter to which I wish to make a passing reference. You all know that the marketability of a share is an element in its value. Recognising this, the board decided last year to introduce your shares on the Paris market, and you are probably aware that the stock and shares of the company are now quoted on the Paris Bourse. Prolonged negotiations preceded the conclusion of these arrangements, but it is a satisfaction to your directors to know that leading banking firms in Paris have taken and retain an interest in your company, and that their confidence remains unaffected by recent events. (Hear, hear.) I observed that the Governor of the Straits Settlements, who has very courteously acknowledged the importance of this company's interests in Malacca by giving our general manager a seat on the Legislative Council—(hear, hear)—expressed the opinion that planters should now rather confine their attention towards bringing their planted areas into bearing, than in acquiring more land, and this view is one in which your directors entirely concur. And now, ladies and gentlemen, I will conclude. The success which attended our issue last year of convertible debenture stock has definitely established and consolidated the position of your company. The original capital of this company was £300,000. When the convertible debenture stock—amounting to £500,000—has been exchanged into shares, the capital will have been increased by only £50,000. The steady increase in output which can now be expected will remove all cause for anxiety, and your directors having retained your confidence through a period of difficulty, will have received a sufficient recompense for the services which it has been their privilege to render. (Applause.) I beg to propose that the directors' report and accounts, as circulated, be adopted, and that the 10 per cent. dividend paid on January 1 on the ordinary and preference shares be confirmed.

Mr. H. Gompertz said he was an old planter, and had had forty years' experience in the East. He had been making a pretty close study of rubber for four years. The first thing that occurred to him in this matter was with regard to the very large extensions made in their properties, and the Chairman said it was owing to these large extensions that they had not had sufficient supervision. It seemed to him that, as their American cousins would say, they had bitten off rather more than they could chew. But it appeared to him that it was the business of the board, before they made these large extensions, to see that they had the necessary staff to deal with them. Of course, he was aware there were difficulties, but they should be foreseen. The chairman said they had 200,000 trees tapping, but it seemed to him they should have three-quarters of a million, and that they should have had three-quarters of a million lbs. of rubber. At the same time, the position was a strong one. Even if rubber fell to 2s. per lb., they would still be on the road to excellent dividends. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Frank Abraham suggested a committee of shareholders, but the suggestion was received with laughter.

The Chairman said that as to the yield of rubber they had tried to be very conservative with their trees. No doubt they could have a tapped a few more, but they had tried not to tap the trees to the utmost extent. At present, as he had said, they were tapping 200,000, but by the end of the year he hoped they would be tapping 300,000 if the tappers were sufficiently experienced to tap them. They were not going to try any experiments with their tappers. If they did not have a big yield it would be because they were trying to get their tappers into a better state of efficiency. The yield this year would be very much larger than it was last year, but he was not going to give any figures again. (Laughter and applause.)

Mr. Moir said his confidence in the prospects of the company was as great as it was last year. It could easily be understood that with a young industry some mistakes would be made; but at the same time any mismanagement was being rapidly overtaken. The drop in the output as compared with the estimate was the full extent of their disappointment. The property now was more valuable, and the directors were as straight and hardworking as those of any company in the world. (Applause.) They need not take any notice of criticisms which were only the result of disappointed speculation. He thought such people "should take their gruelling without giving it tongue." He would move a hearty vote of thanks to the directors.

Mr. Frank Jones said he would second the vote, and they ought to be fully satisfied with the explanations of the chairman.

Answering questions put by Mr. Reginald Bascombe, Mr. R. Lea, and Mr. Page, the Chairman said the board were of opinion that when the cleaning of the estates was finished the present labour force would be more than sufficient for the ordinary work of upkeep and tapping. The directors could certainly not hand over the management of the company to any committee, and he was very much obliged for the suggestion that there should be a vote of confidence in the board. He did not think the shareholders knew what the board had done for the company, and, although he disliked mentioning these matters, he thought, under the circumstances, that the shareholders should be informed. The directors acquired for the company the Kesang Rim Estate of 2,700 acres for nothing. (Applause.) They planned for and bought in anticipation of the market rise ten new estates, and temporarily financed that operation at their own risk. (Applause.) They arranged the financing of £500,000 of debentures on terms which he thought the shareholders would all admit were satisfactory. (Hear, hear.) Three of the directors had visited estates for the purpose of gaining information. They had started a benevolent fund, at no expense to the company, but at some expense to themselves. Moreover, they had had five years' work, some of which had not been child's play, and up to the present, with the exception of a small sum which was paid for travelling expenses in one case, the directors had not received a penny from the company. (Applause.) They were all largely interested and wanted to see the company brought to a success. They believed it could be, and they were going to try. (Applause.)

The chairman's resolution was carried with one dissentient, and Messrs. J. Malcolm Lyon and Wm. C. Punchard were re-elected directors.

Mr. B. Murton Gill was re-appointed auditor, and a vote of thanks to the chairman and directors, on the motion of Mr. Zadoks, closed the proceedings.

THE NORTHERN EQUITABLE INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

The third annual meeting of the shareholders of the Northern Equitable Insurance Company, Limited, was held on Wednesday, August 31, 1910, in the Accountants' Hall, 218, St. Vincent Street, Glasgow. Frank Burnet, Esq. (vice-chairman of the company) presided.

The Chairman said:—I am sure that you will all share with me and my fellow directors in our sincere regret that our much-respected chairman, Mr. Tullis, is unable, through illness, to be with us to-day, and that you will also share our hope that he may soon be completely restored to health, and able again to give us the benefit of his wise guidance and ripe experience. In Mr. Tullis' absence, I beg to submit to your consideration the third annual report of the directors, along with the audited accounts for the year to July 31 last. The net premium income for the year, after deducting reinsurances, amounts to £75,823 1s. 3d., as compared with £27,445 8s. 8d. It is particularly gratifying to know that a very considerable proportion of this increase is due to our having been able to materially raise our rates of premium. It follows that the increase of premium income does not by any means represent a corresponding increase of liability for claims. It is right to point out that the increase of premium, large as it is, is only the natural result of the expansion during the year of our agency connections. During the year under review the number of agents on our books have been very nearly trebled, which, I think, speaks well for the energy of our officials, and gives great promise for the future of the company. The great bulk of these new agents are of the very best class, consisting of solicitors, accountants, bank managers, and estate agents. I may also mention that we have confined our energies entirely to the United Kingdom, and that we have no foreign business on our books, and no business which can be described as of a hazardous nature. The claims paid and outstanding at the end of the year amount to £27,383 15s. 10d., representing a percentage to premium income of 36·1 per cent. This percentage is moderate, particularly in view of the fact that our premiums are mainly derived from accident business. As most of you are no doubt aware, the competition in accident business has been very keen during the past few years, particularly in workmen's compensation business, and the rates obtainable in that department have in many cases not been sufficient to leave an adequate margin. I am glad to say, however, that during the past year considerably better rates were obtained. Our claims experience compares favourably with that of any other company transacting accident business, and is due very largely, in our opinion, to the prompt and efficient manner in which our claims have been handled. This not only gives satisfaction to our agents and insured, but also results in a very considerable saving in the amount of our claims. The commission paid amounts to £9,612 9s. 4d., and the expenses of management to £22,124 13s. 10d., making together £31,737 3s. 2d., being 41·9 per cent. of the premium income, as against 47·9 per cent. last year. We are hopeful of still further reducing this ratio during the ensuing year. We are convinced that it is only by the strictest economy in management that accident business can be made to yield a profit, and we are thoroughly satisfied that no money is being spent in the working of our various offices which can be avoided consistently with the efficient carrying on of the company's business and fair treatment to our staff. In considering the expense ratio of the year you will keep in view that in the first year of the company's existence we carried £2,300 to organisation account, and that last year we carried a further sum of £1,500 to the same account, while this year we are carrying nothing to that account, but are meeting the whole expenses of the year, including what has been spent in the organising and development of the company's connections out of the year's revenue. If you keep in view what I stated at the outset with regard to the great increase in our agency connections you will readily understand that we must have spent during the year a very large sum in organisation and development, and if we had followed what we consider to be the bad example of some other young companies we might this year have again carried a considerable sum to organisation account. As indicated in the chairman's speech last year, your directors do not look favourably on the policy of carrying large sums to organisation account. In our view, to do so is merely to postpone trouble to future years. These accounts must be wiped out sometime, and until they are wiped out the company will always be labouring under difficulties, and cannot, in our opinion, legitimately pay dividends. We have, accordingly, resolved to recommend the writing off out of this year's balance of the whole of the preliminary expenses and the whole of the organisation account. Our aim is to have no assets in our balance-sheet which are not realisable practically at a moment's notice. This puts the company in a strong financial position, and enables us to compete on more equal terms with the larger and wealthier corporations. No doubt the agency connections we have formed are valuable, and will become increasingly so in future years, but, in the opinion of your directors, the value of this goodwill should not be treated as an asset in the company's balance-sheet. During the year we have increased our realisable assets, in which I include cash in bank and on hand, investments, agents' balances and interest accrued from £33,411 8s. 2d. to £47,220 12s. 2d., or an increase of £13,600. Our investments, you will observe, have in this year's accounts been written down to actual market value instead of, as in past years, taken at cost. Coming now to deal with the vexed question of dividend paying, I have no doubt some of you who do not quite fully understand the present position in connection with insurance business are disappointed that we have not declared a dividend. We, as directors, are naturally anxious to pay dividends at the earliest possible moment, but we are still more anxious to safeguard ourselves and to safeguard you against the premature payment of dividends. Although we have built up a very fine business, and paid for this out of revenue, we have not as yet, in the opinion of your directors, reached the stage at which it would be desirable, in the interests of the company, to commence paying dividends. We might, as a number of other young companies have done, have carried a part of our organisation and development expenses to a capital account, which might have permitted of our paying a dividend, but we have sufficient faith in the good sense of the shareholders to feel certain they would not wish us to adopt such a course, which to our minds is only a method of paying dividends out of capital. Every one knows that all young companies must incur heavy expenses in establishing connections throughout the country, and that the full fruit of this outlay will only be realised in future years. It may with some plausibility be argued that these future years should in consequence be made to bear at least a part of the expense. We have studied the question very closely, and while we regard this method of dealing with the accounts as a very ingenious attempt at making them look better than they are, we do not feel justified in following a course which to us appears to be unsound finance. In conclusion, I would like to express on behalf of the board our appreciation of the services of the officials of the company. We know they have worked hard, and the success which the company has attained is very largely due to their whole-hearted efforts. We have the satisfaction of knowing that the principal officials are proud of the company and as confident as we are ourselves of its success. I beg to move the adoption of the report and accounts.

Mr. J. Craig Simpson seconded the motion, which was unanimously adopted.

Mr. Hugh Mayberry moved that Messrs. Charles M'Neil and Henry F. Morier be re-elected as directors of the company.

Mr. William P. Menzies seconded, and the motion was carried unanimously.

Mr. John Maxwell moved a vote of thanks to the directors and that they be paid the sum of £400 as fees for the period covered by the accounts.

Rev. Robert Barr seconded, and the motion was carried unanimously.

Messrs. Thomson, Jackson, Gourlay, and Taylor, C.A., having been re-elected as auditors, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the chairman.

NEW RHODESIA MINES, LIMITED.

The first annual meeting was held on the 31st ult. at Salisbury House, the Marquis of Winchester (chairman of the company) presiding.

The Chairman dealt fully with the accounts and said that they showed, after allowing for directors' remuneration and the usual expenses incidental to the company's business, a profit of £2,493. During the period under review the company had secured an interest on favourable terms in the Lonely Reef Gold Mining Company and the Hay Gold Mining Company, and they further subscribed for shares in the B'wana M'Kubwa Copper Mining Company on terms which should return remunerative profits in the near future when the output of copper began. He referred to the developments on the Mont d'Or property, and said that among their other interests were 442 claims, including the Winchester Blocks, which were an eastern extension of the Jumbo Mine. There had been some criticism of directors of certain companies operating in Rhodesia on account of the lack of information issued to shareholders. It would be misleading to the shareholders and the public to make statements upon insufficient development, which they might have to correct in view of the results obtained by further development, but now that this company had started vigorous development on two properties, he hoped it would be possible to issue regular monthly reports of the footage completed and the results obtained. Referring to the question of native labour, he said it was proposed that the Rhodesia Native Labour Bureau should not only supply labour to the mines, but also to the farmers. Speaking with an intimate knowledge of the labour resources of Northern Rhodesia and Nyassaland, he was certain that an efficient and ample supply of native labour could be arranged for the service of the mines and the agricultural interests in Rhodesia. If he were right, they would see in the near future expanded and continuous mineral developments in that country, and with the expansion of branch lines of railway, which it was the policy of the Chartered Company to pursue, working costs would be reduced, low-grade ore would be brought within the range of payable possibilities, and those who had hitherto made such financial sacrifices for the development of Rhodesia would reap the reward which they so justly deserved.

The report was adopted unanimously.

FREDERICK HOTELS, LIMITED.

Sir Horace G. Regnart presided at the twelfth ordinary general meeting held at the Hotel Great Central on the 31st ult., and, in moving the adoption of the report, said that hotels were susceptible to conditions which did not affect other business undertakings in anything like the same degree. This company had five hotels at seaside and health resorts, and it would be understood that fine weather was an important factor in their returns. They had suffered a good deal from the wet season of the past year, as well as from the General Election in January last. Still, in spite of these drawbacks, the board believed that the turnover for the year would have come out all right, owing to the satisfactory increase of business which began to set in, had it not been for the death of King Edward. This was the last blow to the year's business. Their hotels were for a time almost denuded of visitors, and they also lost a considerable amount of business through the cancellation of balls, banquets, and dinners. He was glad to say that in the first two months of the current financial year their turnover had increased, as compared with that of the corresponding period of last year, by some thousands of pounds. There could be no doubt that the past year had been a bad one for hotel companies. The consumption of wines and spirits, which naturally formed a large part of their turnover, was still decreasing. During the past twelve months, moreover, the prices of provisions had risen continuously. Bacon, for instance, had advanced in price as much as 33 per cent., and they would probably have to pay more for some of their commodities in the future. Rates and taxes were also constantly growing, but the board were taking the necessary steps to get the assessments reduced.

Mr. Arthur Bird seconded the motion.

Mr. Treasure expressed the hope that hotels would be given an equal chance in the future with other businesses. They were essential in a country like this, and deserved fair treatment in the matter of taxation.

The motion was unanimously agreed to.

ALGERIAN OILFIELDS.

The statutory meeting of the Algerian Oilfields, Limited, was held on the 5th inst. at Winchester House, E.C., Sir Thomas Barclay, M.P. (chairman of the company), presiding.

The Chairman said: You will have observed, on reading the report, that the amount of cash received in respect of 200,000 shares allotted does not tally exactly with the sum of £75,000 called up. Since the printing of the report the company has received the sum of £4,389 10s., making a total of £60,366. There is still £14,634 owing to the company on allotment money, but, by consent of the directors, as the company has more money in hand than it actually requires at present, one of the underwriters who still owes it is meanwhile depositee of that sum at the ordinary current rate of interest. As the underwriter in question has paid up the sum of £11,303 already, the board feel that they can safely agree to this arrangement. As regards the company's lands, the managing director, Captain Hastings Neale, who is here to-day, proceeded, immediately after obtaining the certificate to carry on business, with Mr. Lewis Hamilton, the company's consulting engineer, to Algeria. Mr. Lewis Hamilton fixed up a good deal of the preliminary work, which is now being carried out, under the instructions he gave, by Mr. Winckler, the secretary of the company, who is an engineer by profession, and Mr. Toms, the well-known driller. Mr. Lewis Hamilton is timed to reach Algeria about the end of this month, accompanied by Dr. Lugeon, the distinguished French geologist, to carry out the objects of the company. Mr. Hamilton has already engaged a staff of expert workmen in Galicia, and, in accordance with his orders, the necessary well-casings, machinery, boilers, tanks, etc., have already started for the property, and the board hope that before long they will be able to make more definite communications to you respecting the progress of the work. With regard to the titles, everything seems to be in order, subject, of course, to our solicitors being satisfied. The impression of the board is that we have a very good property. Two of your directors, Sir William Ramsay and myself, intend to pay a visit to the property at an early date, but your managing director and Mr. Lewis Hamilton have reported very fully, and so far the board are satisfied with what has been done. In conclusion, the chairman replied to certain questions he had received from Mr. Birkett, a shareholder, and stated that the estimated cost of the pipe line was £10,000, while the preceding company had closed down their pumps. The directors deemed it advisable not to commence building a refinery at present, as there was a refinery at St. Aimée, about half an hour's journey from Relizane. Their staff were very friendly with the Oran Oilfields Company, and an arrangement with that company would probably be made. It was not anticipated that water would present any difficulty. The directors expected to make a further call—probably of 5s.—about January, 1911.

All Rights reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

DENNIS STARPOOL'S WINDFALL.

I HAD always felt a sneaking regard for Dennis Starpool, ne'er-do-well and waster as he was generally considered by the respectable denizens of the provincial town in which we both lived. There was really nothing bad about Dennis except his impecuniosity, and for that I could forgive him, having, several years ago, been guilty of the same sin myself. But my fellow residents in the place were less lenient. In their eyes to be hard up was to be disreputable, and Dennis Starpool found scant favour with them accordingly.

If you had challenged any of these good people to his, or her, face, not one of them, probably, would have admitted thus conforming to the pecuniary standard of social values. In Snobchester we don't give ourselves away like that, even to our own consciences. But there the standard is, all the same; and the fact was made tolerably evident in the case of Dennis Starpool. When he first came among us, a seemingly prosperous young man, he had been generally taken up. The elect of the place pronounced him quite the sort of person to know; and, though the said elect were not by any means infallible judges, for once in a way their verdict was in accordance with the evidence. Everybody called on him. All the tradesmen were anxious to serve him. Other mercantile persons, in the shape of mothers with daughters to dispose of, betrayed a conspicuous eagerness to plant their wares upon him.

Chief among these matrons was Mrs. Pigspoke, wife of a wealthy retired draper and mother of Selina Pigspoke, the official belle of Snobchester. I say "official," because Selina's claims to pre-eminence in beauty were rather de jure than de facto. As the only daughter of the uncrowned social monarch of the town, her charms were accepted as an Article of Faith that it would have been blasphemous to dispute. Princesses, you know, are always beautiful. It is at once the natural consequence of their birth and the accepted creed of all well-disposed persons in regard to them. So Selina Pigspoke, the reigning princess of the locality, was ipso facto its reigning beauty.

The Pigspokes, father, mother, and daughter, began by being very civil to Dennis Starpool. They asked him there a good deal, and made quite a lion of him. Indeed, everybody was momentarily expecting to hear an interesting matrimonial announcement, when one day Dennis's name appeared in a local newspaper as defendant on a judgment summons in the County Court. This, of course, altered the situation considerably. From that moment Starpool stood revealed in his true colours as a disreputable. The front door of The Cedars (Pigspoke's suburban mansion), as well as the front doors of all other self-respecting residences, were closed against him. The local shopkeepers, also, at once became uncivil and disobliging. The manager of the local bank, where Dennis kept his small account, turned back his cheque for £3 10s. because there was only £2 15s. 9d. to his credit when it was presented. In short, he found himself, at one fell stroke, cast outside both the social and commercial pale of Snobchester.

For my part, however, I still remained friendly with Starpool, partly because I have always had a fellow-feeling for lame dogs, having once been a lame dog myself, and partly also because he was an amusing and entertaining companion, as well as a really good-hearted chap. It was, therefore, with a genuine sense of pleasure that I learned the news of Dennis's windfall. A handsome windfall it was, too—nothing less, indeed, than a legacy of £30,000, bequeathed to him by his rich uncle, Andrew Starpool, of Glasgow, whose whole estate was sworn at upwards of £200,000.

Dennis did not tell me this himself. He was always secretive about his private affairs. I was first made aware of it by reading the brief notice of old Andrew's will that appeared in my daily paper. I took the earliest opportunity of congratulating him.

"Dash it all! How the deuce did you know anything about it?" he ejaculated, with a certain air of vexation. "I have carefully refrained from mentioning it to a soul."

"I saw the report of your uncle's will in this morning's Mail," I explained.

"Confound it," he muttered, throwing away his half-smoked cigarette, with a gesture of annoyance. "Why the deuce can't these papers leave one's private affairs alone? What business is it of theirs whether my uncle has left me money or not, I should like to know?"

"But why should you object?" was my surprised rejoinder. "There's nothing to be ashamed of in having come into £30,000 ——"

"No. Nothing to be ashamed of, of course," he interposed. "But—well, you see what it means. I shall have to go through the whole of the beastly thing again."

"QUEER STORIES" from TRUTH. Now ready. Series XVI. Price 1s., at all booksellers, and from the Publisher, 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street. "They are one of the wonders of the world, these stories, and people are never tired of asking who writes them."—Bystander.

"What beastly thing?"

"Oh, you know. The Pigspoke thing and the rest of it. All these Snobchester rotters making up to me again, when I thought I had done with the worms—and thankful for it too," he added, with some bitterness.

"Ah, I see," I replied, beginning to get an inkling of his meaning.

"I have a little bit of self-respect about me," he continued, "and I don't want to be courted and fawned on by these meagre brutes who chucked me when they thought I was hard up."

I replied that I quite understood his feelings, and that, in the circumstances, they were only natural.

"However," he went on, brightening up a little, "none of 'em may have read that announcement in the Mail after all, or, if they have, they may not have connected it with me. I am not the only Dennis Starpool in the world, I dare say."

"I shouldn't fancy you have many namesakes," I rejoined, smiling at the idea. "Besides, you may be sure it will be in several of the other papers as well. Some one who knows you is bound to spot it."

"I hope they won't, anyhow," he answered. "And look here, Carruthers! Don't you go talking about it to anybody, will you—as a favour to me?"

"Certainly I won't, since you had rather not," I promised. "Though I fear that my silence won't make much odds one way or the other."

Before I went to bed that night I had proof that my view of the position was correct. Dining out the same evening, I happened to meet Pigspoke. When the ladies had retired he came and sat next me in the friendliest manner possible.

"By the way," he remarked casually, after a few desultory observations on the Budget, "seen our friend Starpool lately? Can't think what he's been doing with himself, keeping out of the way of all his friends."

Then I knew that Ephraim Pigspoke had seen the account of Andrew Starpool's will in that morning's papers.

A few evenings later I looked up Starpool again at his diggings. He made me cordially welcome, as he always did, and having provided me with cigarettes and whisky, proceeded to talk.

"See those?" he inquired, waving his hand in the direction of the pier-glass.

I looked, and saw a liberal assortment of cards and notes stuck all round the frame.

"Invitations," he remarked, with a grim smile. "Twenty-three of them. It is astonishing how popular I have become all of a sudden."

Then he took a little morocco-leather case from his pocket and handed it to me.

"Open it," he said.

I did so. It contained a gipsy ring set with brilliants and sapphires.

"Where did you get this?" I asked.

"From Mollington's," he answered, naming our leading local jeweller. "The fellow seems to have made up his mind that I shall want an engagement ring for Selina Pigspoke before I am much older; so he came round here with an assortment of them, and was so insistent that I had to take this to get rid of him. The price of the thing is fifty guineas. I told him he would have to wait for his money. But he appeared rather to like that than otherwise. Yet only a fortnight ago he wouldn't send back a watch he was cleaning for me until I paid him the 3s. 6d. due for the operation. It is really a wonderful metamorphosis."

He paused a moment to light a fresh cigarette. Then he inquired, with the same grim smile:

"How do you like this suit I'm wearing—eh?"

"Rather neat," I answered.

"It is polite of you to say so," he returned. "Don't think much of the cut myself. But I had to have it built. Wreford" (naming the leading tailor of the town) "positively insisted upon it. In fact, he wouldn't let me off under a couple of lounge suits, a frock coat and vest, and a new lot of dress clothes. Yet less than three weeks ago he was threatening me with a county court summons for a little matter of twenty-five bob. By the way, do you like champagne?"

"Very much; when I can get it."

"Then you must come round one evening and sample mine. I've just had my cellar replenished by that oily rascal Bayly, the wine merchant. He was round here the other morning touting for an order and simply wouldn't go until I had reluctantly consented to his sending me in four dozen of Bollinger. He, too, has undergone a strange metamorphosis. Up to a week ago he wouldn't trust me for a bottle of Bass. And there's another example of the kind even more striking. You know Stanford?"

"The manager of Pluckey's Bank?"

He nodded.

"Not long ago," he proceeded, "as I think I may have told you, he turned back my cheque because it exceeded the assets to my credit by 15s. 9d. Subsequently he insisted on the account being closed. Well, the day before yesterday he was round here, as civil as you please, inviting me to re-open it. I told him I couldn't, as, at the present moment, I hadn't any funds to pay in. But he waived that objection aside as though it wasn't worth considering, and absolutely insisted on placing £1,000, on loan, to my credit. In the end I was compelled to accept his offer in sheer self-defence."

What further revelations of the kind he might have had in store for me I cannot say, for at that moment Pigspoke was announced. The worthy man's smile was one of the most effusive I have ever beheld. His manner was cordiality itself. He seemed, as it were, to ooze blandness from every pore. At me, however, he hardly looked. His whole attention was concentrated on Starpool.

"I've just come round, my dear fellow," he explained, "to carry you off for a game of bridge. We want a fourth, and Selina is dying for a rubber."

Dennis began to make excuses. But Pigspoke simply wouldn't listen to them. In the end, my friend had to succumb. He winked at me expressively as he took his departure, with Pigspoke's arm affectionately linked through his own.

Nothing worthy of recording happened for the next month or so. But one evening somewhere about the end of that period Dennis Starpool looked me up.

"Engaged for next Friday night?" he inquired.

I replied in the negative.

"That's all right, then," he said. "The fact is, I've been asked to stand for the Town Council, and some of my supporters, of all classes, are giving a little reception in my honour at the Assembly Rooms, and I want you to come and help to support me."

"With pleasure," I replied.

"The company will be a bit mixed," he explained. "But you've too much sense to mind that, I know. Bayly, the wine merchant, and Mollington, the jeweller, and Wreford, the tailor, as well as one or two other shopkeepers, will be there. But you needn't talk to them unless you like. There'll be Pigspoke for you to hob-nob with——"

"Pigspoke?" I ejaculated. "Well, if he doesn't mind meeting your shopkeeping friends, I'm sure I needn't."

"Oh! He doesn't mind a bit. At least, he says he doesn't," replied Dennis. "Well, bye-bye, old man. Don't forget Friday."

On the day appointed I duly attended the reception at the Assembly Rooms. It happened that I had been detained overtime at the office and so I was rather late in arriving; in fact, when I got there I found the rest of the company already assembled. Dennis, who was engaged in conversation with a worthy butcher of the town, desisted for a moment to greet me.

"So glad you've come," he said, with a cordial handgrip. "I was afraid you weren't going to turn up. Order yourself something to drink, won't you? and then find a seat. We shall be getting to the speechifying in a few minutes."

FOR MOSQUITO BITES, WASP or BEE STINGS, nothing allays the irritation so quickly as SCRUBB'S AMMONIA. Price 1s. per bottle. Beware of imitations.

I deposited myself on the nearest vacant chair, which happened to be next to Pigspoke, and, having exchanged greetings with that individual, looked around me.

"Rather scratch pack—eh?" he whispered to me behi... his fat hand.

I assented with a nod. The statement was one that disputatiousness itself could not have contested.

At this moment the master of the ceremonies—an ex-mayor and a well-known local grocer—stood up, and proceeded to address the company. He didn't propose (he said) to trouble them with a long speech. They had met rather for conviviality than for speech-making. So he would content himself by proposing the health of the guest of the evening—their highly-esteemed and popular fellow townsman and future town councillor, Mr. Dennis Starpool.

The toast was drunk with enthusiasm. Then Dennis got up to return thanks.

"Gentlemen," he said, "it affords me peculiar gratification to be received by you with so much friendliness, and to know that I have regained that place in your esteem which I feared at one time that I had forfeited for ever." (Loud cries of "No, no!" from everybody, and loudest of all from Pigspoke.) "In view of these convincing marks of your favour and affection, gentlemen, I am able with a lighter heart to unbosom myself to you of a little secret that has been troubling me for some time. I don't know whether any of you happened to see an announcement in the papers to the effect that I had come into a handsome legacy under Mr. Andrew Starpool's will. For the benefit of those of you who may have seen it, I wish to say that the announcement was the silly practical joke of a facetious journalistic friend of mine. Gentlemen, Andrew Starpool is a myth; so is his will; so is my legacy. But that fact doesn't trouble me in the very least. Rich in your esteem and affection I want no other wealth. Blessed wi... such treasure I have an endowment more than equal to that of Rockefeller or Rothschild. Gentlemen, once more I thank you for the cordial way in which you have drunk my health."

He resumed his seat amid dead silence. Not the ghost of a hand-clap or a cheer was anywhere to be heard. Every man in the room sat stonily solemn; every face appeared suddenly to have grown inches longer. Longest of all, perhaps, was Pigspoke's; but the faces of M...llington, the jeweller; Wreford, the tailor; Bayly, the wine merchant; and Stanford, the bank manager, ran it very close.

It did not, of course, escape Dennis, and he rose once more to his feet, all smiles and urbanity.

"Gentlemen," he said, "some of you appear to be looking rather unhappy. There is really no occasion. If those of you who have pressed goods upon me will send round to my rooms for them to-morrow, they shall be returned. I may also add, Mr. Stanford, that I have made due provision to repay that loan of £1,000 with which you insisted on accommodating me."

It was astonishing how quickly after that the assembly melted away, and how many of the worthy townsmen, in the hurry of their departure, forgot to wish Dennis good-night. Pigspoke, for the sake of appearances, remained till last.

"Ha, ha!" he cackled, with a transparent affectation of amusement. "You have given those time-serving bounders a very neat lesson, my dear Starpool."

"I hope so," said Dennis, blandly. "It was my intention to prove what worms these Snobchester rotters could be if they gave their minds to it. And I think I have proved it pretty effectually. By the way, Mr. Pigspoke, in the somewhat improbable event of my calling again at the Cedars, your butler needn't trouble to say 'Not at home' to me. He has only to slam the door in my face. I shall quite understand."

---

Charing Cross Hospital, W.C., Convalescent Home, Limpsfield, dependent on £15,000 a year from voluntary sources. Contributions urgently solicited.

BOOKS.

THE observation of a German in Miss Wylie's excellent "My German Year" (1) recalls a chestnut which expresses precisely the attitude of a British tourist in every country and on every continent. An Englishman, the morning after his arrival on a first visit to Paris, exclaimed indignantly to his compatriot, "Do you know they call bread here 'pain'?" "Why not? Why shouldn't they call it 'pain' as justifiably as you call it 'bread'?" "Why not? Why not? Because, man, it is bread." Everything English is archetypal. What is "un-English"—this arrogant adjective itself is characteristic—is either unnatural, wrong, or low. Miss Wylie's German friend said to her, "A German, noting in England the difference between the manners of that country and his own, merely remarks that English manners are British. An Englishman in Germany, noting the difference between the manners of that country and his own, pronounces our manners bad." Taking Swift's definition of good manners, which is perhaps as adequate as any, those of the Germans in Miss Wylie's experience are indisputably better than ours. "Good manners," says the dean, "is the art of making those people easy with whom we converse. Whoever makes the fewest persons uneasy is the best bred in the company." The manners of English young men especially (again in Miss Wylie's experience) are perhaps the worst in the world, her account of them reminding me of the advice I read recently in some French book of a French father to his son who was about to settle in England: "Tu es bête et tu n'es pas beau. Sois insolent, c'est ta seul chance." On the other hand, Miss Wylie found even the much-maligned Prussian chivalrous in his manners, while in South Germany generally and particularly in Baden and especially in Karlsruhe, where she spent her German year, she found the manners of the people perfect—and that for two reasons. In the first place, from their natural kindliness, since good-nature is the tap-root of good manners; and, in the second place, from their freedom from affectation, which is the tap-root of most vulgarity.

In England, as Max O'Rell said, "everyone is equal to his superior and superior to his equal," and therefore here necessarily pretension and affectation help to spoil our manners; but in Germany, where caste is almost as rigid as in India, no one can even pretend to be equal to his superior and superior to his equal. Everyone, therefore, is free to live his own life—and not another's. Hence there is neither the extravagance of pretension nor the uncomfortableness of affectation. No one is ashamed of being homely or of being poor, since all in each cast-iron set are equally poor and equally homely. In this way, but in this way only, Germany still is what it used to be in the conception of the harassed British householder—a country in which to economise. You can there diminish your denominator, if you cannot increase your numerator, without any loss of self-respect or the respect of your neighbours. For the rest, as a friend of Miss Wylie's who came to Karlsruhe to economise found out to her cost, everything, owing at once to taxation and to protection, is frightfully dear. "Everything," she complained piteously to Miss Wylie, "is so frightfully dear! Meat is appalling. For a moderately good piece I have to pay twice as much as I would in England. Bread is twice as expensive, butter twice as expensive, tea three times as expensive—the only thing one can get cheaply is home-grown fruit, and one can't

---

(1) "My German Year." By I. A. R. Wylie. With Twenty Illustrations. (London: Mills and Boon Limited. 10s. 6d. net.)

(2) "The Life of Marie Amélie." Last Queen of the French. 1782-1866. By C. C. Dyson. With Photogravure Portrait and Twenty-four other Portraits and Illustrations. (London: John Long, Limited. 12s. 6d. net.)

(3) "The Native States of India." By Sir William Lee-Warner, K.C.S.I. (London: Macmillan and Co. 10s. net.)

(4) "Charles Philip Yorke, Fourth Earl of Hardwicke, Vice-Admiral, R.N." By his daughter, the Lady Biddulph of Ledbury. With Portraits. (London: Smith, Elder and Co. 7s. 6d. net.)

(5) "For the Soul of a Witch." By J. W. Brodie-Innes. (London: Rebman, Limited. 6s.)

(6) "The Affair of the Envelope." By Eirene Wigram. (London: Methuen and Co. 6s.)

live on that all day." This, however, says Miss Wylie, is an exaggeration, since everything is little more than a third more expensive than in England; but, she adds, "it is no exaggeration to say that an English person is only half as rich here as in his own land." If, however, you hold with the epigram of Motley, "Give us the luxuries of life, and we will dispense with its necessities," and if you hold with the German that the real luxuries of life are the education and the enjoyment of the mind, then there is no place like Germany. "Food, clothing, and lodging are preposterous," said a Polish student to Miss Wylie, "but you can get the finest education in the world in any branch you like for next to nothing." While an English friend once pathetically observed to her, "If we were all soul and mind, what a lovely cheap place Germany would be!" Bishop Creighton somewhere says that an Englishman values learning ad hoc, so to say, only as a means to a particular end, to a prize or a profession; but in Germany the hunger for learning itself, says Miss Wylie, "is felt everywhere and shows itself everywhere, and it must be said to the credit of those in power that everything is done to satisfy the demand." Here is where Germany is really formidable, either as a commercial or as a political rival—through her continual cultivation of the mind and coveteous acquisition of knowledge. Miss Wylie, noticing the absence of officers from the streets of Karlsruhe, a town in which five thousand men and two hundred officers are permanently quartered, asked a young lieutenant what he did all day, and got an answer that would astonish and disgust a British subaltern. All day from 6.30 in the morning till eight at night, with two intervals, at one and at five, he is hard at work, drilling and marching the troops and lecturing the recruits, and, as he had at the same time to prepare for a stiff examination, he could not reckon upon more than four or five hours' sleep at night. But what most amazed Miss Wylie was, not the amount of his work, but his delight in it. As for the commercial rivalry of Germany and her seven-leagued-boots progress as compared with ours, Miss Wylie explains it by an analogy which a big Staffordshire manufacturer not so long since used in speaking on the subject to me. He said German commercial progress is the growth of a boy before he attains to mature manhood, which will cease when he has reached the point which England has already reached, of maturity.

"In various ways," writes Miss Wylie, "the question which the German asks is, 'Why do you worry so? Are you grown so weak that you cannot watch the progress of another nation without panic? We do not want a war with you. We want to develop; we have the right to develop. Leave us in peace and we will leave you in peace.' It is the cry of youth and national vitality seeking an outlet, and that it rings unpleasantly in our elder years is almost inevitable."

The one criticism I should venture to make upon this admirable and opportune book is that Miss Wylie, taking Karlsruhe for Germany, so ignores the immense and amazing commercial progress of the country as to maintain that the Germans are not at all a commercial people!

In reading Miss Dyson's scrappily written but interesting "The Life of Marie Amélie" (2) you realise the corrupting power of gold even with kings.

"Quid non mortalia pectora cogis Auri sacra fames?"

if, indeed, Miss Dyson's extreme reverence for royalty will admit that the hearts of kings are mortal. Here are her hero and heroine, King Louis Philippe and Queen Marie Amélie, whom Talleyrand called "the greatest lady in Europe," receiving and showing every civility to the infamous mistress of the Prince de Condé (Mme. de Feuchars, née Sophy Dawes, an English fisherman's daughter), because she had induced the Prince, before she poisoned him, to leave all his fortune to their fourth son, the Duc d'Aumale! Louis Philippe hushed up the matter, giving out that the Prince had committed suicide, though there was no doubt at all of his having been murdered by his mistress. "She had wearied the Prince de Condé, and knew he contemplated leaving France. Had he managed to escape, both she and Louis Philippe knew that the fortune would go to the little Duc de Bordeaux." If the effect of the Princess Caroline Murat's "Memories," noticed last week, is to convince you, contrary to its intention, that France was well rid of the Buonapartes, the effect of Miss Dyson's book is—also contrary to her intention—to convince you that the country was well rid of the Bourbons. Miss Dyson's volume is of the kind—and very good of its kind—of which the reading public never seems to tire, and that could not be better described than by borrowing the title of a primer of my childhood—history without tears.

You have only to read the preface of the new edition of Sir William Lee-Warner's "The Native States of India" (3) to realise the necessity of such a work for the clearing of the confused and conflicting views even amongst experts of the relations of the Native Indian States to the British Government. No doubt much of the confusion and conflict of ideas amongst the multitude of experts cited by Sir William is due to the wise indefiniteness in which these relations have been left. There are dangers, as Sir William acknowledges, in inconvenient precision: "There is no question that there is a paramount power in the British Crown, but perhaps its extent is wisely left undefined. There is subordination in the Native States, but perhaps it is better understood and not explained." So far as history, custom, treaties, and precedent have defined the relations to the paramount power of no less than seven hundred Native States Sir William defines them in this admirable and indispensable volume.

Lady Biddulph has done well what was well worth doing in compiling chiefly from interesting letters her memoir of her gallant father the "Fourth Earl of Hardwicke" (4). Besides a stirring record of young Yorke's naval services you get interesting glimpses of historical personages—naval, military, political, and literary, including Nelson, Wellington, Disraeli, Peel, Palmerston, Byron, and Lady Hester Stanhope. It is a shock, by the way, to find Byron's "Maid of Athens" described in words that rather recall Master Bailey's compliment to Mrs. Gamp: "There's the remains of a fine woman about you, Sairah; but rayther too much crumb." It would be strange if the twentieth century should witness a reversion to the belief in demonology and witchcraft, such as is suggested by Mr. Brodie Innes's story "For the Soul of a Witch" (5). Whatever you may think of Mr. Brodie Innes's theory of demoniacal possession, at least you will find the romance which hinges upon it of breathless interest. You can hardly see the wood for the trees in Miss Wigram's Turkish story, "The Affair of the Envelope" (6), whose plot turns upon the betrayal of the terms of a private treaty about to be made with the Sultan, and whose interest is centred in the contrast between the characters of two girls. This contrast is well conceived and elaborated, while the scenes and stirring incidents of the story are excellently described.

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

---

Japan's formal annexation of Korea gives exceptional interest to the announcement of a new book by Miss E. G. Kemp (author of "The Face of China"), which will shortly be published by Messrs. Chatto and Windus. Miss Kemp's previous work showed that she is a courageous lady who can see a country with the keen eye of an expert traveller, and the forthcoming volume, entitled "The Face of Manchuria, Korea, and Russian Turkestan," is the record of recent journeys in which the author has much to say of the conditions prevailing in the three districts whose future is now offering so much food for conjecture.

"Rambles in Surrey" (Methuen, 6s. net) is a delightful book which will persuade many readers to follow in the footsteps of the author, the Rev. Dr. Cox. Those who do so will see to the best advantage a county peculiarly rich in the beauty and variety of its scenery, and well endowed with historical associations and architectural treasures. It is, indeed, only the pedestrian who can enjoy fully the charms of the country, and in this "unconventional record" of his walks in Surrey Dr. Cox proves himself a very pleasant and interesting guide. Besides being an attractive topographical writer, Dr. Cox is a learned antiquary and ecclesiologist, and in his descriptions of old churches he deals vigorously with the enormities sometimes perpetrated in the process of so-called "restoration." "Rambles in Surrey" has a number of good illustrations, and is furnished with a map. Covering the same ground, though on different lines, is another volume on Surrey from the pen of Dr. Cox, which has just been issued (price 2s. 6d. net) in Messrs. Methuen's well-known series of Little Guides.

THE CARLTON HOTEL, RESTAURANT, AND GRILL ROOM, Pall Mall. Gerrard 7826. "Perfect from the point of view of Comfort, Situation, and Decoration."—The Times. Unrivalled cuisine.

It will interest readers of Mr. Maurice Hewlett's fine novel, "Open Country," to know that the leading characters appear again in his new story, "Rest Harrow," which will be published by Messrs. Macmillan and Company next week. "Rest Harrow" continues the history of Sanchia Percival, showing how she came through her troubles to peace and happiness, and what share in this result was due to John Senhouse, the unconquerable idealist. A week later the same publishers will issue "Hearts and Coronets," by Mrs. Wilson Fox, a book which may be expected to appeal especially to people who dislike "problem" novels, but enjoy a bright and amusing story with a good plot.

The re-issue of Mr. Walter Crane's "Buckle My Shoe Picture Book" (Lane, price 4s. 6d.), appears opportunely to serve as a gift which will delight the child returning to school after the holidays. The book comprises three parts, "One, Two, Buckle My Shoe," "A Gaping-Wide-Mouth-Waddling Frog," and "My Mother," and in addition to the original coloured illustrations each part has a new cover and end-papers specially designed by Mr. Crane for this re-issue.

Mr. L. P. Jacks, the editor of the Hibbert Journal, is preparing a volume of essays, which will be published this autumn by Messrs. Williams and Norgate under the title "The Alchemy of Thought and Other Essays." It will differ materially in scope from the previous volume by the same pen, "Mad Shepherds," which Messrs. Williams and Norgate issued a few months ago.

Messrs. Hurst and Blackett will publish immediately a new novel entitled "Tony's Luck," by Claude Bray. The scene of the story is laid in South Africa and England, and in the earlier chapters there are some pictures of life in the Transvaal.

The shafts of a cynical wit are aimed at many well-known personalities in a little shilling book by "E. D. Ward," entitled "Sir Pulteney: A Fantasy," which Messrs. Methuen have just published. The chapters describing the discussion in the press and in Parliament—the Editor of Truth "started the ball rolling" by "a few paragraphs in his steeliest manner"—over the remarkable scheme of the Hotel Great Emprise are highly amusing, and the interviews of the Official Dissuader with the visitors are full of good things. It is understood that "E. D. Ward" is a pseudonym, but, whoever the author may be, he is to be congratulated upon the production of a most entertaining piece of satire.

"The Wonders of the World" is the title of a new serial work which will be issued in sevenpenny fortnightly parts by Messrs. Hutchinson and Co. Among the writers of the work, which has been over four years in preparation, are some leading travellers and authors, and there will be upwards of 1,000 illustrations, reproduced from photographs.

The Largest Annuities are paid by the Sun Life of Canada, 93, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C. Special consideration where the health is impaired.

ART.

While there is no doubt that many painters might with advantage become photographers, it does not necessarily follow that photographers should become painters. Yet such is the aim, more or less clearly expressed, of the London Salon of Photography now exhibiting at the Fine Arts Gallery, and the very excellence of its exhibits tends to the confusion of those who would all be poets if they could only find the words.

The average visitor indeed may well point to the wonderful feats of the camera as here displayed, and see therein the meeting of art and photography on even terms. It is, moreover, quite true that the London Salon of Photography might this year advantageously compare with the average picture show. But this, I take it, depends less upon the artistic capacity of the photograph than upon the modern view of picture-painting. The new and skilful processes of photography tend more and more to lend to the camera that semblance of subjectivity which applies, say, to the organ, with all its intricacy of stops and keyboards; modern painting, on the other hand, in its craze for realism, tends to become more and more objective. Little wonder then if the proper functions of both be sometimes mistaken and confused. Yet it is after all the aim of art not merely to record but to convey the impression produced by certain objects on the beholder's mind. In so far as the modern picture fails to do this, so far is photography similar to art. But the resemblance is a negative one, and, as I have before pointed out, the very excellence of the photographic simulations tends further to the confusion of its true function.

The greatest homage paid by photography to art is, I suppose, in its tendency to imitate less nature herself than the artist's record of nature. The brothers Hofmeister, from Hamburg, have converted cypresses and a white church into an eminently successful emulation of the all-popular Böcklin; a modern German tendency is also shown by Mr. Liebreich in "The Magic Flame," wherein a recumbent nude concentrates a great soul upon a lamp. Indeed, the number of German exhibits in the Salon points to the enthusiasm with which Germany has adopted photography, and is another example of that meretricious aspect of German art which comes from its readiness to assimilate anything provided only it be new. Imitation finds another votary in Mr. Blake, whose "Jenner Statue" is based entirely upon Mr. Paterson; Mr. Mills' "In the West Country" is eminently suggestive of Harpignies, and Mr. Frederick Evans' "Chateau D'O" of Mr. Dod Withers.

I note with interest the progress of the night or twilight picture. The photographer has discovered in the gloaming a useful ally against the George Washington-like propensity of the camera to say exactly what it saw. Further, the various keys in which the camera can be pitched—the sharp key, for instance, of Mr. Hoppe and Mr. Cadby, and the flat key of Mr. C. Wille in his portrait of "C. Honroth, Esq"—lend much more variety to it than was formerly the case. So far these variations savour somewhat of tricks, the camera having yet to learn to conceal its prowess. Another trick—in ten years' time it may become an art—is the use of patterned stuffs and dresses in the photographs, thereby relieving the tedium of the all too faithful camera, with its passion for unnecessary folds and shadows.

Perhaps the best photograph in the exhibition is Mr. Arthur Marshall's "The Scotch House Veere," after Mr. Muirhead Bone. The white-faced house with its deep-set eyes is a really speaking picture, and Mr. Marshall has succeeded in conveying to the visitor a feeling which he may or may not have felt. For sheer humour and ugliness "The Idol" must be awarded the first place, the elephant legs and inviting grin of a very small baby making the photograph only less happy than its title.

MUSIC.

MR. BEECHAM AND ENGLISH OPERA.

MR. BEECHAM is well entitled to congratulate himself, as he does in a recent communication to the press, on the success of his late season at His Majesty's, and it is particularly pleasing to note his remarks regarding the British members of his company:—

> One still hears a great deal said in praise of foreign artists in a tone that is meant to imply that an artist to be in the front rank must necessarily be of foreign birth, or if not, then at least of foreign extraction. I do not agree with that at all. I have maintained from the beginning, and I maintain still, that the day has long gone by for talking of British artists in a semi-apologetic tone because they happen to be British born. Apart from the personnel of the company, which is very capable, I contend that there are in the United Kingdom a great number of men and women who possess remarkable talent, and I use the word talent in its broadest sense.

It is the more pleasant to find Mr. Beecham speaking thus seeing that it was widely reported while his season was in progress that he had come to just the opposite conclusion, and had formed, after practical experience, a very poor opinion of native talent. Seeing how well his native artists had served him, many were surprised to hear this at the time, and it is now evident that the report was quite erroneous.

What he goes on to say as to the lack of training facilities open to British operatic artists stands in need of some slight qualification. Whereas on the Continent (runs the argument) a young artist learns his business in the provinces, here it is a case of appearing either straightway in London side by side with foreign artists who have had years and years of training and experience, or not at all. There is, in point of fact, an alternative, and this is to join one or other of the provincial touring companies, which afford the most excellent training ground. Curiously enough, however, the average British aspirant fights shy of adopting this course. Ask Mr. Manners, for instance, and you will learn that he has always had the greatest difficulty in getting recruits for his companies. He offers surprisingly good salaries and unrivalled opportunities as regards acquiring experience, but he cannot get the material he needs. One and all want to begin at Covent Garden. Doubtless, however, this condition of things would cure itself in time. Let a permanent home of English opera be established in London, and aspirants would soon see the advantage of going through the mill in the provinces in order to get engagements.

To tell the truth, it is not the performances which present the chief difficulty in the case of English opera at present, but the public. Mr. Beecham has shown that, even with the material already available, performances of the highest excellence can be provided. No better performances than some of those witnessed at His Majesty's last summer with practically all British casts need be wanted by any one. But to what extent did the public respond? That is the crux of the problem, and Mr. Beecham is silent on this point. Here, however, it is not a case of training schools, but of simply pegging away, and Mr. Beecham has shown that he is the man to do it. His pluck and perseverance are, indeed, beyond all praise.

October 1 will see him inaugurating yet another season, to run three months this time, in the course of which he announces once again a quite extraordinary list of works, new and old. So far as the former are concerned, I have never been sure that this policy of novelties, in which Mr. Beecham apparently believes so strongly, is quite the right one in the present condition of affairs. It is only the highly cultivated few that care for novelties, whereas it is the uncultivated many whom it is chiefly desirable to get at. However, a large number of standard and popular works figure in Mr. Beecham's latest prospectus along with those less familiar, while it is also satisfactory to note that the artists are a very strong list, including many of the highest distinction.

---

What promised to be the most interesting novelty at the Promenade Concerts last week—to wit, Mr. Vaughan Williams's "Fantasia on English Folk Songs"—proved, in fact, something of a disappointment. Mr. Vaughan Williams, whose early works gave such promise, seems to be tending, as time runs on, more and more to lose himself in the pursuit of the obscure and unattainable. His music gets more and more vague and indefinite in character. The very themes of this fantasia are so befogged by their treatment that it is a task of difficulty to disentangle them, and the net impression left by the work is that of a groping after effects which never come off. Mr. Arnold Bax's tone poem, "In the Faery Hills," also heard last week, has something of the same quality of excessive complexity, but it contains, none the less, some very delicate and imaginative scoring, and must certainly be reckoned a more successful essay.

The season of Italian opera which began at the Kingsway Theatre last week must be reckoned a somewhat daring venture, seeing that all the artists are totally unknown in London, but it is pleasant to be able to say that they are none the less quite good. "Il Barbiere" was the work chosen for the opening night, and a rollicking performance was provided. This evening (Wednesday) Auber's "Fra Diavolo," which has not been heard in London, I think, since it was given at Covent Garden with Bispham as the travelling Englishman, is promised. Signor de Macchi, who conducts very energetically, is at the head of the undertaking.

Reports are current again as to changes of importance in regard to opera in Berlin. It is stated that the municipality has undertaken to purchase the Royal Opera House, which will be used in future for municipal purposes, and that a new opera house is to be erected forthwith in the neighbourhood of the Thiergarten. I hear, however, from Berlin that though negotiations are in progress between the Crown and the municipality nothing definite has yet been decided. Berliners have for many years past been dissatisfied with their principal opera house, which is unworthy, alike internally and externally, of the capital of Germany. They are also dissatisfied with its direction by reason of the unprogressive policy which is favoured—but that is another story. Meanwhile the project for erecting a handsome new opera house on the Kurfürstendamm with Angelo Neumann as its director seems to have struck an obstacle in the shape of the police, who have condemned the plans of the proposed building, and as it seems to be a question of site, and land is very dear in that part of Berlin, there appears to be some doubt as to whether the scheme will now go through at all.

Another rumour from Berlin is to the effect that Dr. Strauss is seeking relief from his position as chief musical director at the Hof Oper. The Kaiser may hold views of his own as to Strauss's music, but he thoroughly appreciates the value attaching to his name as one of the conductors of the opera house, and it is easy to understand that he will not be too willing to allow him to depart. Both Kaiser and composer are entitled to respect in this matter. The Emperor does not understand Strauss's music, and has the courage to say so, but at the same time he keeps him attached to the Royal Opera. Strauss, on the other hand, while doubtless regretting that his music does not please the Kaiser, refuses to abate in the slightest degree those audacities which his Majesty reprobates. It is a situation doing honour to both, for each is true to himself. But I wonder if the Kaiser with his historical sense ever stops to consider on which side the laugh will be a hundred years hence.

TRUTH CAUTIONARY LIST for 1910, 128 pages bound in cloth, price 1s. net, by post 1s. 2d., is now ready, and may be obtained from all booksellers and railway bookstalls.

THE THEATRES.

"King Henry VIII.," at His Majesty's.

THE autumn season opened brilliantly last week with Sir Herbert Tree's magnificent production of "Henry VIII." The play itself with its questionable authorship and events extending over so many years is not a remarkable one, but it lends itself to pageantry, and I question whether a more beautiful series of scenes has ever been put upon any stage. Mr. Percy Macquoid, Mr. Louis Parker, and Sir Herbert Tree have made a splendid trio in conjuring up old Windsor, Westminster, Hampton Court, and London, and Mr. Joseph Harker's scenery is a triumph. So much for the spectacle part of the business, and the spectacle is one which you should see, even if you are occasionally bored with some of the rest. The play has, of course, poignant and dramatic moments in it, because it shows the downfall of three great characters. To me, though, each one of those characters took such a weary time in falling that I got tired. Wolsey, for instance, when he bids "Farewell! a long farewell to all my greatness," takes so long over doing it that I fancied his greatness would never go. Of course, this is primarily our premier dramatist's fault. Once he got launched on a long and fine speech he never minded hanging up the action of his play indefinitely. I do not think that Wolsey is by any means one of Sir Herbert's best parts, but he makes you feel the power of the man, and he is a fine stately figure in his splendid robes. The downfall of poor Queen Katharine is another tragedy, though Miss Vanbrugh, alas, cannot quite rise to the tragic heights which the trial scene demands. It needs a really great actress to express the wrath and indignation of the wronged and broken-hearted woman, and Miss Vanbrugh, though effective, fell short of the requirements. She was very pathetic later when dying at Kimbolton, but oh, the length of it! Interminable death scenes on the stage are very trying. The third tragedy is that of the Duke of Buckingham. The beautiful speech before he goes off to execution is one of the noble things in the play. Mr. Forbes Robertson's delivery of it in Sir Henry Irving's production lingers with me as one of the finest things in the way of stage elocution that I have ever heard, and here Mr. Ainley gives it excellent value. His handsome presence and touchingly sympathetic voice make you feel that Buckingham's exit anyway is not one whit too long. Mr. Bourchier in his magnificent dresses makes a wonderful picture. He is the comedian of the piece, and it bears a little comedy. He is quite Holbeinesque, though at times you feel as though he ought to have a head at each end and figure as the king on a pack of cards! He romps like a big boy at the banquet at Wolsey's palace, and the prelate must have found him rather heavy in hand, while his wooing of pretty and dainty little Anne Bullen (Miss Laura Cowie) is very Elizabethan—or should I say Tudor—in its directness. Altogether the play is excellently cast, for in this matter, as in all others, no pains have been spared, but it is as a splendid pageant it will score, and the final scene—the coronation of Anne Bullen—is one of the most imposing of all. I only hope that this remarkable series of Shakespearean productions pays Sir Herbert Tree adequately for the colossal labour they must involve.

"The Crisis," at the New.

M. Rudolf Besier's adaptation of Pierre Berton's "La Rencontre" is a play with a situation. You do not care very much about any of the characters in it, and I personally do not care very much about the situation. Of course, it is very strong and very French, but it is distinctly disagreeable. Miss Millard plays the part of an attractive young widow who has had a very unhappy married life. Mr. Norman McKinnel is a brilliant young advocate with Miss Sarah Brooke as his rather flighty wife. He takes up an all-important law case for Miss Millard, and falls in love with her. What is more, he makes ardent love to her when she is staying in his house. She, however, will not listen to him. So far so good, but then comes the crisis. Mr. McKinnel goes to Paris one evening, and Miss Millard, coming down late to fetch a book, sees the wife admit a lover and take him to her room. Horrified and unnerved by what she has seen, she is wondering what to do when Mr. McKinnel returns unexpectedly. After a brief scene, in which he tells the sympathetic Miss Millard that his political career has been ruined, he says he will now go to his wife. Miss Millard, knowing that he is not at all wanted there, is confronted with the terrible problem of how to prevent him going. The only course open to her is a desperate one, but she takes it. Come to me, she says, and let us have our hour! He comes, and the curtain falls on these two sinners going off right, just as the other two have gone off left. Fourteen days later you find Miss Sarah Brooke accusing Miss Millard of being in love with her husband, and Miss Millard explains how she saved the situation when Miss Brooke was tripping. Well, there is no very happy ending to this, but after a big scene between the two women Miss Millard goes away, and husband and wife are left to live happily ever after! This is how "The Crisis" was played when I saw it, but report has reached me that a fourth act is now being played; but turn the story round as you will, however, you cannot make it anything but disagreeable and unnatural.

"Nobody's Daughter," at Wyndham's.

Mr. Gerald du Maurier has made a brilliant start in management with Mr. Frank Curzon. I do not mean by this that "George Paston's" "Nobody's Daughter" is a masterpiece, though it is thoroughly interesting and clever. It is, however, admirably acted, beautifully produced, and it affords Mr. du Maurier himself a chance of showing what he can do outside those semi-criminal types with which of late he has rather surfeited us. To me he is the nearest approach to a genius that we have on our stage at the present time. There is little he could not do if he wished. He is our most promising actor, and there is no position he might not take. In "Nobody's Daughter" his performance is a beautiful one. His Mr. Frampton is the head of a pottery works who suddenly discovers that a charming girl of nineteen, who has been brought to his house as the ward of his wife and an old friend, Colonel Torrens, is really the child of these two. A cock-and-bull story has been told him about a tea planter who died in Ceylon and left the child destitute, and he has believed it. When, however, he hears the girl lamenting that she has no relations, he light-heartedly says that he will gratify this "morbid desire" for relatives, and sets to work to make inquiries, with the result that he hits on the truth, and is heartbroken. Why Honora May is brought to his house is because she has fallen in love with a young mechanic whom she has met at the cottage where she has been brought up by a Calvinistic old woman. This old woman insists that the girl who is a lady shall see something of high life before she marries into low life. We fully expect Honora to have her head turned and throw over her lowly mechanic, but she remains faithful to him. I wish Mr. Marsh Allen's sense of the artistic fitness of things would prompt him to dress this part more correctly. Honora tells him she loves him in spite of his ready-made ties, badly cropped hair, and ill-fitting coats, when, as a matter of fact, hair, tie, and coat look like Bond Street. The great scene in the play is, of course, Mr. du Maurier's discovery that friend and wife have alike deceived him. His outburst of wrath and grief is finely done, and charmingly tender, too, is his attitude to the girl in whom he sees just the child he would have wished in his own childless marriage. Mr. Sydney Valentine has not very much to do as the Colonel and father, but Miss Braithwaite is very charming as the mother, who has feared to risk her husband's love by telling him the truth. All the minor parts are capitally fitted. Miss Henrietta Watson, for instance, is delightful as the tolerant Mrs. Torrens, Mr. Leon Quartermaine is good as a young aristocrat who fails to win the girl from her allegiance to her mechanic, and Miss Mary Rorke gives a beautiful performance as the dour, faithful old nurse. Finally, Miss Rosalie Toller has never before done anything half as good as the frank, high-spirited girl. It is a good part, and it has given her a chance of which she has taken full advantage.

"The Follies," at the Apollo.

The Follies have returned to the Apollo, and London is a brighter and better place in consequence. The warmth of their reception the other evening showed what a firm hold they have taken of the affections of the public. It does not seem many years since music-hall audiences failed to appreciate them when they gave a turn at the Tivoli, but now they can pack a large theatre during the greater part of a year. Pélissier's Potted Pageant is the most ambitious item on the programme, but I prefer The Follies when they are less ambitious—when Mr. Lewis Sydney, for example, is telling anecdotes, when Mr. Morris Harvey is giving imitations, or when Mr. Pelissier himself, with certain of the others, are giving Gastronomic Quartettes. The best item, though, in the programme this season is "A Voice Trial." I cannot describe this; it must be seen. It is a wonderful satire on the queer characters who turn up at voice trials seeking engagements, and I have seldom seen anything funnier.

SPORT.

RACING NOTES.

A MEETING of the Jockey Club will be held at Newmarket on the 28th, and it would be satisfactory to learn that the Stewards intend to propose certain reforms which are much needed, and to which there would not be any serious opposition. The increasing practice of racing unnamed animals ought to be prohibited. No two-year-old should be eligible for entry in any race whatever until it has received a name. The custom of publishing the weights for handicaps months before the races are run should be stopped. Weights ought not to appear until six weeks (at the very farthest) before the day of the race. Then there should be an end of the chaotic hugger-mugger which now prevails in the matter of nomination days. The Derby and Oaks close in July, the St. Leger in August, and the Two Thousand and the One Thousand at the end of October. It would be very much more convenient for owners if the Derby, the Oaks, and the St. Leger were to close on the Tuesday after Doncaster, and then there would be an end to the practice of giving £300 or £400 out of each race for the nominator of the winner, which is, of course, a bait to attract the public breeders. It is obviously desirable that the great three-year-old races should not close until the yearling sales of the season are over. Then there ought to be an end of the idiotic laxity which permits a horse to claim breeding allowances although it may have won £10,000 or £20,000 in stakes. There is an absolutely abysmal anility in this arrangement. A horse which has won £1,000 should be allowed only half the allowance which was claimed for it, and the winner of £2,000 ought not to be entitled to any allowance. These excellent and most rational conditions were introduced into the principal weight-for-age stakes at Sandown Park some years ago with most salutary results. Handicaps for two-year-olds should be permitted to commence in Goodwood week, instead of their being prohibited until September 1. Half of the de jure weight for age races for three-year-olds are de facto handicaps, owing to elaborate arrangements of penalties and allowances. For some years past the legislative activities of members of the Jockey Club have been limited to an everlasting tinkering at the rules of racing, or changes have been carried out, with the hearty approbation of most of the sporting papers, which have been revoked a year or two later amidst the clamorous applause of the same journals, which spin round in their opinions, in obsequious obedience to Jockey Club caprices, like weathercocks in a gale. As to finding any judicious criticism of Jockey Club doings in those journals you might as well expect a sound opinion from a bell wether or a bull-dog.

The Grand Prix de Paris, which closes next Tuesday, has pecuniary conditions which make the great English races appear most beggarly. There is £12,000 of added money, the sweepstakes also going to the winner, and a subscriber can "get out" for £4 by declaring forfeit by May 2, 1912. The second horse receives £1,200, and the third gets £720.

It will be a novelty to see a Russian horse running for the St. Leger. Prince Lubomirski's Ksiaze Pan, by Sac à Papier out of Tempete, was sent to England after winning the Baden Grand Prize on August 27. This race was regarded as a certainty for either Fervor or Carlopolis, but the Russian colt defeated them both. It is thought, however, that Carlopolis (who was giving 9 lb.) would have won if he had run straight. Ksiaze Pan was also entered for the Derby.

Seaforth did not run at Derby, and he will not be seen out at Manchester. Mr. McCalmont's colt is in reserve for the Middle Park Plate, and a week later he is left in for the Great Sapling Plate of £1,000 at Sandown Park, which is his last engagement for this season.

After the exciting struggle between Lemberg and Neil Gow for the Eclipse Stakes it appeared as if the St. Leger would be one of the most interesting races ever seen in England. Even if only the Sandown Park pair were to run it would be a great race, and there were the possibilities of Greenback and Charles O'Malley, to say nothing of Rosedrop and Winkipop. At Aintree a few days later Swynford emerged as a possible St. Leger

THE
NORTH BRITISH & MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO.
Incorporated by Royal Charter in the year 1809.
ONE HUNDRED YEARS' RECORD
During the past one hundred years the North British and Mercantile Insurance Company has built up and maintained a world-wide reputation for promptitude and liberality in dealing with all claims made under its policies. Since its establishment in 1809 the total claims paid by the Company have
EXCEEDED 60 MILLION POUNDS
FIRE, LIFE, ANNUITIES, MARINE, BURGLARY, ACCIDENTS.
Funds Nearly £20,000,000. Annual Income, £4,500,000.
Claims Paid Exceed £60,000,000.
CHIEF OFFICES:
LONDON: 61, Threadneedle St. EDINBURGH: 64, Princes St.

winner, and seldom had the race appeared more interesting. However, as so often happens under such circumstances, the field soon commenced to crumble away. First Greenback was announced to be coughing, then Neil Gow fell lame, and it was found expedient to scratch him, and a few days later Charles O'Malley was also withdrawn from the race. The disappearance of Mr. Cunliffe's horse was not unexpected, as he had unaccountably missed more than one valuable race which appeared to be pretty well at his mercy, but it was a serious loss, as his victory in the Ascot Vase had proved him to be a genuine stayer. Swynford won over the Swinley course at Ascot, which is a very fair test of stamina. Greenback had also stayed well at Ascot, where he won the Prince of Wales Stakes. I gave a plumper for Rosedrop for the Oaks, and many people were so strongly impressed by her Epsom performance that they came to the conclusion that the story of 1873 would be repeated, and that if the stable companions met at Doncaster the Oaks winner would defeat the Derby winner. Whatever may be the result of to-day's race I am disposed to think that the winner is much favoured in the absence of Nuage from the field. If the Grand Prix winner had been engaged at Doncaster he would have beaten all the English lot, and if all goes well with Nuage he will assuredly win next year's Ascot Cup if he is sent to England for that race.

Neil Gow is in light work again, and I hear that hopes are entertained that he may be able to fulfil his engagement in the Jockey Club Stakes on the 29th. In this race Neil Gow will have to carry 9 st. 3 lb., while Lemberg's weight will be 9 st. 6 lb. If Charles O'Malley goes to the post he will carry 8 st. 3 lb., and Rochester's weight will be 8 st. 7 lb. It is very remarkable, and by no means satisfactory, that the list of acceptances for this rich race does not include a single four-year-old of respectable class. Bayardo, who was entitled to a 6 lb. allowance, was withdrawn in March, 1908, less than three months before his brilliant debut in the New Stakes at Ascot. Neil Gow has another engagement at Newmarket four days before the Jockey Club Stakes, in the Great Foal Stakes, but he is not likely to start for that race, which is worth less than £900.

Some of the sporting reporters are constantly dragging King George's name into their dissertations in a fashion which would be exceedingly impudent if it were not so absolutely idiotic. Last week one read that the King had made a point of entering a horse and running him at Bath, and the gushing noodle who is responsible for this trash adds that the fact of the King being represented proves his goodwill "towards the furtherance of the sport of horse racing in the West of England." The King, as everyone ought to know, can have had no more concern with the entering of one of his late Majesty's horses at Bath or anywhere else than the Shah of Persia. Any one reading this rubbish would conclude that the lease of the late King's horses to Lord Derby is a farce, and that King George is really racing them. Similar balderdash has been printed several times during the summer. King George is in no way whatever interested in the doings of his father's racehorses, which are as absolutely out of his hands during the present season as if they had been sold. When the King's colours do appear on the Turf it may be hoped that they will not be seen in such paltry tinpot races as the £100 Plate for which Lord Derby started the two-year-old Petschau at Bath. The King ought to keep in training only such horses as are up to a high standard of form, and his colours should be seen only at the principal meetings and in races of good class.

Cyllene still heads the list of winning sires, but both St. Frusquin and William the Third have gained very considerably on the sire of Lemberg and Cellini during the last few weeks. Marco is fourth on the list, but he is not likely to hold his place long unless there is a successful revival of Neil Gow. Desmond is fifth, and these are all the horses whose stock have won upwards of £10,000.

Seaforth was not sent to Derby, and in his absence Manwolf was regarded as a good thing for the Champion Breeders' Foal Stakes, backers tumbling over each other in order to obtain the slightest shade of odds in a field of nine. A two-year-old which has played the part of Gulliver in Lilliput at the northern meetings direfully disappoints its friends when it is suddenly transformed into Gulliver in Brobdingnag on being raced in the south. This was the sad fate of Manwolf, but the colt did not start well, and he never looked like winning. A great deal of importance was attached to Manwolf's defeat of Nerestan at Manchester, but the fact was overlooked that the French colt had been left at the post. The Spinning Jenny filly, who has won several races, was well backed, but she could only get a bad third to Lady's Mantle and St. Anton. Lord Falmouth's filly had been fairly well galloped at Kingsclere, and she was quite expected to come near winning. There was, however, little merit about her success, as she could only beat St. Anton by a head, and he was giving her 19 lb., while she had 10 lb. the best of the weights with the Spinning Jenny filly, and she was receiving 16 lb. from Manwolf. Persephone was again backed, and she again disgraced herself. Lord Derby's filly had 1 lb. less than the winner to carry, and five furlongs was supposed to be her best course. The honour of the race rested with St. Anton, and his good running affords further evidence of Pietri's merits. St. Anton is at present best over five furlongs, and he ought to win the Prendergast Stakes at the Newmarket Second October Meeting. The practical lesson to be learnt from this race is that people need not trouble themselves so much about the style in which a race is won, but they ought to consider the class of the beaten lot. It is utterly fatuous to raise an elaborate fuss about a horse because he has won two or three races very easily, but having behind him only Types of English Manhood—II. THE YACHTSMAN never goes for a cruise without State Express Cigarettes. He thinks even yachting would not be worth while without them.

STATE EXPRESS CIGARETTES

Not an ounce of tobacco is used for their manufacture that has not matured for at least five years. Smokers of State Express Cigarettes enjoy the advantage of this striking fact.

No. 555. 100 4/9 25 1/3 10 6d.

Sole Manufacturers: ARDATH TOBACCO CO., LONDON.

mere platers. The lamentations over Manwolf's omission from the Derby entry were decidedly premature.

Lord Villiers would have acted more judiciously if he had withdrawn Greenback from his York and Derby engagements, as that colt is evidently all to pieces. Odds were betted on Greenback in the Breeders' St. Leger, but Marajax cantered away from him, having 5 lb. the best of the weights. Greenback should be "laid up" until next spring. He has only one engagement as a four-year-old—the Rous Memorial Stakes at Ascot.

There were thirteen starters for the Peveril of the Peak Plate, which is considered the first of the autumn handicaps. Duke Michael, who was very leniently weighted, just managed to beat Dalnacrag, and he was generally considered to be a lucky winner.

There were three nurseries on Thursday, and the popularity of these races was proved by there being thirteen starters for the first, eighteen for the second, and twenty-one for the third. It was not so satisfactory, however, to see both the Friary Nursery and the Elvaston Nursery won in a common canter, the winner in each case having the race well in hand a long distance from home. Such results are not indicative of clever handicapping. Moreover, it is preposterous to have three races of this class on one afternoon, and such an excess should be stopped by the Jockey Club.

Pioneer, who died last week, was by Galopin, out of Moorhen, dam of Gallinule. He was bred by the late Mr. Hill in 1886, and Mr. G. A. Baird purchased him as a yearling for 1,000 guineas. Pioneer was a failure as a racer, and at the stud his best representative was Polar Star.

Next week there will be racing at Warwick, Ayr (Caledonian Hunt) Western Meeting, Yarmouth, Manchester, and Hurst Park. The clashing between Manchester and Hurst Park is in every respect mischievous and most inconvenient, and both meetings must suffer seriously.

It is unfortunate for the owner of Mushroom that his colt was withdrawn from the West of Scotland Foal Stakes at Ayr as this colt had an allowance of 10 lb.

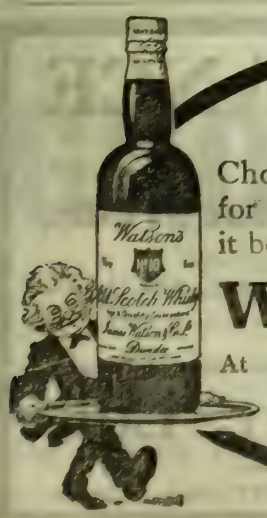
The Autumn Breeders' Foal Plate of £1,000 at Manchester has seventy-three acceptances, and Oliver Goldsmith or Meleager may win. This race is not a costly event to the fund, as the owners' entrances amount to £842. There are twenty-two acceptances for the Prince Edward Handicap of 2,000 sovs. on Saturday. Electra is the pick of the lot, but Mr. Neumann's mare may possibly be reserved for the Cambridgeshire. If Bachelor's Double wins the Doncaster Cup, his weight will be raised to 9 st. 10 lb.

---

CRICKET CROAKERS—FOOTBALL—GOLF.

I suppose it is difficult to make bricks without straw. The ancient Israelites found some trouble in that direction, wherefore I gather that English cricket is not what it was. Perhaps the answer to that conclusion is that it never was. But the reasons for arriving at that conclusion from the brick premises are perhaps more important. When the weather spoils cricket and there are no scores and catches and bowling feats to write about, the journalist must make his bricks without straw. And as the weather influences the moderate mental capacity of sporting journalists, since they are sportsmen rather than philosophers, they become despondent and dyspeptic in their views. They remember that in 1912 there is to be a triangular cricket festival between England, Australia, and South Africa, and they cannot find a team that will win for England. Old men will be older, and as to the young men they are not what they were. They have no experience of important matches. Australia will have its Bardsleys and South Africa its Sinclairs and Voglers. These men may be a bit older, and a lot may happen in two years even to those countries. Time advances and tells its tale in other countries than England. In truth the despondency of those who croak, and having regard to the weather no one can blame them for croaking, rather reminds one of the Germanophobists. The German navy will be, they say, of a certain size in 1913, and they take our present strength and pit it against Germany's strength in 1913. Then they go off into reams of hysterical terror. Somehow or another a Lion and an Orion are launched, and they discover that Dreadnoughts are being out-Dreadnoughted, and they are quiet for a while. While incidentally thankful that this cricket festival will take place the year before the date the alarmists have fixed for the German invasion, I would point out that in cricket our woes are as imaginary as in naval matters. For instance, this year has discovered young amateur batsmen of the class of Knott, Campbell, and Hooman. None of these has been obsessed by the seriousness of first-class cricket. They seem to have the making of cricketers for big occasions. Then in bowling there is Smith, of Surrey, who in a summer like the present would be invaluable. The fast bowler like Richardson or Lockwood is to be found. But in Brown and Newman, of Hants, there are fastish bowlers, and there is Shipman, of Leicester. Perhaps our selection committee will have learned by 1912 that fast bowlers are necessary, and may realise that it will be desirable to have the opportunity of changing skippers if some degree of intelligence is not observed in the field. The croakers need not croak. The men will be available. It will only need intelligence to make use of them. There was a singular absence of this faculty when last Australia visited us. However, one will be better able to judge of the faculties with which a future selection committee may be invested by seeing what team will be selected to play for England against Kent. It would be well to give future stars a chance. There is too much reliance placed on the stars of the past.

Fry has followed R. E. Foster. He came out against Worcester for Hants, and he made a century, playing a long innings with Sprot, who was only eight



It's Simply Great!

Choose Watson's No. 10 Whisky for its full, rich Flavour—for its guaranteed Purity—for its unvarying Quality; choose it because it occasions no after-depression. Be sure to specify

WATSON'S No. 10 WHISKY

At its price Watson's No. 10 is the most enjoyable and beneficial Whisky it is possible to obtain. Matured by age alone.

Your Wine Merchant or Store can supply Watson's No. 10.
Why not place a trial order to-day?

runs under that figure. Fry's fielding was almost as good as ever. But of course he has not the pace of his younger days. It seems to be forgotten that youth is everything in fielding, and though wicket-keepers last to a ripe old age, fieldsmen in other positions, whether in the slips or deep field, get a bit slow by thirty-five. The reason may be that the wicket-keeper has no time to get cold. He is working all through the innings, and it needs youthful energy to keep nimble when one has to expect a ball and none comes for many a long minute. The English weather tells its tale on middle-aged cricketers.

* * * * * *

The Irish Open Amateur Golf Championship was played at Portrush, and it was won for the second time in succession by Mr. L. Munn. There was a large field of good players, and Mr. Munn won all his matches with comparative ease. He has the easy grace of a born golfer in all his shots, but on the green he is very slow, and it is there he does not look comfortable. Compared with the rest of the game his putting is poor. One of the best matches at Hoylake was that between Mr. F. Carr and Mr. Munn. He will one day take the Open Amateur Championship across the Channel.

* * * * * *

The Association football season has begun so far as professional teams are concerned. The Football Association starts without having to deal with players' wages or transfers. There is no wage limit. There is a free market. The matter is now one of business relation between employer and employed. The Football Association has by force of circumstances been compelled to adopt the policy for which the amateurs stood firm when they seceded from the parent body. The amateurs objected to being compelled to take professional teams into their associations. They said they had not the ability to see that the wage rules and other rules were enforced. The Football Association found leading professional clubs practically defying its rules, and so it washed its hands of the whole matter. Whether the men who play are better or worse off is immaterial. If they cannot get proper terms they must form a union and strike. Their position differs very little from that of music-hall artists. That business is controlled by a certain number of trusts holding halls all over the country. Sometimes they pull together, sometimes they do not. One may expect similar events to follow in the football world. Sometimes the big clubs and leagues will be on most friendly terms, and at others they will be at daggers drawn. An eye to the main chance will be the determining factor at all times. A few years ago the music-hall artists struck, and then a form of contract was agreed on by which both parties were to be bound. The players may find it necessary to take some such line. But there are always plenty of young men ready to take up the business of professional football. It is a strenuous life, and often a short one. But the pay is distinctly good, and a young man who is steady and saving should be able to put by a useful nest-egg if he is trained to some regular occupation against the time when his football days are over. There is a splendid opening for young fellows at the professional game. But they must realise that it is as much a business as any other occupation. It is for them to see that their contracts are not one-sided. The employers have their own and their shareholders' interest to look after. They cannot be expected to be philanthropists. It will be useless to talk about sport and sportsmanship if any trouble arises. It is business pure and simple so far as league clubs and the players are concerned.

Whether or not the Football Association will come to terms with the Amateur Football Association remains to be seen. At all events his Majesty has become patron of both associations. It is well known that so far as Continental clubs are concerned the Football Association used the fact of the patronage of the late King as a diplomatic lever to exalt their position and belittle the status of the A.F.A. The attempts to smash and boycott the newly-formed association have failed. It is a strong and flourishing association, supported by the best class of players in the country. This is a fact of which the leaders of the boycott are well aware. It is said that wiser and more conciliatory thoughts are animating the minds of those who control the Football Association. One trusts that this may prove to be the case. The fight has been strenuous and ofttimes bitter. And therein lies the best reason for patching up a quarrel and making peace. There is ample scope for the work of both associations. They can work jointly and bring the best influence to bear on amateur sport. The bogus amateur is bound to be the pest of such a sport as football, played as it is by all classes of people. The F.A. has a great future before it in directing the development of small professional teams. By these teams I mean clubs whose playing members would find a division of gate money a very useful help to their weekly wages. These are the players who at present pose as amateurs. Let them be encouraged to come out in the open and make a little money out of the game. I can see no harm in it. By such a policy a proper place would be found for players who cannot afford to be amateurs and who are not good enough to find engagements with the regularly organised professional clubs.

A LAY OF THE LEAGUE.

(In celebration of the opening of the football season.)

League footer has again begun.
They dub the thing a game.
But Lord! what's in a name?
At least, the players do not play for fun.

By local names the clubs they call;
But ah! the names don't fit
A tiny little bit;
They're merely trade descriptions; that is all.

The towns from which they take their style
Have nothing more to do
With them than me or you:
The men are drawn from all parts of the Isle.

A PROFITABLE ASSURANCE

SPECIAL COMBINATION securing, in return for a Limited Number of Premiums, a Fixed Sum at Death, whenever it may happen, and a

LARGE GUARANTEED BONUS DURING LIFETIME,

together with valuable options and additional benefits.

EXAMPLE.—Age 25. Sum Assured, £500. Annual Premium (payable for 20 years only), £23 16s. 8d.

GUARANTEED RESULTS:

(a) In case of death during the term, PROFIT varying from £182 to £484.

(b) In case of survival, ULTIMATE PROFIT of £273, in addition to 20 years' accumulated Bonuses.

Gresham Life Assurance Society, Ltd.,

Chief Office, ST. MILDRED'S HOUSE, POULTRY, LONDON, E.C.

Assets Exceed £10,300,000. JAMES H. SCOTT, General Manager.

A team 'neath English colours sails;
But most, perhaps the lot,
For payment have been got
From Scotland, or from Ireland, or from Wales.

League footer's still a sport, you know;
At least, that is the view
Of such sportsmen good and true
As Messrs. (Limited) My Lord Kinnaird and Co.

MOTORS AND MOTORING.

A CORRESPONDENT raises a rather interesting point in the following letter:—

Dear Sir,—I drive a 20-h.p. car capable of averaging from twenty-five to thirty miles an hour and of being accelerated up to fifty miles an hour. For motives of economy and comfort I usually run at an average of twenty miles an hour. Periodically I am overtaken by a car travelling faster than my average speed, which by running close up to my back wheel and sounding an exhaust whistle practically demands that I shall travel faster or allow it to pass. Now I shall be glad of your opinion on this point—at what running speed am I reasonably justified in expecting to be allowed to retain my position on an ordinary turnpike road free from traffic and not to give way to the car behind? I have no wish to be discourteous to a fellow-motorist, but surely there is some reasonable rate of speed at which one might be entitled to maintain his position on the road without being guilty of discourtesy in refusing to surrender it and without molestation.

Is one under an obligation, my correspondent asks in effect, to inconvenience one's self in order to enable others to drive too fast and break the law? The legal limit is twenty miles an hour. My correspondent observes it. If others wish to exceed it, have they any right to expect him to make way for them, and to take their dust for half a mile or so? Or if, he says, twenty miles an hour is too slow, at what speed is he justified in refusing to give way and keeping the lead.

Apart from the dust factor, the problem would not arise at all. Given a dustless road, there is no reason why any one should object to another car passing him. Personally I can imagine nothing more uncomfortable than to feel that you are keeping back a faster car under such conditions. On dusty roads, on the other hand, being passed is undoubtedly unpleasant. Since, however, he does not seem to take his stand strictly upon the legal limit, I do not see how my correspondent can very well refuse to give way, for immediately he exceeds the statutory speed himself he is obviously debarred from protesting against others doing the like. If, however, he sticks to the legal limit, then his position is clearly much stronger. But, all the same, I should rather like to see the fun if he tried to put his holding up policy in practice, though undoubtedly the general adoption of this principle might save the police a good deal of trouble. As a matter of fact, a case was reported only the other day of a mysterious car in the shires whose owner seemed to be adopting this very principle. Possibly it was my correspondent himself. If so, perhaps he will let us know how the plan worked in practice. I fancy the remedy might easily prove worse than the disease.

A much harder case is that of the small car passed by a faster one which, having taken the lead, then slows up again and keeps only a little way ahead of the one it has passed. Complaint of this practice has been made not infrequently before now. The slower car is helpless in such circumstances. It may be said that only hooligan drivers would adopt the course named. But hooligan drivers are unfortunately more numerous than is sometimes supposed. When one car passes another it is certainly under a moral obligation to get ahead as speedily as possible.

Another correspondent asks my opinion of Margett's sectional cover. I have no practical knowledge of this cover, which is quite a new one, at present. The idea, however, certainly seems ingenious, though it is not quite new. It is the cover only which is in sections, the tube used being of the ordinary kind. Then the segments of the cover are fitted on, one overlapping the other, and, the tube being inflated, the air pressure keeps them all securely in position. It is easy to imagine the advantages claimed for a cover on these lines. You have a burst, for instance. No need to scrap the whole cover. Remove the damaged section and replace with a spare one, and there you are. A built-up cover of this kind should also be easier to fit in the first instance than one of the ordinary kind. On the other hand, it is difficult to see how internally it can be perfectly smooth at the joints, and, this being so, one would be disposed to fear chafing of the tube. Externally, also, the joints might give trouble with wear, and eventually cease to be perfectly dust proof and water-tight. But the cover is at present undergoing exhaustive tests which will doubtless throw light on these and other points.

Talking of tyres, I have recently been trying the Michelin bolt valve, and so far can heartily commend it. Personally, I have no objection at all to shifting a tube or fitting a cover now and again. It is good, healthy exercise, and, under pleasant conditions, even enjoyable, barring the pumping-up part. The greatest enthusiast, however, will hardly object to simplification of the process, and the Michelin bolt valve certainly achieves this end. Most motoring readers will be aware of the nature of the device. The ordinary security bolts are done away with, and the cover is held in place by a single bolt of a special kind which is combined with the valve. The arrangement is so simple that one wonders that it was never introduced before. True, some motorists have for many years past maintained that no security bolts at all were necessary, arguing that the pressure of the inflated tyre was alone amply sufficient to hold the cover to the rim. But tyres get punctured and deflate, and then——. In short, the notion of doing without security bolts altogether seems a manifest absurdity. The new Michelin bolt valve hits the happy mean. "Not too much bolt, but just bolt enough," might be said to sum it up.

THE GROOVED DUNLOP
is an ideal tyre for sweet running on dry roads. Should rain produce greasy surfaces, a steel-studded DUNLOP tyre can be substituted in a minute by means of the DUNLOP Detachable wheel or the DUNLOP Detachable rim.
SEND FOR PARTICULARS OF DUNLOP TYRES, DETACHABLE WHEELS AND RIMS.
The DUNLOP TYRE CO., Ltd., Aston, Birmingham, and 14, Regent Street, London, S.W.
Braid's year is also the Dunlop year, the "Junior" ball sharing in his successes.

Some might be disposed to doubt if the single bolt substituted for the older kind can be sufficient under all circumstances. Messrs. Michelin, however, pledge their reputation that it is, and my own experience has suggested no reason for thinking otherwise. Only one criticism suggests itself. At present the dust hood of the valve piece and the wing nut fastening the bolt—of which the valve barrel forms, so to speak, the stem—are made all in one. Consequently it is necessary to unscrew the wing nut in order to remove the dust cap to get at the valve for pumping up. It seems to me that the two parts would be better made separate, so that the cap could be removed without interfering with the wing nut, which it is obviously essential should be kept screwed tightly home.

An anachronism too frequently encountered on English roads is the ford or water-splash. You are ambling peacefully along when suddenly you are brought up by a young lake in the middle of the road. Nor is it only in the remoter parts of the kingdom that these tiresome obstructions are to be found. There are quite a number in the immediate neighbourhood of London. There is one near Shepperton, another in the neighbourhood of Thames Ditton, a third on a by-road leading to Chessington, a fourth up Rickmansworth way, and another in Hertfordshire, caused by the River Ash, which extends at times for the best part of half a mile—probably the longest in the country. Most are, of course, nothing like this length, though none the less difficult to negotiate at certain seasons. Nor are they confined by any means to by-roads. There is one on the main road to Aldeburgh, just past a little place called Snape; while another in the same neighbourhood, on the road from Bunwich to Leiston, is still more formidable, being two or three feet deep after heavy rains, and quite unnegotiable in these conditions by motor-cars. The tip in negotiating these water jumps is to take them very, very slowly, so as to cause as little plashing as possible.

Meanwhile the Motor Union or the A.A. would perform a useful service by putting up sign posts at the worst of these splashes, giving some notion as to the depth of water, indicating the shallowest part, and so on. As it is, the uninstructed motorist is dependent on the advice of chance wayfarers, who, it may be added, are not always indisposed to see a stranger hung up. Or, better still, we might take a hint from our American cousins and get the local authorities to erect special bridges for automobilists as illustrated in last week's Autocar. The cost of these would amount to very little, since they appear to consist of nothing more than a couple of troughs or hollow rails elevated on stones a few inches above the level of the water.

WOMAN.

OUR NEGLECT OF BEAUTY.

LAST week in discussing in Truth the relation between brains and beauty it was said that to be "a lovely lady, garmented in light from her own beauty," was, as a rule, reserved for those who devoted themselves to being beautiful. It is sad to reflect how few of these there are; how content we are to be pretty, and how the art of beauty is so much talked about and so little practised. The fact is we are vain; we do not take ourselves seriously. Beauty is neglected. We grudge the time to cultivate it. We are taken up with a thousand petty occupations, such as reading, playing bridge, hunting, travelling, politics, public service, and so forth. We do not care to be beautiful. The powdered and patched lady of the eighteenth century is obviously superior to the hockey and tennis player of to-day, whose complexion is eloquent of health rather than of care, who walks with a long swing from the waist instead of tottering on high heels, and who, in fact, cares for other things besides her looks.

Take a pretty society woman. She will perhaps spend a decent amount on her looks during the year, and a good deal of time. But, then, what does she do? Whirls about in a motor-car, risking contact with dust and wind and rain; goes tearing to Scotland in an express train, and when there stalks deer or shoots birds, wrinkling her skin as she narrows her eyes for sighting; yachts, most likely, in the open sea, with the salt and the sun combining to the destruction of her complexion; perhaps even bathes in the sea, with her face and arms unprotected; in fact, she flouts the goddess of beauty at every turn. It was not always so. There was a time when a woman knew her duty to her looks and did it. She also knew that beauty was the best policy.

> "If to her share some Female Errors fall, > Look on her Face and you'll forget them all."

was said of a beauty—a woman who was willing to be the slave of her appearance. We are so restless and petulant nowadays. We want to let our hair down every night and have a bath every morning. This prevents us from having our hair artistically dressed and our skin properly enamelled.

In the days of the great French beauties they were more submissive to the conditions of their profession. They woke late and had their persons rubbed and perfumed with pastes and essences. Their nails were carefully treated, and the painting of their faces occupied a considerable time. Their hair needed powdering, and the proper setting of patches on face and shoulder required no little attention. When these personal duties were over they had to interview their hairdressers, milliners, dressmakers, and jewellers, to take a long lesson in the art of gesture from a professed master, and so forth. Fashion changed so quickly that the weekly dress journals were unable to keep up with it, and said so. Consequently a woman had to give a great deal of time to the planning of her clothes. When all this was done it was time to make a change of dress. Most of the day was thus devoted to becoming a beauty and most of the night to being thought beautiful. The attentions of the reception and card party having been received, it was time to go home and sleep before the toil of another preparation.

One reason why the pretty woman of to-day neglects so shamefully her opportunities of cultivating beauty is that we consider the toilet a private affair. This is obviously absurd. A woman is bound to be bored during a toilet lasting six hours or so if she cannot see her friends. A very popular time for receiving visitors used to be during the "powdering, patching, and painting." Now we are ashamed of Art, and it is the fashion to give Nature the credit of our appearance. In Pope's time women knew better. They recognised that Art was their friend and Nature their foe. They were as proud of their skill in making the best of themselves as any painter or poet could be of his work. In these days a woman must not only pretend that Nature has had no hand in her appearance, but she must also seem unconscious of her good looks.

It is a preposterous state of affairs. We spend money and time uselessly while we are so plural-minded in our ideals. Only when we become single-hearted again in our pursuit of beauty, and acknowledge that a lovely woman is the greatest triumph of Art and the most skilful of workers, can we hope to regain our mastery of beauty. To work, to think, even to hustle about after amusement—these things are insults to Venus.

THE CO-EDUCATION SCHOOL.

On one of his visits to England a year or two ago, I discussed at some length with Ahmed Rizah, President of the Turkish Chamber, the question of girls' education in Turkey. Having lived for twenty years in Paris, and being more or less of a Positivist at heart, he held the advanced Turkish idea that education on the whole was of more advantage to women than Turkish Delight. At the same time his answer to my question as to the aim in the education of the Turkish woman was "So that they may bring up their sons well and be better companions to their husbands."

To the most modern kind of woman this may seem a mediæval point of view. It is, however, a very short time since it was general enough in this country. It survives to a certain extent in the present prejudice against the co-education school, which is, after all, the logical outcome of the completer education of girls. The prejudice, from which I am not myself entirely free, has for its basis the segregation which, rightly or wrongly, is held to increase the value of girls in the marriage market, or in the eyes of the other sex generally. Granting present relations between men and women to be stationary, there is everything to be said for this segregation. From every other point of view, however, the co-education school with certain modifications and differentiations may easily prove to be the school of the future.

It is difficult as yet to speak critically of the co-education school, because the type is at present still more or less in the experimental stage. One well-known school of this class, however, is just beginning to be useful for observation in that many of its first pupils have married, and are themselves parents. Its main characteristic to the conventional eye is a certain lack of conventional manner. The co-educated ball-room young woman, for instance, has few of the coquetries encouraged by the average mamma, and presumably irresistible to the average ball-room young man. Her manner towards him has nothing of the fluttering demureness extolled by our fathers; on the contrary, it much resembles that of one fellow towards another—if anything, the advantage being on her side rather than on his. At the same time—and I am speaking from special personal experience—she is usually the best dancer in the room, and while regarded as "queer," can usually fill her programme over and over again. There is no doubt a deep moral in all this.

Further, both boys and girls of this particular school have a good all-round knowledge of things, from helping a chicken out of its shell to the way to discover the best book on architecture. Nor is this knowledge a smattering of everything, but, rather, a trained ability to use common sense, the possession of a master-key to various situations rather than a bunch of keys which have nothing to do with each other and are readily confused in an emergency. The pupils are lacking, for good or for evil, in the sex-consciousness, at present part of girls' education, and, on the whole, the girls have a much less superficial knowledge of things than is usually the case, even with the highly educated girl. The real disadvantage seems to be that at present the girls are somewhat sacrificed to the boys. In games they are at a decided disadvantage; in work, also, taking one year with another. And though this may be only a temporary incident, and may arise, at least in part, from the fact that the co-education school approximates—and rightly—to a boys' rather than a girls' school, this consideration is not one that can be shirked by the careful parent.

I do not myself care overmuch for the suggestion of boyishness in the co-education girl; at the same time a little observation of the manner of the average young man about town suggests that effeminacy in either sex is undesirable. Logically speaking, too—though logic has an uncomfortable way of breaking down—since it is the aim of education to make of boys and girls, both separately and together, useful units in the world, it seems illogical to separate them just as they both begin to regard themselves as human beings. As it at present stands, the co-education school is necessarily far from perfect. While it is on the whole more advantageous for boys than for girls, I have met boys who were just a shade ashamed of having been co-educated. While admiring girls, using girls, and marrying girls, they were yet conscious of the feeling which made Ahmed Rizah look on girls' education merely as supplementary to boys', and therefore somewhat degrading for a man to submit to. But this is due rather to public opinion than to the principle of co-education.

Accent and Idiom at your ease.

IT IS EASIER TO LEARN TO SPEAK AS A FOREIGNER

by means of the I.C.S. Phonograph and Text Book language instruction than to learn merely to write by any other method. You cannot help learning with the I.C.S. Phonograph ever talking as a foreigner to you.

French, German, Spanish, or Italian

"The I.C.S. Phonograph System is the only rational one. The records are alone worth the fee, which besides is extremely moderate. . . . I recommend the I.C.S. languages to students of all classes and professions." – W. E. PETERS, M.A. (Teacher of Languages).

Write for free descriptive booklet of the I.C.S. system of instruction by Phonograph Text Book and Professor's Postal Guidance, also of the assistance to employment rendered to those desiring to apply their linguistic ability to monetary advantage. No obligation.

INTERNATIONAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOLS, Ltd.,

Dept. 312-B17, INTERNATIONAL BUILDINGS, KINGSWAY, LONDON, W.C.

MRS. A.'s DIARY.

Thursday.—At Felixstowe the wind howled and whistled round my bedroom with diabolical fury, and I slept not, neither did I rest, but sat up and read "The Life, Letters, and Opinions of Mrs. Lynn Linton," published some time ago by George Somes Layard, who realised the intellectual charms of his subject with a rare perception, and set them down with a simplicity and modesty much to be commended to most biographers. On the strength of sharing her affections for embroidery and Italy I shall henceforth class myself as fellow-artist with Mrs. Linton, generously forgiving myself the major qualification, the interpretation of noble thoughts into words that are worthy of them.

I awoke this morning from not sleeping, and decided that the fresh airs at His Majesty's Theatre were like to do me more good than those of the East Coast violently expressed. I took the fast train up to town, dragging Nita away from a proposed picnic to a heather-laden common. We travelled with a grey-haired, middle-aged man, name and address unwanted, who conversed continually in tones of almost maternal incoherence with an Aberdeen terrier deaf or indifferent to his blandishments.

Two new hats.

It was a delightful circumstance to be at a theatre once again to greet the well-known first-nighters with brown ridges on their foreheads and brown sun-marks on their throats, whilst wondering, like the scientist and the fly in the amber, how the d—— they got there.

Bourchier's appearance immediately revealed to me another of the great widower's guilty secrets—he must have been the primogenitor of the late Sir Augustus Harris; the resemblance is marvellous. Miss Violet Vanbrugh as Katharine was at once the woman and the queen, and she has an instinct for historical dress quite without compare on the English stage; like a famous player in the past she may command perpetual employment for her "archæological bearing." Her embroidered and jewelled purple and crimson velvets are gorgeous, and she carried their burdensome sumptuousness with amazing ease.

From information received, I suspect Henry VIII. did not cut off Anne Bullen's head but her body, because her dress bills were so outrageous. She was delightfully represented by one Laura Cowie, who displayed her coquettish minxishness with a gusto sufficient to lure any one from the cardinal virtues. Sir Herbert Tree was an impressive figure in Wolsey's roseate robes, and never reminiscent of his illustrious predecessor, Sir Henry Irving. Gerald Lawrence, in gold-coloured satin, slashed with gold, looking as handsome as two pictures by Holbein or any other, bore himself in princely style as Surrey, and Henry Ainley as Buckingham wore with the right air alike his brave purple and his braver black martyrdom. It was a magnificent and alluring pageant altogether, the scenes adding righteously to the prevailing sense of grandeur, and I felt like the poor little boy who stands outside the pastrycook's shop yearning for the cakes within. I want the privilege of apparelling myself thus and living in like wonderful rooms, under like prodigal circumstances.

Town is a merry place, and there is some abiding truth underlying the popular prejudice that the joy of going away is surpassed by the pleasure of returning home.

Friday.—Lilian writes me from Dinard that life there is a jovial affair, though the clothes show little conspicuous novelty worthy of my attention. She tells me of "ninon tunics" embroidered in opalescent beads and of a spotted white net frock decked with Irish lace and cotton ball fringe worn with an ermine-hemmed scarf. She finds nothing newer than a white Irish lace coat veiled and hemmed with black chiffon; she reports some Leghorn hats veiled with black lace, and some of black velvet with white lace about their brims, trimmed with a single large flower. Others having her commendation are encircled with masses of feathers striped in white and black and uncurled; and many wear the willow feather, and more the woollen cap. She declares all good coats have the gathered back; and that a raven blue soft moiré costume is amongst her few wants. She concludes with: "There is much to amuse me here, and I see no reason why I should not linger another week, or at least until my resources fall short of my gambling requirements, but baccarat is an insidious tempter."

Robert, just returned from some varied yachting experiences not entirely pleasant, shared my chicken with me, and then suggested that we might wander by way of the Palace, where we arrived in time to see W. L. Courtney's sketch, "A Woman's Revolt." She is a very modern woman, with a preface of tempestuous tirades and a unrepentant finale, and a fainting fit inclusive. But it is an amusing and instructive playlet, unmistakably written by a literary philosopher whose pen has strayed into a philanderer's ink-pot. Miss Webster acted forcefully, and revealed her other well-known talents in the shape of her jetted gown, which twinkled alluringly beneath a cloak lined with emerald green—a very excellent cloak it was, too. Then the Trombettas trombetted in their lively way, and other items were duly appreciated. Later we met Mr. and Mrs. M—— in the hall, and foregathered for supper, when I questioned her about the fashionable fancies of Paris, where she has lately lingered. Her replies were illuminating if not strictly eloquent.

"How are the frocks?" said I. "Tight," said she.

"How are the hats?" said I. "High," said she.

"How are the coats?" said I. "Short," said she.

"How are the heads?" said I.

"Bandaged," said she; and on pressure she explained that a broad glittering scarf encircled the heads of all fair Frenchwomen, fastened in the front above the brow with a single jewel of immense proportions.

Robert failed to express much interest, persisted he was tired, and wanted to go home, and then kept me up, grumbling and drinking cocoa, until 2 a.m., the net result of his fractious revelations being a conviction that he had thoroughly enjoyed himself, and a suspicion that he intends to go sailing once more in a very near future.

Saturday.—Joan threatens to leave Etretat. She has been deeply distressed by a drowning, and condemns the shore as an "unsafe beast of a beach, where a cry, a rush, an excited, jabbering French crowd, a few fishermen, a priest, a doctor or two have been included in my morning's experience, and the subsequent procession, with the central figure hastily covered with a bath towel, has left a melancholy impression I cannot shake off. I no longer bathe, and I insist that the French governess, together with a sailor in a boat, shall watch all my dearest friends should they indulge. I have bought the local costume, a white knitted cap covered with a motor veil knotted behind the ear. I have re-dressed my child's hair, parting it down the centre from brow to neck and twisting it into plaits over each ear like a horse's rosette. I have spent hours at Havre with the flying-men and their machines learning the pet names of all and realising that I much prefer baccarat to aviation. I also find this more attractive than auction bridge. The latter is a business and the former a pleasure. The only notable novelty of fashionable circumstance here is a white golf coat lined with chintz. All the French children are painted and their lips are reddened, a frightful practice, much to be deplored."

Dolly came in to lunch to report that her garden is all ablowing and agrowing, to assure me that it is worth a twelve-mile journey to see her huge lilies with spots on their faces, and to suggest that I should occupy her spare bedroom for a few days, promising me that I might have the baby to cuddle in the early morning. Such privileges are only for the elect, and no sane woman could deny the attraction. Having agreed upon it, we talked of other topics, notably of the millinery of the moment, which we afterwards proceeded to investigate.

The turban and the draped toque are popular incidents in the tale of fashion as it is told, and we found two quite pleasing specimens, one made of black satin intercepted with lines of black velvet, with aggressive grey wings at the back; and the other of dull green shot silk banded with a jewelled trimming of amethysts and emeralds, a pendant ornament at the back, and a bunch of shaded purple and green osprey waving over the crown. In the wise selection of new hats we hope to induce our spring costumes to deserve the label "For autumn wear."

Mrs. A.'s Letter-Box.

I have been persuaded to counsel through these columns all wise women who send me their dress difficulties to solve. But their inquiries must be clearly addressed to Mrs. A., "Truth" Office, Carteret Street, S.W.

Genie.—The newest cloths look like vicuna, and it is to be obtained diagonally ribbed and plain. Most of the coats are short, and at the back the collars are of velvet.

Mrs. S. L. (Bridport).—I hope you will recognise that this reply is meant for you. The skirt should be short and narrow, but not held in about the ankles. The tunic and the bodice, cut in one with the sleeves, had better be made of jet spotted net, and the little chemisette of plain black net, with a very narrow hem of black satin resting on the skin. A black satin rose could be obtained for the centre if anything be needed there, which I doubt.

Senda.—Write to me later, in about a fortnight.

Sykes-Josephine's "Haute Nouveauté" Corsets are ideal: being built on anatomical principles an elegant and graceful contour is created. Mesdames are specialists for Fashionable, Surgical, Gestation, Restoring, Obesity, and Hunting Corsets. Only address, 280, Regent Street, London. 'Phone: 6346 Gerrard.

Hints to "Truth" Doll-Dressers.

There are probably very few of us who have not at one time or other responded to some clamant appeal to "make my dolly a dress." Most of us, too, have seen disappointment struggling with gratitude or politeness in a small face that could not entirely conceal its disapproval of grown-up notions of dolls' requirements. But the difficulties of the dolls' dressmaker are more often than not based upon misunderstanding. Grown-up notions of dress are usually the antithesis of those of the real doll lover; the youthful vocabulary, moreover, is either limited or uncertain, and leaves the meaning of its directions mostly to the imagination of the dressmaker. Judging from my experience, too, satisfactory doll-dressing—I mean satisfactory to the chief parties concerned—depends less upon fashion and fancy than upon strong pre-conceived notions on the part of their owners.

On the whole the doll-mother likes something warm in the way of clothes—less out of hygienic consideration for the doll, than because something flannelly or woolly is particularly comforting to hold and to love. Baby dolls come in for a full share of appreciation and attention. Your sentimentalist attributes this, no doubt, to the early development of the maternal instinct. Except that it applies equally to small boys, I should be inclined to agree with him. But all children, small themselves, love something which makes them feel big and omnipotent. I once heard a tiny Colossus of three addressing a life-size baby doll as a "dear little tiny baby." And "dear" and "little" are adjectives nearly always found together in an incipient vocabulary. Most of all do children love verisimilitude. A doll whose clothes—even if they only amount to two or three garments—will take on and off, is blessed above all dolls whose clothes were born on them. I have seen children in ecstasies over little extras, such as bead necklace, a hat—which turned one doll into two persons by at once making her outdoor as well as in—little shoes, especially with buckles, and stockings or socks. But here, again, it is dangerous to generalise. One of my youngest friends, for instance, insisted in denuding a beautiful doll of the finest clothing and enveloping her in red-bordered Turkish bath towel. She refused to go to sleep without the Turkish towel, and there were lamentations every time it went to be washed. Here, I think, the doll started by being too elaborate. A satin-clad, real lace, and real fur doll may be a delight as long as she shares the position with other and more familiar friends. But from the first she is allotted a sort of greenhouse existence. You can neither smack nor love satin with the same fervour as wool or cotton.

Descending to particulars of the 1,500 small dolls which are still at Truth office awaiting the good offices of the dressmaker, most would be glad to be dressed plainly but brightly. The yoked dress is always popular with children, partly no doubt because it much resembles their own. It has the advantage of being easy to make, and the yoke admits of the use of the fragments common to every well-filled "piece" drawer. A tucker round the neck adds considerably to the smartness of the doll's appearance. Plain gathers round the neck, though less shapely, are quite pretty in combination with a sash round the waist. Variety is after all the great thing. Novices, by the way, would do well to remember in making the sleeves and the knickers to slope the inside edge of both, and thus avoid the appearance of the straight, unyielding tubes worn by some dolls. The large dolls, of which Truth still has a good number in stock, offer more scope for the imagination, since they are presented, not to individuals, but to whole wards. Fancy dress of almost every kind is attractive, provided it be not too topical to lose its meaning in a short time. A Blériot may interest the grown-up, but is neither pretty enough nor lovable enough for children. Boy dolls, on the whole, are less popular than girls, with the exception perhaps of sailors. In point of popularity, indeed, babies take a very high place. For this reason several dozen of the new-fashioned "natural" dolls have this year been added to the Truth stock, and they will well repay the labour of ladies who will undertake to convert them into fully dressed babies. Possessing the regulation minimum of hair, large head, and elephant legs of the average baby, they are indeed so life-like as to be assured of an extra share of baby worship.

It only remains to add that any of my readers who would like to take advantage of these hints and develop them for the benefit of the little ones who will be occupying the wards of hospitals, infirmaries, and workhouses next Christmas may still obtain the raw material for the exercise of their ingenuity by forwarding an application to Truth Office. In doing so they should state clearly whether they desire large, small, or "natural" dolls, and how many of each.

WORK AND PLAY.

A correspondent writes:—

As some misapprehension seems to exist with regard to the substitution of an "Annual Record of Women's Work" for the quarterly issue of the "Englishwoman's Review," it may be pointed out that great care would be taken not to trench on the province of the "Englishwoman's Year Book" and similar publications. It is proposed to issue "a record of work, not a guide book." The idea is to supply "an easily searched book of reference," and to "fill a want which is felt by many, who need from time to time accurate information on various subjects" connected with women's activities. Those who have been in the habit of reading and referring to the "Englishwoman's Review," and also the "Englishwoman's Year Book," will be aware that each fills a distinctly different niche in the sphere of women's work, and the quotation of a few of the sections it is proposed to include in the yearly volume will sufficiently indicate the object in view:—Resumé of the Year's Work, Labour and Other Legislation for Women at Home and Abroad, Elections and Appointments, Colonial and Foreign News, Obituary, etc., etc.

* * * * * *

It is a sign of the times that there should be published in Cape Town the South African Lady's Pictorial. The paper is not local in its interests, but appeals to women all over South Africa. It deals with their interests as comprehensively as any paper at home, is well printed and illustrated, and contains two short stories by Mr. Locke and Mr. Burgin. That there is room for a sixpenny weekly dealing exclusively with women's interests in South Africa proves how much has been done in the last few years to weld together the heterogeneous elements of society out there. It is only when society has reached a certain stage of solidity that one can judge of it as a whole.

* * * * * *

Louisiana is shortly to discuss a bill for the suppression of bridge-playing. The motive of the bill is to give children a chance of knowing their mothers, who at present are eternally playing cards. One can see a long line of such bills ahead when bridge is followed by poker or some other reinstated favourite, or by jig-saw, or any other absorbing intellectual pursuit. Mothers who neglect their children for bridge are not going to become models of maternal affection because their favourite game is suppressed. A bill for the introduction of foster-mothers into the home (as young, as charming, as capable as possible) to look after these children might have more effect, and cause not only the Louisianan child but its father also to receive more attention from the Louisianan lady.

* * * * * *

Mlle. Hélène Dutrieu's aerial flight from Blankenberghe to Bruges will encourage the select band of women who are coquetting with the aeroplane. Mlle. Dutrieu, who carried a passenger with her, made her journey at an average height of 1,200 ft., and made a circle round the historical belfry tower at Bruges. This is an achievement denoting the greatest courage and nerve, and fully justified the wild enthusiasm which greeted the "air-woman" when she landed at last on Blankenberghe sands.

"Queer Stories" from Truth. Now ready, Series XVI. Price 1s., at all booksellers, and from the Publisher, 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street. "They are one of the wonders of the world, these stories, and people are never tired of asking who writes them." —Bystander.

LETTER FROM MADGE.

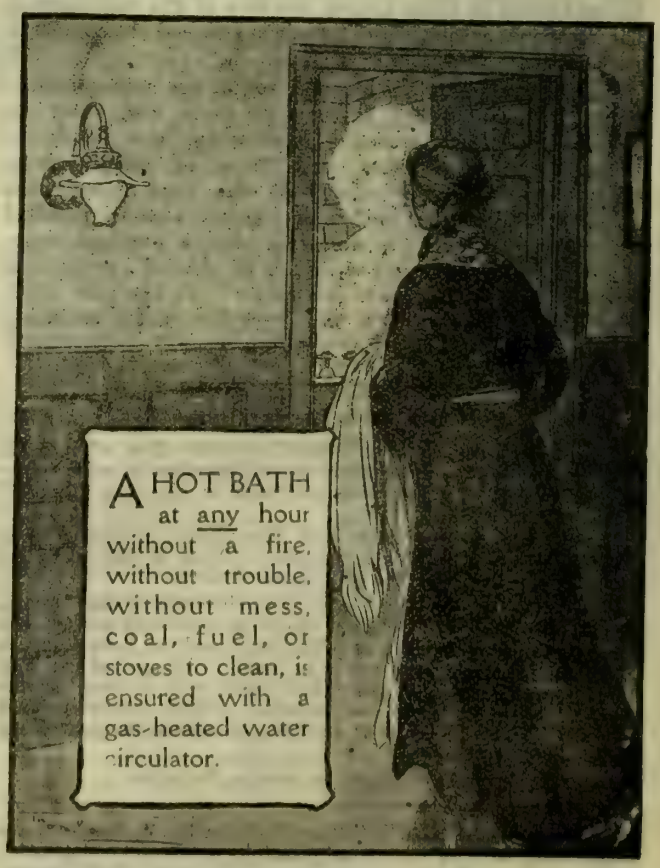
Dearest Amy,—I am longing to know if the American author H. A. Mitchell Keays is a man or a woman. You will wonder why. In a novel with a curious title, "He that Eateth Bread with Me——," and evidently written as a protest against divorce, the author makes a young man say to the girl he is asking to be his wife: "I believe in a home, a home of so fine a type that into it there must come a woman's noblest endeavour. Nothing else would satisfy me. I do not offer the woman I love an easy life. I offer her a future of difficulty, one that would tax every gift and resource she possesses. I ask her to accept my life as all there is for her—to exalt its annoyances, its stupidities, its anxieties to the supreme place in her thought. She may have great executive ability, be fitted to move mountains out of doors, for the good of the public and her own glorification—what do I care about that? My wife will have to use her executive ability in my home."

This is not intended as showing up an egoist, but meant to indicate the high ideal of what a husband should be and expect. The girl to whom he makes this unique proposal has a lovely voice. Her Italian teacher has told her she will be a second Patti. But the gentleman who proposes to marry her cares nothing for that. He says so. Here is a man who would rob the world of a Patti, of a Florence Nightingale, of an Elizabeth Fry, in order that his home might benefit by the gifts of such shining women as these.

Now, is the author a man or a woman? What do you think? I fancy it must be a woman, for she makes the girl actually accept this scheme of life, and, in addition, makes another woman say of him that "there is no greater treasure than such a man's love."

By the way, when she pleads for her voice and her beloved singing he says: "Do you know what the Lord makes musicians out of? All the left-over fools in the universe that He can't do anything else with."

HOT WATER AT ANY HOUR.



THE GAS LIGHT & COKE CO.

Your Austrian friends would be delighted with the beautiful souvenir volume of the centenary of the great struggle in brave, loyal Tyrol. It is a large and very handsome volume, produced in fine type on thick, creamy paper, and contains a great number of pictures, many of them elaborately coloured. A portrait of the present Emperor, that wonderful old man, is frontispiece, and beneath it is his rather shakily written signature, the two names run into one: "Franzjosef." The archdukes and archduchesses follow in due order, some of the ladies very handsome indeed, but it is the wonderful colour of the festival pictures that will delight your friends. Sunshine, real Tyrolean sunshine, brings out the green, the red, the warm brown of the fête costumes, the vividly tinted flags, and does every justice to the sturdy, honest faces of the Tyrolese in their wonderful hats.

The pictures of Bozen, Meran, and Innsbruck, with the great mountains encamped about them, made us want to start at once for these refreshing places. London seems rather stale and stuffy just now. Many English know the wonderfully invigorating, exhilarating effect of Tyrolean mountain air. Shall we ever be able to get there in aeroplanes?

The Bewlers have just got back from a motor tour in Lorraine, and they depict its joys so glowingly that we want to start at once and enjoy that land of picturesque castles and quaint old churches. Though only fifty miles across, Lorraine contains between forty and fifty castles, some of them uninteresting enough but others full of charm. Putting up at quiet little country inns where they found cleanliness and good cooking, and avoiding large hotels, this honeymoon couple spent a week on their tour at a cost of exactly £50.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

Dearest Madge,—Dublin resumed its normal state at the end of last week, having had an exceptionally crowded and prosperous time, notwithstanding adverse weather conditions. Never were more strangers drawn to the capital for the Horse Show and the other unusually numerous attractions. The sporting world—practically the whole of Ireland—showed that their sympathies extended almost as strongly to "airmen" as to the horse, and the Leopardstown "flying" meeting had a record attendance to equal that of any of its race meetings. Neither the Viceregal nor Chief Secretary's Lodges, however, took any part in the festivity and hospitality of the "week," which was unexpected and disappointing. Monday and Tuesday found us in our thousands at the aviation course, and all over the surrounding country. All roads led to Leopardstown, and all kinds of vehicles crowded them, from the haughtiest of motors to the lowliest of "ass-cars." We are a people of much adaptability to circumstances and a quick grasp of situations. The multitude soon understood that soaring airmen are the least exclusive of performers in the matter of being kept within the limits of enclosure and "gate," like mere groundlings. Picturesque Leopardstown, with its surrounding rising ground and hills, is open to view from every point of the compass. For all that, true to sporting tradition, crowds assembled as for horse-race meetings, the socially elect in large numbers filled the grand stands, and Lord and Lady Aberdeen were present on both days. The flying on the first day was beautiful—especially the high flights of Drexel—although rain and wind had to be contended with. The second day's ascents were impossible almost, Grace's flight causing many thrills of anxiety to the spectators. There was, however, little question of the conquest of the air at the meeting. Ours is an island of wild winds from south and west; they get much opportunity at Leopardstown from the proximity of the ranges of the Wicklow and Dublin mountains. The Irish air will take much conquering, and this year even the "conquerors" frequently seemed to be going through very hard times.

The dressing for aviation meetings has not yet been specialised for our sex. Lady Powerscourt's flying toilet on the second day was a novelty and carefully thought out, but more to be wondered at than admired. How greatly daring women are in this age! Quite a number of our sex were eager and prepared to take high flights at Leopardstown, if the air permitted. "What man dare, dare I" is evidently our twentieth-century motto. Fred declares it to be altogether based on the concrete fact that woman is always after man, "and, what's more," he dogmatises, "she always was and always will be." So like a man, is it not?

Whilst the masses in their thousands paid flying visits to Leopardstown, the classes in the neighbourhood had many house parties for the meeting. At Foxrock, which Leopardstown skirts, Sir Horace Plunkett's imposing residence, where Lady Fingall, Mr. Gerald and Lady Betty Balfour have been staying for some time, was full of guests. Sir Henry and Lady Robinson were also entertainers there. Lord and Lady Powerscourt had guests at Powerscourt House, amongst the Wicklow mountains. The visitors entertained by the Dowager Lady Grace and Sir V. Grace at Monkstown included Mr. Cecil Grace, whilst Captain Dickson was the guest of Colonel Courtney at Booterstown. One may suppose that the difficulties, even of Irish air, may be conquered some day. Those of the sea once seemed fairly intricate, when it was written some centuries ago: "The sea that is betweene Ireland and Brytaine cannot be sayled, but a fewe dayes in the sommertime."

Lord and Lady Massereene have taken up their residence at the family place, Antrim Castle, the fine demesne and woods of which stretch to the shores of Lough Neagh, the great inland northern sea. They have let Oriel Temple, where they stayed while refurnishing Antrim Castle, to Mr. and Mrs. Mills, who are amongst the rich Americans that visit Ireland in increasing numbers each year for the hunting season. Ireland, like the

Kensington College

Secretarial and Commercial. —— Unique Training for Guaranteed Appointments.

NEW BUILDING OPENED BY HER GRACE KATHARINE, DUCHESS OF WESTMINSTER.

Souvenir of the 21st Anniversary, with the Speeches of the Duchess of Marlborough and His Majesty's Solicitor-General, and the Director's Report, from—

Applications for Winter Term should be made forthwith.

Mr. JAMES MUNFORD, M.R.S.A., Director,
34, Gloucester Gardens, Bishop's Road, London, W.
(Two minutes west of Paddington Station, G.W.R.)
Telephone: Paddington 4384.

Day and Residential.

Vide TRUTH, 27th July, 1910, and the DAILY MAIL YEAR BOOK, pp. 197-198.

rest of the kingdom, has happy illustration in modern times of the mutual helpfulness which can be established between the new and old order.—Yours ever, CLARE.

As there is still a chance of the long-deferred warm weather I send you a menu of a cold dinner, with recipes:—

Consommé aux Tomates.

Filets de Truite à l'Impériale.

Petites Mousselines de Foie-Gras.

Cailles à la Romano.

Selle d'Agneau.
Salade à la Parmentier.

Poularde à l'Ambassadrice.

Glace aux Pêches à la Celestial.

Consommé aux Tomates.—When clarifying the stock for the consommé, mix 1 lb. of ripe tomatoes, from which the seeds have been removed, to every 2 quarts of stock; finish in the same way as for consommé, adding the necessary vegetables to flavour. After simmering the soup for two hours, strain it through a clean cloth, season it to taste, and put it in the refrigerator for at least two hours before serving. Cut small cube-shaped pieces of cooked breast of chicken, and serve them on a separate plate.

Filets de Truite à l'Impériale.—To the chopped bones of a small salmon trout add those of a sole or a fresh haddock; boil these with a little water and vegetables to make stock for the fillets. Trim the fillets of the trout into six or eight pieces and arrange them on a buttered sautépan, which should be first lightly sprinkled with a little scraped onion. Season the fillets with salt and pepper, moisten them with a glass of white wine and as much of the reduced fish stock, cover them with buttered paper, cook them in a moderate oven about twenty minutes, then press them between two dishes till they are cold. With the flesh of the sole or haddock make quenelle and steam it in a border mould; when it is cold cover it with aspic jelly, which can be done either by putting it into a larger mould and pouring the jelly round it, or by coating it with cold aspic when on the point of setting. The fillets of the trout must be drained, covered with thick mayonnaise sauce which is mixed with the reduced fish stock, adding seasoning to taste; decorate them with strips of red chili, chopped lobster coral, and sprigs of chervil. Dish them on the prepared border, fill the centre of the dish with a ragout of scallops of lobster, small quenelles, a few picked shrimps, and a couple of minced gherkins. These should be mixed with the mayonnaise sauce and the yolk of a hard-boiled egg passed through a wire sieve on the surface. Crown all with a bouquet of chervil sprinkled with coral, and put a border of sliced and seasoned cucumber.

Petites Mousselines de Foie-Gras.—Line six or eight dariole moulds with aspic jelly, and decorate them with round and crescent-shaped pieces of truffle. Cut the best part of a terrine of pâté-de-foie-gras into small squares and put them into a basin with small scallops of truffle, a few shreds of cooked chicken, and sufficient aspic cream to mix them. Pound 6 ozs. of cooked chicken with the remains of the foie-gras, first removing the truffles, season it very delicately, and rub it through a wire sieve; mix it with a gill of whipped cream and half a gill of aspic stiffened with a little extra gelatine. Fill the darioles and put the garnish in the centre of each. When they are turned out, garnish the centre of the dish with cold green peas, seasoned with vinaigrette and a small quantity of chopped tarragon. Make a pretty border of chopped aspic and shredded truffles.

Cailles à la Romano.—Farce half-a-dozen boned quails with very delicate chicken quenelle in which a tablespoonful of chopped truffle has been mixed, envelope the quail in slices of bacon, and braise them for an hour with chicken or veal stock, and allow them to cool in the braise, after which halve the birds, absorb the moisture in a napkin, and mask them with this chaudfroid: Rub a tablespoonful of pâté-de-foie-gras through a fine wire sieve, mix it with aspic jelly and cream, and whisk it until on the point of setting. Having coated the birds, brush them with liquid aspic and decorate them in a light design with cut red tongue. Dish the quail on a border of chopped aspic, garnish the centre with spring carrots turned in the shape of olives, and, when cold, season with a little salad oil and cream worked with a teaspoonful of lemon juice, adding salt and pepper, chopped parsley, and tarragon. Put a ring of ripe tomato at the top, with a bouquet of asparagus tips upright in the centre.

Salade à la Parmentier.—Boil 1 lb. of good potatoes and some quite young beetroot. When they are cold, cut them into slices a quarter of an inch thick, season them with oil, vinegar, chopped tarragon, and chervil, arrange the slices in a circle in a salad-bowl, fill the centre with cold asparagus points, and sprinkle the salad very lightly with passed hard-boiled yolk of egg.

Pêches Glacées à la Celestial.—Mash three or four ripe peaches with the juice of half a lemon and 2 ozs. of sugar; after allowing them to stand an hour, rub them through a hair sieve. Rub 6 ozs. of loaf sugar on the peel of a lemon and put the juice of half with the sugar, adding a gill of water, then boil it to a syrup. When it is cold, whisk it in an egg-bowl with the yolks of three eggs over a saucepan of boiling water until it is just warm, then whisk it till it is cold, mixing in the purée of peaches, a tablespoonful of maraschino, and half a pint of whipped cream. Ascertain that it is not too sweet to freeze, then turn it in the ice machine, mould it, and imbed it in the usual way. Serve the ice, with an iced compôte of ripe peaches round it.

Ever your loving cousin, MADGE.

ACCIDENTS

OF ALL KINDS,
SICKNESS, EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,
BURGLARY AND FIDELITY GUARANTEE RISKS INSURED AGAINST BY THE
RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURANCE CO.
Capital (fully subscribed) £1,000,000. Claims paid, £5,700,000.
Paid up £200,000.
64, CORNHILL, LONDON. A. VIAN, Secretary.

Appeals.

FOUNDED 1757.
Royal Maternity Charity of London,
PATRON—H.M. THE QUEEN. PRESIDENT—H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN OF SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN. VICE-PRESIDENT—H.S.H. THE DUCHESS OF TECK. TREASURER—RIGHT HON. LORD AVEBURY.
For providing Midwives, Doctors and Medicine (Gratis) to Poor Married Women in their Own Homes. (ABOUT 2,500 PER ANNUM.)
Income under £9 0. Debt to the Bank, £2,500. Expenditure over £2,000.
PLEASE HELP THE COMMITTEE to FREE the CHARITY from DEBT.
Offices—31, FINSBURY SQUARE, E.C. Secretary—Major G. L. B. KILLICK.

THE CHURCH ARMY.—120 Labour Homes, &c., offer work to men and women leaving gaol or destitute. The LAST HOPE of thousands. Farm Colony. FRESH AIR HOMES for ailing women and children from slums. FUNDS, old clothes and firewood orders (3s. 6d. per 100 bundles) urgently NEEDED.—Cheques crossed Barclays, payable Prebendary Carlile, Hon. Chief Sec., or Mr. W. F. Hamilton, K.C., Hon. Treasurer, Headquarters, Marble Arch, W.

A PRIVATE INDUSTRIAL COMPANY with Head Office in Cape Colony, and Branches in other South African centres, doing sound profitable business (15 per cent. net profit last year), and excellent prospects of expansion, OFFERS at par limited number of its £1 ORDINARY SHARES, also 7 PER CENT. £1 CUMULATIVE PREFERENCE. The new Capital will be used to increase the stock and manufacturing facilities at the Company's depôts. Managing Director now in London.—Full particulars will be given to bonâ fide investors (only Principals need apply) on application, by CHARLES COMINS & CO., Chartered Accountants, 50, Cannon Street, London, E.C.

"TRUTH"
Can be obtained at THE GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, RUE DE RIVOLI, PARIS.

BOLLINGER'S
CHAMPAGNE.

NOW READY. SEPTEMBER NUMBER.
FINANCIAL REVIEW OF REVIEWS.
SPECIAL ARTICLES.
HOW FINANCIAL CAPITAL DOES ITS WORK. By J. A. Hobson, M.A.
WOMEN AND FINANCE. By Mrs. Creighton.
FOREIGN PROFITS AND DIVIDENDS AFFECTING SAVING IN INCOME TAX. By R. N. Carter, F.C.A.
THE AMERICAN PEOPLE AND SCIENTIFIC INVESTMENT. By Charles F. Speare, Financial Editor of "New York Evening Mail."
Topics of the Month—Digest of Companies' Reports—New Capital Issues—Statistical Record.
Price One Shilling. Publisher, 2, Waterloo Place, S.W.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.
Crowns, Bridge-work, Inlays, and all Latest Methods at lowest Fees.
FIVE YEARS' WARRANTY.
Mr LABOUCHERE in Truth writes:—"One of the largest practices in the world Can do everything science and experience suggest to satisfy every customer."
WRITE FOR PAMPHLET.
GOODMAN'S, Ltd., 2, LUDGATE HILL (Facing St. Paul's).
BRIGHTON: 10, Castle Square.

THE GREATEST HEALTH CRUSADE OF MODERN TIMES

To fully acquaint every British subject, man or woman, with the one natural means of securing and maintaining health which is open to all wherever they live—however chronic their complaint—whatever their means.

As many million books explaining the methods as may be necessary are to be provided and distributed, entirely without charge, to all applicants by Mr. Eugen Sandow, the well known specialist in curing illness without medicine.

The marvellous cures effected and health improvement secured by thousands upon thousands of men, women, and children in the last few years as the result of Mr. Sandow's advice, and the world-wide call amongst medical authorities, professional and business men and women, and others in all classes of life throughout the British Empire, for a wider spread of the all-important health knowledge which Mr. Sandow has to convey, has drawn him to organise this health crusade upon gigantic and scientific lines. There is no cost or obligation of any sort attaching to the use of the form below as it is printed by special arrangement to make the Sandow Treatment even better known to TRUTH readers than it is at present. Every reader is specially invited to fill in and forward this form to Mr. Eugen Sandow, at 32, St. James' Street, London, S.W.

The name of Eugen Sandow is known throughout the world as that of a man who has devoted his lifetime to the health improvement and physical betterment of the British nation. He is the founder of a remarkable treatment for the medicineless cure of illness, which has often been noticed in the pages of TRUTH, and which has brought about such astonishingly successful health results that the most eminent medical men testify to its wonderful efficacy.

This offer is of particular interest to readers who are suffering ill-health, because not only can they secure, without cost, an illustrated book showing just how the Treatment is applied in such a condition as their own, but every form carries with it the advantage of a personal letter of opinion upon the inquirer's own case, if full particulars are given of the individual's present health condition.

The London Headquarters of Mr. Sandow, where he has inaugurated and is conducting the Greatest Health Crusade of Modern Times to urge the importance of Scientific Exercise as a means of curing illness. Patients have always extolled his system, and invalids in increasing numbers are seeking advice at the Sandow Institute in St. James' Street, London, S.W., which is undoubtedly the most wonderful curative establishment in the world.

The marvellous success with which the Sandow Treatment has met is due to the fact that it is a natural treatment in which drugs or irksome dietary play no part, and that in the majority of instances it can be taken at home.

Many investigations have been made by well-known newspapers and medical men of the claims advanced for and the results secured by this treatment, and in no instance have the findings been otherwise than highly satisfactory.

The treatment is one of simple scientific exercises, the movements of which are so easy and gentle that they can be made without effort, without causing fatigue, and without fear of strain by the frailest woman suffering severe illness equally with the strongest man who is temporarily out of condition. For every patient a separate course of individual treatment is prescribed after his or her illness has been thoroughly considered, the closest attention being paid to the age, constitution, and condition of the sufferer, who consequently receives just the exercises which are known from experience to give the greatest benefit.

Twenty-four illustrated books have been produced by Mr. Sandow, each dealing with one of the illnesses or conditions which this treatment has proved so successful in curing.

Below will be found the titles of the books and the coupon which entitles the sender to a copy of the book required. It is only necessary to fill in the coupon, cut it out, and post it to Mr. Eugen Sandow, at 32, St. James' Street, London, S.W.

The book and a letter containing a personal opinion on the inquirer's case will be sent as nearly by return of post as possible.

VOL.
1. Indigestion and Dyspepsia.
2. Constipation and its Cure.
3. Liver Troubles.
4. Nervous Disorders in Men.
5. Nervous Disorders in Women.
6. Obesity in Men.
7. Obesity in Women.
8. Heart Affections.
9. Lung and Chest Complaints.
10. Rheumatism and Gout.
11. Anæmia: Its Cause and Cure.
12. Kidney Disorders: Functional and Chronic.
13. Lack of Vigour.
14. Physical Deformities in Men.
15. Physical Deformities in Women.
16. Functional Defects in Speech.
17. Circulatory Disorders.
18. Skin Disorders.
19. Physical Development for Men.
20. Everyday Health.
21. Boys' and Girls' Health and Ailments.
22. Figure Culture for Women.
23. Insomnia.
24. Neurasthenia.

Post to Eugen Sandow, 32, St. James' Street, London, S.W.

Special Application Form for "TRUTH" Readers.

Please send me a gratis copy of Vol. No....., with an opinion as to whether my case is one for treatment by your method.

NAME.....

(Please say whether Mr., Mrs., Miss, Rev., or other title.)

ADDRESS.....

My age is..... Occupation.....

Ailment or Physical condition from which relief is desired.....

Give further particulars on your own note paper.

Mr. Heinemann's New Books.

GREAT MASTERS OF LANDSCAPE PAINTING.

From the French of EMI E MICHEL.

Profusely Illustrated, Imp 8vo. 30s. net.

The author shows the gradual development of the Art of Landscape Painting from its earliest manifestations to mod rn times. The illustrations have been ca efully selected. and the book will be found n aluable alike to the general reader, to the student, and to the specialist.

A GASCON ROYALIST IN REVOLUTIONARY PARIS

(1792-1795).

By G. LENOTRE. Demy 8vo. 10s. net.

M. Lenotre's new book deals with the Baron de Batz, who, failing in two schemes for the rescue of the King and Queen, set himself to destroy the Revolution by sowing mutual distrust among the leaders.

MEMOIRS OF

THE DUCHESSE DE DINO.

THIRD SERIES. Demy 8vo. 10s. net.

The concluding volume of the memoirs of Talleyrand's witty niece, who went everywhere, knew everybody worth knowing, and recorded her impressions of things seen and heard with unfailing humour.

PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED.

Vols. I. and II., Demy 8vo. 10s. net each.

"Will be revelled in by all readers."—Daily Telegraph.

A NEW DOOLEY BOOK.

MR. DOOLEY SAYS.

By F. P. DUNNE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A new book of Mr. Dooley's opinions will be welcome everywhere. Among the subjects on which he discourses are: DIVORCE—THE BACHELOR TAX—DRUGS—WOMAN SUFFRAGE—OCEAN TRAVEL.

SIX-SHILLING BOOKS BY NOTABLE AUTHORS.

By JACK LONDON, [3rd Imp.

MARTIN EDEN.

"Vigorous, exhilarating, and arresting."—Athenæum.

By JOHN GALSWORTHY, [2nd Imp.

A MOTLEY.

"Some are sad, others merry, most of them tender, all of them worth reading."—Pall Mall Gazette.

By RICHARD DEHAN, [6th imp.

THE DOP DOCTOR.

"A great novel."—Daily Mail.

Mr. DE MORGAN'S New Novel.

Mr. Heinemann will publish on Tuesday, September 13th,

An AFFAIR of DISHONOUR

BY

WILLIAM DE MORGAN.

Mr. Heinemann has recently published a new and cheaper edition, in one volume, of Mr. De Morgan's great Novel,

IT NEVER CAN HAPPEN AGAIN.

By E. H. YOUNG,

A CORN OF WHEAT.

"The author steps at once into a particular circle of writers that includes some of the greatest names."—Saturday Review.

By A. VIVANTI CHARTRES, [3rd imp.

THE DEVOURERS.

"An astonishing achievement."—Times.

By DUNCAN SCHWANN,

THE BOOK OF A BACHELOR.

"Distinctly amusing, light, vivacious, eminently readable."—Tatler.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

JUST OUT.

Mr. DAVID WH.TELAW'S New Romance

PRINCESS GALVA
PRINCESS GALVA
PRINCESS GALVA

Mr. COLIN COLLINS' New Sensational Story

THE BLINDING LIGHT
THE BLINDING LIGHT
THE BLINDING LIGHT

Mrs. V.RE CAMPBELL'S Latest Novel

FOR NO MAN KNOWETH
FOR NO MAN KNOWETH
FOR NO MAN KNOWETH

Other Popular Fiction too good to be missed.

| | |
|---|---|
| RAGNA | Anna Costantini |
| THE FALL OF A SAINT | Eric Clement Scott |
| A FOOL'S ERRAND | Anthony Hamilton |
| JOHNNY | Herbert George |
| ALLAH THE AVENGER | Cowley Whitehouse |
| THE GAY LORD WARING | Houghton Townley |
| MISTRESS CYNTHIA | May Wynne |
| FOR PRINCE OR POPE | Jas. Gissingham |
| THE DUKE'S VENGEANCE | Michael W. Kaye |
| A PRISONER IN SPAIN | William Caine |

"Extremely interesting and instructive reading."—TRUTH.

MAD MAJESTIES

By Dr. A. S. RAPPOPORT,

Author of "ROYAL LOVERS AND MISTRESSES," etc.

Demy 8vo. Fully Illustrated. 16s. net.

GREENING & CO., Ltd., 91, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

3/9 The WHS Self-filling 3/9

FOUNTAIN AND STYLO PENS

So simple a child can fill them

A thoroughly reliable writing instrument at a popular price. No complicated mechanism. Manufactured of the best materials, the Pens are fitted with iridium tipped 14-carat gold nibs, and in 3 styles of barrel, thin, thick & stub, and each style of barrel can be supplied with either fine, medium, or broad pointed nibs.

The Stylo is fitted with adjustable spring needle and is non-leakable.

To be obtained from all the leading Stationers, or post free, on receipt of P O. for 3/10, from W. H. SMITH & SON, 186 Strand, London, W.C.

3/9 FULLY GUARANTEED BRITISH MANUFACTURE 3/9

STERILE MARRIAGE: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By a late Senior Physician to a Hospital for Women. Post free, 3s. 9d. Shelley & Co., Limited, 38, Gracechurch Street, London.

"TRUTH" can be obtained in IRELAND from EASON & SON, Ltd., Middle Abbey Street, Dublin; 17, Donegall Street, Belfast, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

"TRUTH" CAUTIONARY LIST, 1910.

An Invaluable Digest of "Truth" Exposures of—

CITY SHARKS, MONEYLENDERS, TURF WELSHERS, MEDICAL QUACKS, SHAM PHILANTHROPISTS, BEGGING LETTER WRITERS, FRAUDULENT ADVERTISERS, AND CURRENT SWINDLES OF ALL KINDS.

Revised, Enlarged, and Brought Up-to-date.

PRICE 1s. NET. BY POST, 1s. 2d.

"TRUTH" OFFICE, CARTERET STREET, LONDON, S.W.; SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & CO.; and at all Railway Bookstalls, Newsagents, &c.

Publishing Office: 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

ST. CLEMENTS PRESS

LIMITED,

PORTUGAL ST., KINGSWAY,

LONDON, W.C.

WORKS OPEN DAY AND NIGHT.

Wires:
"Printshop, London."

Telephones:
National—
5800 Holborn
(2 lines.)

Printers of "TRUTH" and 50 other Newspapers

"Truth" Foreign Hotel List and Business Guide.

BADEN-BADEN.—HOTEL MINERVA. Fst.-cl. fmly. hotel. Lichtenthal-Alee. Btfl. ige. pk. Open-air restau. Rooms with bath.

BASLE.—THREE KINGS HOTEL. The unique, beautiful quiet pos. on the Rhine. Universal rep. L. A. BOSSI, late Gd. H., Territe.

BLANKENBERGH (Belgium).—KURSAAL HOTEL. 1st-class, leading pos. on beach. Large restaurant, ex. cooking. Mod. comf.

COLOGNE.—EXCELSIOR HOTEL ERNST. The newst. and most up-to-date hotel in town. The same prop. as Baur au Lac, Zurich.

COLOGNE.—HOTEL DISCH. First-class leading hotel. Patronised by Eng. and Amer. New bath suites. Mod. charges.

COPENHAGEN.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class. Leading hotel. Up to date. Connected with Carlton and Ritz hotels.

DRESDEN.—HOTEL BELLEVUE. The leading Hotel, pat. by Eng. & Amer. soc. All latest improvs. R. RONNEFELD, Gen. Man.

DRESDEN.—GRAND UNION HOTEL. Nearest first-class Hotel to Cen. Stn., open location, Grdn. on front & back, mod. terms.

DRESDEN.—SENDIG HOTEL. Europaischer Hof. First-class. Sendig Hotels Schandau, Nurn., Wies., are all of best reputation.

DUSSELDORF.—HOTEL ROYAL. Thoroughly first-class. Aprts. & single rms. with baths. H. Hengst. Dr., prev. H. Europe, Hamburg

FLORENCE.—HOTEL MINERVA. Quiet and central. Patronised by English and Americans.—G. CANDRION, Proprietor.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL REGINA ET VICTORIA. First-class. Every modern comfort. Lately improved and redecorated

CHEMISTS.—H. ROBERTS & CO. English and American chemists. Via Tornabuoni, 17.

HAMBURG.—LLOYD-HOTEL. The nearest first-cl. hotel, facing Cen. Stn. (Townside). Every mod. comft. Lge. Restnt. Terms. mod.

TAILOR.—HERMANN JAHN. 8-10, Schmiedestrasse. First-class Eng. and Amer. Tailor. Perfect fit. Finest English Goods in Stock.

HEIDELBERG. — SCHLOSS HOTEL. HOTEL BELLEVUE. Leading hotels near Castle ruins. Unique position, splendid views. All latest improvements.

HOMBURG (Bath).—RITTERS PARK HOTEL. The leading hotel. Patronised by Eng. and Amer. society. New building opened this season.—C. RITTER.

INNSBRUCK.—JACOB ZINK, Karl Strasse 13, First-class Gent's Tailor, also sporting Outfits.

INTERLAKEN.—HOTEL BEAU-SITE. English family hotel, near central station and steamboat landing. Quiet position. Splendid views. Large garden. Modern comforts. Terms moderate.—J. WURTH, Proprietor.

LAUSANNE.—ALEXANDRA GRAND HOTEL. First class. Most up-to-date. Splendid view on the Lake and Mountains.

LAUSANNE.—CARLTON HOTEL. Splendid sit. Close to English church. Mod. comfort, moderate charges.—H. MULLER, Pr.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL VICTORIA. The nearest first-class family hotel to the Rly. Station. Newly built, up-to-date every respect.

TAILORS.—KOCH & RIEBEL. High-class English Tailors, 17, Boulevard de Grancy, Lausanne.

LOCARNO (Lake Maggiore).—THE GRAND HOTEL. Open the whole year. Best resort on the Italian lakes. Also winter season.

LOCARNO.—HOTEL DU PARC. The most modern family hotel. The favourite residence for English families.

LUCERNE.—GRAND HOTEL NATIONAL. Hotel de Luxe.

LUGANO.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. Fst.-clss. Unrvld. pstn., with lfst. imprvmnts. Htl. faces Eng. ch.—Pr., P. BROCCA.

LUGANO.—SEEGER'S HOTEL & Boarding House. First-class. large shdy. grdn. charming view, lake, mountains & town. Mod. terms.

MAINZ.—HOTEL DE HOLLAND. The leading family Hotel, facing landing of steamers, overlooking the Rhine and Mountains.

MERAN (S. Tyrol).—HOTEL FRAU EMMA. New, first-cl., finst. vw., comf.; same owner Htl. Wildsee Prags, Pusertaler Dolomiten.

MILAN.—HOTEL DE LA VILLE. Fst.-cl., nr. Cathedral. Post, Telegraph, & Rly. Offices in hotel. Centl. Heating suites with baths.

MONTREUX (Territet), Switz.—GD HOTEL & ALPES Well known rendezvous of Eng. and Amer. clientele.—A. AHLBURG, Dr.

MONTREUX.—GRAND HOTEL EDEN. First-class. Built 1905. Unrvld. position overlooking Lake & Alps. Close to Kursaal. Patronsd. by English & Americans. Garage. Own park.—FALLEGGER WYRSCH, Prop.

MONTREUX (Territet).—GRAND HOTEL EXCELSIOR AND BON-PORT. Fav. Eng. house. Apmts. with baths. Most sheltd. pos.—L. BARONI, Mgr.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL NATIONAL. First-class Ideal English Winter Hotel Newly renovated. R. TURNER, new Manager.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL DE L'EUROPE. First-class Eng. fmly. htl. Rnt y. enlgd. Mod. tms.—Madam BETTSCHEN, Prtress.

MUNICH.—HOTEL ENGLISCHER HOF. First-class. Finest pos. Opp. P.O., Roy. T., Roy. P. H & c. water running each room.

NAPLES.—PARKER'S HOTEL. The English and most comfortable; splendid view of bay; enlarged and redecorated.

NAPLES.—EXCELSIOR HOTEL. Hotel de Luxe.

CHEMISTS.—H. ROBERTS & CO. English and American chemists. Via Vittoria, 21-22.

NICE.—TERMINUS HOTEL. Only first-cl. htl., opp. stn. Branch houses: HOTEL SUEDE & HOTEL BERNE. Vacuum cleaner.

TAILOR.—F. MacGOWAN. English and American Tailor for Ladies and Gentlemen. Established 1879. 19, Avenue de la Gare, NICE.

OSTEND.—HOTEL DU LITTORAL. First-class family hotel, facing the sea. The most select in every respect.

OSTEND.—CONTINENTAL & SPLENDID HOTELS Leading on beach. 400 beds ea. Hotel de Plage is htl. & restau. de luxe.

OUCHY-LAUSANNE.—HOTEL DU CHATEAU. The only first-class hotel close to landing of steamers. Beautiful view. Most comfortable.

PARIS.—HOTEL DE L'ATHENEE, Rue Scribe. One of the leading hotels.—E. AMBRUSTER, Manager-Proprietor.

PARIS.—HOTEL MEURICE. Rue de Rivoli (opposite Tuileries Gardens). "The Hotel de Famille de Grand Luxe."

PARIS.—HOTEL St. JAMES & ALBANY, opposite Tuileries. Favourite rdvous. of Eng. & Amrns.—Pr.-Mgr., A. LERCHE.

PARIS.—HOTEL MONTANA. (Avenue De L'Opera). Up to date, with all latest and modern improvements.

ROME.—EXCELSIOR HOTEL. Hotel de Luxe.

ROME.—HOTEL QUIRINAL. First-class. Sit. on famous Via Nazionale. Up to date in every respect.—BUCHER-DURRER, Prop.

CHEMISTS.—H. ROBERTS & CO. English and American chemists. Corso Umberto 417-418.

ST. MORITZ.—THE BELVEDERE. English Family House, residential quarter, numerous suites of rooms with baths.

ST. MORITZ.—PALACE HOTEL. The most fashionable. Baths with suites of rooms.—Prop., CASPAR BADRUTT'S ERBEN.

TRIBERG (Black Forest). — SCHWARZWALD HOTEL and KURHAUS WALDLUST. First-class leading hotels. Near the waterfall, and the great forest.

VIENNA.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Kärntnerring next to the Opera. The most leading hotel in the town. Own fishing and shooting.

VIENNA.—MATSCHAKERHOF. I., Seilergasse 6. Pat. by the Austro-Hun. Nobility. Spity. Vienna gd. cookg. Best wines. Shoot & fish

TAILOR.—JOHANN MANNINGER. I. Krugerstrasse 5. High-class Tailor. Latest fashion, perfect fit.

WIESBADEN. — FOUR SEASONS HOTEL and BATHS.—Finest pstn., opp. Kurhaus and Opera. Own mineral spring.

WIESBADEN.—HOTEL NASSAU. The English home, with magnificent bathing & medical estabint. Situated at the Curplace.

WIESBADEN.—PALACE HOTEL and BATHS. Up-to-date family hotel. Every room with tel. and running h. and c. water.

TAILOR.—JEAN MARTIN. Langgasse 41, Gents' Tailor. First class and perfect fit guaranteed.

WURZBURG.—HOTEL RUSSISCHER HOF. First-class fmly. hotel. Every mod. comm. GEO. OTT, Man. Dir. Pur. to the Roy.

ZURICH.—HOTEL BAUR AU LAC. Latest improvements. The same proprietor as Excelsior Hotel Ernst, Cologne.

ZURICH.—DOLDER, THE GD. HOTEL, May 15 to October 15. The WALDHAUS open all year, quietest position, finest view.

ZURICH.—GRAND HOTEL VICTORIA. First-class family hotel, facing station, open all the year. Pat. by English & Americans

ZURICH.—HOTEL & PENSION EDEN AU LAC. New comf. family hotel facing the Lake. Up-to-date in every respect.

Foreign Pensions.

BAD NAUHEIM.—ELEONOREN-HOSPIZ. First-class fmly. hse. at the Kurpark close to the bth-hses. Mod. prices. Open all yr.

BRUSSELS.—Miss POOLE, PENSION des ANGLAIS, 83, Rue Leshroussart (Avenue Louise). Fst. cl. Every comf. Excel. cooking.

DRESDEN.—PEN. WILLKOMMEN, Sedanstrasse6. Fst.-cl. Best & healthst. pos. Only pen. entirely for ladies. H. HARNISCH Pr.

DRESDEN.—PENSION KEMPF. Sedanstrasse 3. Eng. & Amer. visitors will find here a comfortable home & excellent cooking.

DRESDEN.—PENSION DONATH, Lüttichau Strasse, corner Struve-Strasse, near Central Station, Theatres, and Gallery. Comfortable, up to date. H. COLLIN, Prop.

FREIBURG (Black Forest).—PENSION UTZ INTERNATIONALE.—First-class fam. pen. Fine position. Excellent cuisine. Modern comfort. Moderate terms. Reduction for families.—Frau L. UTZ.

HAMBURG.—PENSION ALSTERUFER. Alsterufer 7. Fst-cl., fine pos., fcg. Alster, new. fur. Every mod. com. Best ckg. Nice gdn.

HAMBURG.—PENSION GUTMANN. Alte Raben. strasse 10. Harvestehude. Fst. cl. Most select position. Modern comfor.

HAMBURG.—KLOPSTOCK PEN. Klopstockstrasse 2. 2 min. from Damintor Ry. Stn. Rooms with or without pen. Excel. cookg.

LAUSANNE.—PENSION SEILER. First-class, finest part, nr. Eng. Church. Most up to date & comf.—H. SEILER-WINTON, Pr.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL PENSION EDEN. First-class family house, fine pos. Every modern comfort. Very moderate terms.

LUCERNE.—PENSION VILLA MARIA. First-cl. fmly. hse., select, charm. psn. overl. lake & mntns. Every mod. comf. Terms mod.

MUNICH.—PENSION PFANNER, 2 Finkenstrasse. Fst.-cl. fam. pen., cent. pstn., ex. cuisine, cent. heatg. FRAU PFANNER, Pr.

MUNICH.—PENSION WAGNER, Akademiestr. 9. Opp. Kunstakademie. Eleg. fur., baths, mod. tms. Fr. MARIA WAGNER, Pr.

NAPLES.—PENSION BAKER, 10, Via Caracciolo. The leadg. English pension, fine sit., facg. bay, magnificent view of Vesuvius.

ROME.—PENSION CARGILL, Via Collino 23.—Select, com. fam. pens., quiet sit.; lofty, sunny rooms.—Eng. Prs., Miss CARGILL.

VIENNA.—PENSION HIGH LIFE. I. Rosenbursenstrasse 4. Cen. pos., close G.P.O., Prater, & Exhibition. Newly fur. Every mod. com.

VIENNA.—PENSION TRIS. I. Laurenzberg 1. Opposite G.P.O. Newly furnished Rooms, with or without Pension; good cooking.

WIESBADEN.—PENSION ANGLAISE, Sonnenbergerstrasse, 37. Est. 1880. First-class, near Kochbrunnen, Kurhouse, and opposite Park. All modern comfort.

WIESBADEN.—PENSION VILLA RUPPRECHT, Sonnenberger Str. 17, opposite Kurpark and Kurhouse. First-class. Thermal bath. Prop. FRAU DR. RUPPRECHT.

HOLY LAND AND EGYPT.

A LIMITED PARTY will leave London on Oct. 4th, visiting:

Paris, Marseilles, Naples, Athens, Constantinople, Beyrout, Baalbek, Damascus, Tiberias, Sea of Galilee, Nazareth, Haifa, Nablus, Jerusalem, Jerico, Dead Sea, The Jordan, Bethany, Mount of Olives, Bethlehem, Jaffa, Cairo, The Pyramids and Sphinx, Alexandria, etc.

NO HORSEBACK RIDING NECESSARY.

Inclusive Fare, £100. First Class throughout

The visit to Jerusalem has been timed to enable members to witness the Consecration of the enlargement of St. George's Collegiate Church.

THOMAS COOK and SON, Ludgate Circus, London, E.C., and Branch Offices.

PLEASURE CRUISE.

SELECT CRUISE BY OCEAN STEAMER,

Leaving Marseilles Oct. 13th, visiting

SICILY, ASIA MINOR, TURKEY, GREECE, ITALY.

24 Days - 20 Guineas.

Illustrated Programmes free.

THOS. COOK & SON, LUDGATE CIRCUS, LONDON, and Branch Offices

"Truth" Hotel List.

BELFAST.—GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL.—The Finest Hotel in Ireland. 200 rooms. Electric light throughout. Passenger lifts to all floors. Magnificent public rooms and suites of private apartments. Most central position. Very moderate tariff. Omnibuses from Hotel attend all steamers and trains. Telegrams, "Grand Central, Belfast."

BEN RHYDDING HYDRO HOTEL, Wharfedale, Yorkshire. 500 ft. alt. On the edge of the Moor. Home farm. Bracing air, lovely scenery. 9-Hole Golf Course, adjoining grounds, free to visitors. Fine new Lounge. JOS. I. KIRBY, Managing Director.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors. GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

DUBLIN. — HOTEL METROPOLE, SACKVILLE STREET (next General Post Office). Convenient for Railways, Steamers, and Amusements. Modern and luxurious. Electric Light and Passenger Lift. Sanitation officially certified. High-class Restaurant attached. Moderate Tariff. Descriptive matter on application to the Manager.

GLASGOW.—WINDSOR HOTEL.—A First-class Family Hotel. PATRONISED BY ROYALTY. Excellent cuisine. Every Modern Comfort and Luxury. Electric Light. Passenger Lift. CENTRAL POSITION, WITHOUT NOISE OR TRAFFIC. MODERATE TERMS. A. M. THIEM, Proprietor, also at Hydro., Peebles.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position. Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER, & CO., Colonial House, Water Street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

LIVERPOOL.—EXCHANGE STATION HOTEL.
Owned and Managed by the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co.
NEAREST FIRST-CLASS HOTEL TO THE LANDING STAGE.
Telegraphic Address: "Station Hotel, Liverpool."

LONDON.—WELLINGTON HOUSE, BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W. — The Ideal RESIDENTIAL HOTEL. Delightful combination of hotel life and private flats. Self-contained suites. Récherché Restaurant; magnificent public rooms. Valeting, attendance, light, baths, inclusive. No extra charges. 2341 Vict. W. M. NEFZGER, Gen. Man.

MALVERN has more landscape beauties and the most invigorating air in the Kingdom. Only 2½ hours from Paddington. THE IMPERIAL HOTEL faces due South and the famous hills. Every comfort at moderate charges. Cheerful lounge, electric light, garage and pit. Brine baths as at Droitwich. Vichy massage, douches, and hydrobaths. For tariff apply to the Resident Prop., F. MOERSCHELL.

MARGATE.—WHITE HART HOTEL.
Most picturesque position. Every comfort, no ostentation.
All English meat and poultry. No gas stoves. Reasonable terms.
Original Headquarters Auto. Club, also Motor Union.
Address, Proprietor.

MARGATE.—NAYLAND ROCK HOTEL.
Old established for families and gentlemen. Premier position. 20 yards from and facing sea. Nearest hotel to golf links. Noted cuisine. Vintage wines. En pension and à la carte. Wedding receptions. Special dinners. Illustrated tariff. T. E. FORMAN, Proprietor.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely new Management. New Sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
W. WORSTER, Manager.

DUNBLANE HYDROPATHIC
(PHILP'S), PERTHSHIRE.

A Noted Health Resort, sheltered from East Winds. Most Comfortable Modern House and Lovely Grounds. First-class Catering. Electric Light and Elevator. Excellent Entertainments. Golf Free.
Terms, including Turkish and other Baths, from £2 19s. 6d.
Electrical Treatment by Resident Physician.
For Illustrated Prospectuses apply to Manager.

GLENBURN HYDROPATHIC,
ROTHESAY.

Climate mild and equable. Marine Scenery unsurpassed. Modern House, most Comfortably Furnished, and Beautiful Grounds. First-class Catering. Electric Light. Elevator. Sea Water, Turkish, and other Baths. 18-Hole Golf Course.
Terms, including Turkish and other Baths, from £2 16s.
For Illustrated Prospectuses apply to Manager.

MATLOCK BATH "The Switzerland of England"
ROYAL HOTEL AND BATHS
High-Class Residential Spa.

ORCHESTRA. Telegraphic Address: "ROYAL." Telephone: 193.

PEEBLES HOTEL HYDROPATHIC.

SUMPTUOUSLY APPOINTED. Magnificent Situation. Charming Scenery. GOLF, 18-Hole Course near. MOTORS. Outdoor Games. Complete HYDRO and ELECTRIC BATHS. Resident Physician. Send for Illustrated Tariff.
A. M THIEM, Resident Director.

TORQUAY.—GRAND HOTEL.

MOST MODERN, BEST EQUIPPED. UNIQUE POSITION, FACING BAY AND CHANNEL. UNRIVALLED VIEWS. SOUTH ASPECT. NEAREST STATION AND SEA. ELECTRIC LIGHT & LIFT. GARAGE.

THE FAMOUS BROMO-IODINE CURES.
WOODHALL SPA. VICTORIA HOTEL.
Pump-room in Hotel grounds. Famous Bromo-Iodine Waters and Baths for Rheumatism, Gout, Neuritis, etc. Wonderful results. Charming gardens. Golf, Tennis, Croquet. Tariff of Manager.

Charities approved by the Editor of "Truth."

"There is Sorrow on the Sea."

THE SHIPWRECKED
FISHERMEN AND
MARINERS'
ROYAL BENEVOLENT
SOCIETY.

Over 600,000 Persons Relieved since its foundation in 1839.

By this National Organisation and its Local Representatives everywhere—

The Shipwrecked are instantly cared for on the spot and sent home.
The Widow and Orphan are immediately sought out and succoured.
The Mariner and Fisherman are encouraged to exercise thrift by becoming beneficiary members.

Funds are Urgently Needed.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

26, SUFFOLK STREET, PALL MALL EAST, LONDON, S.W.

---

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES

TRAIN BOYS AND GIRLS

FOR THE EMPIRE.

72,000 Children rescued in 44 years.
9,000 always in residence.
300 in training for the Navy.

Head Offices: 18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

---

Hospital for Consumption

and Diseases of the Chest,

BROMPTON.

Sanatorium and Convalescent Home
nr. FRIMLEY, SURREY.

Greatly Needs Help.

436 BEDS NOW OCCUPIED.

£30,000 required annually from voluntary sources.

The Committee of King Edward's Hospital Fund "view with special satisfaction the work done at the Sanatorium at Frimley." FREDERICK WOOD, Secretary.

---

134 Beds.

The Queen's Hospital for Children.

Always Full.

Hackney Road, E.

Patron: H.M. QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY.
(Late North-Eastern Hospital for Children.)

HELP URGENTLY NEEDED.

Expenditure, £12,000 per annum. Endowed Income, £320.
1,900 In-Patients and 30,000 Out-Patients annually.

CAREFUL SYSTEM OF ENQUIRY IN FORCE.
TRAINED LADY ALMONER EMPLOYED.

T. GLENTON-KERR, Secretary.

---

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED. £40 Annually will support a cot, £1,000
Names a Cot FOR EVER.

HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN
GREAT ORMOND STREET, W.C.
President: The Duke of Fife, K.T. Chairman: Arthur Lucas, Esq.

THE FIRST & LARGEST CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL in the BRITISH EMPIRE.

E. S. Johnson, Secretary.

---

THE PROVIDENT
SURGICAL APPLIANCE
SOCIETY,

For Supplying Cripples in all parts of the United Kingdom with Artificial Limbs and Surgical appliances. Established 1872.

President—THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DERBY.

The Benevolent Public are respectfully asked to support this useful Provident Charity because—

1.—It Benefits over 9,000 Cripples annually throughout the Kingdom, without regard to age, race, or creed.
2.—It gives a maximum of aid with a minimum of trouble to those who are unable, owing to their condition, to canvass for Letters of Recommendation.
3.—It assists the provident artisans as well as the very poor.
4.—It stands urgently in need of greater help to carry on its work.
5.—It is entirely supported by Voluntary Contributions.

Treasurer—THOMAS WHITEMORE CHANT, Esq.
Bankers—LLOYDS BANK, Limited, London.
Secretary—J. SLATER SPENCE, Esq., 12, Finsbury Circus, E.C.

---

CHURCH OF ENGLAND
WAIFS & STRAYS SOCIETY.

Patron of the Children's Union: H.M. QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

Patron: H.M. THE KING.

107 HOMES Including 3 FARM HOMES and 5 CRIPPLES' HOMES.

Over 15,000 Children have been rescued 4,100 being cared for.

HELP GREATLY NEEDED.

Secretary: Rev. E. de M. RUDOLF.
Offices: Old Town Hall, Kennington, London, S.E.
Bankers: Lloyds Bank, Ltd.
A WORK OF NATIONAL IMPORTANCE.

---

Patron—His Majesty THE KING.

WILL YOU HELP
THE RAGGED SCHOOL UNION AND SHAFTESBURY SOCIETY

to comfort, counsel, and care for the Poor and Crippled Children?

CONTRIBUTIONS URGENTLY NEEDED.

Report giving Balance Sheets and full information gladly sent on application.

SIR JOHN KIRK, Secretary,
32, John Street, Theobald's Road, London, W.C.

Charities approved by the Editor of "Truth."

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President—THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN, P.C., G.C.M.G.

THE SURGICAL AID SOCIETY.

This Society, established 1862, supplies Spinal Supports, Leg Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Surgical Appliances, Elastic Stockings, Trusses, and every description of mechanical support to the poor without limit as to locality or disease.

39,204 Appliances given year ending September, 1909. Average over 750 per week.

Water Beds, Invalid Chairs, and Couches are lent to the Afflicted upon the Recommendation of Subscribers.

SUBSCRIPTIONS and DONATIONS are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay & Co., Ltd., Lombard-street, or by the Secretary, at the Offices of the Society, Salisbury-square, London, E.C.

RICHARD G. TRESIDDER, Secretary.

TYPEWRITERS

BOUGHT, SOLD, REPAIRED, OR EXCHANGED.
Hire 10/- Month, or 27/6 per Quarter.

MSS. Copied. TAYLOR'S TYPEWRITER CO., Ltd.,
Dept. T, 74, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

FREE FOR A POSTCARD!

A postcard will bring to you H. Samuel's large Catalogue, every page of which describes many opportunities for saving on your Watch and Jewellery purchases. Write now for this splendid Free Book of

3,000 SPECIAL BARGAINS!

These are typical instances of H. SAMUEL'S REMARKABLE VALUES.

GENTS' GOLD ALBERTS AND LADIES' GOLD GUARDS, 25/-. HANDSOME DRESS WATCHES from 17/6, &c.

Handsome 18-ct. GOLD CLAW RING, set with Diamonds and Rubies or Sapphires 37/6

Handsome Oxydised WRISTLET WATCH, 10/6
Silver Lever WRISTLET WATCH, 21/-
Magnificent GOLD WATCH BRACELET, £5 5 0

WRITE NOW!

Every purchase carries the value-guarantee of a full month's trial. Write to-day!

H. SAMUEL.
Market Street, MANCHESTER.
Chief London Branch, 17 Strand, W.C.

DISEASED BLOOD

POISONS THE WHOLE SYSTEM.

Eczema, Scrofula, Abscesses, Bad Legs, Ulcers, Tumours, Boils, Glandular Swellings, Sores, Eruptions, Rheumatism, Gout, &c., are due solely to a diseased state of the blood and can only be permanently cured by thoroughly driving out the impurities. For cleansing the blood of all impure matter from whatever cause arising there is no medicine to equal CLARKE'S BLOOD MIXTURE, that's why in so many cases it has effected remarkable cures where all other treatments have failed. CLARKE'S BLOOD MIXTURE has over 45 years' reputation and the proprietors solicit all sufferers to give it a trial to test its value. Of all Chemists, 2/9 & 11/- per bottle.

REFUSE ALL SUBSTITUTES.

CLARKE'S BLOOD MIXTURE.

CURES ALL
SKIN AND BLOOD DISEASES.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER LTD

By Royal Warrant.

IRISH LINEN

World Renowned for Quality & Value

Linen produced in our own Looms at Banbridge, Co. Down, is excellent in quality and reasonable in price.

Irish Household Linen.

Dinner Napkins, ¾ × ¾ yard, 5/6 doz. Table Cloths, 2½ × 3 yards, 5/11 each. Linen Sheets, 2 × 3 yards, 13/6; Hemstitched, 15/11 per pair. Linen Pillow Cases, frilled, 1/4½ each.

Irish Handkerchiefs.

Ladies' Linen Hemstitched Handkerchiefs, 2/11 doz. Gentlemen's Linen Hemstitched Handkerchiefs, 5/3 doz.

Irish Collars and Shirts.

Four-fold Collars from 4/11 doz. Dress Shirts, "Matchless Quality," 5/11 each. Old Shirts re-fitted with new bands, fronts, and cuffs, 14/- half doz.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

49 W, Donegall Place BELFAST
Also London and Liverpool.

LINOLA

Regd

The most luxurious economical floor covering IN THE WORLD.

Samples, prices, and book of designs post free from CATESBYS, Dept. 12, 64-67, Tottenham Ct. Rd., London, W.

CAN YOU AFFORD

to insult your friends by writing to them on inferior paper? Why not pay them a compliment, and give pleasure to yourself by writing upon the best the World produces, for style, quality, finish and general excellence, at 1/- per box.

HIERATICA
NOTE PAPER

SAMPLES FREE ON APPLICATION TO
HIERATICA WORKS,
Hill St., Finsbury, E.C.

Channel Crossing, Sea-Sickness.

Mr. Labouchere, in Truth, writes:—"The only remedy is my trusty 'YANATAS.' It absolutely prevents sea-sickness." On sale at all Chemists', 2/9; by post (3d. extra) from STARKIE, Chemist, Trafalgar Square, W.C.

The only Proved Remedy. Established 15 years.

Goddard's For Cleaning Silver, Electro-Plate &c.
Sold everywhere 1/- 2/6 & 4/6
Plate Powder.

Wolsey

PURE WOOL UNDERWEAR
REPLACED FREE IF IT SHRINKS.

The Rhodesia Exploration and Development Company, LIMITED.

The following is a résumé of a circular issued to the shareholders of the Rhodesia Exploration and Development Company, Limited, and also forwarded to the Shareholders of the Rhodesian Abercorn Shamva Trust Company, Limited, The Rhodesian Banket Company, Limited, The Etna Development Company, Limited, and The Gold Schists of Rhodesia, Limited.

Negotiations which have for some time past been in progress with the Boards of the Rhodesian Abercorn Shamva Trust Company, Limited, the Rhodesian Banket Company, Limited, the Etna Development Company, Limited, and the Gold Schists of Rhodesia, Limited, have resulted in the formulation of a scheme for the acquisition by this Company of the respective undertakings of the Companies named as from the 1st September, 1910.

In order to carry this scheme into effect it will be necessary to increase the capital of the Rhodesia Exploration and Development Company, Limited, from the present amount of £450,000 to £2,000,000 by the creation of 1,550,000 new shares of £1 each. Of the new shares to be created, it is proposed to allocate to the various companies whose assets are to be acquired:—

Seven fully-paid shares for each ten shares of the Rhodesian Banket Company, Limited.

One fully-paid share for each two shares of the Etna Development Company, Limited.

Four fully-paid shares for each five shares of the Rhodesian Abercorn Shamva Trust Company, Limited, and

One fully-paid share for each two shares of the Gold Schists of Rhodesia, Limited.

Thus, if the undertakings of all the four last-named Companies are acquired, taking into account the number of shares of the acquired Companies, which are, or, as the result of the amalgamation, will become the property of the Rhodesia Exploration and Development Company, Limited, the number of shares of this Company to be issued by way of consideration will be as follows:—

| | No. of Shares. |
|---|---|
| To the Rhodesian Banket Company, Limited ... | 288,788 |
| To the Etna Development Company, Limited ... | 96,760 |
| To the Rhodesian Abercorn Shamva Trust Company, Limited ... ... ... ... ... | 203,034 |
| To the Gold Schists of Rhodesia, Limited ... | 203,350 |
| Total ... ... ... ... ... | 791,932 |

As further consideration for the acquisition of the above undertakings, this Company will assume the liabilities and pay all expenses incidental to the liquidation of the acquired Companies and the transfer of their assets.

It is proposed, as soon as the acquisition of the assets of the Companies mentioned shall have been carried into effect, to issue about 250,000 of the remaining new shares of the Rhodesia Exploration and Development Company, Limited, at the price of £2 5s. per share, and these shares will be offered for subscription to the then existing Shareholders (including the Shareholders of the four amalgamating Companies who, under the scheme, become shareholders of this Company) in the proportion of one new share for each five shares held. This issue, which will be guaranteed by Mr. Abe Bailey, of Johannesburg, free of commission, will provide approximately £560,000, thus bringing up the working capital to about £1,600,000.

In arriving at the basis of amalgamation, your Board, as also the respective Boards of the other amalgamating Companies, have endeavoured, and they believe successfully, to treat the shareholders of each of the companies with absolute fairness, having regard both to the current market quotations and the value of the assets contributed to the amalgamation.

The Rhodesia Exploration and Development Company will, as the result of the acquisition of the assets of the Companies mentioned, and the subscription of the shares proposed to be issued, have aggregate resources in cash, loans, and realisable shares of about £3,000,000 at present values, and, further, will hold approximately 325,000 acres of land, mainly situated in the best farming districts of Rhodesia; about 3,500 mining claims; buildings and stands in Buluwayo, Salisbury, etc.; and other important interests, some of which are held jointly with other companies.

The Board have in contemplation the acquisition of other interests which will still further strengthen the position of the Company.

It is, perhaps, unnecessary to emphasise the importance of centralisation of control such as that which is embodied in the proposed consolidation. Of late years, this principle in its application to mining ventures has received general recognition, and has yielded conspicuously successful results. Your Board have no doubt that not only will economy and efficiency be promoted in the present instance, but that there are peculiar reasons why a departure such as now contemplated should be made in relation to Rhodesia, which will have the benefit of a powerful fostering element similar to that which has hitherto so much assisted progress on the Witwatersrand. Indications are distinctly in favour of Rhodesia becoming an important producing goldfield, and the possession of ample funds will enable mining propositions to be developed with efficiency and expedition. Moreover, a powerful corporation, such as that which is in contemplation, will have exceptional facilities for acquiring new mining ventures and disposing of properties to subsidiary companies as development work proves them to be of value.

NEWMAN AND OXFORD STREET

FURNITURE AND ANTIQUE DEPOSITORIES, Ltd.,

92, 93, 94, NEWMAN STREET, OXFORD STREET, W.

One Door from Oxford St., 3 Minutes from Tottenham Court Rd. and Regent St., and adjoining all the Principal Tubes. 'Phone—1307 Central.

SALE of SECOND-HAND FURNITURE.

Below we give a few of the Bargains which can be obtained.

BEDROOM FURNITURE.

| | £ s. d. |
|---|---|
| 3 White Enamelled BEDROOM SUITES | 4 5 0 |
| Oak SUITE, with large Wardrobe | 4 10 0 |
| Satinwood BEDROOM SUITE, with 2 doors to Wardrobe and Cheval Glass to Dressing Table | 6 10 0 |
| Walnut BEDROOM SUITE | 6 15 0 |
| Sheraton-style BEDROOM SUITE | 8 5 0 |
| Another Sheraton-style BEDROOM SUITE, fully inlaid | 12 5 0 |
| 5ft. Inlaid Sheraton Design BEDROOM SUITE | 15 15 0 |
| An Inlaid BEDROOM SUITE | 18 18 0 |
| 6ft. Inlaid BEDROOM SUITE | 25 0 0 |
| Chippendale Design BEDROOM SUITE, cost 150gns. | 50 0 0 |
| Mahogany WASHSTAND, with marble tray top and mahogany Towel Airer | 0 18 0 |
| A Gent.'s 4ft. 6in. Mahogany WARDROBE, with four sliding trays, enclosed by a pair of bevelled plate doors | 7 10 0 |
| 6ft. Walnut BEDROOM SUITE | 20 0 0 |
| 4ft. White Enamelled BEDROOM SUITE | 9 9 0 |
| 7ft. 6in. Walnut Wing WARDROBE, centre fitted tray, shelves, and drawers, enclosed by silvered glass door, the ends with sliding pegs, bonnet pan and drawer, enclosed by bevelled doors | 12 12 0 |
| 3ft. 6in. Walnut WASH TABLE, on standards and stretcher | 3 3 0 |
| 4ft. Mahogany WASHSTAND, with 2 drawers and platform under | 0 18 0 |
| 3ft. 7in. Mahogany CHEST OF DRAWERS with circular brass handles | 3 3 0 |
| 7ft. Spanish Mahogany break-front Wing WARDROBE | 11 11 0 |
| 7ft. Spanish Mahogany WARDROBE, fitted with trays, pegs, bonnet-box, and drawers, enclosed by 3 doors | 10 10 0 |
| 6ft. 6in. Spanish Mahogany WARDROBE, fitted with sliding trays | 10 10 0 |
| 7ft. BEDROOM SUITE | 26 5 0 |
| 4ft. Walnut hanging WARDROBE, enclosed by bevelled plate and silvered panel door | 4 4 0 |
| 6ft. Mahogany WARDROBE | 9 15 0 |

BEDSTEADS.

| | £ s. d. |
|---|---|
| 2 Plain Iron BEDSTEADS | 0 8 6 |
| 2 Black and Brass BEDSTEADS | 0 11 6 |
| 4ft. 6in. BEDSTEAD | 0 14 0 |
| 3 BEDSTEADS, in Fumed Oak | 0 14 6 |
| 4ft. 6in. BEDSTEAD, in Fumed Oak | 1 18 6 |
| 2 Inlaid BEDSTEADS, Sheraton Style | 3 3 0 |
| 4ft. 6in. BEDSTEAD, with massive brass rail | 1 2 6 |
| An Italian BEDSTEAD, 4ft. 6in. wid | 1 15 0 |
| An Italian BEDSTEAD, 4ft. 6in. wide | 2 10 0 |

| BEDSTEADS—Continued. | £ s. d. |
|---|---|
| A Pair of TWIN BEDSTEADS | 4 10 0 |
| An Italian All-Brass BEDSTEAD | 7 15 0 |
| A Pair TWIN BEDSTEADS, with square tubes | 7 7 0 |
| All-Brass Square Tube BEDSTEAD | 4 10 0 |
| 6 CAMP BEDSTEADS, each | 0 10 0 |
| 3ft. 6in. Brass FRENCH BEDSTEAD, with box spring | 1 18 0 |
| 3 Inlaid Sheraton Design BEDSTEADS, 3 ft. wide, each | 1 5 0 |
| 5ft. Square-Tube Solid Brass BEDSTEAD and Bedding | 15 15 0 |

DINING ROOM FURNITURE.

| | £ s. d. |
|---|---|
| A Most Magnificent Carved Oak DINING ROOM SUITE, upholstered in red leather | 9 9 0 |
| SIDEBOARD to match | 7 7 0 |
| OVERMANTEL to match | 2 10 0 |
| DINING TABLE to match | 2 2 0 |
| DINNER WAGON to match | 2 15 0 |
| Set of CHIPPENDALE CHAIRS, Exceptional Design | 15 15 0 |
| Chippendale-design SIDEBOARD | 12 12 0 |
| Set of QUEEN ANNE CHAIRS | 7 15 0 |
| QUEEN ANNE SIDEBOARD | 6 15 0 |
| DINING TABLE, with Queen Anne legs | 3 10 0 |
| OVERMANTEL | 1 15 0 |
| 2 CHESTERFIELDS | 3 3 0 |
| Fumed Oak SIDEBOARD | 3 10 0 |
| Fumed Oak DINING ROOM SUITE | 3 10 0 |
| Fumed Oak OVERMANTEL | 1 5 0 |
| 7ft. Carved Oak SIDEBOARD | 15 15 0 |
| 16ft. Carved Oak DINING TABLE | 8 8 0 |
| Set of 6 Spanish Mahogany-frame DINING ROOM CHAIRS | 4 4 0 |
| Set of 6 Spanish Mahogany-frame DINING ROOM CHAIRS | 2 18 6 |
| 7ft. Mahogany SIDEBOARD | 5 5 0 |
| SIDEBOARD | 9 15 0 |
| Walnut SIDEBOARD | 2 5 0 |
| 4ft. 6in. Oak SIDEBOARD | 4 10 0 |
| 5ft. Oak SIDEBOARD | 5 10 0 |
| Mahogany CARD TABLE, on Pillar and Claw | 1 5 0 |
| 8 Richly Carved Oak High-backed DINING ROOM CHAIRS, with Spring Seats, Stuffed Backs | 14 14 0 |
| 5ft. Massive Antique Oak DINING TABLE, and Stand for Leaves, opening to 16ft. | 5 5 0 |
| 6ft. 6in. Carved Oak BUFFET, with three Drawers in the frieze, covered below with panelled doors, masked enrichments and brass ring handles, the upper part with shelves enclosed by three doors | 12 12 0 |
| A Genuine Old Chippendale Mahogany CORNER CUPBOARD, with drawer above, and shelves enclosed by elliptic doors | 8 8 0 |
| 7ft. Pedestal SIDEBOARD, fitted 2 enclosed cupboards, 3 drawers in frieze, and mirror over | 5 5 0 |

| DINING ROOM FURNITURE—Continued. | £ s. d. |
|---|---|
| 5ft. Mahogany 3-tier DINNER WAGON, with tray top and castors | 1 15 0 |
| 3ft. Mahogany Square TABLE on Pillar and Claw | 1 1 0 |
| BOOKCASE, with Cupboards underneath | 2 2 0 |
| BOOKCASE in Solid Oak | 3 3 0 |
| 10 Club EASY CHAIRS from | 0 15 0 |
| CHESTERFIELD and 2 Divan EASYS, upholstered in Real Morocco | 23 2 0 |
| 2 SADDLEBAG SUITES | 4 15 0 |
| Very Massive SUITE, upholstered in Leatherette | 3 10 0 |
| Claw-Leg DINING TABLE in Fumed Oak | 3 3 0 |
| 3 OVERMANTELS from | 1 5 0 |
| Set of 6 Mahogany and Inlaid Brass CHAIRS, with Loose Seats, in crimson repp | 2 15 0 |

DRAWING ROOM FURNITURE.

| | £ s. d. |
|---|---|
| A Boudoir SUITE, Chippendale design, upholstered in Silk | 3 10 0 |
| High-low SUITE, upholstered in Silk Tapestry | 4 10 0 |
| A Sheraton-design SUITE, fully inlaid | 9 15 0 |
| Most Elaborate CHESTERFIELD SUITE, upholstered in Blue Silk Tapestry | 17 17 0 |
| Gilt Louis XIV. SUITE, upholstered in Silk Tapestry | 10 10 0 |
| Very Unique French Gilt SUITE, designed by Mons. Watteau, of Paris, richly upholstered in fine Parisian Silk | 24 0 0 |
| 21in. Ebonised WRITING CABINET, fitted with two drawers, the panels with China Plaques painted in Dutch figures | 5 5 0 |
| 6ft. Walnut CABINET, with Break front, with shelves and closed centre | 6 15 0 |
| An Indian Rosewood CIRCULAR TABLE | 1 12 6 |
| Chippendale-Design CABINET | 2 10 0 |
| Chippendale-Design CABINET | 3 10 0 |
| Sheraton-Design CABINET | 2 10 0 |
| Inlaid BUREAU, MAHOGANY BOOKCASE | 3 10 0 |
| Sheraton-Design BOOKCASE | 6 10 0 |
| 3 OCCASIONAL TABLES, from | 0 10 6 |
| 6 OCCASIONAL CHAIRS, from | 0 3 0 |
| Revolving BOOKCASE, with Encyclopædia Britannica, 24 volumes | 4 4 0 |
| Mahogany PORTFOLIO STAND | 0 10 0 |
| 6 STANDARD LAMPS | 0 8 6 |
| 8 CLOCKS from | 0 10 6 |
| 20 All-Brass KERB SUITES from | 0 8 0 |
| 2ft. 6in. Ebonised Inlaid DWARF CABINET | 2 5 0 |
| 7ft. BRACKET CABINET, fitted 2 cupboards with closed doors, exceptional quality | 3 3 0 |
| A Carved Frame EASY CHAIR in Genoa Velvet, spring and hair stuffed, on castors | 2 15 0 |

COUNTRY BUYERS, DEALERS, and those requiring good Second-hand Furniture should view the above at once without delay.
Goods can remain STORED FREE for TWELVE MONTHS. All Goods Packed Free and Delivered to your Door Free of Charge.
We will allow COUNTRY CLIENTS' FARES on all Orders from £30 and upwards.

The above can be seen any Day, from 9 till 9 (except Saturdays, when we close at 7 o'clock), at the

NEWMAN & OXFORD STREET FURNITURE & ANTIQUE DEPOSITORIES, Ltd.,

92, 93, 94, NEWMAN STREET, OXFORD STREET, W.

One Door from Oxford Street, 3 Minutes from Tottenham Court Road and Regent Street, and adjoining all the Principal Tubes. 'Phone—1307 Central.

£10,000 WORTH OF GENUINE SECOND-HAND FURNITURE ALWAYS ON VIEW.

CATALOGUES, NOW READY, CAN BE OBTAINED ON APPLICATION.

L. J. STEWART, Director

A MASTER KEY
of this size.

BRAMAH LOCKS

FOR ALL PURPOSES can be made to a Master Key in suites with subordinate keys for BUTLER, MAID or VALET, GARDENER, &c., &c., each suite independent of the other, but all opening to the MASTER KEY.

A choice selection of Despatch and Jewel Boxes, Travelling Requisites, strong and light, with real Bramah Locks, Steel Jewel Safes, &c., &c.

Illustrated Catalogues post free.

BRAMAH & CO.,

By Appointment to H.M. the King. Sole Makers of the Genuine BRAMAH LOCKS,

100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.

The HACKNEY FURNISHING Co. Ltd.

Parties Furnishing should visit their West-End Premises, situated in the finest position in London,

103 & 103a, OXFORD STREET, W.

Next door to Henry Heath's and facing Newman Street.

View our Model Flats.

Three Minutes from Tottenham Court Road and Regent Street.

Their New Galleries are acknowledged to be the most Artistic combined with Elegance in London.

Parties can Furnish on their Deferred Payment System as follows:—

GENERAL TERMS.

| Worth | Per Month | Worth | Month | Worth | Month | Worth | Month |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| £10 .. | £0 6 0 | £30 .. | £0 17 0 | £50 .. | £1 8 0 | £200 .. | £4 10 0 |
| £20 .. | £0 11 0 | £40 .. | £1 5 0 | £100 .. | £2 5 0 | £500 .. | £11 5 0 |

Free Life Insurance. Free Fire Insurance. No Security. No Deposit.

Head Offices } 1, 2, 3, 4, Town Hall Buildings. and Showrooms } 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, The Grove, adjoining Mare St., London, N.

Catalogues and full particulars post free.

A. M. Stewart, Managing Director.

EFFERVESCENCE PURELY NATURAL
MATTONI'S
GIESSHÜBLER
NATURAL
MINERAL TABLE WATER.
at all Chemists, Wine Merchants, Stores, Hotels, &c.
Sole Agents: INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd. LONDON, LIVERPOOL, BRISTOL.

GREAT SALE
OF Ladies' and Children's
WINCEY NIGHTDRESSES
At Messrs. COPLAND & LYE'S.

Ladies' Nightdresses.

Made of Fine Cream Scotch Wincey (a material which combines comfort with durability). Simple style, made with small collar edged with feather frills.

Full size, 9/11; Outsize, 11/9.

If by post, 4d. extra.

The same style of Nightdress may also be had with an edging on collar and cuffs of fine Torchon. Price 13/11.

Children's Cream Wincey Nightdresses.

In a full range of sizes, made in simple style with small collar edged with a feathered frill.

SIZES AND PRICES:—

| 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 5/11, | 6/6, | 6/11, | 7/6, | 7/11, | 8/6 | 9/6. |

Or if by post, 3d. each extra. To fit from 3 to 14 years.

SALE CATALOGUE POST FREE.

Carriage Paid in Britain on Orders of £1 and upwards. All Goods delivered free within 10 miles of Glasgow.

COPLAND & LYE,
Caledonian House, Sauchiehall Street, GLASGOW.

STAMMERING PERMANENTLY CURED. Adults and boys taken in residence or as daily pupils.—Booklet of particulars and testimonials from Mr. A. C. SCHNELLE, 119, Bedford Court Mansions, London, W.C.

Amusements.

GAIETY THEATRE.—Manager, MR. GEORGE EDWARDES. EVERY EVENING at 8, a Musical Play, OUR MISS GIBBS. Box-office open daily 10 till 10.

DALY'S THEATRE.—EVERY EVENING at 8.15, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES' Production, THE DOLLAR PRINCESS, a Musical Play. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY at 2.15. Box-office 10 to 10.

ST. JAMES'S. Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER, Sole Lessee and Manager.
Every Evening at 9.
THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST. By Oscar Wilde.
Mr. ALLAN AYNESWORTH
in his original part.
Preceded at 8.30 by A MAKER OF MEN, by Alfred Sutro.
MATINEE (both plays) EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2.30.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE. THE ARCADIANS.
EVERY EVENING at 8. MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2.
Lessee and Manager, ROBERT COURTNEIDGE.

VAUDEVILLE, STRAND.—Under the Management of Messrs. A. and S. GATTI. TO-NIGHT, at 8.30, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES' New Musical Production, THE GIRL IN THE TRAIN. MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2.30. Tel., 3815, Gerrard.

ALHAMBRA.—"FEMINA," GRAND BALLET, LEONORA, FAICO, BRITTA, CARMEN TURIA, FUJI TROUPE, OLYMPIA DESVALL, ON THE SANDS, JURY'S PICTURES, etc.
Evenings at 8. Managing Director, ALFRED MOUL.

EMPIRE.—"THE DANCING MASTER," FRED FARREN, PHYLLIS BEDELLS, etc. GEORGE MOZART, SYBIL ARUNDALE, CLARK and HAMILTON, and Specially Selected Varieties, etc.
Evenings at 8. Manager, Mr. H. J. HITCHINS.

PALACE.—MARGARET COOPER, NAT. M. WILLS, A WOMAN'S REVOLT, MARY GRAY, KAUFMANN TROUPE, SIX AMERICAN DANCERS, LES TROMBETTA, BIOSCOPE, &c.
EVENINGS at 8. MAT., FULL PROGRAMME, SAT., at 2.
Managing Director, Mr. ALFRED BUTT.

MASKELYNE AND DEVANT'S MYSTERIES, ST. GEORGE'S HALL, W.—DAILY at 3 and 8. New Holiday Programme. PSYCHO, Mr. Maskelyne's famous automaton. THE SCARAB, New Magical Farce. Mr. Archie Naish, Humour at the Piano. MEMORA, the Human Encyclopædia. Mr. Owen Clark with novel Magical Problems, etc., etc. Seats, 1s. to 5s. 'Phone, 1545 Mayfair.

Concerts.

PROMENADE CONCERTS, QUEEN'S HALL.
NIGHTLY, at eight.
THE QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA. Conductor—Mr. HENRY J. WOOD.
1s., 2s., 3s., 5s. ROBERT NEWMAN, Manager, 320, Regent Street.

Exhibition.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION. — Lifelike Portrait Models of the World's Most Famous Men and Women. Tableaux, Scenes, and other attractions. Cinematograph Performances throughout the day. Open 9 a.m. till 10 p.m.

PAQUIN, LIMITED,

The well-known Dressmakers, of 3, Rue de la Paix, Paris, and 39, Dover Street, Mayfair, GIVE NOTICE that owing to their TRADE MARK having been extensively COUNTERFEITED, they now change it periodically, and, for the protection of their Clients, beg to announce that the waistbands of all models issued during the Winter Season, 1910, will bear the name of "Paquin" in Capucine coloured letters on a white ground.

BACK TO NATURE

An Apple a day
Keeps the Doctor away.

DRINK 'CYDRAX' Sample 6d. Postage Free.

Made from the Juice of Choice Apples. Free from Preservatives. The Leading Abstainers recommend it.

H. Whiteway & Co., Ltd.
The Orchards, Whimple, Devon, and Albert Embankment, S.W.

MARKETING ABILITY.

. . Generally speaking the delicate work of Marketing Ability can be best left to Hapgoods. One side of our large Organisation is devoted to this work—the other being devoted to the finding of Men of Special Ability for Employers. We deal only with High-Grade Men capable of filling positions carrying salaries of £150 to £1,000 per annum. If you are such a man, write us to-day.

HAPGOODS Ltd., 167-168, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. Barton Arcade, 53, Deansgate, Manchester.

"TRUTH" DOLL AND TOY SHOW.

PRELIMINARY NOTICE.

It seems early days yet to be reminding my readers of an event which is still some months ahead. But the fact that some 4,000 of dolls have already arrived from the manufacturers, and are crying aloud for clothes, impels me to direct the attention of TRUTH'S lady friends to their condition, and to the fact that they will be required for exhibition at the Albert Hall in the middle of December, prior to distribution among the London Poor Law Schools and Hospitals.

I hope that many ladies will take pity on the poor dolls, and forward their applications as soon as possible. The usual prizes for the dressing of the dolls will, of course, be awarded after the Show.

HOME-MADE TOYS.

The exhibits in this class last year did not come up to expectations. This year special efforts will be made to stimulate amateur toy-makers to take part in the Competition. With that object in view the Editor of TRUTH has decided (assuming the entries warrant it) to give a Special Prize for

HOME-MADE DOLLS' HOUSES,

in addition to the usual Prizes offered in the Home-Made Toys Class.

He desires me now to direct particular notice to this, as he is of opinion that the making of Dolls' Houses is an art in which amateur talent is likely to find congenial scope for its exercise. Moreover, a Dolls' House is a peculiarly serviceable sort of plaything for children, both because it is one in the delights of which several can share simultaneously, and also because it is better able to withstand the wear and tear of daily use than smaller and more fragile toys.

A further and more detailed announcement of the Show will appear in due course. Meanwhile, let readers of TRUTH make a careful note of the date, which is Wednesday and Thursday, December 14 and 15, 1910.

"TRUTH" PUZZLES.

RULES.

1. The sum of £2 2s. will be given every week for the best EPIGRAM, CONUNDRUM, LIPOGRAM, BOUTS-RIMÉS, or whatever the announced subject of the competition for the week may be.

2. The Puzzle Editor reserves the right, however, of dividing the above sum between two or more competitors, or of withholding the prize, should exceptional circumstances render such a course desirable.

3. The decision and award of the Puzzle Editor must be considered final and irrevocable, and for obvious reasons no appeal from his critical judgments can be entertained.

4. In every instance the prize will be given in money, subject to no condition whatever, except the publication of the winner's real name and address in this Journal.

5. Competitors will be allowed eleven days for the composition and despatch of their efforts; but all such communications must, at the latest, be received at the TRUTH Office by the first post on the morning of the second Monday succeeding the publication of the subject for competition.

6. Not more than one Prize will be given a quarter to the same competitor.

7. ALL NEW CONTRIBUTORS ARE REQUIRED TO FORWARD WITH THEIR FIRST ANSWERS THEIR REAL NAMES AND ADDRESSES FOR REGISTRATION; such names and addresses will not be published except in the case of Prize-winners.

8. The nom-de-plume chosen by competitors should not exceed twelve, and must under no circumstances consist of more than fourteen, letters.

9. COMPETITORS MUST ON NO ACCOUNT CHANGE THE NOMS-DE-PLUME THEY HAVE ONCE ASSUMED.

10. On the announcement of the Prize-winner's nom-de-plume, the successful competitor must write and make formal application for the Prize, stating the address to which the cheque must be sent. Any competitor failing to do so within three months of winning the Prize will forfeit all claim to the same.

11. No communications can be received on post-cards, by telegraph, or by hand. They must all be sent by the time named above. All post letters addressed:—

PUZZLE EDITOR OF "TRUTH," CARTERET STREET, QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, S.W.

"TRUTH" PRIZE No. 1,640.

TRIUMPHAL ODES CELEBRATING THE VICTORY OF THE WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE BILL IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The Prize of Two Guineas in this competition is awarded to Piers Peniles, whose Ode was printed in TRUTH of August 10 last.

"TRUTH" PRIZE No. 1,641.

HUMOROUS ANECDOTES, ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE (SUPPOSED) EXAGGERATED BOASTFULNESS OF THE TYPICAL YANKEE.

The Prize of Two Guineas in this competition is equally divided between J. PEN and HYPATIA, whose anecdotes were printed in TRUTH of August 17 last.

NOTICE.

THE PRIZE AWARD IN THE SPECIAL ADVERTISEMENT COMPETITION WILL BE ANNOUNCED NEXT WEEK.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,647.

The English language—like all other languages—contains a large number of onomatopœic words—words, that is to say, the sound of which is expressive of the sense which they are intended to convey. To quote a few examples, the words "hiss," "mew" (of a cat), "bark" (of a dog), "rumble," "cough," "pewit," "cuckoo," "chuckle," etc., are all words of this character.

All onomatopœic words, however, are not equally expressive in sound. Some are considerably more so than others. And I think it might afford an interesting competition to invite my readers to apply their discriminating judgment to this question.

I, therefore, offer herewith the usual Prize of Two Guineas to that competitor who shall prove most successful in SUBMITTING A LIST OF THE SIX MOST EXPRESSIVELY ONOMATOPŒIC WORDS IN THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

For purposes of this competition, local and provincial words, provided they are in common use, will be accepted.

The Prize award will be determined by plébiscite.

No competitor may submit more than one list of six onomatopœic words, and all lists must reach TRUTH Office by the first post on Monday, September 19th.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name, with the address, of CUTHBERT, winner of £1 1s., in connection with TRUTH Prize No. 1634, is H. Cuthbert Scott, Esq., Twyford School, Winchester.

 The real name, with the address, of ECA, winner of 10s. 6d. in connection with the above, is Miss Anderson, Manor House, Belhaven, Dunbar, N.B.

J. MCGREGOR ALLAN: Many thanks for your suggestions for future puzzles.

MRS. B.: I am inquiring into the matter about which you write, and will let you know the result of my investigations in due course.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1644.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

NAMING THE THREE PRETTIEST PARKS IN LONDON, IN ORDER OF MERIT.

1. Golder's Park.
2. Richmond Park.
3. Battersea Park.

Cherub.

1. Hyde Park.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Golder's Park, Hampstead.

Hill-Brow.

1. Battersea Park.
2. Victoria Park.
3. Hyde Park.

Muz-Muz.

1. Richmond Park.
2. Hyde Park.
3. Golder's Park.

Gapstang.

1. Regent's Park.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Battersea Park.

Tion.

1. Regent's Park.
2. Battersea Park.
3. Richmond Park.

Duss.

1. Victoria Park.
2. Hyde Park.
3. Battersea Park.

Noo-Art.

1. Hyde Park.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Richmond Park.

Selanidge.

1. Regent's Park.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Hyde Park.

Trammy.

1. Hyde Park.
2. Golder's Park.
3. St. James's.

Snaggard.

1. Battersea Park.
2. Brockwell Park.
3. Greenwich Park.

Senex.

1. Battersea Park.
2. Brockwell Park.
3. Regent's Park.

Vens.

1. St. James's Park.
2. Battersea Park.
3. Kensington Gardens.

Blencathra.

1. Hyde Park.
2. Regent's Park.
3. Golder's Park.

Game B.

1. Regent's Park.
2. Golder's Park.
3. Victoria Park.

Diabolodab.

1. Hyde Park.
2. Battersea Park.
3. Brockwell Park.

Retrop.

1. Hyde Park.
2. Regent's Park.
3. Golder's Hill.

Vici.

1. Hyde Park.
2. Regent's Park.
3. Golder's Hill.

Genera.

1. Kensington Gardens.
2. Greenwich Park.
3. Golder's Hill.

Clapa.

1. Hyde Park.
2. Golder's Hill.
3. Springfield Park.

Veni.

1. Hyde Park.
2. Waterlow Park.
3. Golder's Hill.

Mrs. B.

1. Regent's Park.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Kensington Gardens.

Phœbe.

1. St. James's Park.
2. Hyde Park.
3. Regent's Park.

Sapper.

1. Hyde Park.
2. Kensington Gardens.
3. Regent's Park.

Margate Hoy.

1. Hyde Park.
2. Greenwich Park.
3. Battersea Park.

Towler.

1. St. James's Park.
2. Regent's Park.
3. Kensington Gardens.

Tomty.

1. Waterlow Park.
2. Battersea Park.
3. Regent's Park.

Outsider.

1. Hyde Park.
2. St. James' Park.
3. Green Park.

Almavira.

1. Hyde Park.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Kensington Gardens.

Creina.

1. Kensington Gardens.
2. Hyde Park,
3. Green Park.

Riam.

1. Kensington Gardens.
2. Green Park.
3. St. James's Park.

Army.

1. Hyde Park.
2. Kensington Gardens.
3. Battersea Park.

Rhona.

1. St. James's Park.
2. Kensington Gardens.
3. Waterlow Park.

Renwick.

1. Battersea Park.
2. Brockwell Park.
3. Southwark Park.

Tinman.

1. St. James's Park.
2. Kensington Gardens.
3. Golder's Hill.

Kofuku.

1. Regent's Park.
2. Hyde Park.
3. St James's Park.

A. Greaves.

1. Battersea Park.
2. Victoria Park.
3. Regent's Park.

Furnessian.

1. Hyde Park.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Battersea Park.

W. J. S.

1. Kensington Gardens.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Regent's Park.

Verbum Sat.

1. Green Park.
2. Hyde Park.
3. Regent's Park.

Dorsot.

1. Regent's Park.
2. Richmond Park.
3. Hyde Park.

Bucks.

1. Regent's Park.
2. Hyde Park.
3. St. James's Park.

Kent.

1. Battersea Park.
2. Regent's Park.
3. Hyde Park.

A. E. L.

1. Greenwich Park.
2. Regent's Park.
3. Battersea Park.

Grania.

1. St. James's Park.
2. Golder's Park.
3. Kensington Gardens.

Ephesea.

1. Wanstead Park.
2. Brockwell Park.
3. Battersea Park.

Sophia.

1. Waterlow Park.
2. Clissold Park.
3. Finsbury Park.

Crank.

1. Regent's Park.
2. Golder's Park.
3. Greenwich Park.

Milliner.

1. Hyde Park.
2. Regent's Park.
3. Greenwich Park.

Mary.

1. Hyde Park.
2. Regent's Park.
3. Victoria Park.

H. Wynotte.

1. Victoria Park.
2. Regent's Park.
3. Battersea Park.

Carnation.

1. Hyde Park.
2. Regent's Park.
3. Victoria Park.

Kroy (York).

1. Hyde Park.
2. Regent's Park.
3. St. James's Park.

Ben Eyre.

1. Golder's Hill Park.
2. Waterlow Park.
3. Clissold Park.

Pentamar

1. St. James's Park.
2. Kensington Gardens.
3. Regent's Park.

Kalulu.

1. Kensington Gardens.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Victoria Park.

Canning.

1. Hyde Park.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Battersea Park.

Arlos.

1. St. James's Park.
2. Hyde Park.
3. Regent's Park.

Philip.

1. Regent's Park.
2. Hyde Park.
3. Battersea Park.

Alpha Beta.

1. Richmond Park.
2. St. James's Park.
2. Battersea Park.

Tubby.

1. Regent's Park.
2. Hyde Park.
3. Greenwich Park.

Blackrock.

1. Golder's Park, Hampstead.
2. Regent's Park, N.W.
3. Victoria Park, E.

Seasider.

1. Hyde Park.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Greenwich Park

Maud M. Dean.

1. Richmond Park.
2. St. James's.
3. Brockwell Park.

Strap.

1. Richmond Park.
2. Regent's Park.
3. Waterlow Park.

Mecca.

1. Kensington Gardens.
2. Victoria Park.
3. Hyde Park.

A. G. Knox.

1. Golder's Park, N.
2. Ravenscourt Park, W.
3. Battersea Park, W.

Celia.

1. Kensington Gardens.
2. Regent's Park.
3. Hyde Park.

Mancunian.

1. Regent's Park.
2. Battersea Park.
3. Hyde Park.

Taffy.

1. Greenwich Park.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Hyde Park.

Teddy Bear.

1. Kensington Gardens.
2. Kew.
3. Regent's Park.

Amoroso.

1. Golder's Green.
2. Greenwich.
3. Battersea.

Moung Pho.

1. St. James's Park.
2. Golder's Park, Hampstead.
3. Finsbury Park.

Navalis.

1. Kensington Gardens.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Golder's Park.

Trot.

1. Golder's Park, Hampstead.
2. Hyde Park.
3. Regent's Park.

Harebell.

1. Hyde Park.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Regent's Park.

Korah.

1. Ravenscourt Park, W.
2. Battersea Park, S.W.
3. Golder's Park, N.

Georgina.

1. Battersea Park.
2. Hyde Park.
3. Green Park.

Six Knobs.

1. Regent's Park.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Battersea Park.

Mermaid.

1. Hyde Park.
2. St. James's Park.
3. Golder's Park.

Attie.

1. Hyde Park.
2. Regent's Park.
3. Battersea Park.

Klondyke.

TRUTH BY POST.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Payable in advance.

| | 3 MONTHS. | 6 MONTHS. | 12 MONTHS (Including Xmas Number). |
|---|---|---|---|
| | £ s. d. | £ s. d. | £ s. d. |
| To the British Islands ... ... | 0 7 0 | 0 14 0 | 1 9 1 |
| To Canada (thin edition) ... ... | 0 7 7 | 0 15 2 | 1 11 6 |
| To the Colonies and Foreign Countries (thick edition) ... | 0 8 8 | 0 17 4 | 1 15 10 |

All Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to the Manager of "Truth" and addressed to Truth Buildings, Carteret Street, London, S.W.

..efuge Assurance Company Limited.

Chief Office: OXFORD STREET, MANCHESTER.

London Office: Refuge Assurance Buildings, 133, Strand, W.C.

Premium Income exceeds £2,601,000
Total Claims paid, £13,330,000 Funds exceed £6,838,600

The better the Office the easier it is for the Agent to get business.

Energetic Agents with Good Records should apply to the . .

STAR Life Assurance Society,
32, Moorgate St., London, E.C.

Every encouragement and assistance given to the Society's Agents.

THE IDEAL POLICY

Enables Policy Holders to reap the benefits of their investments during their own lifetime, and in the event of premature death to leave their legal representatives in possession of a comfortable home free from mortgage debt or encumbrance. Write for Free Prospectus.
GOOD PROSPECTS FOR ACTIVE AGENTS.

CITY LIFE ASSURANCE CO., Ltd.,
6, Paul St., Finsbury, London, E.C. M. GREGORY, Managing Director.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

Members of the Stock Exchange are not allowed to advertise for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than their own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, nor in any way under the control of the Committee.

Members issuing Contract Notes are required to use such a form as will provide that the words "Member of the Stock Exchange, London," shall immediately follow the signature.

A List of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

Banking Announcements.

THE MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA,

Head Office: 40, Threadneedle St., LONDON, E.C. LTD.

Capital Authorised, £1,500,000; Paid Up, £562,500; Reserve Fund, £285,000.

Bankers: BANK OF ENGLAND; LONDON JOINT STOCK BANK (Limited).

Branches & Agencies in India, Ceylon, Straits Settlements, China, and Japan.

The Bank buys and sells Bills of Exchange, issues Letters of Credit and Circular Notes, and transacts Banking and Agency Business in connection with the East, on terms to be had on application. Deposits received for one, two, or three years at 3½ per cent.; and on Current Accounts interest is allowed at 2 p.c. per annum on the minimum monthly balances, provided they do not fall below £200; other rates on application.

THE UNION BANK OF AUSTRALIA, Ltd.

Established 1837. Incorporated 1880.

| | |
|---|---|
| Paid-up Capital | £1,500,000 |
| Reserve Fund | £1,310,000 |
| Reserve Liability of Proprietors | £3,000,000 |

HEAD OFFICE—71, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.

Drafts are granted on the Bank's branches throughout the Australian States and Dominion of New Zealand. Telegraphic remittances are also made. Bills are purchased or sent for collection. Deposits are received for fixed periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

FARROW'S BANK, LTD.

THE PEOPLE'S BANK,

For Popular Banking Facilities.

Send for 40-page Illustrated Pamphlet, which describes the History, Work, and Success of

FARROW'S BANK, LTD.

Head Office: 1, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.

Branches, Sub-Branches, and Agencies in every County of the Kingdom.

BIRKBECK BANK. ESTABLISHED 1851.

Southampton Buildings, High Holborn, W.C.

ALMANACK, with full particulars, POST FREE.

C. F. RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

STAMMERERS and all interested in the subject should read a book by one who cured himself after suffering forty years. "Stammering, its Treatment; and Reminiscences of a Stammerer." POST FREE.
B. BEASLEY, Dept. H., Tarrangower, Willesden Lane, Brondesbury, N.W.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY

(LIMITED),

HOLBORN BARS, LONDON, E.C.

INVESTED FUNDS - - £75,000,000

ALLIANCE

ASSURANCE CO., Ltd.

Head Office: Bartholomew Lane, LONDON, E.C.

Accumulated Funds exceed £17,000,000.

Chairman:
Rt. Hon. LORD ROTHSCHILD, G.C.V.O.

THE OPERATIONS OF THE COMPANY EMBRACE ALL BRANCHES OF INSURANCE.

DEATH DUTIES.—Special forms of Policies have been prepared by the Company providing for the payment of Death Duties, thus avoiding the necessity of disturbing investments at a time when it may be difficult to realise without loss.

INCOME TAX.—Under the provisions of the Act, Income Tax is not payable on that portion of the Assured's income which is devoted to the payment of annual premiums on an assurance on his life. Having regard to the amount of the Tax, this abatement (which is limited to one-sixth of the Assured's income) is an important advantage to Life Policyholders.

Full particulars of all classes of Insurance, together with Proposal Forms and Statement of Accounts, may be had on application to any of the Company's Offices or Agents.

Applications for Agencies invited.

ROBERT LEWIS, General Manager.

FOUNDED 1871. EMPOWERED BY SPECIAL ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

THE OCEAN

CHAIRMAN: SIR THOMAS HEWITT, K.C.
GENERAL MANAGER & SECRETARY: RICHARD J. PAULL.

ACCIDENT & GUARANTEE CORPORATION LTD.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
POLICIES AGAINST LIABILITY FOR ACCIDENTS TO THE PUBLIC.
Horse Driving, Motor Car & General.
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.
EXCESS BAD DEBT.
MOTOR CAR.
BOILER & LIFT INSPECTION AND INSURANCE.

FIRE BURGLARY.
ASSETS EXCEED £2,000,000.
CLAIMS PAID OVER £8,000,000.
LICENCE & MORTGAGE INSURANCES.
GUARANTEES OF FIDELITY.

HEAD OFFICE.
MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

EVERY MAN

Whose Estate will be liable for Duty

SHOULD READ "A POPULAR FALLACY."

Sent post free on application to the

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION

For Mutual LIFE Assurance.

48 GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

A "CAPITAL & INCOME" POLICY

is a SOUND INVESTMENT. Capital created, then Income paid until Capital required. No medical examination.
Full particulars forwarded by post.

THE NATIONAL BENEFIT TRUST, Limited,
10, FINSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.
Vacancies for first-class representatives.

WHY ENDURE

—why suffer from dyspepsia when Beecham's Pills have proved themselves a never-failing cure for all kinds of stomach, liver, & kidney troubles? Why resign yourself to the pains and discomforts of biliousness

WHEN

BEECHAM'S PILLS

will bring you immediate and lasting relief? The grin-and-bear-it philosophy is all very well in its place, but it is the greatest folly to bear distressing ailments when you can so easily lay your hands upon something that

WILL CURE.

Sold everywhere in boxes, price 1/1½ (56 pills) & 2/9 (168 pills).

For general use

The "Allenburys" Diet is a complete and easily digested Food. It is pleasant to take, readily assimilated and speedily restorative. Whilst helping the system to recover its tone and vigour, it forms an ideal food for general use. Prepared from rich milk and whole wheat in a partially predigested form. Made in a minute—add boiling water only.

Of Chemists, 1/6 & 3/- per tin

The "Allenburys" DIET

Large Sample sent for 3d. stamps

Allen & Hanburys Ltd., Lombard Street, E.C.

The Ideal Smoking Mixture.

Skilfully blended from the choicest tobaccos grown. It has a subtle, delicate flavour, which appeals immediately to the discriminating tobacco lover.

Luntin Mixture

In three Strengths, Mild—Medium—Full.

1 oz. Packets, 6½d.
2 oz. ,, 1/1.
¼ lb. Tins - 2/2.

From all good tobacconists, or send stamps for desired amount to Sole Manufacturers:

THOMSON & PORTEOUS, EDINBURGH.

SEQUARINE

THE SERUM TREATMENT.

Prepared according to the principles of its discoverer, the late Dr. Brown-Sequard, F.R.S., F.R.C.P. (Lond.), LL.D. (Cambridge).

A reliable remedy for all states of Nervous Exhaustion, Neurasthenia, Anæmia, Rheumatism, Gout, Sciatica, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, General Weakness, and Kidney or Bladder Disorders.

A booklet describing the composition, properties, and qualities of this preparation, and the ailments for which it is recommended, may be had gratis on application to the sole proprietors,

C. RICHTER & CO.,
Manufacturing Chemists,
59-61, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

Telegrams: "Sanguinal, London." Telephone: City 690.

'Tis safer to fly to a bottle of Wincarnis than to allow this changeable weather to upset your health.

with 'Wincarnis'

as a daily beverage and health tonic, the pitfalls of this month can have no dangers for the weakest constitution.

TRIAL BOTTLE SENT FREE

on receipt of 3d. to cover carriage, or you can purchase Wincarnis from all who have a Wine Licence. 1s. Flasks are also sold at Hotels, Licensed Houses, and many Railway and other Refreshment Rooms.

COLEMAN & Co., Ltd., T 388, Wincarnis Works, Norwich.

Printed for the Proprietor by St. Clements Press, Ltd., Portugal Street, Kingsway, W.C., and Published weekly by H. Labouchere at 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to Reginald E. Booker, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret Street, Queen Anne's Gate, S.W. Entered as Second-Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1759. Vol. LXVIII. Wednesday, September 14, 1910. Price Sixpence.

Contents.

| | PAGE |
|---|---|
| Entre Nous | 629 |
| Scrutator:— | |
| Arms and the Law | 642 |
| The Coming of State Insurance | 643 |
| The Kennel Club and Mrs. Cross | 644 |
| On Getting Engaged | 645 |
| Notes from Paris.— | |
| The Pope and the French Catholics | 646 |
| Letter from the Linkman | 648 |
| Correspondence: | |
| The Shady Side of Assam | 649 |
| Votes and Wages | 649 |
| Drink Cures | 649 |
| The Registration of Moneylenders' Addresses | 650 |
| Mammon:— | |
| Round the Markets—Home Rails Lively—Malacca Rubber Position—The Venture Group—Rhodesia Exploration Amalgamation—Nigerian Tin Possibilities—Maikop Oil | |
| Mammon (continued). | PAGE |
| Recommendations—Oilfields of California—The Premium Bond Traffic—Duncan Forbes and Co.—"Vigilant's" Letter-Box | 650-659 |
| Insurance | 659 |
| Company Meetings | 661 |
| Queer Story:— | |
| The Heart of Fouquier-Tinville | 663 |
| Books | 665 |
| Art | 666 |
| Music | 667 |
| The Theatres | 668 |
| Sport | 669 |
| Motors and Motoring | 673 |
| Woman:— | |
| To Hobble or to Wobble? | 674 |
| Education at Large | 675 |
| Mrs. A.'s Diary and Letter-Box | 676 |
| First Fruits of Autumn Fiction | 677 |
| Work and Play | 678 |
| Letter from Madge | 679 |

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| "Truth" Puzzles | 689, 690 | Selected Foreign Hotels | 686 |
| Amusements | 681 | Foreign Pensions | 687 |
| Banking Announcements | 691 | The Truth English Hotel List | 687 |
| Publishers' Announcements | 682, 683 | Insurance Announcements | 691 |

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Inquiries to which an answer is desired by post must in all cases be accompanied by the Coupon printed on the third page of the cover of Truth and by a stamped envelope.

Replies cannot be given by post or by telegram to inquiries relating to Investments, Insurance, or other matters within the department of the City Editor. Such inquiries can only be answered in the paper, and they must comply with the rules printed under the heading "Vigilant's Letter Box" in the section of Truth entitled "Mammon."

ENTRE NOUS.

ACCORDING to present arrangements the King and Queen are to leave Balmoral on October 6 or 7, when the Court will remove to Windsor Castle for the autumn and winter. It is possible that their Majesties may stay in town for a few days when on their way from Balmoral to Windsor. If the King goes to Rosyth next month there will be no elaborate ceremonial, and the visit will be as private as possible.

The King has taken over the shooting on the Sandringham and other Royal estates in Norfolk, but there is no foundation for the statement that his Majesty intends to rent a large country seat in Norfolk. The King will stay at York Cottage during his visits to Sandringham, except when he is the guest of Queen Alexandra at the Hall.

Some of the papers have raised a most extravagant fuss about the trifling accident which Lord Kilmarnock met with when out grouse shooting with the King. There was no commotion at Balmoral, and nothing need have been heard of the mishap. One journal describes the affair as "unprecedented" in Royal shooting parties, which is all rubbish and nonsense. Such mishaps are kept strictly secret unless the consequences are serious, as was the case when Prince Christian was shot in the eye when out pheasant shooting in the park at Osborne nearly twenty years ago. At the first shooting party which King Edward (then Prince of Wales) joined in Windsor Great Park he had a very narrow escape of losing his life. He was a boy, and was merely watching the sport. He moved from the spot at which he had been posted, the result being that one of the most distinguished statesmen of the last reign fired straight at him, though fortunately not straight enough to hit him. The noble sportsman was so upset by the incident that he fainted, although Prince Albert assured him that he was in no way to blame, as it was entirely the young Prince's fault for leaving his station.

A short time before his last illness King Edward commanded that the archives of the Order of the Thistle should be removed from London and placed in the office of Lyon King-of-Arms in the General Register House at Edinburgh. The chapel, which is being added to St. Giles' Cathedral as a church for the Knights of the Thistle, was to have been dedicated on St. Andrew's Day (November 30), and his late Majesty had intended to be present at the ceremony

Queen Alexandra left Sandringham on the evening of Monday, the 5th, for Scotland, accompanied by Princess Victoria and her nephew, Prince Christopher of Greece. The Great Northern Royal train proceeded from Wolferton to Peterborough, and thence by the East Coast route and the Forth and Tay Bridges to Aberdeen. King George was waiting at Ballater Station on Tuesday morning to receive his mother, who arrived at 8.35. The Royal party drove to Balmoral Castle, where Queen Alexandra remained for déjeuner, and in the afternoon she went on to Mar Lodge. This is her Majesty's first stay at Mar Lodge for many years, as since the death of Queen Victoria she has always resided at Balmoral Castle during her annual visit to Deeside.

---

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught will now make Bagshot Park their headquarters until they leave England for South Africa on Monday, October 10. The Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Sweden arrived at Bagshot Park last Wednesday evening from Copenhagen, en route from the Château of Sofiero, their beautiful country residence on the Sound.

---

The Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia were the guests of Lord and Lady Wemyss at Gosford House, for a few days after they left Elie, on the coast of Fife, whither they had proceeded after their visit to Lord Vernon in the island of Arran. The house party at Gosford included the Duchess of Marlborough, Lady de Vesci, Sir Henry and Lady Lilian Yorke, Miss Sybil Brodrick, Mr. Sidney Greville, Mr. Robert Lyttelton, and Captain Bulkeley. The Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia played golf on the Craigelaw links during their stay.

---

Princess Louise proceeded to Harrogate when she left the Isle of Wight, and she has gone through a three weeks' course of the waters, from which she has derived great benefit. Princess Louise intends to pass the autumn at Rosneath, the Duke of Argyll's place in Dumbartonshire. Inveraray Castle is let to Lord George Campbell, along with the home shootings. The Inveraray Moors (16,000 acres) are leased by Messrs. Nix. The Rosneath shootings (about 6,500 acres) are let to Lord Inverclyde.

---

Princess Louise of Schleswig-Holstein has been staying with Lord and Lady Bessborough at Bessborough, where a large party were assembled to meet her. She has a large circle of friends in Ireland, where she frequently stays. Lady Ormonde returned to Kilkenny Castle last week. Lord and Lady Iveagh have left Farmleigh, where they did much entertaining for some weeks.

---

The Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Denmark have left the Château of Sorgenfri, their country residence a few miles to the north-west of Copenhagen, for Germany, on a visit to the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin at Ludwigslust. The Grand Duke is the brother of the Crown Princess of Denmark, and the Grand Duchess is the second daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland.

---

The Duke and Duchess of Teck have been staying for several weeks at Holkham, Norfolk, where they rented the place on the borders of Holkham Park which is known as the Farm House, and which was the country residence of the present Lord and Lady Leicester during the life of the late Earl.

---

Prince Henry of Prussia arrived at Southampton from Bremen last Wednesday in the North German Lloyd liner Kronprinzessin Cecilie, and he is now on a motor tour through England and Scotland. Prince Henry is to spend a few days at Balmoral with their Majesties, and he will return to Germany from Plymouth on the 26th or 27th.

THE TEETOTAL KAISER.

The Kaiser's sworn off wine and beer,
While the manœuvres last this year.

And urgently he doth advise
His officers to do likewise.

But they protest—the gossips tell—
The cases are not parallel.

For they, if barred the genial cup,
Have nought to keep their spirits up.

Whereas for that their Royal friend
Does not on alcohol depend.

He has, though wine and beer are banned,
A cocktail always to his hand.

The bottle banished to the shelf—
He gets inebriate with himself.

---

Some of the papers have been printing sentimental dissertations on the visit of the Empress of Russia to "the home of her girlhood" and her enjoyment of these "ideal scenes," whatever that may mean. This twaddle is inspired by a zeal which is not according to knowledge, for the Empress of Russia spent a very unhappy girlhood, and it can give her no pleasure to return to places which are associated only with family squabbles and miserable partings. Her mother died when she was six years old, and she then became warmly attached to Mme. de Kalomine, with whom her father afterwards contracted a morganatic marriage. When the Empress was twelve years old the threats and manœuvres of Queen Victoria caused the sudden departure of Mme. de Kalomine from Darmstadt. The Empress never saw her beloved friend (and stepmother) again, and from that time she led a dull life under the discipline of strict governesses, which was varied by occasional visits to England, which she detested. Her father was always depressed and wretched during the last eight years of his life, and her sisters were married and at a distance. Her own marriage emancipated her from an intolerable situation.

---

Count Benckendorff arrived at the Russian Embassy on Thursday from Oban, en route from the island of Mull, where he had been staying on a visit to Mr. Murray Guthrie at Duart House. His Excellency is going to his country seat near Moscow to join the Countess Benckendorff.

---

The Comtesse de Paris arrived in London last Wednesday from Randan, her seat in the Puy de Dôme, accompanied by the Duc and Duchesse de Chartres and the Duke and Duchess of Aosta. The Royal party came to England for their annual pilgrimage to the Roman Catholic Church at Weybridge on the anniversary of the death of the Comte de Paris, which took place at Stowe House on September 8, 1894.

---

Sir Dighton Probyn has given up Park House, the residence at Sandringham Park which he had occupied for many years. He will in future stay at Sandringham Hall, when in Norfolk, and a suite of apartments has been allotted to him by Queen Alexandra. Park House is to become the residence of Sir William Carington, the new Keeper of the Privy Purse, who is the chief member of King George's personal household.

---

Sir Arthur and Lady Nicolson have taken a house in London, where they will reside when Sir Arthur enters on the duties of his office. They have been staying at Harrogate, where Lord MacDonnell was also amongst the visitors. Sir Arthur Nicolson left St. Petersburg before the advent of Lord Roberts' mission. The honours of the Embassy were done on the occasion by Mr. Hugh O'Beirne as acting Ambassador. He has a high reputation in the diplomatic world, and was a persona grata with King Edward.

---

The Speaker and Mrs. Lowther gave a most successful garden party on Thursday at Hutton John, near Penrith, after which there was a dance in a large marquee on the lawn. The Speaker and Mrs. Lowther intend to reside at Hutton John until they come to town for the meeting of Parliament, and they will spend the winter recess at Campsea Ash, Suffolk, with Mr. William Lowther.

---

Lord Leconfield has returned to Petworth House for the hunting season from Cockermouth Castle, where he had been staying for grouse shooting.

---

Mr. G. J. Courthope, of Whiligh, Sussex, who died suddenly last week, was a country gentleman of the best type. He lived at his own place, and devoted himself to the management of his estate and to public duties in the country. He was one of the most practically useful squires in Kent and Sussex, and he held the office of Vice-Chairman of Quarter Sessions for both counties. He will be widely regretted and greatly missed. He was the father of Mr. G. L. Courthope, M.P. for the Rye Division of Sussex.

---

Mr. Edward Harvey, who died on Thursday, had been one of the best known citizens of Bristol for nearly half a century, and for many years he took an active part in local affairs. He was widely known through his prominent connection with the Bristol Madrigal Society, of which he was secretary for thirty years, and afterwards president for the remainder of his life. He was very popular in the city, and his death is greatly regretted.

---

Lord Ellesmere, who is now at Worsley Hall, the family place near Manchester, is going for a few weeks to Stetchworth Park, where he will reside during the Newmarket October Meetings. Lord and Lady Brackley are leaving Worsley Old Hall to spend the autumn at Makerstoun, Mr. Scott-Makdougall's beautiful place in Roxburghshire, which they have taken for the salmon fishing on the Tweed. The Makerstoun water, which extends for two miles, is a famous stretch, and affords very fine sport during October and November. There are fourteen casts on it, and it contains some splendid rapids.

---

A weekly journal understands that Lord Cholmondeley "would be willing to part with Houghton Hall altogether, if he could find a satisfactory purchaser." The writer is presumably unaware of the fact that the Houghton estate was offered for sale in 1886, and it has been practically in the market ever since. The suggestion that the King might buy Houghton is nonsensical. Apart from the fact that his Majesty is already sufficiently provided with residences, one would like to know where the money is to come from to purchase a large estate. King Edward found himself so overburdened with residences that he was very glad to get rid of Osborne.

---

An absurd paragraph appeared the other day in a number of newspapers which announced that the Duke of Westminster "has arranged" to rent Stack Forest from the Duke of Sutherland. The Duke of Westminster succeeded his grandfather ten years ago in the tenancy of this deer forest, and the late Duke had then leased it for nearly half a century from successive Dukes of Sutherland. Stack is really a section of the great deer forest of Reay, and the lodge is beautifully situated on Loch Stack, which is one of the best trout lochs in Scotland. The Laxford, which has a course of three miles from Loch Stack to the sea, was at one time a first-rate salmon river, but the late Duke of Westminster told me that the angling had much fallen off owing to the introduction of stake nets. There is some of the finest rock scenery in Scotland off this part of the coast.

---

GNATS AND CAMELS.

(The ladies' tailors of America have declared war to the knife on the French hobble-skirt, one of the grounds being that it was "meant to show off just as much of the figure as the law would permit."—Daily Paper.)

The ladies' tailors way out West
  Dame Grundy's claims assert,
And vow that they will do their best
  To oust the hobble-skirt.

Apart from its restraining clutch,
  They think the garment pert;
It shows a precious deal too much,
  This shameless hobble-skirt.

That's true enough, no doubt, per se
  Yet scarce methinks 'twould hurt
The fair New Yorker's modesty
  To wear a hobble-skirt.

Publicity I've seen her brave
  In raiment far more curt
(When robed to tempt the briny wave)
  Than any hobble-skirt.

Upon the beach she'd stroll or sit,
  With male acquaintance flirt,
Nor mind her scant attire one bit.
  Why mind the hobble-skirt?

If camels she can gulp like that,
  She needn't be alert
To strain in horror at this gnat
  And ban the hobble-skirt.

TRUTH will be sent weekly to any address in the British Islands for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or £1 9s. 1d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). The subscription to Canada (Thin Edition) is: 7s. 7d. for 3 months; 15s. 2d. for 6 months; £1 11s. 6d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). To the Colonies and Foreign Countries (Thick Edition): 3 months, 8s. 8d.; 6 months, 17s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 15s. 10d. (including Christmas Number). All cheques and P.O.O.s should be made payable to THE MANAGER OF TRUTH, and addressed to Truth Buildings, Carteret Street, London, S.W.

In another column appears a letter from a lady—unavoidably held over last week—in answer to my contention that giving women votes will not raise their wages. The lady thinks that I shall already have seen the error of my ways because leading trade unionists do not regard payment of members as a remedy for the consequences of the Osborne judgment. My opinions are not shaken so easily. The argument, so far as I can unravel it, appears to be that because trade unions may exercise greater influence in Parliament through members paid by themselves than through members paid by the State, therefore people who have votes will obtain higher wages than those who have none. I am sorry to say that I am quite unable to see any logical connection between these two propositions.

---

The lady goes on to administer to me a series of interrogatories, the answer to which is contained in what I said before. Do I think that women would be sweated if they had votes? Yes, I do, because men have been sweated in spite of their having votes. If I am of this opinion, I am to look to the countries where women have votes and observe that there is no sweating of women there. But as "the sweating evil" is unknown there altogether, whether for men or women, there must be something besides votes at work to produce this result, or men would never be sweated here. It is pointed out that "a certain railway" is going to employ women instead of men because they are equally efficient and cheaper. In the teaching profession the same principle is adopted. There was no occasion to point this out, seeing that I referred to such things in my remarks, and I gave at the same time a remarkable instance of the sweating of women teachers by women schoolmistresses. What requires to be proved is, not that notorious facts exist, but that the proposed remedy for them is likely to have any effect.

---

I am sorry to say that what this lady offers as arguments do not appear to me to have the elements of arguments about them. I endeavoured to explain the underpayment of women by their being less capable than men of organising and fighting their own battles. The lady replies that this may have been so in the past, but is so no longer. No one will be more pleased than I to know that for a fact; but if the result is that women obtain higher wages, that will be a proof that I was right, not, as my correspondent seems to think, that I was wrong. Wages are primarily determined by the value of labour. When labour is paid less than its economic value it is because capital is master of the situation and able to dictate its own terms. The only effectual remedy here is the organisation of labour in its own defence. That these propositions are true of male labour is beyond dispute, and no reason has ever been suggested why it should not be equally true of the labour of women. Conversely, there is no evidence that the possession of votes has ever raised the wages of men. That it will have this effect in the case of women is, therefore, an assumption contrary to reason.

---

Women workers do not have a specially easy time anywhere, but it seems that in New York and Chicago they are particularly badly off. Within a week one girl has been arrested for masquerading as a boy, and another has shot herself, the reason given in both cases being that they could not live and work in New York without being annoyed by insulting attentions. Not long ago the women of Chicago fought to keep their long hat-pins, in spite of legislation. They said the pins were their only handy weapons of defence in the streets. No wonder the American woman is such a traveller!

---

After demanding the taxation of land values for many years, the Liverpool City Council is now exceedingly angry with Mr. Lloyd George for giving practical effect to the policy they have urged upon him. Perhaps it would be more correct, however, to say that it is not exactly what the Chancellor of the Exchequer has done, but the nasty way he's done it, to which the Liverpool city fathers take exception. Yet even on this point there is a diversity of opinion amongst the councillors, for at the full-dress debate on the question in the council one councillor averred that four-fifths of the questions on the forms he had received had been filled up by his office-boy. That office-boy has a future before him.

---

But there can be no doubt that the forms supply many stumbling-blocks to landowners who have not a gifted Liverpool office-boy in their employ. This was exemplified at Manchester last week, where Mr. Adrian Lumley, the well-known valuer, attended a meeting arranged by the Manchester Liberal Federation to explain the forms issued by the Revenue authorities in connection with the valuation. Mr. Lumley expressed the opinion that with many of those who complained, the grievance was not a question of inability to supply the information, but a question as to whether it ought to be supplied, and that, as regards the part of the return which an owner was bound to fill up, it merely asked for particulars which every owner had at his finger-tips. The best answer to this is the fact that Mr. Lumley had been asked, as an expert, to address a meeting with the idea of removing misconceptions about the inquisition. If the forms had been models of such perfect clarity, his presence at Manchester would surely have been unnecessary.

---

A fortnight ago I remarked that the Germans had the advantage of us in having actually caught in the flesh what they supposed to be a British spy—two, in fact—while, on our side, though so deeply exercised on the subject, we only know of the presence of German spies among us by evidence similar to that by which we know of the existence of ghosts. It must be a matter for profound national satisfaction that the German advantage has now been wiped out. One must not assume doubtful matters which are sub judice; but if we have really bagged a live German spy at last the literature dealing with this subject is decidedly misleading. The specimen now before us bears no resemblance to what one has read of the species. He was not disguised as a waiter or a member of a brass band. His modus operandi was unsophisticated, not to say primitive. He planted himself in front of a fort and proceeded to sketch it with as little effort to avoid public observation as if he had been a rising artist engaged on his next Academy picture. When, in the ordinary course of things, he was noticed, he made no attempt to escape, or to conceal the fact that he was an officer of the Kaiser's terrible army. All this completely upsets one's preconceived notions.

But let us not deceive ourselves. The very straightforwardness and candour of this secret service man may be nothing but the refinement of artifice. He may have calculated on disarming suspicion by the sheer audacity of his proceedings. With the spy, as with other craftsmen, ars est celare artem. The up-to-date Intelligence officer is above the crude disguises and subterfuges of the scare-novel and the melodrama. It has been pointed out that the Portsdown forts are treated by our Government as obsolete, and are now merely used as barracks. The Kaiser's emissary, knowing this, might well reckon on being taken for some harmless British archæologist engaged in scientific studies.

---

Another theory deserving of attention is that this spy was deliberately put up by his Government to be captured. There would be two reasons for this. One would be to deceive us with a false idea of the subtlety and artfulness of German secret-service men. We might conclude that if the Germans do their spying in this crude and inartistic fashion there is not much cause to be afraid of them. Thus we should be thrown off our guard and relax our vigilance. A further motive for making us a present of this spy would be to propose his exchange against the two innocent British tourists who have been captured at Borkum. The German Government, being unable to make a case against the British subjects whom it has wrongfully seized, would thus escape easily from an awkward position without inconvenience or discredit. Already a proposal for an exchange of prisoners has been insidiously put forward in the London press. If such a proposal should be made officially we must consider our worst suspicions confirmed.

---

I have done my best in the foregoing observations to treat this grave international incident in the best spirit of London journalism. But privately I have a strong impression that when a Government—be it British, French, German, Japanese, Siamese, or Thibetan—catches a foreign spy on its private premises the most sensible course would be to put him on board ship or across the frontier with as little fuss as possible, after taking from him any portable property which might be of use to his employers. The publicity at present given to these incidents does nothing but harm and serves no useful purpose whatever. No Government can keep out foreign spies by trying to frighten them. If every spy caught were shot at sight the business of spying would go on as before. Governments must guard their secrets by the same sort of precautions as private citizens; and in the case of military and naval armaments so little can be concealed by comparison with what is necessarily common public knowledge that even when secrets are kept they are usually of very little importance. As all Governments are equally engaged in spying upon one another, they might just as well agree that if they catch one another's spies they will not hurt them.

---

Some time ago I referred to the enactment of certain "newspaper surety ordinances" in various presidencies of the Leeward Islands. Although passed ostensibly in the interest of the public, it was easy to foresee that these ordinances would provide a handy means for suppressing or harassing journalistic critics of the powers that be, and an instance of this has just occurred in Montserrat, where the Montserrat Herald has been suddenly called upon to fulfil what were known to be practically impossible requirements with regard to the provision of sureties approved by the Attorney-General. This proceeding, which was equivalent to the suppression of the one independent newspaper in Montserrat, was clearly the outcome of official resentment at some articles on the local administration. At the same time a prosecution for libel has been launched against the editor under circumstances upon which I may have something to say after the trial at Antigua next month.

---

It may be hoped that the question of the treatment of the press in the Leeward Islands will receive the attention of Lord Crewe or Colonel Seely. Officials everywhere dislike criticism, and this dislike is often particularly intense in such small communities as those of Montserrat and other presidencies of the Leeward Islands. Yet in such places of all others a free expression of public opinion through the press is especially necessary. It is indeed the only way in which abuses can be brought to light or a check kept upon the doings of authorities who may be inclined to tyranny.

---

At a recent gathering in connection with the Worcestershire Hunt the master, Mr. Arthur Jones, complained of the "wretched barbed wire," and added that no man on his land who had any would stay there long. This will be pleasant news for Mr. Jones's tenants on the Abberley estate in the Teme Valley. The district, I am told, is unsuited for hunting on account of the many hop yards and fruit orchards, and Mr. Jones's action in turning out a number of foxes at Abberley has provoked not a little adverse comment. As to the barbed wire, either that or a double post and rail ox fence is considered necessary, as the heavy Hereford bullocks which are grazed in the district soon make gaps in the hedges. The fence is too costly, and so the farmers use barbed wire, but it seems that on the Jones domain they can only do this at the risk of being turned out of their farms. The Master of the Worcestershire is one of those fox-hunters who are riding their hobby to death.

---

With reference to a recent paragraph in Truth about French customs duties on cigarettes, one of my readers forwards a receipt for duties which he paid a few weeks ago—15 francs on 200 cigarettes and 7.20 francs on 1 lb. of tobacco. I confess I did not know that the duty on cigarettes was quite so high. But is it really much of a grievance? When I go abroad I generally manage to subsist on the cigarettes of the country, and I really do not think it is difficult. British tourists put themselves to much unnecessary annoyance by their refusal to modify temporarily their cherished habits.

---

I read last week the notice of a recently published biography of William Beckford, in which it was stated that he died "a ruined man." As a matter of fact Beckford was always a rich man, although he squandered such huge sums on Fonthill and in various extravagances. He left a large fortune, which passed to his daughter, the Duchess of Hamilton, who was the great-grandmother of the Duke of Newcastle and the Marchioness of Graham.

---

In undertaking the issue of a new edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," the University of Cambridge has made a novel departure, upon which it will be generally congratulated. It is said that this is but a natural step in the evolution of the University as an educational institution. That may be true; but, all the same, it is a step displaying a high appreciation of the responsibilities of the University in combination with a praiseworthy spirit of enterprise. It is certainly in accordance with the fitness of things that a work of the magnitude and importance of the encyclopædia should be published by the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press rather than by the proprietors of even the greatest of newspapers. The forthcoming edition is a completely new and original one, and its imprint is a guarantee that it will be an authoritative and trustworthy work.

---

The Lord Chancellor has appointed the Bishop of Thetford (Dr. Bowers) to the stall in Norwich Cathedral which became vacant by the death of Canon Hervey. Lord Loreburn has displayed a laudable consideration for the local needs of the diocese which is not often to be found in dispensers of official patronage. It is obviously desirable that the Suffragan Bishop should reside at Norwich, and that he should be free from parochial duties. The appointment has given much satisfaction in the diocese. The stall is worth £800 a year, with an excellent prebendal residence. Bishop Bowers is to retain the Archdeaconry of Lynn, to which he was collated by Bishop Sheepshanks about seven years ago.

---

The transfer of Dr. Bowers to Norwich Close vacates the rectory of North Creake, which is in the alternate gift of Lord Spencer and the Bishop of Norwich. The presentation falls for this turn to the Bishop, and it is about the best piece of preferment in his gift. The stipend is over £700 a year, with an excellent residence. When this benefice was vacated in 1903 by the promotion of Bishop Lloyd to the see of Newcastle, the late Lord Spencer lost the presentation, which passed for that turn to the Crown, and Mr. Balfour appointed Bishop Bowers.

---

The King has approved of the presentation of the Rev. Ronald Bayne, vicar of St. John's, Walworth, to the rectory of St. Edmund the King, Lombard Street, vacant by the death of Canon Benham, and in the gift of the Crown for this turn. The stipend has hitherto been about £1,300 a year, with house, but it will now be reduced to £550.

---

The Bishop of Bath and Wells has appointed Mr. Francis H. L. Errington, Chancellor of the Diocese of Rochester, to be Chancellor of his diocese in the place of Sir Charles Chadwyck Healey, K.C., who has resigned through ill-health. Sir Charles, who is also Chancellor of the Diocese of Exeter, was appointed in succession to the late Mr. Rogers, of Yarlington, who was both a diocesan official and a county magnate. The Chancellorship of a well-endowed diocese was formerly a post of very large emolument.

---

Lord Exeter has presented the Rev. W. P. Bickford to the rectory of St. Clement Danes, Strand, vacant by the death of the Rev. J. J. Pennington. This living is of only nominal value. Mr. Bickford is the curate of the parish, and son-in-law of the late rector.

Canon Pollock, who died on Saturday, was the eldest son of Baron Pollock and a grandson of the Lord Chief Baron. He was called to the Bar in 1877, and six years later he took holy orders. He quickly gained a great reputation as an admirable parish clergyman and a fine preacher when Vicar of West Hackney, an important suburban living to which he was presented in 1890 by the late Lord Amherst. Two years later Lord Chancellor Halsbury nominated Mr. Pollock to a stall at Rochester, and the appointment was criticised with much asperity, as he had been for only nine years in orders. The new Canon, however, soon proved a most valuable acquisition to the diocese. He devoted himself zealously to rescue and mission work, and he undertook missionary expeditions to South Africa and to New Zealand. He enjoyed the full confidence of the prelates under whom he served at Rochester—the present Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Southwark, and Bishop Harmer.

---

The Bishop of Durham has appointed the Rev. A. H. Cruickshank, assistant master at Winchester, to the canonry in the cathedral which is vacant by the death of Dr. Kynaston. The Chair of Greek and Classical Literature in Durham University is annexed to this stall. The stipend is £1,000 a year, with an excellent residence in the College. Mr. Cruickshank is a sound and polished scholar. He is one of Dr. Ridding's pupils, and he took the highest honours at Oxford, and afterwards did very good work as a tutor of New College. The appointment is a very good one, and the new professor will be a most valuable acquisition to Durham University.

---

It has been wisely decided to hold the opening service of the Cambridge Church Congress in Ely Cathedral, which is admirably suited in every respect for such a ceremonial. The sermon will be preached by the Archbishop of York. It may be hoped that at Cambridge there will be some real discussions on "burning" and positively practical questions, instead of the programme being strictly limited to "safe" subjects, and the reading of academical papers, followed by twaddling debates. There are the same items in the programme year after year, and very much the same readers and speakers. The Congress requires to be managed with more vigour and enterprise, and new blood is urgently needed. At present it is principally useful in giving a cheap and pleasant autumn outing to a number of clergy.

---

Dr. Gillespie, the well-known minister of Mouswald, Lanarkshire, was commanded by the King to preach in Crathie Church on Sunday, the 4th. The official summons was accompanied by a note requesting Dr. Gillespie not to undertake the journey to Balmoral unless he had quite recovered from his recent illness, and he proved to be unable to travel. Dr. Gillespie, who is an ex-Moderator of the General Assembly, was a great favourite with King Edward, and during the last reign he invariably preached at Crathie on one Sunday during his late Majesty's stay at Balmoral.

---

The Vicar of Long Itchington has just broken out in his Parish Magazine on the subject of a complaint which was made to the Bishop a year ago. The complaint was that during the vicar's holiday only one service was held on Sundays. As this had been the accepted practice for years, it would perhaps have been more considerate if those who desired two services had first of all spoken to the vicar. But what is to be said of the state of mind of the reverend gentleman who after meditating on this little incident for a whole year now delivers himself of an angry tirade in which the complaint is denounced as treacherous, mean, cowardly, underhand, unpardonable, unworthy of honourable persons, clandestine, and ill-advised; as showing a lamentable want of heart; a callous, hard, grinding disposition, etc.? Not content with hurling all these epithets, the vicar winds up with the announcement that his work, in church and out of it, will now be reduced to a minimum, and "therefore not only the offender or offenders will suffer, but also the whole parish." This suggests that Long Itchington really will need the attention of the Bishop, after all.

---

In reference to the case of the organist at Peterborough Cathedral referred to last week, one of my readers, writing at considerable length, "claims for the Church of England the right possessed by other communities and recognised by the law of making rules for the government and discipline of her members." He exemplifies his point by reference to the case of the medical profession. "The Church," he says, "vetoes the marriage with a deceased wife's sister, although a recent Act has recognised that union. Why is diciplinary power grudged to the Church of England, and why should you object to her punishing a man who disobeys her law by marrying a deceased wife's sister?"

---

My correspondent has misled himself with false analogies. No one has questioned the right of the Church to exercise such disciplinary powers over its own members as it has been entrusted with by the State. The question raised in regard to the case of the Peterborough organist relates to the wisdom and propriety of the action taken by the Church official who dismissed him, and the view which I took of the matter is identical with that of the Dean and the Bishop. The fact that on the legal and political side the Church of England in its present shape is the creation of the State puts a very serious difficulty in the way of its making, or at any rate enforcing, regulations of its own which override the law of the land. This difficulty my correspondent, like many other Churchmen, fails to appreciate. The Bishop and Dean of Peterborough are wiser in their generation.

---

For more than twenty years Sir Walter Gilbey has been a sturdy and successful beggar on behalf of the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution. Once more he is making his annual appeal to the clergy to remember the claims of this excellent charity to a share in the offertories at the harvest thanksgiving services. It is an appeal that I am always glad to endorse. Not only is the institution a most deserving charity, but it is, of course, peculiarly appropriate that its good work should be supported at a time of harvest thanksgiving. Last year £8,010 was received from church collections. This year, with a better harvest, that amount ought to be exceeded, so that the institution may be enabled still further to extend its useful work.

---

I have to acknowledge the following amounts:—£1 from Persenpegas towards the Toy Fund, 1s. from Nemo towards the Tress Barry Fund, and 2s. 6d. from W. R. H. for Lady St. Helier's Children's Holiday Fund.

Major-General Montgomery was obliged to retire last week under the age clause, so he has vacated the appointment of Vice-President of the Ordnance Board, which he had held for nearly two years. The post is worth £1,150 a year.

---

On the "eternal question" of confidential reports a British officer writes from India:—

> I suggest that the commanding officer should be compelled by regulation to state definitely the facts upon which he bases his unfavourable opinion, in order that the officer reported upon may have a fair chance of challenging them. Under the present regulations a commanding officer can damn an officer with an unfavourable report framed in such vague and indefinite terms that there is nothing which the victim can nail to the counter and tackle.
>
> The unfortunate man appeals to the general, and then follows a correspondence or conversation between the general and the commanding officer which is not communicated to the incriminated officer. To support his position the commanding officer frequently exaggerates, sometimes lies; but all this is done in secret. It is this secret exaggeration or lie which ought to be checked by publicity. If commanding officers knew that everything they wrote or stated verbally in connection with an unfavourable report would be submitted to the officer under report for his information, and that he would have an opportunity of challenging its accuracy, the present terrors of the confidential report would disappear.

---

There is a very great deal in this. It has more than once been contended in Truth that an officer should have a right to a formal inquiry before an unfavourable report is finally registered against him. But to this the answer has been made that you cannot try a question of opinion, and that the whole purport of the present system is to obtain for the guidance of the War Office the frank opinions of commanding officers upon the men serving under them. My correspondent's suggestion that the facts on which the opinion should be stated meets this difficulty. You can try facts at any rate.

---

What objection can there be to requiring a reporting officer to state the facts upon which his opinion is based? It would enable the General and the War Office to judge what the opinion is worth, and to that extent make the document more valuable. It would give the complainant the opportunity of raising an issue which would be decided by evidence, and to that extent be a safeguard against injustice. As for the system of allowing the reporting officer to support his report by giving further opinions and making any statements of fact he pleases in secret after his report has been appealed against, it is manifestly unfair and inexpedient. It is amazing that after all the administrative reforms of the last seven years this rotten system remains unchanged. Well may the regimental officer rail against the Army Council's ignorance of his needs and indifference to his interests!

---

Once again I hear a bitter protest against the labour involved in keeping official regulations and orders up to date under the existing system. The latest edition of the King's Regulations was issued over two years ago. Since that date amendments and additions have been issued in Army Orders at the rate of about two pages of small print per month. The unfortunate regimental officer is again the victim, in having to keep a record of all these supplementary edicts duly entered up in their right places. One of their number suggests that the publication of the King's Regulations should be handed over to a firm of London publishers, on the understanding that the type is kept standing, and that annual editions embodying all alterations and additions should be promptly issued. In this way incalculable labour would be saved to officers and clerks, the War Office could enjoy itself ad libitum in recasting and amplifying, and the taxpayer might actually save money on the business.

---

The King has approved of the appointment of Captain Heath to be a naval aide-de-camp to his Majesty in the place of Captain Cradock, who has been promoted to flag rank. Captain Heath, who is in command of the battleship Superb in the Home Fleet, has had an adventurous career. He was a midshipman of the Shah when she engaged the Peruvian rebel ship Huascar, and a lieutenant in the Victoria when she was sunk by the Camperdown. Captain Winnington Ingram, who commands the special service vessels at Portsmouth, is now at the top of the captains' list.

---

Captain Cradock's promotion to flag rank has also led to a number of changes in high commands. He is succeeded in the command of the Portsmouth Royal Naval Barracks by Captain Alexander Duff, who assumes the rank of Commodore of the second class. Captain Duff, who is a cousin of the Duke of Fife, and one of the most brilliant tacticians of the day, has been commanding the Temeraire since January, 1909. He is succeeded in this post by Captain Christian, whose term of command at Osborne College has determined. Captain the Hon. H. L. Hood follows Captain Christian at Osborne.

---

Captain E. R. Pears is gazetted to recommission the Agamemnon in succession to Captain Bernard Currey. The latter officer stands sixth from the top of the post list, and will get his flag rank very shortly.

---

The retirement of Vice-Admiral Mostyn Field should furnish occasion for the bestowal of some distinction worthy of his singularly useful career. For thirty years he was associated with the surveying service, a considerable portion of this time being spent as Hydrographer to the Admiralty. It is probably true to say that he has been the most active chart-maker of modern times. His work extends from the China Seas to the Oil Rivers of West Africa; from the Sea of Marmora to Tasmania, and from Madagascar to New Guinea. He is a Fellow of the Royal, the Royal Astronomical, and the Royal Geographical Societies; but these are tributes for which he owes no thanks to the Admiralty.

---

The selections for the appointments to the Balmoral Castle for the Duke of Connaught's South African tour are practically determined by Commodore Rosslyn Wemyss, who goes in command. Commander R. G. A. Stapleton-Cotton goes as chief executive officer. Lieutenant Coventry Crichton-Maitland is the "Number One," temporarily vacating his billet as flag-lieutenant to Admiral Sir Wilmot Fawkes at Devonport. Commander R. Hyde goes as the navigator, and Staff-Paymaster W. H. Eves as the purser. The Balmoral Castle will become a naval unit pure and simple for the occasion of this South African trip. It is to be hoped that her regular officers and men will not be permitted to suffer in consequence.

The latest and most uncanny invention in the gentle art of naval warfare is the adaptation of radiography to submarines. During the course of last week a series of experiments were carried out in Torbay, in the course of which the cruiser Bonaventure established wireless communication with the boats running submerged. The new "D1" proved her ability to give back answers from below the surface. It seems hardly open to doubt that this invention must largely increase the tactical value of submarines. Hitherto the impossibility of directing the operations of these craft whilst running submerged has greatly handicapped them as weapons of attack against a moving fleet.

---

There are complaints that the discomfort of service in submarines is greatly accentuated by lack of cooking equipment. As the amount of sea time put in by these units tends to increase, it seems reasonable to expect that arrangements for the proper feeding of the men should engage the attention of the authorities. The limits of space can hardly be an insuperable difficulty. Submarines range in length, I believe, between the 135 feet of the "C" and the 150 feet of the "A" group, and have an average beam of 13½ feet. A few of the earlier type are somewhat smaller, but these are not in the sea-going flotillas. Surely there is sufficient room in the above limits to squeeze in some sort of a cook's galley.

---

The relation between the evidence and the finding in the Duke of Edinburgh court-martial leaves an impression that a scapegoat had to be made. The salient points were, that the ship grounded during a dense fog; that Lieutenant R. Aylen—a navigating officer "with an exemplary record both for ability and conduct"—was on the bridge from the moment of the ship leaving Weymouth until she grounded; that soundings were incessantly taken, and the speed reduced to four and a-half knots; that the inset of tide towards the Needles is notoriously capricious, and not to be correctly estimated when there are no visible bearings to disclose its effect; and that Captain the Hon. R. F. Boyle unhesitatingly admitted that every change of course made by the navigating officer had his approval. Lieutenant Aylen was found guilty of having by negligence suffered the ship to be stranded, and sentenced to be severely reprimanded and dismissed his ship. It seems to me that the finding can only be justified by the principle that whenever an accident occurs in the Navy somebody must be made an example of.

---

The King has approved of the appointment of Mr. F. W. Dyson, F.R.S., to the office of Astronomer Royal, which is in the gift of the Crown, and vacant by the retirement of Sir William Christie, F.R.S. Mr. Dyson was Second Wrangler in 1889, and he afterwards devoted himself to astronomy, and became both Smith Prizeman and Isaac Newton Student. He was elected Fellow of Trinity College, and remained at Cambridge until 1894, when he succeeded Professor Turner as Chief Assistant to the Astronomer Royal at Greenwich. Mr. Dyson was appointed Astronomer Royal for Scotland and Professor of Practical Astronomy in Edinburgh University in 1905. He has gone abroad on several eclipse expeditions, and has written largely and with great ability on astronomical subjects. He is a most learned mathematician, and with a profound knowledge of both theoretical and practical astronomy.

---

The Astronomer-Royal has a salary of £1,000 a year and occupies an official residence, and these are borne upon the Navy Estimates every year. In addition to the ascertainment of the time and the general astronomical research work of the Observatory, the Nautical Almanac and its preparation are a very important department of the work of the institution, and in calculating the cost of the Observatory the cost of the Nautical Almanac, staff, etc., must be added to it. There are several other institutions closely connected with the Observatory and more or less subject to the Astronomer-Royal, such as the observatory at the Cape of Good Hope, the photographic mapping of the heavens, and the compass and chronometer departments.

---

An Indian police official suggests a modification of the regulations with regard to the King's Police Medal. That decoration is now awarded, not only for conspicuous gallantry, but for various services—specially distinguished records in administration or detection, special services in dealing with serious outbreaks of crime, valuable political and secret services, etc. The suggestion is that the order should be divided into two classes with distinctive ribbons, the first class being reserved exclusively for cases of conspicuous gallantry, while the second class would comprise other meritorious services. The change would put the first class medal on the footing of a V.C. for the police and fire brigade services, and I should think it would be generally approved.

---

A notice just issued to Post Office servants from headquarters reminds them that under the rules of the service "betting and gambling in any form are regarded as most serious offences." It is added that participation in so-called football competitions, whether conducted by commission agents or newspaper proprietors, is considered to be "in the nature of betting," and comes within the scope of the prohibition. A large proportion of the Post Office employees who get into trouble owe their downfall to gambling, and the regulation referred to is necessary and desirable in the interests alike of the men and the public. It is a pity, though, that the Postmaster-General, who knows how much mischief is caused by the spread of facilities for betting, does not take steps to relieve his department of the heavy responsibility it bears in this matter. None of these huge "coupon" gambling schemes in connection with football and racing could be worked without the use of the machinery of the post, and most of those conducted from Continental addresses are not merely illegal but absolute swindles as well. It would be the easiest thing in the world for the Post Office to scotch the whole business by copying the system on which the American postal authorities deal with the fraudulent or improper use of the mails.

---

Things sometimes vanish mysteriously in the Post Office. A correspondent recently dispatched a tin of tobacco by parcel post to an address in London. At the same time he directed a letter respecting the parcel to the same address. The addressee had gone away, and the letter was returned, but not the tobacco. On inquiry the sender has been informed by the Returned Letter Office that the parcel "cannot be found." Presumably it had ended in smoke.

---

The Hartlepool Town Council has been groaning over the bill for the election petition on which Sir Christopher Furness was unseated, and some of the items certainly seem open to criticism. One account was for £132 for accommodation for the judges and their suites, this including £89 for the rent of two houses for the eight or nine days the judges were in Hartlepool, and another extravagant item was one of £105 for the hire of a state-coach from Durham. But Hartlepool does not pay the whole bill for these luxuries. The accounts totalled £311, of which about £200 is met by the Treasury, while the Borough pays the balance. I do not see why the taxpayers generally should pay £12 10s. a day coach-hire because Hartlepool indulged in illegal practices at its election.

---

When your expert gets mounted on his hobby he usually lets it run away with him, and this is what seems to have happened at Brighton last week at the Congress of the Royal Sanitary Institute. A number of the sanitarians became exceedingly eloquent on the iniquity of seaside watering places discharging their sewage into the sea, and Mr. Williamson, chairman of the Port of London Sanitary Committee, drew a startling picture of some (unnamed) seaside resorts where people bathed in sewage and came back to London, where enteric wards had to be opened to accommodate them. If there really are such places, I should have thought that Mr. Williamson owes it to his fellow-citizens to give them the needful information to protect themselves against acquiring enteric on their holidays. Of course, sewage may be, and is sometimes, discharged into the sea in a manner which constitutes a danger, but provided proper precautions are taken it is absurd to say that such a method of disposing of it is either insanitary or offensive. Take Brighton itself, for instance. How else could it possibly dispose of its sewage with equal advantage on the score of either expense, hygiene, or æsthetics?

---

The antipathy of some of our Bœotians to motor-cars was strikingly illustrated at the Barnstaple Rural Council the other day. There are many dangerous corners and crossings in the district, which is much frequented by tourists. The Motor Union offered to supply ten warning signs free of expense and to contribute half the cost of any more that were required. By a majority, however, the Council declined to accept the signs. One councillor named W. T. Buckingham explained that "he did not like the look of them;" furthermore, "if motorists drove over any one they should be held responsible." It seems to me that if there are accidents after this the intelligent Buckingham and his colleagues are the people who should be held responsible.

---

"QUEER STORIES" from TRUTH. Now ready, Series XVI. Price 1s., at all booksellers, and from the Publisher, 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street. "They are one of the wonders of the world, these stories and people are never tired of asking who writes them."—Bystander.

£100 A YEAR FOR YOUR WIFE if she survives you costs (ages of self and wife 40) £28 15s. annually in the SUN LIFE OF CANADA, 93, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.

It is understood at Edinburgh that Lord Low has resigned his seat in the Court of Session in consequence of the state of his health. Lord Low was raised to the Bench twenty years ago, and he has established a high reputation as a very able judge. The place will, of course, be at the disposal of the Solicitor-General for Scotland, but, if he does not care to be shelved, it is most probable that Mr. Macfarlane, K.C., Sheriff of Fife, will be the new judge.

---

An outrageously disproportionate penalty was imposed the other day by the Norwich magistrates upon an old man of seventy-five for making false statements in order to obtain an old-age pension. The old man had denied that he had received poor law relief during the disqualifying period, whereas he had in fact received such relief. The magistrates sentenced him to a month's imprisonment without the option of a fine, the sentence carrying with it a deprivation of pension for ten years, which is tantamount to a fine of £130. Of course, the offence was not one which could be overlooked, but considering that in a few months hence the fact of his having received poor relief would no longer be a disqualification, it seems a hideous injustice to have deprived him of any chance of escaping the workhouse in the closing years of his life.

---

One of the inconsistencies which the extension of the Old-Age Pensions Act will remove, at least to some extent, was illustrated by a case which came before the Mitford and Launditch Guardians last week. An old couple had both been in receipt of a pension. The wife had to be removed to an asylum, and the husband, being bed-ridden, had consequently to be removed to the workhouse infirmary. The Guardians seemed to think—quite rightly—that they ought in such cases to be able to receive invalid pensioners as boarders, and that both the ratepayers and the pensioner are defrauded when the pension is stopped, because through circumstances entirely beyond their control pensioners are compelled to enter the workhouse. The new Act will put this right.

---

The precious guardian of the poor who walked into the bedroom of one of the attendants at the St. George's-in-the-East workhouse infirmary one night and assaulted the girl sleeping there was very properly sent to prison for a month by Mr. Dickinson at Thames Police Court last week. The magistrate added that he considered the defendant totally unfitted to hold the position of guardian. If he does not take the hint and resign his guardianship at the expiry of his sentence, it is to be hoped that Mr. John Burns will find some means of relieving the ratepayers of his services and the Board of the contamination of his presence.

---

The scandal at Hull Sanatorium, which had as its outcome a very unpleasant affiliation case heard at Manchester Police Court, in which a nurse and a doctor were concerned, has formed the subject of inquiry by a special committee of investigation. Their report came before the Hull Sanitary Committee last week, but, beyond exonerating the matron from blame, it was a particularly featureless document, merely promising to go into matters further with a view to seeing what improvement, if any, could be effected in the administration of the institution. To judge by the remarks of a Dr. Robinson, a member of the Council, the administration badly needs overhauling. He asserted that a number of instances of the female staff being "in trouble" had occurred, that two of the head officials were continually quarrelling, that the food was lacking in quality and quantity, and that nurses had to eat off crockery used by patients suffering from contagious diseases. If there are any grounds for these statements, the sooner the sub-committee presents its further report the better for the public.

---

The Isle of Wight County Justices have earned the right to be pilloried amongst those who are blind to the sufferings of dumb animals. A dairyman and farmer named Beardsall came before them on two separate charges of cruelty. One was in respect of a pony covered with marks of ill usage and left to rot alive in a field. On this charge Beardsall was fined £3 and costs. The second was in respect of a horse which his son was working. The animal had sores on its side and back, the flanks were scarred and cut where it had been badly beaten, and the mouth and tongue were cut. In this case a fine of £2 and costs was imposed. With such evidence of systematic brutality the most muddle-headed magistrate ought to have seen that imprisonment had been richly earned.

---

What punishment ought a man to receive who knocks his wife down, picks her up by her hair, knocks her down again, and then throws her into the street? The Sheffield City Solons say that a 10s. fine is a sufficient penalty. I cannot imagine that anybody but the gentlemen who make wife-beating a regular weekly pastime will be disposed to agree with them.

---

Four years' penal servitude for stealing a doormat from a back yard seems more than strict justice demands in way of punishment. This was the sentence passed by the Recorder of Hanley at the Potteries Quarter Sessions on Bridget Warrilow, aged forty-nine, last week. It is true that there was a list of previous convictions against Bridget for pilfering, and in passing sentence the Recorder remarked, "No punishment seems to keep you from committing such crimes." This would look as if the woman's case was one for an indeterminate sentence; but if so, she ought to have been tried as an habitual criminal. To inflict such a sentence for a petty theft looks like mere ferocity.

---

The fate which has overtaken one of the home employment harpies, Francis William Rutter, at the Old Bailey should serve as a useful warning to the other swindlers engaged in defrauding poor people by similar methods. Rutter, who traded as Edwards and Co. and the Copy Company, offered work at making copies of photographs to those who would forward him 4s. 6d. for an outfit. When the copies were returned complaints were invariably made that the work was not satisfactorily executed, and applications for the return of the deposit paid were disregarded. The Recorder characterised the business as a gross and heartless fraud, and sentenced Rutter to eighteen months' hard labour. There are several other firms engaged in a similar line of business, and having secured a conviction in this case it is to be hoped the police will give them their attention.

Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.—6,550 convictions last year. Complaints marked "Private" absolutely confidential.—Secretary, 105, Jermyn Street, London.

A man named J. H. Richardson, who practised a variant of the Railway Clearance Sale Trick (No. 707 Truth Cautionary List) was sentenced to three months' hard labour by the Devonport magistrates last week. He improved on the ordinary misrepresentation that the pieces of cloth he had for sale were unclaimed goods from railway stations by the statement that the stuff had been given to Dr. Barnardo's homes to be disposed of for the benefit of the charity, and he further took orders and payments for other articles which were not delivered. Dr. Barnardo's homes have suffered through the misrepresentation of gentry of this sort, so that it cannot be too widely known that the homes do not employ any such means of raising money.

---

The activity of the ghost of the late lamented Tanquerey in distributing free portrait offers in various parts of the world has more than once been referred to in these columns. India, the home of the Mahatmas, has been selected for the most recent of these spiritual manifestations on the earthly plane. Amongst them are to be found the circular containing the forged testimonials from Truth and the Morning Leader which were Tanquerey's revenge for frequent exposure. Evidently when the ghost of Tanquerey walks there is a lying spirit abroad in the land.

---

The Card Company, of Willesden Junction, London, seems to be devoting a great deal of attention to the Army. In my last reference to them an officer had been pestered by their attentions, and now a N.C.O. sends me the circular he has received containing a proposal that he shall become one of their touts. The bait the Card Company offers is a piece of shoddy jewellery for getting rid of a dozen cards at a penny each, or the right to "go in for" more valuable free prizes. Finally, by sending an additional 4d., the Card Company will send "four lovely souvenir cards of the Royal Family," with a grand fountain pen thrown in. The recipient of this magnificent offer wants to know what to do with the postcards enclosed. I think, if I were he, I should address the whole batch to the Card Company and post them without stamps.

---

THE JUDGE'S PUTT.

(An Inquisitive Golfer's Appeal to Mr. Justice Scrutton.)

The Judge's ball was on the green,
When in some lawyer cut,
And begged my Lud to intervene
Before he took his putt.

The Judge, impatient of a wait,
Ejaculates "Tut-tut,"
And granted an injunction straight
Before he took his putt.

He tells the tale himself. And so I cannot doubt it. But There's something more I want to know
Re that suspended putt.

O Judge, within my secret soul
I vow to keep it shut;
But tell—oh tell me!—did you hole
Your now historic putt?

---

One of the favourite names used by the hawkers who go about the country selling remnants of linoleum under the pretence that they are pieces left over after the execution of an order is that of James Crawley, of 207, Borough, London, S.E. Mr. Crawley has communicated with me in regard to the use made of his name, and requested me to warn the public against any one who purports to represent the firm. As a matter of fact, although the firm deals largely in remnants of linoleum, which it obtains from the manufacturers, it sells them chiefly to small dealers and hawkers. These people, however, are purely customers, and are in no way entitled to describe themselves as the firm's representatives or employees. Some of them have even gone to the length of having copies of Mr. Crawley's business cards printed, with the result that this gentleman finds himself accused of being particeps criminis where purchasers have been defrauded by itinerant salesmen. This is unpleasant both to Mr. Crawley and the victims, but the false pretence is one which could be easily provable if the lino-swindlers were to fall into the hands of the police.

---

In a circular inviting subscriptions for shares in a betting system syndicate an individual calling himself "Blue Gown" and dating from 226, London Road, Twickenham, writes:—

> When I am able to number amongst the patrons to my system such eminent racehorse owners as the Marquis of Cholmondeley, of Cholmondeley Castle, Malpas, Cheshire, and many other eminent gentlemen of distinction, you must have more than ordinary confidence in my ability to produce you a very handsome return for any sum you may be pleased to place in my hands.

No doubt the marquis will be interested to hear of the use which is thus being made of his name, and I shall be much surprised if it does not turn out to be entirely unauthorised. Meanwhile I counsel other people to let "Blue Gown" remain dependent upon the patronage of his "eminent racehorse owners."

---

A new address, 63, Kingsway, Coventry, is now being used by an old betting system harpy named Horace White, who has long occupied a niche in the Truth Cautionary List. He tells a story of a familiar sort. Beginning with a modest capital of "6s. (six shillings)"—he sets the amount out thus so that there can be no mistake—he has in a very few years "made a fortune running into thousands of pounds." Some men would proceed to enjoy their fortune without troubling their minds about other people, but not so Horace White. He is anxious to benefit "sporting workmen and small business men," and so he gives them the privilege of buying his wonderful system. And flapdoodle of that kind never fails to extract money from the pockets of the gullible public.

---

F. P. Brown, of 18, Glenshaw Mansions, Brixton Road, S.W., is a Turf tipster who does not trouble to veil his contempt for the intelligence of any prospective dupe whom he approaches. Last week he wrote to an Army officer saying that his name had been mentioned to him "in connection with racing" by a "client" who "also holds a commission in the Army." On the strength of this silly story, Brown asked for a guinea for a Doncaster tip, together with a promise of a further four guineas "after the horse has won." It so happened that the officer thus addressed never makes a bet, and takes no interest in racing, but, even if he did, it hardly seems conceivable that such a letter could have been expected to produce the desired remittance. And yet it is certain that Brown would not waste time and money in sending out such communications unless the game paid.

---

Truth Cautionary List for 1910, 128 pages bound in cloth, price 1s. net, by post 1s. 2d., is now ready, and may be obtained from all booksellers and railway bookstalls.

---

As I anticipated, the begging-letter writer, Henry Prescott Swan, to whom reference was made in Truth on August 31 as posing as a repentant sinner, is an old hand at the game. It is true that he has just been released from prison, having recently served a sentence of three years' penal servitude for attempting to get money by false pretences from Sir William Crookes. That was not an isolated offence, however, for although he is not more than thirty-four or thirty-five years of age, he has spent about sixteen of them in gaol. His favourite method is to address letters to persons whose deaths have been announced in the obituary columns of newspapers claiming school-fellowship with the deceased gentlemen, and when last arrested two sums of money found in his possession had been remitted to him by the mothers of the deceased to whom he had addressed appeals. As his sentence was to have been followed by three years' police supervision, it may be hoped that the Birmingham police will keep an eye upon him.

---

A novelty in begging letters has been sent me by a gentleman, one of the products of whose orchid-house was illustrated recently in a gardening contemporary. It is dated from Glenroyd, Skelmanthorpe, and signed "A. Dalton." "One of my friends," says the writer, "has for a number of years had a most ardent desire to cultivate orchids," but only being possessed of small means has been unable to gratify his ambition. Then Mr. Dalton describes how he has himself built his friend an orchid house, and how he is now engaged in stocking it by asking for plants from well-known orchid growers, amongst those who have responded to his appeals being Lord Rothschild, the Hon. Leopold Rothschild, and Sir Jeremiah Colman. He states that his friend is most interested in Vandas, Oncidiums, Lycastes, Dendrobiums, Miltonias, and Ephidendrums. He does not explain, however, how all these species are to be grown in one orchid-house, a point which would prove of great interest to orchid-growers, but perhaps his friend has not enlightened him on the subject. Mr. Dalton must see to this, or some people might draw therefrom the unkind inference that his friend's interest in orchids is of a commercial rather than a scientific nature.

---

The "Rev." Robert Macmillan (No. 29 Truth Cautionary List) must be getting well on in years, but his efforts on behalf of his "sustentation" fund show no falling off in energy. He has been busy in the City lately, where his venerable appearance and his ostentatious piety appear to be as valuable assets as in the suburbs. His memory, however, seems to be getting a little defective, since he called twice within a comparatively short time on a gentleman who on the first occasion showed himself fully acquainted with the Reverend beggar's past history.

---

Some authoritative information has just come to hand in regard to the mendicant members of the Assyrian tribe of Jilu whose comings and goings have on several occasions been referred to in Truth. The Assyrian Christians are divided into two sects, the Chaldeans and the Nestorians. The Chaldeans are in communion with Rome, and all collectors of this sect may be regarded as impostors unless furnished with an authorisation supplied by Propaganda. The head of the Nestorians is Mar Shimun, to whom in the past I seem to have done an injustice, since he has not authorised any of the peripatetic beggars who appear to have made use of his name, and he has a strong objection to their methods of procedure. The real offender is Mar Sergis, Bishop of Jilu, the whole of whose diocese, bishop included, apparently being engaged in a vast swindling conspiracy to get money under the utterly false plea of building churches and schools in Jilu.

---

There exists in Jilu no necessity for any churches and schools, those at present existing being ample for the purpose. Indeed, so far as the schools are concerned, they play an important part in the begging campaign carried on by this mendicant tribe, since foreign languages are a feature in the curriculum, the children, as soon as they can speak, being taught to ask in two or three foreign languages for money "for our poor churches and schools in Kurdistan." This is not to be wondered at when collectors are constantly returning from all parts of the world with sufficient funds to set them up for life. The bishop is ready to give an authorisation under the episcopal seal to any one who agrees to divide the profits with him, and so the game goes on. Imprisonment, it appears, has no terrors for the Nestorian collector, for his house and his fare at home are such that the Western prison is a palace to him. The curious thing about these gentry is the success they meet with at the hands of the clergy of the Established Church and their Nonconformist brethren, who hitherto have been the chief contributors to the Bishop of Jilu and his flock of wolves.

---

Inventors would do well to beware of a rival of my friend Mr. Crozier, carrying on business a short while ago at 12, Victoria Street, Manchester, as a "patent expert" under the name of "The Express Business Transfer Agency." An inventor who went to the principal of the agency, a man named Barnard, with a device for a window fastener, twelve months ago, was assured that his invention was worth at least £300, and was thereby induced to pay a fee of £5 5s. to Barnard to dispose of it. He heard once more from Barnard to the effect that a customer had taken a fancy to the invention, but thought £150 ample price to pay for it. Neither the £150 nor any smaller sum ever materialised, nor is there the slightest prospect of its so doing. Window fasteners are about the first thing the would-be inventor sets about inventing, and they must be an absolute drug in the market.

---

Here is another example of the unsatisfactory business methods of G. Bell and Brothers, of 93, Waterloo

Thos. Goode & Co.—Exhibition of old and modern Wedgwood, including many specimens never previously exhibited.—South Audley Street, London.

Street, Glasgow. A Plymouth gentleman sent the firm 3s. 6d. in May last for a small pistol advertised in their catalogue. In June he received a printed communication stating that dealers could not supply firearms to persons not holding a licence, and a note asking him to state whether he was a householder. He replied to the effect that he was a householder, and requesting the return of his remittance if the pistol could not be forwarded, but if it could be supplied he would send a further 9s. for a more expensive article. Bell and Brothers answered that the revolver could be supplied, and the 9s. was sent them. The revolver, however, has never been received, nor has the firm taken any notice of communications sent them by their customer or his solicitor. Perhaps an application to the Glasgow police might prove effective.

---

Succumbing to the wiles of a Hamburg lottery tout, one of my lady readers took a ticket for the first of the usual series of drawings. In this she was unsuccessful, but she was persuaded to renew her ticket—subscribing, of course, an increased stake each time—for the second and third drawings. On the latter occasion she won a small prize, the amount being little more than what she had already paid in stakes. But, of course, the lady did not get her prize in cash. Following the custom of his tribe the tout sent her fourth drawing tickets for the amount of the prize, and when she returned them he sent them back, saying she should not be content with such a paltry sum but try her luck again for something substantial.

---

The result was that the lady lost the paltry sum she had gained, but the unabashed tout forwarded tickets for the fifth drawing with a request for payment, and coolly asked the lady to recommend the lottery to her friends. The lady, however, wisely concluded that it may be more useful to narrate her experiences in Truth as an example of the methods of these Hamburg harpies. I am often asked whether the German State lotteries are swindles. Not at all. But the complicated conditions make them very poor gambles, and over and above this the circularising ticket agents are often unprincipled tricksters.

---

A well-known publishing firm sends me the following amusing request for review copies of its publications from the editor of the Gentlewoman's Court Journal, who writes from 25, Barclay Road, Walham Green, London, S.W.:—

> If you send me any of the works you issue I will be pleased to press their claims in our columns. Thus far I have seen none of them, and yet I have reviewed for all the leading publishers for the past thirty years. My notices usually serve a business purpose.
>
> I have often thought that you leave untried the most effective way of pushing such issues as yours, and that the use of the living voice which, when heard from the platform, sweeps all before it. I have a wide lecturing connection in chapels and clubs, and could easily, at but trifling cost to you, press the claims of now one and then another of your issues from the platform; circulars could at the same time be distributed. That I regard as the most effective method of urging the claims of your issues. Try it!

---

Enclosed with this letter is a handbill containing a testimonial signed N. Browning Hearnden, "Editor of The Gentlewoman's Court Journal," and bearing witness to the marvellous virtues of an embrocation. It is to be read, I presume, as an example of what an editor can do in the way of puffery when he really lets himself go, and if the Journal is all written in the same style it ought to be an amusing publication. Whether "pressing the claims" of any books in the columns of the Journal is worth a review copy is quite another question, for Mr. Browning Hearnden's thirty years' experience has been mainly, I take it, in connection with those obscure journals which make a business of puffery. He was for a long time editor of the Gentleman's Journal and Gentlewomen's Court Review (No. 570 Truth Cautionary List), but during the last year or two the name of another proprietor-editor has appeared in connection with that publication, so I presume that the Gentlewoman's Court Journal is Hearnden's attempt to carry on the old business under a slightly altered name.

---

In regard to the alternative suggestion put forward by Mr. Hearnden, I cannot claim to judge its value, as I have never heard his living voice sweeping all before it from the platforms in chapels and clubs where he lectures. But, all the same, I should imagine that the value both of the lecture and the lecturer would be considerably discounted by the lectured if at the close they were presented with circulars about all the books, embrocations, patent foods, underlinen, or other articles mentioned in the course of the address.

---

THE ALPINE CLIMBER.

(Suggested by recent paragraphs in the Daily Telegraph.)

Far off the torrent that leaps from the heart of the hill
Onward is rushing
Fast by the spot where young Strephon is wooing at will Phyllis, who's blushing.
Look where the bountiful sun casts his thrice welcome rays,
Pleasant and golden,
Lighting the crests of yon peaks that are linked with the days
Mystic and olden;
Mark how the bold mountaineer clasps his stout alpen-stock,
How sans fatigue he (Just for the sport of the thing) starts to climb that old rock
Known as the Rigi.

Look! Can't you see that small speck with the hat on its nut
On those near niches?
Yes, it is he; I could tell him miles off by the cut
Of his old breeches.
Gad! He can climb! How he tramps o'er the untrodden snow,
Fit as a fiddle,
Save that at sight he appears just a trifle too ro-
Tund round the middle;
Yes, I could swear that I heard him this moment up there,
Where the mist thickens,
While he perspires on his pate (where he used to have hair),
Puff like the dickens.

Now he is hidden away for a time from our sight,
Left to his glory;
Come! We shall listen perhaps in a day and a night
To his tall story!
Come! for the marrow within me is getting so cold,
And I feel thinner;
Come! let us eat; speaking coarsely, I think I can hold
Quite a good dinner.
And let us hope when he finds what he set out to seek
And the quest ceases,
He in his ardour won't come with a bound from that peak
In little pieces!

SCRUTATOR.

ARMS AND THE LAW.

THE judgment of the Hague Tribunal in the Newfoundland Fisheries case ought to remove a good deal of the scepticism with which the principle of international arbitration is still regarded. Here we have an international dispute which turns upon just one of those questions of sovereignty on which nations are most touchy, and which are traditionally regarded as directly affecting their honour. The dispute has smouldered for upwards of a century, frequently developing considerable heat and presenting a constant danger of disastrous conflagration. A little disposition to quarrel on either side, a little loss of temper on the part of either people or Government, and the two nations concerned would have been flying at one another's throats. They have now made that method of settling the dispute permanently impossible by referring the questions at issue for settlement to a legal tribunal. Neither of them is ever likely to regret having done so. It is true that, from the nature of the case, the result could not possibly be entirely satisfactory to both parties. The award is mainly in our favour—entirely so in that part of the case which most concerns us. But our American friends ought not to grudge us the success. They sought to divide with us the full sovereignty of what are under the ordinary rules of international law territorial waters. It was a very unusual claim, arising out of the exceptional circumstances of the recognition of the independence of the United States. There was, no doubt, some show of legal argument in support of their case; but they lose nothing by the overruling of their arguments. On the other hand, had our contention been overruled, we should have been placed in a very anomalous and not very dignified position; we should have been ousted from the full rights which were undisputed prior to 1776, and which since that date we have never allowed to have been modified; and we should have suffered in consequence not only material loss, but a certain amount of humiliation. It is to be hoped that they will consider this on the other side, the more so as they gain by the judgment various minor concessions which are of considerable value to them, and will certainly not be agreeable to our fellow subjects in Newfoundland. Another reflection which should mitigate their disappointment is that on the last occasion when a serious cause of quarrel between the two nations was referred to arbitration they came off with flying colours while we were cast in heavy damages. We on the British side may, indeed, take particular credit to ourselves for the satisfactory adjustment of this long-standing dispute, for we went to arbitration with a heavier stake to lose than our American friends. If the judgment had gone against us, our Government would have had to face a storm of obloquy for going to arbitration at all, and the principle of settling international disputes by this method would have been greatly discredited in this country. The decision that has now been delivered is not likely to produce any such result in America, and there is no reason why it should.

It is easy to build too much on the successful adjustment of one or two international disputes by arbitration; but what we may justly consider is that every example of such settlement will tell with effect in future international difficulties. When once civilised communities have come to regard war as a terrible evil, to be avoided by all honourable means—which seems to be the case at present—every arbitration successfully carried through makes it more improbable that war will be resorted to in future for the settlement of bonâ-fide differences of opinion between nations. The Hague Tribunal has already done much to acquire the confidence of the powers which created it, and it is not extravagant to suppose that under the influence of its successful proceedings a sort of international public opinion is being formed, which will restrain Governments from breaking the peace in preference to submitting their grievances against their neighbours to the jurisdiction of a competent and disinterested court.

For this reason, I am no believer in the rumours of impending war which at present alarm so many people, not in England alone. So far as the Continent of Europe is concerned, nothing is more certain than that war is to-day dreaded by the nations as it has never been before. This is one of the few beneficial results of universal military service, though one on which the admirers of that system prefer to remain silent. The liability of the whole able-bodied population to be exposed to the hardships and horrors of active service in the field acts as a potent sedative on the millions subjected to it. And not on them alone. It influences all those who, though not themselves liable to service, must see their nearest relatives and friends led to the sacrifice; it touches the hardest-hearted in their tenderest spot, because it paralyses industry and commerce as soon as the call to arms is raised. Moreover, the ramifications of modern business and credit and the increasing intricacy of the financial interdependence of modern States make it more and more difficult for one nation to exact from another by violence any benefit that will compensate for the huge cost of modern warfare, not only directly in blood and treasure, but indirectly in the dislocation of the international economic system. This point is only dimly appreciated at present, but the consciousness of it is growing, and must continue to grow under modern economic conditions. The result is that the predatory spirit is dying out among civilised nations, and though they vie with one another more strenuously than ever in the magnitude and perfection of their warlike preparations, the motive behind it all is fear—fear of war, shaped and directed by the ancient sophism that to prepare for war is the best means of securing peace.

To conclude from this that the danger of war among the Western Powers is at an end would be foolish. One danger remains unaffected by all the changes in modern conditions—the danger of an international quarrel begotten of nothing but mutual suspicion, jealousy, ill-will, and bad temper. That is the particular danger towards which this country seems to be drifting. We are specially liable to it because our people lack the restraining influence which has been imposed on Continental nations by universal military service, and which has done so much in the last forty years to chasten the bellicose spirit of our neighbours across the Channel. Is there any probability of another war between France and Germany? I should say No.

"QUEER STORIES" from TRUTH. Now ready, Series XVI. Price 1s., at all booksellers, and from the Publisher, 10, Bolt Court Fleet Street. "They are one of the wonders of the world, these stories, and people are never tired of asking who writes them."—Bystander.

The tendency of the times in both nations is all against it. We have seen the evidence of this more than once when war clouds have arisen and passed away. Is there any probability of another war between this country and France, or between this country and the United States? Again, I should say No. The necessary materials for an international conflagration do not exist in either case. The probabilities are that any difficulties that may arise in the future will be disposed of as the Newfoundland Fisheries dispute has been. Is there any probability of a war between this country and Germany? I should say Yes, if the two countries go on as they are going. When the trouble between two near neighbours arises, not from any conflict of interests or rights, but from mutual suspicion, misunderstanding, jealousy, and malice, when each is arming against the other and openly saying so, you have a situation in which no international court of arbitration is of any avail, and which is not materially affected by any calm calculation of the consequences of war. I hope that the threatened result will be long postponed and ultimately avoided. But this will only be by a recognition on both sides of the danger ahead and the real reasons why it is there, and a resolute endeavour on both sides to remove it. It certainly will not be done by building more Dreadnoughts, enrolling more soldiers, and fortifying the opposite sides of the North Sea till they bristle with guns; on the contrary, the longer this course is persisted in the more imminent becomes the danger.

THE COMING OF STATE INSURANCE.

The all-round approval given by the press to Sir Hubert Llewellyn Smith's address to the British Association at Sheffield on the Government scheme of unemployment insurance is an indication of the interest taken by the public in the promised legislation on this subject. If the Government hurried their old-age pension scheme through Parliament, the same cannot be said of their insurance proposals, which ought to have been produced last session, but were relegated by untoward circumstances to next session's programme. That they will not be again relegated, and to a still more distant session, is far from certain, and this is one of the many reasons for hoping that the "constitutional question" will somehow be got out of the way between now and Christmas.

Fathered by the Permanent Secretary of the Board of Trade, the unemployment insurance scheme is first in the field. It is the scheme neither of the Majority nor Minority Report of the Poor-law Commission, but one which Sir H. Llewellyn Smith has worked out by the light of his own experience and that of his expert advisers. Its scope is at first to be limited to certain specified trade groups—building, engineering, and shipbuilding—comprising nearly two and a-half millions of workers. These trades, nicknamed "insurance trades," contain a large insurable element predominating over the uninsurable, the men being skilled workers who, owing to discharge when trade is bad, go from the employed to the unemployed list rather than remaining on as half-timers. The average percentage of unemployment in these trades has been calculated on the statistics of fifty years as 5.9 per cent. The scheme is to be compulsory and contributory, the State, employers, and men contributing in proportions which have not yet been made public, though Mr. Churchill stated in the House of Commons that the aggregate contribution per man necessary to provide the benefits fixed would be between 5d. and 6d. a week. Mr. Churchill did not specify the amounts of the proposed benefits, but they will be less than what are usually given by the trade unions, some of which pay as much as ten and even twelve shillings a week to members out of work during the first three months of their unemployment. The insurance machinery will be State-managed, differing in this respect from the so-called Ghent system, which found favour with the signatories of the Majority Report, and the basis of which is a State or municipal subsidy of the trade unions. If the Ghent scheme were adopted its effect would be to exclude all non-union men, who comprise three-quarters of the industrial population of the United Kingdom. The intention of the Government is that State-aided insurance should have a national organisation and a non-political machinery, whereas the trade union wire-pullers are working all they know to set aside the Osborne judgment and use their funds not alone for beneficial purposes, and in some cases not at all, but in order to create a labour trust in the House of Commons.

There are at present many gaps in the above scheme, and when these come to be filled up theoretical agreement goes out of the door and practical dissension steps in. It is always difficult to get a Bill involving compulsion through the House, and particularly so when the Bill makes compulsory demands on members' pockets. How will the employers like contributing to a scheme which means a direct tax without any direct return? And what about the men? In his Minority Report of the Aged Poor Commission of 1895 Mr. Henry Broadhurst gave it as his opinion that "any attempt to levy an insurance premium upon the workman's weekly wage would in this country encounter the relentless opposition of the whole Trade Union and Friendly Society world." Are the trade union leaders now in the mind to accept a proposal which levies a compulsory weekly contribution of 2d. or 3d. from the workman's earnings to secure him the benefits promised by the Government? What again will be the relations between the State insurance machinery and the trade unions which already provide out-of-work benefits for their members? Sir H. Llewellyn Smith says he has in hand "a well devised plan of co-operation," but until this is published it is impossible to say how the scheme will be viewed by the Labour party, in whose interests it is intended to legislate.

Mr. Lloyd George's Bill for insurance against sickness and invalidity is supplementary to the Old Age Pensions Act (1906), and is meant to provide for those workpeople who break down in health before reaching the pensionable age of seventy. The Chancellor has so far given the public very little information about the details of his Bill, but we know that the scheme is to be compulsory and contributory and worked through the machinery of the friendly societies. The latter being non-political bodies, there is not the same objection to putting them in office as there would be if the trade unions were required to administer the unemployment insurance fund. Some 15,500,000 men and women will be affected by Mr. Lloyd George's Bill, which involves far bigger interests than are concerned in the Board of Trade's Unemployment Bill. The scheme will make further demands on the pockets both of employers and workers, as well as on the Exchequer. The expense of administering funds which are to benefit so large a number of people must necessarily be enormous, and I should not like to give an opinion as to the feasibility of the scheme till its details are known and the results of the actuarial investigation made public.

If these proposals are to be carried next session the sooner Ministers take off their coats the better. The task before them is increasingly heavy on account of the growing unrest in the labour market. Old-age pensions were got through Parliament easily enough because their cost was pooled with the public revenue. It is very different with compulsory insurance, which forces people to do what they ought to do but which they don't do with any better will for that reason. Both insurance schemes involve additions to the direct taxation of certain individuals who will be compelled to pay what the law demands, while others will come off scot free. No matter how many sermons on thrift theorists may preach into our ears, everyone, whether employer or labourer, prefers "muddling on" in uncertainty according to our national trend to individualism rather than be dragooned by the State into providing for the future. I am no pessimist, and I want to see these insurance schemes become law; but I warn Ministers that they must look out for breakers ahead, and use all their skill to prevent their ships being wrecked before they get into harbour.

THE KENNEL CLUB AND MRS. CROSS.

As mentioned in Truth last week, I received just on going to press copies of a correspondence which had passed between Lord Algernon Gordon-Lennox and the Kennel Club with reference to the case of Mrs. Ashton Cross, and which was too lengthy to deal with in the time at my disposal. The facts of the treatment of Mrs. Ashton Cross by the Kennel Club had already been given in detail in these columns on July 6. In brief outline they are as follows:—Mrs. Cross is a well-known breeder and exhibitor of Pekinese and other dogs. At the Birmingham Show in January last she entered one of a litter of four pups, named respectively Chu-ting, Chu-ming, Chu-sing, and Chu-wen. Chu-sing was the one shown, and won a prize, but the entry had been made in the name of Chu-ting. Chu-ting had previously been exhibited in London, and at the time when the Birmingham entries were being made a gentleman was negotiating for the purchase of this puppy. This purchaser, seeing Chu-ting's name in the Birmingham catalogue, concluded that the dog delivered to him was not the dog he bought, and communicated with Mrs. Cross, who wrote to the secretary of the Kennel Club explaining the mistake and expressing regret for it. At his suggestion she wrote to the same effect to the secretary of the Birmingham Show, placing herself in the hands of the committee and relinquishing the prize-money. However, the committee of the Kennel Club proceeded to formulate a charge against her that she exhibited a dog at the Birmingham Show, which was not entered and not registered, in the name of another dog which was registered; that, having been informed by the secretary of the club that she must relinquish the prize-money won she took no proper steps to do so, and eventually, when the money was paid over, did not refund it or offer to refund it. The committee of the Kennel Club, after an inquiry, at which Mrs. Cross was represented by Sir Edward Clarke, found the lady guilty of discreditable conduct, suspended her from exhibiting at any Kennel Club show for two years, ordered her to be prevented from attending any such show during the same period, and disqualified her for life for judging or taking part in the management of any show. At the inquiry the only witnesses examined were Mrs. Cross and her daughters. They gave a perfectly simple and credible explanation of how the initial mistake in regard to the entry of the wrong name had arisen, and the other part of the charge amounted to no more than not replying to correspondence as promptly as might have been advisable.

After examining the whole of the evidence I came to the conclusion that the decision of the committee was as unjust as it was cruel. I was not alone in my belief. Sir Edward Clarke, who had the best opportunity of judging of the merits of the case, has given his written opinion that "the finding of the Kennel Club Committee cannot be justified by the facts which were before them," and the injustice of a body of gentlemen branding a lady as guilty of discreditable conduct on insufficient evidence needs no argument. This view of the matter presented itself to Lord Algernon Gordon-Lennox, who has gone fully into the matter, in which, as vice-president of the Kennel Club, he took a personal interest. Lord Algernon Gordon-Lennox, on reading a full report of the proceedings, came to the conclusion that a grave miscarriage of justice had taken place, but in order to obtain the views of an absolutely independent person of position he instructed his own solicitors to prepare a case for the opinion of counsel, such case to consist of a bare recital of the facts without comment and to be accompanied only by documents available to all parties. This case he submitted to Sir Robert Finlay, and upon it he has received the following considered opinion:—

In my opinion the Committee of the Kennel Club were not justified in their judgment and sentence. Mrs. Ashton Cross was charged with discreditable conduct—

(1) In respect of the exhibition of an unregistered dog at the Birmingham Show, and

(2) In respect of the failure to inform the secretary of the Birmingham Show that she must relinquish the prize-money.

A decision against Mrs. Ashton Cross on the first of these charges could be justified only if the evidence given by Mrs. Ashton Cross and her daughters is to be treated as untrue. They stated distinctly that the entry of the dog at the Birmingham Show in the wrong name was due to inadvertence, and there does not appear upon the face of the proceedings anything to suggest that Mrs. Ashton Cross and her daughters could be properly treated as having given false evidence on this point. Mere inadvertence cannot support a charge of discreditable conduct. I can see no justification for the finding of the Committee if it related to the first charge unless there was something in the demeanour of Mrs. Ashton Cross and her daughters and in the manner in which they gave their evidence pointing to the conclusion that that evidence was intentionally false. I can see nothing in the printed evidence or documents to lead to any suspicion of this kind. Moreover, there appears to be an absence of any adequate motive for the misconduct suggested.

The second charge appears to me to be disposed of by the letter of March 1, which is now admitted was sent to the secretary of the Birmingham Show. The facts with regard to the dog exhibited are there stated, and the matter is left in the hands of the Committee. The charge as to delay in returning the money seems to be quite frivolous, and I cannot understand how the omission to inform the secretary of Birmingham Show of the fact that Mr. Jaquet had told Mrs. Ashton Cross she must relinquish the prize-money can, in the face of the letter of March 1, amount to discreditable conduct.

August 3, 1910. (Signed) R. B. Finlay.

With this opinion in his possession confirming his own point of view, Lord Algernon Gordon-Lennox wrote to Dr. J. Sidney Turner, Chairman of the Kennel Club Committee, stating that he would have no alternative but to resign his office as Vice-President and his membership of the Kennel Club unless the Committee were prepared to reconsider the case with a view to removing the stigma on Mrs. Cross. The result is what frequently happens when a number of well-meaning but injudicious gentlemen have blun-dered into a false position and see no chance of extricating themselves from it save by a frank admission that they have made a mistake. The principal letter is written by Dr. Turner after the Kennel Club Committee had "carefully considered" Lord Algernon Gordon-Lennox's letter referred to above. It states that while the committee have "all proper respect for the opinion of Sir Robert Finlay, their decision is not and could not be shaken by, or even discussed with, any one, however eminent, who had not the admitted advantage of hearing the whole of the facts and circumstances, of seeing Mrs. Ashton Cross and the witnesses, and so of forming their own considered judgments." While this applies to Sir Robert Finlay's opinion, it cannot apply to the opinion expressed by Sir Edward Clarke, for although the latter appeared on Mrs. Cross's behalf at the inquiry, yet it was only after the case had been decided that he expressed the view that his client had been unfairly treated, and an opinion voluntarily expressed by an advocate under such circumstances must carry weight. Dr. Turner then goes on to defend the action of the committee on the ground that it cannot be actuated by any other motive than the interest of the Club and the public in arriving at its decisions. This is all absolutely beside the mark. No one has questioned the Committee's impartiality nor impugned its motives. The complaint is that it has come to a wrong decision, that it has passed a judgment upon a lady conveying the imputation that she has been guilty of dishonourable conduct without the evidence to justify it. "Such a tribunal," says Dr. Turner, "constituted by the members of the Club itself, unless impeached on the grounds of misconduct or want of impartiality, in which respect the Committee is not only unimpeached, but has been, and will, I trust and believe, always be, unimpeachable, must also use the powers so entrusted to it independently of any external influence." If this twaddle means anything at all it is that once having come to a decision nothing in the world will induce them to alter it. Two leading members of the Bar, and beyond all question eminent judges of the value of evidence, tell them that their decision is wrong and unjustifiable. "Our motives," reply the Committee, "are unimpeachable, we deserve only praise for obeying the dictates of our incapacity and lack of intelligence." I shall be very much surprised if such a high and mighty attitude commends itself to the members of the Kennel Club generally. The immediate result of the refusal of the Committee to reopen the case has been the resignation by Lord Algernon Gordon-Lennox of his vice-presidency and membership of the club, and if his example is followed by other influential members it will be very much to their credit.

ON GETTING ENGAGED.

As I cast my eyes round among my married acquaintances it is a source of wonder to me, probably no less than to themselves, how most of them ever came to marry each other. For the difference between fact and theory in marriage is greater than most inconsistencies. In the novel the hero is always a young god—or, if the author wishes to show his superiority by making him ugly, he grows steadily more beautiful till the end of the book; the heroine is once for all slender, loving, or at least advanced. Her servant questions and his rubber speculations have no place in the average novel, which leaves them settled comfortably for life in each other's arms. In actual fact you may find them almost anywhere else.

Yet marriage is still a comparatively flourishing institution, and the reason is no doubt to be found in that half-way house—getting engaged. Where there is one reason for getting married there are dozens for getting engaged—so many, indeed, that the only wonder is that there is any one disengaged. On the feminine side many get engaged for the sole reason that they have had their first proposal, and are too modest to rely with confidence upon a second opportunity. Most girls pine for a first proposal, if only by way of feeling their feet and seeing how it is done, and the fact of the proposal invests temporarily with a rosy cloud men with weak chins and bowed legs; men with bald patches and fads about savouries; men with a fear of draughts, and men with waists. Only in the clear daylight of marriage does the cloud lift and show that its lining is not silver. In the case of men propinquity accounts perhaps for some of the most oddly assorted couples. If a man sees a woman at regular intervals for any length of time she becomes a habit, and the moment he becomes conscious of the habit he usually proposes, preferring to take the ills he thinks he knows rather than those he wots not of. Here again the cloak of habit obscures from him the fact that she dresses badly and is proportionately jealous of other women, that even if she did her hair with rather less resemblance to a wooden transformation she could never be either attractive or punctual. If she make him really comfortable the cloak may never fall, and they count as a happily married couple.

Less material grounds are that the girl may have a turn for sentiment, the man for romance. For how many engagements are the moon and a rich baritone responsible? For how many more a pair of earrings or a curl on the nape of the neck? I know of one engagement that was entirely due to a hunting accident. The man broke his arm out hunting, and in the lull caused by the temporary and unwilling suspension of his activities the girl found his sling perfectly irresistible. If a man is going out to India for a term of years he nearly always makes a point of proposing the night before he starts, and the girl nearly always accepts him. Absence does not always make the heart grow fonder, but the thought of absence invariably incites it to momentary aberration. If the girl should chance to refuse, the man more often than not binds up a wounded heart on the way out with a quite unnecessary bandage. A girl is often attracted to a man because his mother or his landlady may be assumed to make him uncomfortable. There is a certain personal superiority to be acquired in the prospect of sewing on neglected buttons, in giving him mutton which he does like instead of beef which he doesn't. It is only when later he does not every day express his intense gratitude for his good fortune that such good offices pall. Most men like to be petted, and most girls like to feel they are spoilt. A hint of womanly tenderness, a suggestion of masculine obliviousness to imperfection is ample ground for an engagement.

Quite a number of men get engaged because the girl lacks all the qualities they admire most in other women. Does the man appreciate intellect, his choice must be of more than average stupidity; does he worship elegance and charm, she must be pre-eminently respectable. In the same way a woman of intellectual tendency usually likes being engaged to a man of horsey instincts. In marriage the differences become disagreeably accentuated; in engagements they are piquant because unexplored. On the whole the reasons for getting engaged seem to be those which should tell the most against getting married. A man cannot wear his arm always in a sling, nor can a girl always remain a little country rosebud. The triumph of having persuaded a man to shave off a much cherished moustache can at best be only temporary, while the joy of feeding "his little girl" with salted almonds or laughing at her ignorance of cheques or cricket looks foolish if unduly prolonged. It is much safer to get married than to get engaged.

TRUTH CAUTIONARY LIST for 1910, 128 pages bound in cloth, price 1s. net, by post 1s. 2d., is now ready, and may be obtained from all booksellers and railway bookstalls.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE POPE AND THE FRENCH CATHOLICS.

THE late M. Vandal was to have received Monsignor Duchesne at the Academy. Owing to his death the ceremony of reception stands adjourned to January. The successor of Cardinal Mathieu still keeps his pied-à-terre in the far-out end on the Faubourg St. Germain. It is in a common-looking old house and at the back of a courtyard. The ground floor of the tenement is taken up with a popular restaurant, or gargote, where cabbies and such-like dine. In Rome Monsignor Duchesne lodges in a palace, as a functionary of "La Princesse"—the pet name we give our Republic. His Latinity and historical erudition, in which there is no taint of pedantry, recommended him to the late Pope. There does not seem to be any appreciative admiration lost between him and the present one. Pius X. has been of late proving himself a snuffer-out of historical light in the Church. His Latin is no more than sufficient for the discharge of his cultual duties and to give benedictions to ecclesiastics to whom he grants audiences. As he throws into it the accent of his native borough near Verona, no French priest to whom he speaks can understand him. To own non-comprehension would be to commit a breach of good manners, and so these clerics have to fall back on an attitude of mute respect. The French clergy groaned and grumbled at the last encyclical, but humbly bowed. The bishops decided to take no steps in regard to the paragraphs on the First Communion until fuller instructions had been received from Rome. Their delay has, it appears, been interpreted at the Vatican as the sign of a disobedient spirit, and met with censure. Parish priests ask how they can be expected to hold parents with a tight hand in the small boroughs, villages, hamlets, and farmhouses through the campaign against lay instruction. They could keep children up to the present time from the communal schools by threatening not to admit them to the rite of First Communion if they went to these schools. This rod of chastisement is now broken. There is no longer the same hold on the rural populations. The hold on urban populations lay in the attractiveness of the rite, and the fact that, as the Pope now complains, it was a particular flower of the French genius and an offspring of the French taste for what is emotional, sentimental, and theatrical.

A Papal Pronotary now on a mission in France has been explaining to Le Temps (now a clerical paper of the De Mun-Cochin shade) the true doctrine of the Eucharist. The conversation bore upon the First Communion and the consternation that now reigns among all conforming French Catholics, however lax their conformity. The form of administration, says the Pronotary, can be changed at will by the Holy Father. In point of fact, it has undergone some great changes, none of which had any bearing on the essential point of the Real Presence. The Eucharist in the early days of Christianity was a meal of bread and wine. (Is it not still so in Scotland?) Communicants took to their homes what remained of the Eucharistic food and drink and gave it round there as sacramental. But abuses sprang up and the wine was withdrawn from the holy table. Eventually, for convenience, the wafer was substituted for the bread. It is lawful for children, even of a day old, to receive the consecrated hostie. Except in France, they are frequently admitted to partake of the Eucharist when of an age to go to confession. Mary Stuart is believed to have obtained a parcel of consecrated wafers and to have administered to herself in prison the sacrament of the Eucharist. The child of seven believes what he is told to believe. He can passively assimilate religious truth in a ritual form, but not the reasonings of the theologian. This is exactly what the Pope, a simple-minded parish priest, wants.

It is true that two years of catechetical preparation was a fruit of the religious controversies of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Before that every one took the eucharistic dogma of Innocent III. for granted, and used to communicate as a matter of course. Henry III. of England chided Saint Louis, when his guest, for going so often to hear lectures by a saintly priest on that sacrament. The English king preferred direct acquaintance with his divine Master to hearsay knowledge. The better to know Him he communicated every morning.

The Pope assigns a Jansenist and Gallican Church origin to the catechetical drill French children undergo, and sees in it a path to rationalism. At any rate, it nurtures a controversial spirit which, like Joseph Prudhomme's two-edged sword, may serve to defend religion or to cut against it. Fénelon and his patroness, Mme. de Maintenon, a ci-devant Calvinist, were all for defending the true doctrine by means of catechisms. It was her idea to send Fénelon on a catechising mission to her native province, and by that means bring over the Huguenot children. He had the charmer's gift, and knew how to touch hearts and imaginations. I do not know whether it was he who devised those features of the First Communion which inspired that delightful painting by Jules Breton of "Les Premières Communiantes," for which Steward, of New York, gave him 600,000 francs. They are features to which Pius X. objects as theatrical and too truly French.

---

The Englishman whom I quoted last week writes to me again from Spain: "Summer is at an end; heavy rains fall, north winds and winds from the Cantabrian Mountains chill one to the marrow. But the youthful infants and the Infanta Beatrice pass their days on the Concha sands, the former provided with little wooden spades and buckets and interested in the building of sand castles and hillocks. Their clothes are the same as what they wore in July, loose woollen combinations or white jerseys and drawers that do not reach to their knees. They are robust and brown as berries from exposure to the sun and the sea air, but the eldest shows when his hat is off—a regular sombrero in the breadth of its brim

—a very white forehead and a head of almost white hair. He is blue eyed, and he only resembles the King in his underlip, which, however, projects more than his father's, and is thicker. I can't call it an ugliness, taken with the rest of the face, which, while that of a child of four, might also be that of a judge who thinks out a case on the evidence he hears and inclines to severity. The cheeks are heavy, and a sullen something in the countenance reminds one of his British great-grandmother. The mind and temper his physiognomy bespeak may hereafter be valuable in council, but they may be the contrary if unenlightened by wide experience. There seems no inclination to bring him up in narrow grooves, or to give him an exalted notion of his royal standing. It is well for him that snobbish loyalty is unknown in Spain outside the court circle. There is no sort of fuss or mobbing on the sands of the Concha when he and his brother play there and take their baths. There is no apparent guard for their safety other than that furnished by the nursery. But some bathing men belonging to the Royal Pavilion are in a boat punting about not far from the strand and another one walks about at some distance. The second boy, Don Jaime, sometimes wears in addition to his drawers a white frock, short, simply made and very wide. The collar is quite plain. He seems to have an eye for the beauty of the shells that he draws with his little wooden rake from the sand and arranges in patterns. This infant is a very nice little fellow, is much darker than the Prince of the Asturias, and richer in sensibility. One can see this at first sight. He looks as if he expected to be frightened. You know how ladies look in a theatre when they expect a pistol shot or an explosion. They know that no harm will come of either. Still they apprehend a startling effect on their nerves. This expression in the prince is said to be a trace of the impressions the Queen received at the grand Segovia corrida, at which Don Jaime just missed being born. None the less, he is full of pluck as he faces the waves in bathing or braves them when playing on the beach. He dislikes to retire before them after defying them to come on. So does the eldest brother. The Condesa de los Lianos has sometimes hard and risky work for the skirts and mantle in pulling them back as the waves seem to take them at their word. The nurserymaid I take to be English. She is a person who goes by rule herself, and seems to call out in them a respectful sentiment.

"There is no apparent following save the countess and the nurse. The countess is called by the Spaniards the aya. Doña Beatrice is a fat baby, very restless, gleeful, rosy, and a fine child. Her clothes are not quite so plain and simple as her brothers'. She also reminds me of her British great-grandmother, but with very sweet eyes. An old German lady, who seemingly has the entrée at Miramar, has explained to me that she is doubly descended from the Saxe-Coburgs, twice through Victoria and Albert and once through Queen Christina, who is a great granddaughter of that sister of the Duchess of Kent who married a Duke of Wurtemberg.

"Before the King went to England he used to motor to Comillas, near Bilbao, to give cycling lessons to his nephew Alfonso, son of Don Carlos de Bourbon-Naples and the late Infanta Mercédès. This boy became first presumptive on his mother's death. He is now the fourth, and said to be as good as gold and very thoughtful and studious. The lad's face is prepossessing. His affectionate and generous attention to his young sister Isabel is touching. She came into this world a few hours before she lost her mother, and is a plain child with a rather sorrowful temper. The brother, though four years older, plays with her to gladden her, runs races, in which he lets her beat him, invents games, gathers wild fruit, flowers, and adapts himself to all her humours. She is devoted to her stepmother, Louise of Paris-Orleans, who has two children of her own. Whenever the Infanta Isabel is in some childish trouble or tired of running about she goes to her, lays her head on her shoulder, and has it out in tears or rest. Prince Charles de Bourbon looks after family interests at Bilbao, where the Queen Mother is spoken of as a great ironmaster—in the quantity of mining and smelting shares that she holds. He is much less the adviser of the King than he used to be formerly. The King became the political follower of King Edward after his marriage. His late Majesty never gave advice unasked, but when asked was free and frank in advising. His death is deeply lamented in Spain by all classes and parties. Señor Iglesias, the Socialist member of the Cortes, whom I have seen since he returned from Copenhagen, knows that it was on King Edward's advice that King Alfonso in a former strike at Bilbao held out the olive branch to the miners and became an arbitrator between them and the ironmasters. King Edward's example told in the notable widening of the Court circle at Madrid and in the place assigned at court ceremonies and banquets to the actual Prime Minister.

"King Alfonso is to have two residences on the Santander Bay. The one on the Islet of Cortegado only exists on paper, but the Town Council of that port have ceded it to him, and the architect has drawn up a plan and estimate and received the King's order to set to work. The one on the Magdalena promontory, also at Santander, is built up to the second floor, and will be habitable in 1912. Already it is an imposing and a richly handsome structure, very solid, to resist Biscay storms and winds that sweep down fiercely from the Cantabrian Mountains. The entire house is faced with cut stone. The projecting balconies with balustrades have a very fine effect. The masonry is clean-jointed. Whether the King or the city of Santander is to pay the cost I do not know, but if the latter, it may soon recoup should Alfonso XIII. make it a great yachting rendezvous. This he hopes to do, in spite of the stormy climate through a great part of the year. He is passionately fond of yachting and a daring and skilful captain, full of resource when caught in a gale. The promontory resembles the Isle of Dalkey, to the south of Kingstown Harbour, and is about the same size. The part bought for the King is cut off from the mainland by a wall. The only habitations within this enclosure are a long, low-roofed cottage and a house for coastguards.

---

The director of the Joachimsthal laboratory, which the Government so liberally supplies with pitchblende, has managed not to let Mme. Curie have the small quantity of salts of uranium that she asked for. She at first tried not for uranium, but a tiny loan of radium. The price put upon it was terrifying—not that she was asked to buy, but to pay a premium of insurance in proportion to the value. Thereupon she applied to the Minister of Public Instruction to know whether it would bear the insurance. It was thought too high. But it was proposed that since she and her late husband kept none of their laboratory operations secret, and worked for the whole world, M. Pichon might feel justified in appealing to the Emperor of Austria. The appeal went through the French Ambassador at Vienna. He expressed deep interest in the career and achievements of Mme. Curie, and promised that she should have the salts of uranium wanted to complete her demonstrations. These salts contain radium, and are a product of pitchblende. As the Emperor owns the mines that contain this substance, he seemed master at Joachimsthal. But seeming is not always being. After waiting two years Mme. Curie received a catalogue of the Joachimsthal chemicals with radium and uranium salts set down at a far higher figure than before. Added to the catalogue was a list of applications to buy. The name of Mme. Curie stood at the foot. A postscript of the director informed her that she must not expect anything until those who had applied before her had been satisfied. This she read as tantamount to the Greek Kalends. However, notwithstanding her narrow means, she has been able to buy an atom of pure radium. The Department of Public Instruction is building for its safe keeping a little edifice completely isolated from the sun. It stands like the Pillar Chapel at Saragossa, in the centre of the Curie Institute—as yet scarcely finished. The walls are everywhere lined with sheets of lead. Were they not so, the precious atom would make its way through them as water flows through a sieve.

Mme. Curie is dejected at the selfishness of the Joachimsthal directorate. She will find the Curie Institute for Chemistry finished when she comes back from her holiday stay in some quiet country place where she has been passing the holidays with the old Doctor Curie, her daughters, and her devoted laboratory assistant, M. Dubierne. The eldest girl has been entirely educated by her grandfather. She shows rare capabilities for science.

AFTER THE HOLIDAYS.

(By Paterfamilias.)

Back at the office! Thank the Lord!
  Once more I know repose.
Some leisure I can now afford
  To sit me down and doze.

For change and rest I've been away.
  The change all right I got.
The rest? Well, that, I'm bound to say,
  I certainly did not.

En garçon, changed had been the case;
  But, as it was, you bet,
I was compelled to go the pace
  My wife and youngsters set.

At six they had me out of bed—
  It was their horrid whim—
And seawards me reluctant led,
  To join them in a swim.

We breakfasted; my kiddies came,
  They seized me by the hands,
And dragged me off to have a game
  Of cricket on the sands.

The strenuous wife her claims put in,
  Ere lunch was scarcely o'er,
And took me for a cycle spin—
  Of thirty miles or more.

We dined; I longed to sit and rest.
  Was I allowed? No fear!
The kids my services impressed
  To take them on the pier.

In short, I ne'er could gain reprieve;
  No peace they'd let me know.
From early morn to dewy eve
  They kept me on the go.

By rest, then, to a shadow worn,
  What glad rejoicings lurk
Within me at this leisured morn
  That finds me back at work!

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

THE endeavours to take John Bull by the horns, dear Lady Betty, have failed. The nation is not to be forced into a war with Germany, refuses to have Protection imposed upon it, and pursues its course towards Progress unconcernedly.

The political attitude of the general public at the moment may be described by misquoting the nursery rhyme:

"Imperialism is vexation,
  Conscription is as bad;
The Rule of Peers perplexes me,
  And Protection drives me mad."

* * * * * *

There was a general impression that boys were troublesome, if not superfluous; many women are now disposed to accord some approval to the Boy Scout. This altered condition of public opinion has not escaped the attention of the Peers. It is proposed to form a corps of Peer Scouts, the members of the House of Lords assuming that with half-bared legs, dressed in khaki and with a becoming cap, they may justify their existence as have the Boy Scouts. It is possible, certainly, that reconnoitring behind the scenes at theatres devoted to musical comedy many of the Peers would be less objectionably employed than in attending to their legislative duties at the House of Lords.

* * * * * *

"Have you a Government?" an Irishman is represented to have asked on landing at New York. He was assured that there was. "Then I'm agin it," he unhesitatingly replied. "Is it new?" in effect asks every Englishman on all possible occasions, and, if it is, he invariably replies, "Then I am against it."

There are three stages of Progress here. In England all are "mad" who attempt anything new; "scoundrels" who continue in the endeavour, and "heroes" who succeed.

. . . . .

"Decay" is supposed to prevail in every direction in this country to-day. If the supposition is correct, it is "senile decay."

* * * * * *

The decay of the ghost is, however, indisputable; it has glided out of literature and from the stage as imperceptibly as it was said to appear. The ghost-story which held the attention of most men, women and children even thirty years ago is scarcely listened to now! An American millionaire recently hired a house in the Highlands, and his account of an interview with the historical ghost is greatly to the discredit of disembodied spirits generally. "Well, sir," the millionaire concludes the description of the incident, "I persuaded my visitor to try the champagne, and I had to threaten it with removal by the butler before that ghost could be made to vanish—and then it staggered into space."

* * * * * *

"A Staunch Tory" writes:—

"Carlton Club.

"Sir,—All political difficulties could be easily cleared were England formed into a 'Sanctuary for Sport.' I propose that all but the few be removed to the colonies, where the multitude could develop every theory of Socialism without affecting important interests established in this country. All the land in England would be reserved for breeding game, hunting, racing, golf, polo, tennis, and other amusements of the kind, and all water for yachting, boating, fishing, and skating. There would, therefore, be no need for farmers or agricultural labourers, and, as England would virtually be a club for the very rich of all nations, artisans and working-men of every sort should be excluded. It should be the money-spending preserve of the world, where money-making would be prohibited.

"Most of England is already parcelled out into great properties, parks, and game preserves, so there could be no insurmountable difficulty in carrying out my scheme. Besides, the impoverished landlords could extricate themselves from their difficulties by selling their respective properties to the cosmopolitan syndicate which would undertake the initial steps to transform this country into a 'Sanctuary for Sport.'

"By this means we should remove for ever all danger of invasion, financial ruin, and Socialist aggression."

—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SHADY SIDE OF ASSAM.

Dear Sir,—May I ask you to be good enough to insert the following reply to Mr. Davidson's last letter?—

No. 1. I see he has wisely dropped the plea that there are no "Eastern morals" in Assam.

No. 2. Where spelling is phonetic there are almost sure to be different versions. I can acquaint him with six ways in which Dibrughur is spelt, the quaintest of which is perhaps the "Club" one, "Debrooghor."

No. 3. Supervision of coolies since the abandoning of the "Forced" Labour Act VI. is absolutely non-existent, with the exception of a yearly visit of inspection by the Deputy Commissioner or the Superintendent of Police.

No. 4. If supervision is so strict as Mr. Davidson states, how would he explain that in 1908, when recruiting was cheap on account of the famine in Orissa, some planters weeded out their new coolies on the plantation, kicking out the coolies they did not consider strong enough—this in a strange land covered with jungle? One man got rid of about forty in this way, and the dead lined the Suddia (or does Mr. Davidson prefer Sadiya?) Road. In the end the scandal became so great that the Tea Association had to take the matter up and pass a vote of censure on the worst offender. This gentleman is still a member of two clubs.—Yours faithfully, X.

VOTES AND WAGES.

Sir,—In certain paragraphs of your issue of August 24 you cast doubt on the assertion that the granting of the suffrage to women would raise the scale of pay and the conditions of women's labour, saying, like many opponents of woman's suffrage, that the vote has nothing to do with these. But since those remarks were penned you have no doubt had cause to change your opinion as you have read day after day the outcries raised by trade unionists of the Labour Party against the Osborne case. You remember that on all hands suggestions have been made that the enactment of payment of members might be offered as a solution of this difficulty. But a great many of the Labour Party—Ramsay Macdonald and others amongst them—maintain that such a measure would do nothing to remove the bedrock difficulty, the taking away from the Labour Party of the leverage by which they have won all the measures which have been enacted for the working-men of late years, such as Trade Disputes Bills, Trade Boards, Compensation Acts, and the like; namely, a direct influence in Parliament.

As to the proof of the result of this influence we can point to Mr. Sidney Webb's "Labour in the Longest Reign," where it is stated that men's wages "have risen from 50 to 100 per cent. (and this in spite of all questions of under-cutting) in nearly all trades. In the year 1831, in a certain colliery in the Lothians, men were receiving 11s. a week, in 1872 they had 23s. 4d. per week, while in 1892 they were paid 33s. 3d. per week. To-day their wage is 40s. per week." Place beside this Mr. Sidney Webb's statement in the same book that "Women's wages for unskilled labour still gravitate as a rule pretty closely to the subsistence level below which they can never have sunk for any length of time"; and consider also the fact that the average wage for working-women is 7s. 6d. or at most 8s., whereas for a man it is 21s.! These facts speak for themselves.

Do you think that if women had been given the franchise in 1870, when the first Bill was introduced for it by Jacob Bright, we should have such sweating evils in our midst as these now brought to public notice by the Cradley Heath dispute? Do you think it would have been necessary for a grey-headed old woman of seventy-nine, who has worked under these iniquitous conditions and brought up a family as well for sixty-seven years, to come out on strike with her sisters, and risk her livelihood (such as it is) and her health and prospects for justice? If you still think things right, turn to those countries which already have woman suffrage, and you will find that the sweating evil is unknown to them, for "equal pay for equal work" and "fair pay and fair play" are the mottoes.

With regard to your statement that one of the reasons that women get lower pay in certain trades is because they are less efficient, may I point to the fact, which came before the public lately, that a certain railway company was going to employ women telegraphists instead of men, because they were "equally efficient" and "cheaper"? So, too, may I point to women teachers, who are equally well trained and equally efficient compared with men teachers, but invariably receive less pay.

As to your assertion that women workers are more subservient, less disposed to stand up for themselves, less capable of organising and fighting their own battles, I answer that they were so, owing to long acquiescence to tyranny and convention, but that they are no longer so, giving you as examples the Cradley Heath slaves, the Suffragettes, and the Midinettes now in revolt in Paris. The latter have shown a marvellous capacity for organisation without outside help.

I notice that you once more appeal to the old argument that "men are men, and women are women," but may I be allowed to point out to you that this is a two-edged sword, for it is one of the main arguments that women need votes to protect their own interests. Suffragettes do not consider it a "misfortune" to have been born women, but are proud of the fact!

The only professions in which women are paid as they should be, according to efficiency, are the musical, acting, and occasionally (but not invariably) the journalistic, and the strange commentary is that some of the keenest fighters on behalf of the Suffrage are to be found in those ranks, because their hearts are tender for those helpless sisters who are unable to fight for themselves.—Yours, etc.,

Emily Wilding Davison (B.A. London).

[A few remarks on the above letter will be found in "Entre Nous."—Ed.]

DRINK CURES.

Dear Sir,—Having read the recent correspondence in Truth respecting the Normyl Treatment for Inebriety, and having taken a great interest for the last forty-five years in the treatment of lady inebriates, I think I am in a position to give an opinion upon these secret so-called remedies.

It is a remarkable fact that all of them are alleged to cure about 90 per cent., and yet to-day there are more inebriates in this country than ever there were. If the remedies cured all they profess to do there ought to be a large decrease in the number of patients received in the retreats all over the country.

Milan.—The truth concerning Hotel de la Ville. First-class. Up-to-date. Near Cathedral. Post, telegraph and railway office in hotel. Central heating. Suite with baths.

For many years past I have ceased to tabulate statistics, for the reason that they are quite unreliable. I will quote you one example out of the many cases I have which show their unreliability. A patient came to me some five years ago, and remained a year, returning to her home supposed to be cured. I met this lady nearly every day for some years without any suspicion that anything was wrong. I inquired of her sister whether she had given them any cause for anxiety during the time since she had left me, and the reply was that she had never touched stimulants since she was under my care. I telephoned to her doctor saying how pleased I was to hear such good results, when he informed me that she had had one or two relapses since she had been home.

I could quote other cases to the same effect, but this will show you sufficiently how utterly unreliable the evidence of cure is apt to be. Would the committee of the Normyl Treatment Association consider as cured those who receive some permanent benefit, like the case I have quoted? If they did, of course they would be able to show a much larger percentage of cures than if they reckoned only those who became total abstainers.—
Yours truly, H. M. Riley.
Melbourne House, Leicester, September 10, 1910.

THE REGISTRATION OF MONEYLENDERS' ADDRESSES.

Dear Sir,—I see in your issue of Truth of August 31, 1910, a reference to Hyman Lewis, a moneylender. You state that in filling up the registration form, Lewis seems to have name the Ivanhoe Hotel as his residence on the strength of the fact that he has occasionally stayed there. You comment that this was not only an impertinent proceeding of which the company has a right to complain, but that it was practically an evasion of the regulations as to the registration of moneylenders.

The House of Lords in the case of Whiteman and Another v. Sadler, reported on July 26, 1910, in The Times, have to all intents and purposes made the Moneylending Act of 1900 a dead letter. Moneylenders, according to that decision, can with impunity register their names wrongly and yet recover their money and stand in the same position as though they had registered correctly. I think that it follows also that they can register their addresses wrongly. In the particular case in question the Court of Appeal had found that Arthur George Whiteman and Walter Elphick Whiteman, carrying on business as moneylenders in the City of London in the name of Cobb and Co., had registered themselves as moneylenders under another name other than their own or usual trade name, and, secondly, that they had carried on business as moneylenders in more than one name. This case is fully reported in The Times of March 19, 1910.

The House of Lords, in giving their judgment, held that the Court of Appeal are right in their contention that the Whitemans were wrongly registered, not having complied with the provisions of the Moneylending Act, 1900, but they add that if he is registered by the Commissions of Inland Revenue and registered improperly, the fault does not lie with him alone, the Commissioners are at least equally to blame; and that so long as the name remains on the register his contracts in that name are not to be held void.

The judgment appears to be a gross miscarriage of justice, and to permit moneylenders such as Whiteman to trade in any number of names they like to register themselves in, for all intents and purposes the Moneylending Act of 1900 need never have been passed.—
Yours truly, John K. Torkington.
64, Basinghall Street, London, E.C.,
September 6, 1910.

[My correspondent's opinion of the effect of the House of Lords' decision is practically identical with that expressed in Truth when the judgment was delivered.—Ed.]

MAMMON.

ROUND THE MARKETS.

Home Rails Lively—Strong Conflicting Influences—The Labour Cloud—Yankees Marking Time—Demand for Foreign Rails.

In the Stock Markets last week the developments, on the whole, were of a rather humdrum character. Home Rails supplied the chief movement. Certainly influences of a very conflicting nature are operating just now on this market. On the one hand may be put fine traffic returns, splendid trade statistics—the August Board of Trade figures would certainly have been given much greater prominence than they got were it not that the majority of our leading newspapers are still tied to the Protectionist cart-tail—high yields on stocks, and no "bull" account. On the other hand the labour clouds have gathered thick and fast. The Clyde boilermakers refused to grant the assurance asked by the Employers' Federation and repeated by the men's own executive, and a settlement of the lock-out has still to be arrived at. Further, there have been the evidences of unrest in the Lancashire cotton trade and the Welsh coal trade, besides which has to be recorded a more acute phase of the trouble amongst the Great Northern employees. The majority of influences are in favour of a better Home Railway market, but the labour impasse is for the present an effective brake.

The declaration by the North British concludes the series of Scottish railway dividend announcements. In all cases the results denote improvement, as may be gathered from the following table:—

| | First half, 1910. | | First half, 1909. | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Dividend p.c. p.a. | Carry forward. £ | Dividend p.c. p.a. | Carry forward. £ |
| Caledonian Deferred | ½ | 18,000 | Nil | 14,000 |
| Glasgow and South-Western Deferred | 1⅝ | 9,330 | 1 | 9,158 |
| Highland Ordinary | 1⅝ | 7,127 | 1½ | 6,630 |
| North British Deferred | ⅜ | 28,000 | — | 22.000 |
| Great North of Scotland Deferred | ½ | 5,503 | ⅛ | 2,501 |

While congratulating holders on the turn in the tide I cannot at present regard the various stocks as bargains. On the basis of the dividends for the last two half-years Highland ordinary returns £4 17s. and Glasgow and South-Western deferred gives £4 13s. at current prices. But the returns upon Caledonian, North British, and Great North of Scotland deferred stocks are still nominal, ranging between 1 and 1¼ per cent., so that the recovery in dividends must go further yet to justify existing prices.

American Rails have pursued a languid existence; the most that can be said is that the market has so far refused to take alarm over politics. The Government crop report was of a reassuring character, the poorness of wheat being compensated for by a very large maize crop. However, with political alarms yet to be encountered and trade reports indifferent there is not much to make the market enthusiastic just at present. The copper position is still very unsatisfactory, and the fact that the total production of the States last month again increased, despite the steps taken to curtail outputs, suggests that unless consumption shows an early and material improvement more drastic means will have to be taken by the manufacturers to restore surplus stocks to the normal. Canadian Rails have been quiet, but the approach of the dividends has kept alive a demand for Foreign Rails, amongst which Mexican second preference, Central Argentine ordinary and deferred, and Antofagasta issues were prominent.

RUBBER.

The Malacca Position—Outputs and Dividends—Tebrau—The Venture Group.

The shareholders at the Malacca meeting last week appear to have regarded the situation in the right spirit. The mood of the meeting was expressive rather of regret than of censure, and the chairman's plain statement of facts made a far better impression than would have been created either by any attempt to make light of the company's past difficulties or by any unrestrained indulgence in optimism as to the company's future. Indeed, it was hardly possible for a body of shareholders to deal ungenerously with members of a board who had purchased and financed at their own personal risk the large estates which the Malacca company last year acquired on exceptionally favourable terms, who had themselves visited the company's estates in the East, and who had given five years' work to the company without fee or reward. The fact, however, remains that the company's outputs have gravely disappointed shareholders, and caused a heavy shrinkage in the price of the shares. Fortunately, it was made clear at the meeting that the curtailed outputs resulting from resting the trees are not in the least attributable to any permanent injury which the trees have suffered. The labour supply, morever, has been increased, and is now stated to be equal to the company's requirements. The force engaged in tapping operations is being gradually strengthened; and as the company possesses a very large number of mature trees which will from now onwards gradually be brought into the tapping area, the Malacca outputs should month by month show a steady expansion, the effect of which there is every reason to believe will steadily but surely be reflected in gradually improving quotations for the shares. The estates, it may be noted, are free from disease, and the announcements that at the last sale in Mincing Lane the company obtained the highest price of the day for its rubber, and that it secured a first prize at the recent Singapore Exhibition, testify to the ability of the management to turn out a product of the highest quality. Treated as a lock-up Malaccas may be regarded as full of promise to those who are prepared to exercise some little patience, while the company is gradually developing towards that very important position in the rubber world which its merits undoubtedly entitle it to hold.

Little has happened during the week to remove the spirit of hesitation which hangs over the market, and share quotations have made no appreciable response to the very satisfactory interim dividend announcements by Batu Caves, Cicely, Seafield, Sungei Way, and Selangor. The distribution made by the last-named company for the first six months of the year amounts to 150 per cent., and creates a new record in rubber dividends, which in times of ordinary market activity would have given rise to some enthusiasm. Much encouragement, too, as to coming dividends may be found in the appended table of this year's outputs:—

| | Output to date for current year. lbs. | Months. | Output same period 1909. lbs. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Anglo-Malay | 411,713 | 8 | 316,032 |
| Batu Caves | 93,642 | 8 | 21,644 |
| Batu Tiga | 54,269 | 8 | 16,272 |
| Bukit Rajah | 157,219 | 5 | 96,408 |
| Cicely | 62,815 | 5 | 26,415 |
| Consolidated Malay | 192,485 | 8 | 121,275 |
| Damansara | 197,200 | 8 | 120,139 |
| Golconda | 103,619 | 8 | 48,748 |
| Harpenden | 54,730 | 8 | 11,481 |
| Highlands | 328,670 | 8 | 210,915 |
| Labu | 121,284 | 8 | 43,613 |
| Lanadron | 250,740 | 8 | 160,108 |
| Ledbury | 71,889 | 8 | 36,926 |
| Linggi | 509,500 | 8 | 325,500 |
| London Asiatic | 95,619 | 8 | 40,127 |
| Malacca | 201,000 | 8 | 131,500 |
| Pataling | 208,303 | 8 | 87,528 |
| P.P.K. | 35,154 | 8 | 25,781 |
| Seafield | 114,320 | 8 | 21,291 |
| Sekong | 47,255 | 8 | 13,180 |
| Selangor | 238,692 | 8 | 171,237 |
| Shelford | 58,500 | 8 | 19,954 |
| Sungei Kapar | 134,700 | 8 | 51,900 |
| Tremelbye | 12,464 | 2 | 1,316 |
| United Serdang | 67,693 | 12 | 17,373 |
| Vallambrosa | 168,500 | 5 | 133,621 |

Notable increases will be observed in the outturns of some of my favourite recommendations, particularly Batu Caves, Batu Tiga, Harpenden, Lanadron, Linggi, Seafield, Sekong, and United Serdang; and my readers must remember that in the majority of cases the results obtained are so comfortably in advance of expectations that the unexpected increase will fully counterbalance the recent fall in the price of the commodity. The public mind has become unnerved by the collapse of the boom and by the fall in the raw article, but sooner or later a more rational view will prevail, and the investor will realise that sound investment in rubber shares will yield large dividends and substantial capital appreciation.

The view which was first put forward in Truth some months ago that seven years' purchase forms the soundest basis for ascertaining the intrinsic value of a rubber share is steadily gaining ground among brokers and investors; and I am glad to see that my well-informed Malayan contemporary the Straits Times has published a well-written article warmly supporting the principle which I have so long advocated. Nothing at the present moment would be more calculated to re-establish public confidence in rubber than the general adoption of sound principles for the valuation of rubber estates and the shares of the plantation companies.

A few months ago when big premiums were eagerly placed on every new issue of merit it was frequently asked why the properties were not floated for a figure more closely corresponding to current values, but the desire of respectable issuing houses to avoid over-capitalisation now finds sufficient justification. A new issue which may have been quoted on flotation in the heat of the boom at 100 or 200 per cent. premium has forfeited but little of its respectability now that it is quoted perhaps at a much more moderate premium, while its over-capitalised rival, simultaneously floated perhaps at par and now reduced to a discount, presents a sorry and melancholy appearance. Outside a favoured circle, however, few received allotments of coveted shares, and it would perhaps have been more creditable to the market, as it would certainly have been more advantageous to the new company, if at the inception of the latter the premium could have been devoted to the establishment of a reserve fund for the company's permanent benefit. This commendable course was followed by those responsible for the flotation of Gula Kalumpong, and the shareholders of that company now possess a fund of £16,775, which resulted from the public issue of the shares at a premium of 5s. The estates, too, which were valued by Mr. Duncan, on the moderate basis of five years' purchase, at £400,968, were acquired by the company for about £374,000, and I hear that the company will at its forthcoming statutory meeting enter the list of dividend payers.

The Tebrau report makes very satisfactory reading, and the directors' announcement that, so far, the capital cost of the company's estate works out at only £17 8s. per planted acre, will come as no surprise to my readers. The company was included in my list of July 20 of moderately capitalised companies which, in the distant future, may be able to pay 10 per cent. dividends with rubber giving only a few pence per lb. profit. Next year the company should declare its first dividend, and I expect great things from Tebrau. To so strong a company it is not, perhaps, a very important matter, but I cannot refrain from doubting the wisdom of the directors' recommendation that the preliminary expenses, instead of being written off out of profits, should be added to the capital cost of the undertaking. This unusual plan might well, I think, have been avoided by Tebrau, and, although the suggested creation of a reserve fund will tend to equalise matters, the method is at variance with sound principles, and is, perhaps, unpleasantly suggestive of book-keeping jugglery.

It was, perhaps, not to be expected that the Venture group could escape the general misfortunes of the market, and on the first sign of trouble investors proceeded to dispose of the more speculative section of their holdings. The selling has been persistent, and conditions have not been such as to tempt insiders to give artificial support to the market, or to proceed with the flotation of promised subsidiaries. Development work meanwhile on the properties is receiving the unremitted attention of the directors, and it is announced that by the end of next month nine rubber-treating machines will be shipped to the Nyassa estates. The staff sailed two months ago, and preliminary work is being proceeded with. Madagascar, which has, of course, already made some substantial shipments of rubber, is developing more rapidly, and now has a further 10 tons of rubber on the water, while the additional machines which are being shipped this month should be at work by the end of November, from which time the company expects to be earning profits at the rate of £100,000 per annum. The Jequié assistant manager is now in England, and I understand that copies of his highly satisfactory report on the property are to be circulated among the shareholders. Although wild rubber companies are, of course, more speculative than the Malayan companies this group has an advantage which ventures of this type so often lack, viz., exceptionally capable management, and although there may be some early disappointment and delay, I have no doubt as to the ultimate success of the group.

The Most Complete List of Rubber and Oil Share Quotations will be found in every Saturday's issue of "The Financial Times." 1d. daily. On sale everywhere.

Next month the Crude Rubber Washing Company, which has been turning out 15 tons of rubber a month, will increase its capacity to 10 tons per day, and as the product of this company is popular in Mincing Lane, and meets with a ready demand from manufacturers, a substantial dividend may be looked for as the result of the first year's working, more especially as the company is but little affected by fluctuations in the price of rubber.

MINES.

An Uninteresting Week—Success of Rhodesia Exploration Amalgamation Assured—Rand Gold and Native Labour Returns for August.

Even in busy times the second half of an account has frequently a washed-out appearance, and when things are as quiet as they have been of late it is not surprising that the past week in the Mining market was almost devoid of interest. With unquenchable optimism many operators are hoping for a definite turn of the tide in the new account which we are now in the thick of, but the position is still too much in the hands of the insiders for the outlook to be at all clear. The Stock Exchange "bull" is a gregarious animal, and he has to be one of a crowd to stampede prices upward in earnest. What is going to bring the "bull" battalions back to the Mining market, or some section of it, even the boldest prophet cannot say for certain yet.

Those who have pinned their faith to an autumn revival in Rhodesians have been, in a good many cases, bitterly disappointed by the lukewarm reception of the Abe Bailey amalgamation scheme, of which I gave full details last week. I warned my readers then, however, that "those who are so optimistic as regards the outlook for the Rhodesian market appear to overlook the fact that quotations already seem high, and also to ignore the possibility of some other speculative group attracting the attention of the public." The Rhodesia Exploration shareholders duly approved the amalgamation at Monday's meeting, and I understand the directors have received ample proxies to ensure the passing of the scheme at to-morrow's meetings of the other companies concerned—the Rhodesia Banket, Shamva Trust, Gold Schists, and Etna Development.

With the success of the Rhodesian combine assured, those in control will have their hands free again to attend, on the one side, to getting ready new flotations, and, on the other side, to the equally, if not more, important matter of keeping the market in tune to welcome them. The combine, of course, it will be remembered, involves an offer to the shareholders of the amalgamating companies of 250,000 Rhodesia Exploration new shares at 45s. each, but, as these are being issued so much under the market price, Mr. Bailey's gratuitous guarantee is not likely to leave him with many shares. It might be otherwise in an unfavourable market with some of the entirely new promotions which are on the stocks.

The long-expected prospectus of the Cam and Motor Gold Mining Company will appear to-morrow (Thursday). The new company's 138 claims in the Gatooma District of Southern Rhodesia have been under option to the London and Rhodesian Mining Company for nearly a year, and during that period some £30,000 has been spent on development work. The report of the engineers states that there are about 300,000 tons of ore in sight, of a value of £680,000, while the working costs, it is considered, should not exceed 30s. per ton. The capital of the Cam and Motor is £500,000 in £1 shares, of which about half are to be offered to the public at 27s. 6d. each. While I am not sure that I approve of original shares being issued at a premium, the sponsors of the issue may at any rate contend that they are making it on much more reasonable terms than some of the flotations introduced to the market during the spring boom. The company is well backed, the Weil, Lewis and Marks, and Abe Bailey groups being all interested.

While the Transvaal gold mining industry continues to give evidence of robust health, the Kaffir market is still not showing much vitality. The output figures for August, published during the week-end, were highly satisfactory, and the native labour position affords little room for complaint, considering the time of year. The Transvaal's gold yield last month of nearly 650,000 ozs. represents an increase of 340 ozs. in the average daily production as compared with July, and in that respect is a record. But December, 1908, still nominally holds the palm for the biggest aggregate monthly output, the total of over 660,000 ozs. for that period having been swollen by the inclusion of a large proportion of gold taken from reserves, but for which last month would have broken all records.

As regards the Rand native labour supply, the rumour which I mentioned a fortnight ago that there would not be any further falling-off during August has unhappily not been verified. It will be recalled that I expressed doubt on the point at the time, pointing out that the return of the natives from their pastoral to mining pursuits does not usually commence much before October. Last month, although no less than 18,000 fresh natives were recruited for the mines, the exodus to the kraals was so much above the normal that 1,700 "boys" were lost to the Rand on balance. This, however, is a little less than in the same month last year, while for the four months May-August of 1909 over 15,000 "boys" were lost on balance, against under 7,000 for the same period this year. Considering that the mining native labour force is maintained at practically 200,000 "boys," there is nothing serious to complain of, particularly when one remembers that half that number of natives was regarded as something like the maximum normal supply in the early days after the war, when the Chinese labour experiment was initiated.

City and Suburban's Recovery.

At the end of last year when City and Suburbans (which are £4 shares) were quoted about 35s. apiece I directed attention to the improving tendency exhibited by the mine's returns, and suggested that the shares "should go somewhat better eventually." The current price is a little over 40s., and in the interim the company has paid a dividend of 5 per cent. (4s. per share). Recent returns have shown further improvement in the company's rate of earning, and shareholders will doubtless be interested to learn that according to Johannesburg advices this improvement is believed to be "the beginning of a sustained level of better returns, if not of a gradual upward movement." For 1909 the average revenue was 23s. 8d. per ton, costs were 19s. 5d., leaving a profit of 4s. 3d. per ton. During the current year, as will be seen from the appended table, costs have increased a little, but this has been more than counterbalanced by an increase in the average yield:—

"Queer Stories" from Truth. Now ready. Series XVI. Price 1s., at all booksellers, and from the Publisher, 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street. "They are one of the wonders of the world, those stories, and people are never tired of asking who writes them."—Bystander.

| 1910. | Ore Milled. | Revenue. | | Expenses. | | Profit. | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Tons. | £ | Per Ton. | £ | Per Ton. | £ | Per Ton. |
| Jan... | 23,700 | 30,531 | 25/9 | 23,499 | 19/9 | 7,032 | 6/- |
| Feb... | 21,410 | 29,482 | 27/6 | 22,477 | 21/- | 7,005 | 6/6 |
| Mar.. | 23,560 | 31,803 | 27/- | 24,803 | 21/- | 7,002 | 6/- |
| Apr... | 25,010 | 33,327 | 26/8 | 25,824 | 20/8 | 7,503 | 6/- |
| May.. | 26,450 | 33,852 | 25/7 | 25,851 | 19/7 | 8,001 | 6/- |
| June. | 26,232 | 34,387 | 26/2 | 26,385 | 20/1 | 8,002 | 6/1 |
| July.. | 27,324 | 34.647 | 25/4 | 26.644 | 19/6 | 8,003 | 5 10 |
| Aug.. | 27,616 | 34,929 | 25/3 | 26,927 | 19/6 | 8,002 | 5/9 |

The advance in grade shown by the above figures is believed to be due partly to an improvement in values in the lower levels of the mine and partly to a change in the stoping policy which has resulted in less waste being mined than was formerly the case.

For the eight months of the current year which have elapsed the City's profits amount to £60,550, and assuming the maintenance of an average of £8,000 for each of the remaining months the total for the year will be £92,500, equal to just over 6 per cent. on the capital after allowing for profits tax. At the end of 1909 the company had £22,000 liquid assets in excess of liabilities. The life of the mine is estimated at about seven years, irrespective of the main reef, which may be increasingly worked sooner or later and extend the company's career as a gold producer. In addition to its mine the company has an estate and investments.

Nigerian Tin Possibilities.

The boomlet in tin did not make further net progress last week. The metal was £5 higher at one time, but relapsed later on a fresh turn in the contest between bulls and bears. Hopes of a further rise in the metal hinge rather on a possible squeeze of the ursine fraternity than on the actual position of tin itself, the stocks of which, if they were freely available, are said to be sufficient for all requirements. But the sponsors of the new Nigerian tin field claim that the alluvial is productive enough for the owners to be quite satisfied with the present price of the metal, although, of course, any extra amount obtained would be a pleasing bonus.

It looks as though the Nigerian proposition, the Lucky Chance, whose output of just over 30 tons from one of its properties I mentioned last week, will before very long be producing on a fairly large scale. Engineers have been despatched to the company's other areas, and the directors, in a circular issued last week, state that they hope to inform the shareholders at an early date that five, if not more, of the company's properties are producing. At the Topaz Valley property very high tin values have been encountered in the prospecting pits. According to the manager a sample from one of the pits, consisting of two calabashes of dirt, gave on washing 3½ lbs., equal to 120 lbs. per cubic yard of the finest black tin, and he adds that "several other of the pits gave equally good values." Whether the average value of the property is anything like so high remains, of course, to be seen, but even if the mean value be considerably less the company should still make good profits. I understand that as soon as the road from the railway to the alluvial tin field is cleared a centrifugal pump plant will be sent up by the Lucky Chance Company, and two similar plants will be despatched by the Juga. Each of these plants is expected to treat 4,000 cubic yards of alluvial per week at a cost not exceeding 6d. a cubic yard. In order that my readers may gain a better idea of the possibilities of these Northern Nigerian tin areas I have made a calculation of the profits that should be earned with one such plant, taking the average yield at 5 lbs. to the cubic yard, costs at 6d. a cubic yard, and tin oxide at £100 a ton (which is equal to metallic tin at £145 a ton).

4,000 cubic yards at 5 lbs. per cubic yard = approx. 8½ tons tin oxide
8½ tons at £100 per ton = £850
Costs at 6d. cub. yd. = £100
Transport at £15 per ton of tin..... = £127½
= £227½
Working profit..... £622½ per week

As I have previously explained, transport costs at the present time are £27 a ton, but when the road is complete the charges are expected not to exceed £15 a ton. Taking only forty-five working weeks to the year, profits on the above basis (after deducting 10 per cent. royalty) would total about £25,000 per annum, which would be equivalent to over 30 per cent. on the capital of the Lucky Chance (£75,000 in 5s. shares), more than half of which, by the way, is held by the Champion Company. Eventually the Lucky Chance will probably have more than one centrifugal pump plant in operation, as it has several properties to work. The Juga Tin and Power, which has two plants ready for shipment, has a large area on which a little tin is already being won by hand labour. The capital of this company is £275,000 in £1 shares, of which 125,000 shares are held by the Champion Company.

INDUSTRIALS.

West India and Panama Telegraph—Good Report Expected—The Company's Cheap Preferences—Workington Iron Report—Clay and Bock Fiasco.

Nothing sensational has happened in the market for industrial securities during the week. So far as one can generalise about a market covering the shares of so many individually differing enterprises, the tone has continued firm. The Board of Trade Returns for August prove that the leading industries of the country are in a very healthy state, and if only a more pacific spirit prevailed in the labour world the horizon would be practically free from clouds. There has been a demand in the last few days for the shares of the West India and Panama Telegraph Company, in the expectation that the report due in November will show that the company has managed to wipe off the arrears upon its second preference shares. The company has outstanding 6 per cent. first and second preference shares of £10 denomination as well as £10 ordinary shares. For several years past it has been engaged in wiping out the arrears of interest upon the second preference. For 1908 earnings were sufficient to give 30s. upon the second preference, that is the due annual rate of 12s. plus 18s. of arrears. For 1909 the dividend paid on the second preference was 29s., and the arrears on those shares remaining at December 31 last amounted to 9s. It is, therefore, not at all unlikely that the company will in respect of 1910 extinguish the arrears upon the "seconds," and show a margin over. In the circumstances I think both the preference shares are well worth buying by investors; the present price is about 9. The ordinary may not get a dividend this year, but should receive something next. However, the relatively large amount outstanding precludes large dividends unless the company's earnings show considerable expansion. On the basis of the 1908 and 1909 earnings there would, with the preference arrears extinguished, be sufficient to give ½ per cent. upon the £10 ordinary shares, which have just been raised to 1⅛. Obviously, therefore, the question of a further rise in the shares must turn upon the future development of the company's business.

The report of the Workington Iron Company, which marks the end of the first year's trading of the concern in its combined form, is a distinct disappointment. Profits amounted to £92,705, which is only sufficient, after meeting depreciation and other charges, to pay the preference dividend and leave a balance of £9,491 to go forward. Another report published the other day which makes doleful reading is that of Henry Clay and

The R.M.S. "Dunottar Castle," of the Union-Castle Line (the only large steamer 100 A1 at Lloyd's entirely devoted to Pleasure Cruises), is chartered for:—£12 12s.—Oporto, Lisbon, Cadiz (for Seville), Gibraltar, Tangier, September 16-30. £18 18s.—Naples, Montenegro, Dalmatia, Venice, Corfu, October 1-20. Also later cruises Palestine and Egypt.—Cruising Co., Ltd., 5, Endsleigh Gardens, London, N.W.

Bock. This cigar business since it was sold to the Americans in 1906 paid a flashy dividend of 30 per cent., and has since been going rapidly from bad to worse. The net loss on revenue account last year was £155,300, and the accumulated loss is £223,400, which suggests drastic measures if the company is to be restored to a sound basis. The company's experiences of late hardly shed lustre upon American methods of finance, and the English shareholders who sold when the control left this country must be feeling glad over their leavetaking. Goldsbrough, Mort and Co., a fine old Australian pastoral company which has seen many vicissitudes, is just now in clover. It is again able to pay 10 per cent., with a 5 per cent. bonus. The company's strong position has caused attention to be drawn to the 5 per cent. B Debentures, which at 94 return 5⅜ per cent., and are well worth including in the lists of 5 per cent. investments which I am constantly being asked to draw up for readers.

OIL.

Better Demand for Shares—Maikop Recommendations—The Spies Position—Kerns and the Board's Dividend Promises—Kerns and Californias Compared.

More life has been shown in the oil market during the last few days. Whether the time is ripe for a spurt in this market may be doubted, for the price of oil remains low, and Maikop, the hope of the many, is still an unproved field—unproved, that is, from the commercial point of view. However, the tip has gone round that oil shares should be bought, and many operators who in the recent premature boom burnt their fingers have been jumping in again for fear of getting left. In one important respect the market is decidedly healthier than it was a few months ago. I refer to the fact that the large mass of shares that were pressed upon the dealers during the slump has been greatly reduced. It shows that some people have had faith, and the people who buy during a slump are not usually the thoughtless brigade. Maikop descriptions have been in better favour. Among the shares most sought after have been Anglo-Maikops, Black Sea Preferred, Maikop Spies, Maikop Valleys, and Maikop and General Trusts. These I have all along singled out as being amongst the most promising in the Maikop group, and I retain that opinion, though, of course, reader you must understand that they are at present speculations pure and simple. Maikop Pipe Line and Transport shares, which I have also written about favourably in this column, have shown recovery. The movement has been accompanied by a rumour that the pipe line to the railway at Enem will be completed early in October. It may be so, but I shall be a little surprised if it is, for a good deal of work remains to be done, and cutting through forests is not work that can be done at lightning speed.

Spies have been in favour amongst the dividend payers. This is an excellent company, and although the 10s. shares, despite the fall from the highest, are still quoted at 26s. (as compared with 15s. when I recommended them a year ago), it would not be surprising to see a rise of a few shillings if the market develops more activity. There are several good points about the current Spies position. The company has lately proved the productiveness of the whole line of plots at Grosny acquired during the past two years; there is the interest the company still possesses in its Maikop subsidiary, upon which property oil has already been struck, and the company is effecting increasing economies through the substituting of natural gas as fuel in place of oil. The low price of crude oil at Baku is the chief fly in the ointment, though to mitigate this there is the big growth in the company's production and the fact that it has large forward contracts extending over five years at prices above the existing market quotations.

A rally in Kern Rivers of California has been a feature of the past week. Kerns were furiously "stagged" when the company was formed, owing to the tip to buy given in influential City circles, and the market has been suffering ever since from the pressure of sales by tired and disappointed holders. Whether the rally should go much further at present is open to doubt. The chairman at the statutory meeting was very confident, and gave a definite prediction that the dividend for the current year would be a good one, and would be followed by increasing distributions in future years. These promises would be received with more whole-hearted pleasure if the company's production indicated that the board was in a position to begin generously distributing right away. Since the company was formed the monthly output has not come up to expectation. Of course, it may be that a distinct improvement will set in when the new wells that have been sunk start producing. But so far as things have gone I should prefer the shares of the California Oilfields at 5¼ to Kerns at 17s. The Kern River has a paid up capital of £1,150,000 in £1 shares, and taking the price as 17s. the market capitalisation works out at £978,000. The prospectus suggested an average annual production of 1,500,000 barrels, but on the basis of the July output of 110,000 barrels (the August output was 108,500 barrels) the annual output would be only 1,320,000 barrels. Compare these figures with those of the California Oilfields. This company has a share capital of £400,000, and taking the shares at 5¼ the market capitalisation is £2,100,000. There are also £260,000 debentures, but as the company has reserve funds of £560,000 these may perhaps be left out of the comparison. In 1909 the company's output was 4,378,464 barrels. Thus while the California's capitalisation is only a little more than twice that of the Kern its output is more than three times that of the Kern, putting the latter's total at 1,320,000 barrels, and close upon three times that of the Kern if the latter's output be computed at 1,500,000 barrels. It becomes therefore a question whether the board of the Kern River would not be better advised for the present to strengthen its financial position rather than strain after big dividends. Certainly the few oil companies that have achieved real success have been liberal to the point of being lavish in their reserve and depreciation allowances. The Russian oil companies a few years ago showed us the other side of the medal; they paid fine dividends to start with, but soon had grim cause for wishing they hadn't.

CONSOLIDATED OILFIELDS OF CALIFORNIA.

A somewhat disquieting communication has just reached those customers of McKinley, Alexander and Sons who were gulled into taking shares in the Consolidated Oilfields of California, Limited, in lieu of the profits due to them from the bucket-shop's so-called "Trusts." The arrangement was that McKinley, Alexander and Sons should pay the calls on the shares thus foisted on their customers. The calls, however, have not been met, and the company has now sent the unfortunate holders of the shares a peremptory demand for the payment of the money forthwith. Referring to the promises made by McKinley, Alexander and Sons, the company's circular, signed by Percy M. Barns, acting secretary, says:—

> We beg to point out that our solicitors advise that this company is no party to such promises, and as we understand by a public notice issued by Messrs. McKinlay (sic) Alexander and Sons that the claims against them by their clients will be adjusted by an incorporated accountant in due time, we cannot extend the time for payment of these calls, and must therefore refer the matter to you as being the party liable in respect of same. From what we understand the firm of McKinlay (sic) Alexander and Sons are in a position to pay the claims of their clients, but whatever arrangement exists between you and that firm does not in any way affect your position as a shareholder, and I must ask you therefore for a cheque by return.

To all who are acquainted with the manifold activities of Mr. Victor Carter West this will be a most diverting document. As my readers are aware, Mr. West has been most closely identified with the business of McKinley, Alexander and Sons, which was formerly carried on at 61, New Oxford Street. It is there that Mr. West has his headquarters, and it is to that address that the registered office of the Consolidated Oil-fields has just been transferred. Mr. West was virtually the promoter of that company, though—as in the case of several others for which he has been similarly responsible—his name was modestly withheld from the prospectus. Recently, however, he has become a director, and so has his associate Mr. Charles Hervé Phillips, who figured in the prospectus as the vendor. Finally, the solicitors to the company are also the solicitors to McKinley, Alexander and Sons.

Both the chairman, Sir Henry Wardlaw, and Sir Norman Stewart, another director, were absent from last week's meeting of the Consolidated Oilfields of California, but probably neither of them could have regaled the shareholders with the sort of speech Mr. West delivered. It was a masterpiece of bluff, embellished with some touches whose subtle humour will be keenly appreciated by persons familiar with the speaker's connection with this undertaking. Particularly rich, for instance, was the statement that the directors sent Mr. West out to the oilfields to secure an independent report—Mr. West of all men. So, too, were the references to Mr. Frank, the engineer, and Mr. Phillips, "the former owner," considering Mr. West's relationship with them in previous enterprises. The company offered for subscription 270,000 shares of 10s. each. Only 41,450 were applied for, including 40,000 underwritten, but nevertheless the shareholders were blandly congratulated upon the company's unique and remarkable success and wonderful prospects. Notwithstanding Mr. West's eloquence my own unfavourable opinion of the concern remains unchanged. I am told that brokers on the Stock Exchange regard the shares as rubbish, and I think that is about their correct valuation.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The Premium Bond Traffic.

Litvin and Co., "bankers," of 36, Rue Vivenne, Paris, and 79, Coleman Street, London, are not lacking in effrontery. For a long time they bamboozled the public here into buying foreign premium or lottery bonds at prices above their market value. Early in the present year they reversed the process by buying back the bonds at prices below their market value. This turn was given to the business by means of a circular designed to scare holders out of the bonds on the ground of judicial decisions as to the illegality of dealings in such securities. In particular, Litvin and Co. mentioned that they had been prosecuted under the Lotteries Act, but they omitted to explain that this was for an offence unconnected with the sale of premium bonds. They were fined for selling lottery tickets which—even though the law makes no distinction between them—are not precisely the same things as premium bonds. Everyone has heard of the Hebrew whose maxim was to "buy sheep and sell deer." Litvin and Co. have improved upon that simple plan. Having bought "sheep" and sold "deer," they repurchased "sheep," and now they are once more selling "deer." In other words, these "bankers" have just started a fresh campaign for unloading the bonds on innocent Britishers at fancy prices. The very securities which they urged people to sacrifice a few months ago are now commended as desirable investments which have "no connection whatsoever with lotteries"—a matter upon which the judgment of Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady is more authoritative. "Premium bond" is, of course, a term that stinks in the nostrils of a great number of unfortunate investors. Litvin and Co. have accordingly dropped it. Throughout the pamphlets, etc., which they are busily distributing, the old premium bonds figure under the new title of "Government bonus stocks." As to the prices, one illustration will suffice. For Congo bonds, Litvin and Co. ask £5 10s., cash down. Reputable dealers quote the same bonds at about £4.

I have always regarded bonds of this description as a delusion and snare for inexperienced investors, and for that reason I welcomed the decision that they come within the meaning of the Lotteries Act. Nine-tenths of the purchasers never give a thought to the remoteness of their chance of drawing one of the big prizes so artfully dangled before greedy eyes by the touting dealers. Quite recently I had an inquiry from a working man who four years ago sank the bulk of his savings in non-interest-bearing bonds. As no bond of his had ever been drawn he began to think the whole business was a swindle. He knew that there were certain periodical drawings, but it had never occurred to him to ascertain how many bonds have been issued, how long the drawings will go on, and what the odds are against any of his bonds ever being drawn for a substantial premium. Obviously buyers ought to take these things into consideration and make up their minds to bear philosophically the disappointment they are almost certain to experience. This, however, is just what they do not do. Their minds are filled with the foolish notion that these terribly tedious gambles—the Congo drawings, for instance, continue till 1987—are an easy method of getting rich quick, and in their eagerness to secure a fortune they do not even stop to inquire whether they are paying a fair price for the bonds. In grossly overcharging their customers Litvin and Co. are but following in the footsteps of such old-established circularisers as Cunliffe, Russell and Co. and Melville, Glyn and Co.

The Mutual Stock and Share Association.

With reference to the paragraph in Truth of August 24, the secretary of the Mutual Stock and Share Association, Limited, writes:—

> Mr. D. Sutherland, to whom you refer, did not start the above company. He was employed for a short period as manager, but his services were dispensed with last December, and he has never had any interest, monetary or otherwise, in the company.

It appears from the records at Somerset House that the association was registered as a private company on April 23, 1909. Within a month circulars signed by Sutherland as general manager were being sent out, so that though he did not actually start the company he took charge of its business immediately afterwards. However, it is only fair that it should be made known that he is no longer connected with the company, whose directors, according to the last statutory return, are John Spencer Gray, of 10, Polworth Road, Streatham, and Thomas Waters Webb, of 4, Moorfields Street, E.C. The letter from the secretary invites me to inquire into the company's dealings with its clients, but I do not think it necessary to do this. The result would not in any case modify my advice to my readers to leave alone such option gambles as those which this outside concern recommends.

It may be interesting to add here that the above-mentioned Sutherland, who was formerly proprietor of the notorious Milne, Son and Hamilton bucket-shop, has latterly carried on another bucket-shop business in the name of "E. Donnithorne and Co."

Frederick C. A. Spiegel.

There are some bucket-shop harpies who make special efforts to prey upon feminine credulity. One of this breed is W. Crosbie, 81, Bishopsgate Street Within, E.C. I have just been handed a series of letters in which he has exhorted a lady to send him money for 2 per cent. cover gambles in various railway stocks. "With the small sum of £20," he writes, "you can secure £1,000 stock, and a rise of 8 or 10 points will give you a profit of from £80 to £100." The lady is a widow, and her trustee asks whether something cannot be done to put a stop to the game which such gentry as Crosbie practise largely at the expense of innocent women. I am afraid not. Crosbie's career is, in fact, evidence to the contrary. For years past he has been running disreputable bucket-shop businesses under different aliases, his real name being Frederick C. A. Spiegel.

Duncan Forbes and Co.

By some grievous mischance Duncan Forbes and Co. have begun to circularise me—unconscious of my identity—at my modest private dwelling. They have given me the customary invitation to subscribe to their "limited liability" or their "complex" stock deals—I can pay my money and take my choice. "If you let this great opportunity go by," they write, "you will be out of pocket hundreds of pounds." As the song says, "Yes, I don't think." Still, as Duncan Forbes and Co. tell me that they are in a position to back up their statements, I wish they would oblige me with the names of the members of the Stock Exchange to whom, in order to save the capital of their clients, they have recently paid differences on American railroad shares "to the extent of many, many thousands of pounds." It is not out of mere idle curiosity that I ask for this information. Recently I have received inquiries from one or two correspondents who, in view of the position of their accounts with this firm, would be relieved to know that the safety of their capital is assured. In connection with what is described as "our complex stock deal system" it is boldly asserted that "there is no uncertainty as to whether dividends will be paid, or when, and no waiting." This certainly is not borne out by some letters now before me.

Occasionally Duncan Forbes and Co. deviate from the beaten track of bucket-shop cover gambles. They are doing so now by asking for subscriptions which they promise to return with a bonus of 25 per cent. from "participation" in the profits of an aviation meeting. They were doing so last May, when they were raising what they called the "Russo-Turkish War Claim Loan of £6,000," the subscribers to which were "guaranteed" a profit of 100 per cent. One subscriber from whom I have heard only parted with his money on the receipt of a telegram from Duncan Forbes and Co. containing the definite undertaking: "We guarantee the return of double the amount within three months." This was on May 18, but neither the subscription nor "double the amount" was returned within three months, nor has a further promise of a settlement in the first week of September been fulfilled. But under date of September 7 Duncan Forbes and Co. write that they "confidently look forward to a settlement in the immediate future," and with that I suppose the subscribers must be content.

A Rubber Guide.

I have received from Straker Brothers, Limited, 61, Old Broad Street, E.C., a copy of a new edition of Mr. Henry T. Brice's pamphlet, "Rubber Shares as Investments" (price 1s. net). In a handy form it presents a useful analysis of the position of the leading companies in the Malay Peninsula, Java, and Sumatra.

NEW ISSUE.

The Liverpool Victoria Insurance Corporation, Limited, offers for subscription 60,000 shares of £1 each at a premium of 5s. per share. By agreement with the Liverpool Victoria Legal Friendly Society, which has an extensive industrial insurance business, the corporation has the joint use of the society's branch offices and agency organisation for ordinary life, fire, accident, and sickness and general insurance business. The corporation's premium income increased from £28,788 in its first year, ending March 31, 1909, to £66,524 in the following year, while for the current year it is expected to reach £160,000. The capital issued is £361,408, of which £65,352 is paid up. The present issue is to provide the additional working capital required in the development of the business.

"VIGILANT'S" LETTER BOX.

1. Inquiries addressed to me, which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through my "Letter Box." A coupon will always be found at the foot of the third page of the cover of Truth.

2. Three different stocks or shares are the limit for an inquiry covered by one coupon. If it is desired to make an inquiry respecting a larger number of stocks or shares an additional coupon or coupons (one for every three stocks or shares) must be forwarded. Inquiries in regard to Rubber shares must not be included in letters relating to other classes of securities.

3. Name and address, which must accompany all inquiries, should be written on the communication.

4. A nom-de-plume or initials (the former preferably) should be given if it is desired that the real name shall not appear in the paper.

5. Inquiries should be put as briefly as possible, plainly written and numbered.

6. Communications received after Friday may not be replied to in the following issue.

Railways.

Circars.—In both cases holders are having to rely upon the guarantees of the Chartered Company, the revenue of the lines being insufficient to meet fixed charges. I do not advise purchases at present prices.

Pindi.—1. The calculations to which you refer were quite correct. Your alternative plan, however, is quite a good one, and, assuming redemption does not take place in twelve years, it is the more remunerative. Pyrmont.—1. You have made a mistake. Norfolks are quoted at 98½ or thereabouts. 2. The company may redeem the whole issue at 105 (New York) in 1914 or after, but it cannot redeem a portion only. As the bonds bear the relatively low rate of 4 per cent., early redemption is unlikely. 3. The bonds are of $1,000 denomination. If converted a holder of one bond would get seven shares and a receipt for the fractional part, which he could convert into cash on the market.

Mines.

Bessie.—Keep Gold Fields for the dividend declaration towards the end of next month or the beginning of November.

Carolus.—There is no special reason to expect much early rise in any of them. Cornubian.—You might put it in Randfontein Centrals or City Deep, which should both start dividends in a year or so.

Dubious.—Hold. A 6d. dividend is expected before the end of the year.

Eiron.—With both its tin and rubber interests the company's securities have distinct lock-up possibilities.

Garrison.—You might keep Nos. 1, 2, and 3, but sell the others.

Hawthornberry.—You do not name the concern, but if you mean the Hawthorne Silver and Iron Mines—as your pseudonym suggests—you should advise your relative to leave the shares alone. Hebrides.—You would be wise to keep such a small capital in the savings bank.

Inquirer (Lieutenant).—All three are fair lock-ups, but may not have much rise.

Losanna.—Worth keeping as a lock-up for another £1 or so rise eventually, but dividend prospects are still rather remote.

Menai.—Holding must be considered very speculative, even at the present price. Morven.—The highest prices touched this year were:—(1) 8s. 3d., (2) 4s. 3d., and (3) 11s. 6d. As this answer is necessarily written several days before publication, I must refer you to the Financial Times for latest prices. All three shares are distinctly speculative holdings.

National.—Spread your risk by buying a few Randfontein Centrals.

Path.—1. In a year or so. 2. Yes, when the dividend stage is nearer. 3 and 4. A poor holding. Phantom.—Rather a speculation than "a sound investment." The company's original property is practically exhausted, and the value of its new acquisition remains to be definitely proved.—Pierre Louys.—1. Yes, hold for a more active market. 2. No. 3. Fairly promising, but the corporation has only acquired an interest or an option; it has not bought the concern outright.

R. D. M.—1. We know nothing against him. 2. A passable speculation.

Tyke.—1. Say 25s. 2. I cannot tell. 3. Sell.

Waiting.—Hold for a better market. It is premature to talk of dividends.

Mixed Securities.

Anxious (Limerick).—1. Joining the reconstruction must be deemed a good deal of a speculation. 2. See Rule 2 as to rubber inquiries. Alpha.—1. A hopeful lock-up. 2. Latest dividend encouraging. Shares are a sound investment. 3. A pure gamble. Dividend prospects very remote. Anxious (Twickenham).—I have a poor opinion of all three. You could obtain 6 per cent. upon the shares of the Anglo-South American Bank, and so long as you are prepared to accept the uncalled liability there would make an excellent investment.

Cunctator.—No. 1 is the pick from the safety point of view. No. 3 is also excellent and looks cheap.

Dodo.—1. Do not join the reconstruction. 2. Better not buy at the present price. Metropolitan Electric Trams 5 per cent. debenture stock or Anglo-Argentine Trams 5 per cent. debenture stock would be good. 3. Keep them. Dependent.—They are three sound securities which ought to be held.

Grant.—I do not care for either.

Hakon.—1. An exchange to Great Northern Deferred seems worth a making. Keep 2 and 3.

Juvenis.—1. See Rule 2; also my Notes. 2. Hold for 50; your course afterwards must be determined by market conditions. Jan.—1. Maikop Pipe Lines and Transports, Black Sea Preferred, and Anglo Maikops. 2. You might buy a few more. 3. The Ordinary offer greater prospects of capital appreciation. J. J. W.—1. For investment I would suggest Metropolitan Electric Tramways 5 per cent. debenture stock. 2. Pay no attention to the papers named. You might exchange out of the land shares, but the other two Kaffirs are good enough holdings, although, of course, it would take a boom to see them up to boom prices again.

M. B.—1. Round about £2, unless you are prepared to hold indefinitely. 2 and 3. Hardly worth selling now.

Nemo.—1. Very poor. You cannot count upon such a report. Possibly the local newspaper might contain it. 2. I do not look for much movement just now, but it is a stock liable to a good deal of fluctuation, and if you are prepared to wait indefinitely better opportunities for realising may occur. 3. There is a sporting chance of a rise. Anyhow, the outlook for the line is good.

Pembridge.—Nos. 1, 3, and 4 might be sold. Keep 2, which is an excellent investment; also 5 and 6, both of which are more speculative.

Quetta.—I do not care for 1. No. 2 is a fair selection to give the required yield, and the security for 3 is good.

Ship.—1. All should be realisable to better advantage in an active West African market. 2. All three oil shares are promising speculations. The Pipe Lines would be the least risky. Safe.—Better select the 4 per cent. bonds of Nos. 1 and 2. The Fives are unsuitable, owing to the possibility of early redemption at par, which would involve loss. No. 3 is sound enough.

Shawish.—1. A moderate rise is likely. 2. The company's shares are not dealt in here. It is a case for local inquiry. Seeking.—They are three sound investments. No. 2, of course, differs from the others in the yield being a variable quantity, but the recent record of the bank has been distinctly progressive.

Thurles.—You might select the Osaka Fives. Better not split so small an amount as £200.

Rubber.

Ace, Leeds.—All "Trust" shares seem to be out of favour just now, even the best of them, and this company is hardly in the front rank, although the board is a strong one. Your idea concerning the quotation is quite correct. Azel.—Yours is a good representative list. Keep 1 to 7 for investment, and add to 5 and 7 at present prices. Be content with a small profit on 8. Ayr.—I have not a very favourable opinion of this property. What does your "inside" friend say now? The two companies are in the same office. Asmodeus.—1. You must write a separate letter about this. See Rule 2. 2. Do not buy these. You might add a few Bukit Mertajams to your list. Adonis.—Neither should be held as a permanent investment, but do not sell until markets improve. Actæon.—This company has suffered in consequence of drought. Write to the secretary for a copy of the circular recently issued if you did not receive one. Keep your shares for the present. A. C. L.—Certainly take a small profit when obtainable. Aristo.—1 and 2. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 3. You will eventually see your price again, and in the meantime you should receive very fair dividends. Amyl.—Under no circumstances should I advise you to put money into this company. I should think that the present price is about the lowest touched. Admirer, Belfast; Aya, Alembic, A Crude Countryman, Acid, Arigna, A Chap, and Aberdoniensis.—See my Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Artist.—1. See reply to "Actæon." 2. See reply to "Caoutchouc." 3. Yes, I think so. In any case, you will get excellent dividends. Aliboron.—1 and 2. I should keep both for better markets. Astol.—1-4. See Rubber Notes. I do not care to fix selling limit just now. Argo.—Most of your inquiries, which are not very well numbered, are answered in Rubber Notes. In well-informed quarters the outlook for Beverleys is considered to be good and the present price cheap. Andover.—1. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2 and 3. See reply to "Adonis." Armagh.—These are all good rubber investments, which may be retained for dividends. A. B. C.—1 and 5. See Rubber Notes. 2. Yes. 3. You may buy either now. 4. Have nothing to do with it. Abdul Hakeem.—I should certainly hold for a much higher price than the present. Alpha Beta.—1 Probably December 31. 2. No. 3. The preference get half the profits until they have received 100 per cent., and afterwards they rank as 20 per cent. prefs. and participate in surplus profits. 4. It is a wild rubber company possessing over 200,000 acres. 5. The price varies according to the quality. 6. Preference shares. 7. Date not fixed. Austral.—1. Price not yet published. 2. On the lowlands tea and rubber will grow together; in the higher districts tea only. Both companies mentioned interplant tea and rubber. 3. Tapping is expected to recommence next month. Anxious (Somerset).—I should buy Batu Tiga and Singapore Para.

Banff.—Impossible to answer this, but better news expected in a few weeks' time. Beta.—1. I cannot predict the dividend. The year ends December 31. 2. I think you would do well to average now, but no dividend is likely to be paid until after December. 3. See Rule 2. Bunkered.—1 Hold these for a time, as results of tapping should be forthcoming in a few months' time. 2. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Benwell.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Bank.—1. You had better retain the shares you now hold. 2. Bukit Mertajam are a good purchase at present price. 3. My table is correct. Britomart.—You have a good list, and ultimately should see your prices again. Number 3 is now a producer. Bonaventure.—1. See reply to "Actæon." 2. Has produced small quantities. Tapping expected to recommence next month. 3 and 4. A good purchase at the present time would be Batu Berrie, Bukit Mertajam, and Garing Malacca. Black.—See Rubber Notes. The company will communicate direct with you, giving detailed information as to position.

Caoutchouc.—The Kamuning report will be issued at the end of this month. The market expect that a dividend will be paid. Clandon.—1-3. Good speculative investments, which should be held for improvement. 2. See last part of reply to "Argo." Cement.—See reply to "Actæon." Clericus.—1. It is understood that negotiations for the flotation of foreign subsidiaries have been delayed owing to unfavourable markets. 2. It depends upon market conditions and the price of the commodity. 3. This is a first-class share, but I cannot fix selling limit at present. 4. Should ultimately recover, but I should not increase holding at present. 5. A promising share, which should go higher. Caught Again.—1. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2. Keep your Demansaras; do not make the exchange you suggest. Castle.—You should number your inquiries. 1. You will do well to exchange these, as you suggest, at the first favourable opportunity. 2. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Colenso.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2 and 3. You had better hold these for the present; they should appreciate on a return of market activity. Carald.—1-4. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 5. Yes. Carton.—1. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2. You ask for "any information" about the company without stating whether you hold the shares. If you have not yet bought them I advise you not to do so. Carnoustie.—This is not a share that I should hold. If you have not yet bought them, don't. Coupon.—1. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2. Should begin tapping in a month or two, according to the prospectus, but this may have been retarded somewhat by the drought. 3. These are worth holding for the guaranteed dividend. Chicken, Cam, Conflict, Candid, and Crude.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus."

Dunelm.—I do not think you have any cause for anxiety. Wait for another month and then, if you do not receive your certificate, worry the chairman of directors. Dungoyn.—Hold all these shares for recovery. The companies are good ones. Dartmoor.—Send the amount of the call, with interest for the correct number of days calculated at 5 per cent. per annum, to the bankers, and see what happens. Devon Seabreeze.—1-3. The annual report will be due in a few months. See reply to "Actæon." Duke.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Depressed.—1. I suppose you refer to the Bikam Rubber Estate; there is no such company as the "Bidam" company. The Bikam is a good, well-managed company, and should pay large dividends in a few years' time, but at present there is very little market for the shares. 2, 3, and 6 are companies that I cannot recommend. As you are "depressed," I take it that you hold the shares, although you do not state it definitely. Retain them for better markets, and then exchange into more marketable shares. 4 and 5 are both worth holding for dividends. Demerara.—I think there is a reasonable chance of your doing so.

Eta.—1 and 2. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Enots.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2 and 3. Hold both for a renewal of market activity. East Sussex.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Eden.—1. Both should improve, but see first reply to "Clericus." 2. Exceptional drought. 3. See third reply to "Austral." 4. A speculative share likely to do well in active market. 5. See third reply to "Bonaventure." 6. I think so. Emerald.—1. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2. Hold. 3. See Notes.

Frivolous.—See reply to "Actæon." Fons and Fideltas.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." France.—Should not sell at present price. See first reply to "Clericus."

Galwegian.—1 and 2. Both good rubber investments. 3. Expected to become a good producer in the near future, but has had a set-back owing to lack of rain. Gentian.—1. Hold these for investment. 2. You had better keep your Dangans until the meeting, to be held in about a month's time, as you bought at such a high price. The report will probably be a fair one, although the estimates which appeared in the report of last year have not quite been attained. Glad.—1. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2. I do not care to suggest a selling limit just now. In usually well-informed quarters is is said that the prospects of the company are excellent, and at present price the shares are decidedly cheap. 3. I do not think that they are worthless, although they are not a share that I should recommend. Hold for a time, but sell if the market improves. G. C. (Leicester).—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Grant.—1. See third reply to "Galwegian." 2. Should reach your price when markets become active again. Said to have made some good profits this year. Guipence.—This is as near as I can get to your pseudonym. You will have to hold these for the present, as there is no market for them just now. If results reach prospectus estimates you should receive a good dividend in a year or so. Green Rock.—You should correctly number your inquiries. The first two companies should pay good dividends next year. With regard to the third, see Rubber Notes. The Vine and General Trust are said to have done some satisfactory business, and there is no reason to suppose that the preference shares will not receive a dividend the first year. Green Cotton.—1. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2. The trees on this estate have been retarded on account of drought, but the latest news is more encouraging. Godel.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Grena.—1. This is a very fair property, but there is not a free market for the shares. If you do not mind the difficulty in dealing, there is no other reason why you should not buy some. 2. See Rubber Notes. 3. Yes.

Hauptmann.—1. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2. See reply to "Actæon." 3. See last part of reply to "Green Rock." Hapegal.—I trust that I have correctly deciphered your pseudonym. 1. This is undoubtedly one of the best companies in the Malay Peninsula. Do not worry about your holding therein. 2. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Herts.—1 and 2. See Rubber Notes. H. M. C.—1. Do not give up the dividends and rights to any one except the broker through whom you sold the shares. The owner ought to understand the method of claiming from his broker, not from you direct. 2. These are vendors' shares, and consequently less marketable. 3. This is considered to be a very good company, although the shares do not enjoy a free market. Hamoaze, Hindoostan, Harold, and Harassed.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Harebell.—1 and 2. You had better retain these in the hope of an advance in the near future. I have never recommended them. 3. See reply to "Caoutchouc" and hold your shares.

Ices.—Both your inquiries are answered in Rubber Notes. You had better hold both for the present. Inquirer.—1. I cannot advise this. 2. This is a fair proposition. 3. The large dividends on the good producers will prevent such a contingency. Innocent.—1. There will be some delay in development. Too speculative for a large holding. Put the greater part of your money into Malayan companies. 2. Speculative, but should improve. Inoccupe.—1-3. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus."

Jumps.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2. Hold for investment. 3. Retain for a fair profit. You ought to state the price at which you bought. Jessie.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2. You must write a separate letter with regard to Canadian investments.

Kit.—Buy the preference shares. They are "cumulative" and "participating." Kil.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Kukri.—1. This company has done well out of the slump, and should be one of the first of the trust companies to respond to a general advance. 2. Both are good rubber investments. 3. There is nothing against a purchase of these three shares. Kildaro.—Hold for better prices. See Rubber Notes with regard to Madagascars. Kamlau.—1. Hold for the present. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2. Await Lillingston's report on Kamna. 3. A good share. 4. You might sell these on a market recovery. The remainder of your list should be held for better markets. I have no knowledge of the retirement of the director you mention.

Leeson.—Yes, as the price has fallen so heavily. Laurieston.—1. I do not advise a sale just now, but you had better sell when you can do so without much loss. The shares are not suitable for permanent investment. 2. This is a good share, but I do not expect any appreciable advance in the price for a time. You have overlooked the fact that the £1 share was divided into ten shares of 2s. each. 3. Singapore Para. Losanna.—1. See third reply to "Bonaventure."

Mab.—1 and 3. I do not think well of either of these as investments, but keep them until markets revive. 2. Is in good hands, and should pay excellent dividends in due course. Mammon.—Owing to the great fall in the price you would do well to average. Better news with regard to tapping is expected in the next few weeks, and this should put the price better. M. F. S.—You should number your queries as per Rule 5. With regard to your first inquiry, see Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." The other shares you name are good to hold for investment. Mar.—1. I cannot endorse this recommendation. 2. Keep these for the present. Marjorie.—1-3. I cannot advise you to cut your loss now. See third reply to "Galwegian." Murat.—1-3. See Rubber Notes, and, regarding 3, see also first reply to "Clericus." Maurus.—I should retain them all for recovery. Medico.—1. You were entitled to the information. Possibly your inquiry was overlooked. 2. Yes. Miffauwy.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2 and 3. Retain these for investment. You should eventually see your price. Mem.—Keep your Stagbrooks. The results for the seven months to the end of July for both tea and rubber exceeded the estimate for the whole year, as shown in the prospectus. An interim dividend in the near future is expected. Mug.—1-3. See Rubber Notes. 2. Tapping will commence next month if prospectus estimates are realised. Marmaduke.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Molinero. The figures given relate to the movements in the principal centres of Brazilian rubber only, and are usually accepted as a rough guide to the position. Figures for other centres and other grades are more difficult to obtain. They are, however, published at less frequent intervals and after some delay. Macroom.—1. I would buy more at present price rather than sell now. Mallard.—The capital of the company is £95,000, and it is estimated that a dividend will be earned next year. Mithan.—1. A speculative concern possessing a large area. Take a small profit when available. 2. See reply to "Anxious (Somerset)."

New Reader.—Speculative. Exchange into a Malayan company on a market revival. Novice. You have an excellent list of rubber shares. Do not hesitate to hold all of them for better prices. Nile. 1 and 2. You may regard these as sound investment shares. Hold them. 3. Keep these also for recovery. Take no notice of the critic to whom you refer. Northern.—I should not retain shares in this company if I could sell with little or no loss. You do not say whether you hold them. Notlob, Noscad, and Night.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Niagara.—Your plan is a good one, except that I should stick to 1 for a time as well as 2, 3, and 5. Novice.—1. The shares are of 2s. each fully paid. 2. You might average at present prices. 3. I think that you could do better in the present condition of the market. Nemo. See Rubber Notes, and, with regard to 2, see also first reply to "Clericus." Nina.—1. See first reply to "Clericus." 2. See Rubber Notes. 3. A fair proposition, but you will probably have to wait some time yet for a dividend. I do not care to suggest a selling limit.

Orpheus.—Keep them for the present. Ollenic.—1. As you bought at such a high figure, it would be well to average. My remarks did not apply to this district. 2. This company is doing very well. See Rubber Notes. Old Castle.—See Rubber Notes. Orc.—1. A cheap speculative share. 2. Next year. 3. Bukit Mertajam. Oxo and Ousel.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus."

Peshawar.—Buy the share mentioned in the reply to "Anxious (Somerset)." Partners.—Do not sell any of them. They will all pay good dividends in time. Philosopher.—This is one of the best rubber estates, and although the yield at present price on the basis of last year's dividend is rather low, a much better dividend next year is expected. 2. I fear you must write to the secretary as to this. Price-King.—1. I do not know of any such circumstances. 2 and 3. The company is a "long-waiting" proposition; the prospectus showed that there can be no revenue from rubber until after 1912. I should not buy now. Poor Patrick.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Palmer.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2 and 3. Both of these companies have suffered from drought, but it is hoped that tapping will be possible in a month or two. Park Road.—I should not sell any just now. 1. In time this will be a first-rate rubber investment. 2 and 3. See third reply to "Galwegian." 4-6. Must be regarded as speculative, although it is expected that 6 will pay a good dividend this year. 5. Is doing well, and should pay an interim dividend before long. Phono.—1 and 5. Both of these are speculative, but should go better with a general improvement in markets. 2. See fifth reply to "Park Road." 3. See second reply to "Gentian." 4. See first reply to "Park Road." 6 and 7. See Rubber Notes. Pulo Brani.—1. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2. See third reply to "Galwegian." 3. This company possesses a large area and in time should do well. Peckham.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2. See third reply to "Galwegian." Perseus.—1. I should average. 2. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Paddy.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2. See third reply to "Galwegian." 3. Hold for recovery and dividends. Puzzled.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus."

Reader.—1 and 2. Do not sell now, but do not increase your holdings. See reply to "Adonis." 3. See Rubber Notes. Rathy.—1. Your request has had attention. 2 and 3. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Rusticus.—You have made a very good selection, and I advise you to keep them all. The least promising is b. Russell.—1. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2. You had better hold these for the present as the price is so low. 3. If they recover a little when the market improves, sell them if you can. Radlett, Ralston, and Rude.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Romulus.—1. Hold what you have. 2. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 3. Yes. Resi.—1-2. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 3. Hold.

Salpiglosis.—I suppose you mean that you bought at 10s. 6d.—you state 10½. Retain for recovery to that price. Stoneybroke.—1 and 2. Do not sell any of them at present. You will probably have a better chance later of getting out if you wish to sell. 3. Is worth keeping for a time for the guaranteed dividend, but when markets revive you might sell. Southton.—1. See reply to "Actæon." The annual report is due shortly. 2. See reply to "Caoutchouc." 3. I look for appreciation here. A dividend should be earned for the current year. Somerset.—Keep a and d for the present. Sell b and c and put the proceeds into Beverleys. S'il vous Plait.—1. When it arrives the next time put it into the W.P.B. 2. I should not buy the shares of a company whose property is in this district. Starkie.—Most of your inquiries are answered in Rubber Notes. The shares not there referred to should be kept for the present. Specko.—1. Next year. 2. I prefer the shares mentioned in your third query. Shinglewood.—See Rubber Notes. Simplex.—Yes. The finest Funtumia Elastica produced comes from this estate. Sherwood.—All the shares are good to hold for higher prices, but I do not care to venture a prediction with regard to the rate of dividends. Swallow.—1. These will probably have to be revised as soon as markets become active. 2. See Rubber Notes with regard to Crudes and the reply to "Actæon" in reference to the other shares. 3. Certainly not dear at present price. Sail and Swan.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Stanwell.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Snave.—1. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2. London Asiatics were quoted ex div. 3d. per share on May 27. 3 Straits (Bertam) were quoted ex div. 2d. and two-fifths of a penny on August 12. Shawburn.—1-3. Of course, these three companies are quite in the front rank. I do not care to attempt to predict the rates of dividend for the whole of the current year, as this necessarily depends upon the price of the commodity. Seaview.—1. See reply to "Actæon." As the price has fallen so heavily I think you would do well to average. Surgeon.—Fair speculative proposition, but on a market recovery it would perhaps be well to exchange into a Malayan company.

Trevand.—1. This concern is in good hands, and, if it is possible for a rubber company to succeed in this district, should do well. 2. The same, with the reservation that the management is not so well known. 3. Even if estimates are realised it will be several years before any appreciable revenue is derived from rubber, although catch-crops may bring in a fair amount. Tiverton.—1. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2. Good to hold for dividends. There may be another dividend in December; the last was paid in June. 3. Dividends are paid in May, June, September, and December. This is one of the best of the producing companies. Tom and Teviot.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." Tobacco.—1. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2. See third reply to "Galwegian." 3. Hold these for recovery and appreciation. 4. See Rubber Notes. Tavy.—I should buy Glen Bervie and Batu Tiga.

Usher.—a. Do not sell now, but make up your mind to do so during the next few months. The shares are not suitable for a permanent investment. b. These are likely to do well in time. I advise you to keep them. Ullingswick.—Keep your Linggis, Malaccas, and Madagascar Preference. Exchange the other shares for Bukit Mertajam. Uncertain.—There is nothing wrong with this company. Subsidiaries awaiting flotation.

Villiers.—I suppose that you hold these shares, although you do not state so definitely. I should not recommend either of them, but I think it is possible that with active markets the price of both may improve a little, number 1 having the better chance. Vox.—1. When you can get par you had better sell. 2. See reply to "Actæon." Verax.—1. Yes. 2. The American demand slackened, but now shows signs of improvement.

Wondering.—You ask for "any information." See Rubber Notes. If you wish for any further information kindly write definite queries and number them. W. F.—1. See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus." 2. I do not expect any great appreciation in this share in the near future.

Xallit.—1. Wait a little while. 2. Probably not. 3. I think so. Perhaps in November or December. 4. See Rubber Notes. 5. It depends upon the general trend of markets. 6. See Rubber Notes.

Zoo.—See Rubber Notes and first reply to "Clericus."

Miscellaneous.

Adventure.—In common with the other Paris circularisers, Litvin and Co. charge prices for the bonds greatly in excess of their market value. See Note in another column. Absent-Minded.—Your inquiry should be addressed to the secretary of the company. Acetone.—The £1 shares are quoted at 4⅞. The company's prospects are regarded as very good, but dividends have not yet been commenced. Andover.—The market at the moment is showing a little more life; but I have not a very high opinion of either of the three, and would take an early opportunity of selling. Andoche.—Hold. A. P. B.—Melville Glyn and Co. charge prices vastly in excess of the current market quotations for such bonds. Anxious (Carlisle).—Not much news at present, but they might be held for a while, as the market generally is improving. Athenæum.—1. I do not advise them or any outside brokers. 2. Not a show I care for.

Beta.—I do not care for them. You might select West India and Panama Telegraph 6 per cent. first preference.

C. M. H.—Lever Brothers 5 per cent. A preference would be suitable. Cantuar.—The company is doing very well, but the present price discounts a good deal. If you have a material profit it might be advisable to take it. Clericus.—No. 2 is the pick, as a speculation, of course. I would not buy 1 in any case. Castle.—You cannot safely invest such a small sum for so short a period "to give you fair dividends." After payment of broker's commission and stamp duties you would be out of pocket. You could place the money on deposit at the bank, but the current rate of interest is so low that you would get only a very trifling sum.

Dorchester.—The A is receiving its due rate of 3½ per cent. regularly, but the income on the B is at present small, and in the last few years has fluctuated a good deal. At the present price there is room for a recovery. The B stock is irredeemable.

Expector.—So small an amount had better be placed in the savings bank, which was founded expressly for such a purpose.

Finlora.—I do not recommend them. There is no market for the bonds. F. W. W.—I have seen their circulars before. It is the usual bucket-shop system of business, but with the difference that so far as I know customers lucky enough to win have always been paid. Fiddlestick.—See replies under "Insurance." Felicitas.—You might sell on a small rise.

Gamp.—They are neither of them shares I care for, and I think you would be best advised to get rid of them.

Imlost.—The company has lately been engaged in a rate war, which is bound to have proved very costly. I would not buy the shares.

Justice.—I am much obliged for the information, which may be useful when I next deal with this bucket-shop firm.

King's X.—1 and 2. I think you might do better than in either of these shares.

Lanarkshire.—It has never published an audited balance-sheet, and my opinion of it is entirely unfavourable. No institution which offers such high interest can be regarded as reliable. Lahore.—Not perhaps in exactly the same category as the bucket-shops, but equally to be avoided. Surely you would not swallow the preposterous flap-doodle of these Yankee circularisers! Low Veldt.—1. By publishing the information for which you ask I should render myself liable to a heavy fine under the Lotteries Act. Leave these gambles alone. Probably you would be swindled by the Hamburg and other agents for the sale of the tickets. 2. The National Share Exchange is a common cover-snatching bucket-shop. Lanark.—1. Pay no attention to the paper. 2. No recent information. There was nothing discouragable about the action of the insurance company, which merely issued a policy in the ordinary way of business.

Mater.—I do not recommend the oil shares. The Canadian offshoot of the Welsh dry goods business starts with fair prospects, but at this stage the shares are necessarily speculative. Mott.—Do not buy more of 2. As regards the others, I think they are best left alone. You will be well advised to avoid shares of obscure companies that can be bought, but not sold. You will also be well advised to pay no attention to tips emanating from interested parties. Medico.—A fair gamble, but I should prefer the Ordinary at present price.

Novice.—Do what you say you have it in your mind to do and stick in future to your Stock Exchange brokers. They deal for you as agents, charging a commission for their services. The outside firm deal with you as principals, gaining what you lose in the speculative transactions they so kindly recommend. National.—No. 3 looks the pick for a moderate rise. Nelson.—The lottery is "genuine," but, of course, there are enormously long odds against any individual ticket-holder winning a prize, unless it be a paltry sum about equal to the cost of the ticket. Moreover, most of the ticket touts are unprincipled sharps.

Old Park.—A sound share, which ought to be retained. Oxonian.—1. I do not recommend them or any other "outside" brokers. Nos. 2 and 3 are both distinctly speculative, and you might make better selections. Okori.—1. No. See reply to "Lanarkshire." 2. Not an institution which I care to recommend.

Putnam.—As regards your first list the Brewery debentures look a fair holding at the present price. I do not care for Nos. 2 and 3. In your second list No. 1 is a repetition of Question 3 in your first list. No. 2 is not attractive, having regard to the company's erratic record, and as regards 3, the dividends on the company's ordinary shares have been steadily declining for some years, so that the preference cannot be regarded as a desirable holding. Premium Bond.—1. I know of none that I could recommend. 2. Messrs. N. Keizer and Co., 31, Threadneedle Street, E.C. Provincial (Hong Kong).—See replies under "Insurance."

Roma.—No. 1 might be held for the present. I am afraid it is little use keeping No. 3. As regards 2, I cannot advise, as the company does not publish its accounts. Rubbish.—I do not care for them. There is no market for the shares. Rigos.—Whether you are bound to take the shares depends upon the terms of the "Trust," as to which I will advise if you will send me the papers. Meanwhile ask for particulars of the shares they offer. Rusticus.—1 and 2. I would not part with either. Profits must by now have got down pretty well to bedrock. R. E.—The company is heavily capitalised, and its position regarding patents is very complicated. I do not recommend a purchase of the shares.

Starp.—They look pretty well high enough, and I would hardly recommend a purchase. Salop.—1 and 2. No. 3. A good investment. See also last week's remarks, particularly those relating to Great Northern Deferred. Scout.—You have a sound investment. It has declined in sympathy with other high-class stocks, but there is nothing wrong with the general position of the concern, and I think you ought to keep the shares.

T. J. S.—1. A wild cat. Sell if you can. 2. The unfavourable opinion is justified in this case, but of course the paper in question is not one of any standing. Tellaira.—There is little information available about the concern at present. But at the present price I should be inclined to hold and await developments.

Wide-awake.—Yes; you will see a further reference to Duncan Forbes and Co. in another column.

VIGILANT.

INSURANCE.

The Best of all Life Policies—Deferred Assurances for Children—Remarkable Results—Comparison with Other Policies—Advice to Everyone.

WHEN people want to take policies for the benefit of children they may deem it advisable to do so in two different ways. Perhaps the most usual policy is one which makes provision for education or a start in life, the sum assured under the policy being payable at any age that may be selected from perhaps fifteen to twenty-five. I described last week various methods of accomplishing this purpose.

There is a different kind of policy which may be taken out for the benefit of children, and which has some good claims to be considered one of the best financial contracts in existence. The policy to which I refer is deferred assurance. From childhood until age twenty-one an annual premium at a very low rate is paid, and if death occurs before the age of twenty-one all premiums paid are returned. On reaching the age of twenty-one the policy comes into force for its full amount and begins to share in the profits, the same low rate of premium being continued.

Why Pay Rent? Take an Immediate Mortgage, free in event of death, from the Scottish Temperance Life Office. Repayments usually less than rent. Mortgage expenses paid by the Company. Prospectus from London Office, 3, Cheapside, E.C.

The nature of this singularly attractive form of assurance will be most readily understood by a few actual examples. If a policy is taken during the first year of the child's existence at an annual premium of £10 the sum payable under the policy at death at any time after age twenty-one is £1,081, with profits in addition; the premium remains at £10 a year throughout the whole of life. If death occurs at age thirty-six, when £360 has been paid in premiums, the sum payable under the policy is £1,390. If death happens at age fifty-one the policy yields £1,788 in return for £510 paid in premiums; while by the time age sixty-six is reached the sum assured is £2,300 and the total premiums paid £660.

It is better, under policies of this kind, to take a policy which provides that the premiums do not have to be continued beyond a certain age, such as age fifty. If it is arranged that the number of premiums is limited in this way and that the sum assured is paid at death whenever it happens after age twenty-one, the amount of assurance obtainable for a given premium is nearly as much as if the premiums had to be continued for the whole of life. For example, if an annual premium of £10 is paid from birth until age fifty at the latest the sum assured at age twenty-one is £1,026. By age fifty-one the amount payable at death has become £1,696. If the assured has survived until age fifty he has paid in premiums the maximum sum of £500 and has nothing more to pay. The policy yields his estate over £1,600 at age fifty, or £2,180 if he dies at sixty-six; should he live to the advanced age of eighty-one the sum assured under the policy will exceed £2,800, although in no possible circumstances can more than £500 have been paid in premiums.

Precisely similar kinds of policies can be obtained on the endowment assurance plan. If a policy is taken at birth at a premium of £10 a year the sum assured is £537 with profits in addition, payable at age forty or at previous death if after age twenty-one. If the assured survives until age forty he may reckon on receiving £760 in cash at that age in return for a maximum outlay in premiums of £400. If the endowment assurance matures at age fifty, the premium again being £10 a year, the sum payable under the policy at age twenty-one is £730, and increases to £1,236 by the time age fifty is reached, when this amount can be drawn in cash in return for £500 paid in premiums. The corresponding figures for endowment assurance maturing at sixty are £912 in the event of death at age twenty-one, gradually increasing to £1,850 by the time age sixty is reached, when this sum can be drawn in cash after sixty annual premiums of £10 each have been paid to the life office.

The catalogue of the attractions of policies of this kind is so extensive that it is difficult to know where to begin. Sooner or later every man, and a great many women, require life assurance, and it is an advantage which cannot be over-estimated for a young man to come into possession of a large policy at a low rate of premium. Comparatively few people effect assurance earlier than age twenty-five unless policies have been taken out for them during their childhood; at this age an annual premium of £10 would secure a whole life policy with profits for £452, as compared with a policy for £1,081 effected at birth at the same annual cost. By the time age sixty-six is reached the policy effected at age twenty-five would amount to £900; the policy effected at birth would be £2,300, a difference of £1,400 secured by £10 a year for twenty-five years having been paid during the early years of life. An additional outlay of £250 secures an additional benefit of £1,400.

Suppose a man of twenty-five takes a policy under which the sum assured is payable at death, whenever it happens, and that premiums cease at age fifty. For a premium of £10 a year he secures a policy assuring £357, which will amount to £543 by the time age fifty is reached, and will further increase to £710 when he reaches the age of sixty-six. Had a policy been taken in childhood at a cost of £10 a year, the sum assured would have been £1,026 at the least from age twenty-one onwards, while at age sixty-six the sum assured would have reached £2,182, in return for fifty annual premiums of £10, as compared with only £710 in return for twenty-five annual premiums of £10 each under the policy commenced at age twenty-five. Once again it is seen that twenty-five payments of £10 a year from birth result in additional benefit to the extent of nearly £1,500, which amount rapidly increases with advancing age, since the bonuses on the big policy effected in childhood are about three times as much every year as the bonuses on a policy effected at age twenty-five at the same annual cost.

There are two explanations of these remarkable figures. The premiums paid up to age twenty-one are merely put into the savings bank and accumulated at compound interest. There being no insurable interest upon the life of a minor, the assurance cannot come into force for its full amount until after age twenty-one; by the time this age is reached the company has a considerable sum of money in hand. The risk of loss to the life office from death shortly after twenty-one is not, therefore, the full amount of the sum assured under the policy, but only the difference between this sum and the accumulated premiums paid during childhood, to which latter amount must be added some part of each premium paid from age twenty-one until death. Moreover, the chance of death at young ages, such as twenty-one, is very small; the consequence is that the cost of insurance protection is low, and at the same time the amount of protection is comparatively small on account of the premiums paid during childhood, which the company retains in hand. Hence nearly all the money paid to the life office is available for accumulation at compound interest, and when compound interest has fifty, or sixty, or seventy years in which to operate the results are, as I have shown, little short of amazing.

A further feature, which may prove of the utmost value, is that for policies effected during childhood no medical examination is required. If on reaching the age of twenty-one the assured is in bad health or even on his death-bed the policy comes into force for its full amount. There is no possibility of a child who has been provided for in this way being declined for life assurance when he reaches manhood or having to pay an extra premium on account of bad health.

In illustrating these policies I have assumed them to be effected during the first year of life, but they can be taken out, of course, at an increased rate of premium at any age up to about twelve or fifteen.

To start paying now for a policy under which the benefits may not be received for forty, or sixty, or even eighty years, certainly implies a larger measure of forethought than many people are accustomed to indulge in but the advantages from every point of view are so remarkably great that I would urge, with all the persuasiveness in my power, that everybody who has children, whether boys or girls, should take out policies of this kind if they can possibly manage to do so.

For Insurance Announcements, see page 691.

Answers to Correspondents.

[Inquiries on the subject of insurance are answered in this column every week. Every letter containing an inquiry must be accompanied by a coupon cut from the third page of the coloured cover of Truth.]

Bull (West Hartlepool).—1. You can do better for your client than recommend the company you name. 2. Century, Scottish Temperance, Star, Yorkshire. Security.—The English office is quite safe. The other company is scarcely suitable for your purpose. Pierre the Second.—Sun Life Office. The cost is slightly more, but not much. Vax.—Confederation Life; Legal and General. Exhibition.—1. In all the circumstances I fancy you had better transfer the policy if you are still able to do so. 2. I cannot say. Diner.—1. I suppose the company is sound, but I have not a very high opinion of it. 2. Safe for policyholders, and likely to do well for shareholders in the long run.

E. A.—I cannot judge whether you want the money for purposes of education or to be available at age twenty-one; in the latter case a single premium of £100 would yield £177 at age twenty-one. At age fifteen it would be about £153. One or other of these would seem better than an educational annuity or endowment assurance for your purpose. You cannot do better than the office you represent, which is quite excellent. J. S. (Thornley).—I am afraid you would do best to lose the money you have paid and pay no more. Fiddlestick.—I believe the society to be sound, and suitable for your purpose. Provincial (Hong Kong).—The new company is perhaps not quite so bad as the old one, but I think you would be wiser to stop paying subscriptions, though it means the loss of what you have paid. Villala.—Obtain quotations from Clergy Mutual, English and Scottish Law, and Norwich Union Life. Macroom.—I cannot recommend the company you mention. Prudential or Scottish Life is much better. Busy Jack.—I cannot recommend the society. You should neither pay to it nor represent it. Pensioner.—The fund is quite the best for your friend's purpose, and is thoroughly sound in every way. Liveb.—I think the policy is safe and fairly good. Negociate.—1. It will be more difficult to obtain business. 2. The Mutual office is the better on the whole, though there is not a great deal to choose between them. 3. Either New York Life or Equitable. 4. The conditions are very superior, and the guarantees will most certainly be met. 5. I should think that at the end of thirty-five years the Scottish policy would be superior, but this does not mean that it is necessarily better on the whole. 6. Yes. Haddock.—I should think limited payment life assurance with profits in the Clerical Medical and General is likely to be best for you. I am asking the secretary to communicate with you. Madras.—See my reply to "Haddock."

COMPANY MEETINGS.

RHODESIA EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT.

AMALGAMATION SCHEME UNANIMOUSLY APPROVED.

An extraordinary general meeting of the Rhodesia Exploration and Development Company, Limited, was held on the 12th inst. at Salisbury House, London Wall, E.C., Dr. Hans Sauer (chairman of the company) presiding.

The Secretary (Mr. James William Clark) having read the notice convening the meeting,

The Chairman said: Gentlemen,—You have been called together in accordance with the notice which was sent you, together with a circular, on September 3, in order to consider certain resolutions which will be submitted to you presently regarding a scheme for the amalgamation, or rather, I should say, for the acquisition by your company of four other companies in Rhodesia. The circular itself was fairly full in the detail which it gave of the scheme, and I take it that, broadly speaking, you are familiar with the main proposals of the suggested amalgamation. I shall presently, however, go more fully into the particulars of the proposed absorption. Before I do so I should like to say that this method of absorption seemed to me to be the correct one, and far preferable to forming a new company to take in not only your own company, but also the other four. It is only right that the existence of the Rhodesia Exploration company should not be cut short in its prime and vigour, when it is borne in mind that this company has come through the storm and stress of the bad times we have had in Rhodesia better than any other that I can think of at the present moment. (Hear, hear.) There were times in the history of Rhodesia when the position of the mining industry, particularly, became so critical that, had it not been for the unvarying optimism of your directorate and the loyal support accorded to them by the proprietors of your company, I venture to say that a catastrophe would have overtaken the industry, and it is, therefore, meet that the premier financial company of Rhodesia should in the future retain that position. (Hear, hear.) It is needless for me to traverse at any length the past history of the mining developments of Southern Rhodesia, the long wait and the trying stages through which an industry of this sort is bound to go, especially when the commencements are made in a section of territory which was practically savage twenty years ago. But to-day the position is quite different, and now we can clearly see that in the very near future Rhodesia will become one of the most important gold-producing countries in the world. It is already the third or fourth gold producer in the British Empire. You will admit that, when you take a dispassionate view, twenty years is no long time in the history of any State, and really the settlers in Rhodesia, considering the vastness of the territory occupied and the obstacles which have had to be overcome, have barely had time to turn round and find out what there is in the country.

I would now like to indicate to you the particular reasons which actuated your Board in accepting the suggestion which emanated from me that a stronger combination should be formed of the resources practically under the control of the same group, namely, of Mr. Bailey and the Rhodesia Exploration Company, for carrying out the object I have just now indicated. We have felt for some time that, in view of the similarity of the business objects of these companies in Rhodesia, there was no benefit in keeping them as separate entities, all striving to do the same business in the same country, and where the management was practically from the same office and under the same joint control. This must be obvious to you yourselves. The point of the saving in expenditure by way of office, secretariat, and the usual expenses pertaining to the existence of the different companies, is, perhaps, of minor importance as compared with the fact that the unification of these companies will produce one board of directors which will be able to pursue a fixed policy with definite objects in view, and will obviate the necessity of consultation between five different boards, which is waste of time and waste of energy. (Hear, hear.) In the second place, one of the chief reasons which actuated me in proposing this amalgamation scheme to the different companies was the fact that competition in Rhodesia for the mining business to be done there has recently become so keen that it became difficult to acquire sufficient interests in Rhodesia to satisfy five different financial companies in such a manner as would enable each of them to make substantial profits for their shareholders, apart altogether from the difficulty which has arisen on more than one occasion when a business has been offered, but the price has been of such dimensions that not one of the different groups of companies felt entitled to take it, on account of the amount of money involved, and often, the time being limited, business had to be passed which we knew was favourable, but which no one particular company was strong enough to handle. This will be avoided in future by the fact that the amalgamated company will be so powerful that it will consequently be more than capable of handling any mining business which is likely to turn up in Rhodesia. The Amalgamated Company will, of course, be in a position to fully test, develop, and bring to a state of flotation any mining claims of promise which it may own or over which it may obtain options, or which may be offered to it in the course of its mining business in the country; that is to say, it will be in a position to make a practical certainty of any mines which it may offer for flotation on the market in the future, without feeling that it is running unnecessary risk as regards any substantial loss of capital in the developments. Generally speaking, the vast assets which the company will hold will be better able to be conserved by a corporation which is freed from the canker of monetary care than by corporations who are in perpetual alarm about their daily bread.

I will now shortly put to you the proposals with which you are more or less familiar in the circular. The capital of the company is to be increased from £450,000 to £2,000,000 by creating 1,550,000 new shares of £1 each. These shares, as you will have seen from the circular, it is proposed to issue as follows:—288,788, being at the rate of seven new shares for each ten Banket shares; 96,760, being at the rate of one new share for each two Etna shares; 203,034, being at the rate of four new shares for each five Shamva Trust shares; 203,350, being at the rate of one new share for each two Gold Schists shares, a total of 791,932 shares. The assets of these companies to be taken over for these 791,932 shares will be acquired as from September 1 last, as at which date they held, taking the four companies together, the following:—Cash, shares sold and loans against security, £862,000; stocks and shares at then quotations, after excluding shares already held, or which would by the scheme be held in those companies by the Rhodesia Company, as they must be excluded from the purchase, £992,000, or a total of £1,854,000. In addition, the companies held unquoted shares and various interests and participations, many of which we regard as very valuable, and which stand in their books at a total amount of £71,000, while they also hold a total of 2,211 mining claims and 12,500 acres of land. In formulating the terms, on the basis of which we approached the directors of the four companies to be acquired, your board, in consultation with some of the large shareholders, both of your company and of the other companies, carefully examined their financial positions, calculated the full value of their shareholdings, and took into consideration the intrinsic merits of their mining claims and other properties as far as it is possible to ascertain them. Another factor to which we were compelled to give some weight was the market value of their shares. It is true that such values do not always represent the exact value of the assets owned, but they form an important factor which one is compelled to take into consideration when endeavouring to bring about an amalgamation such as is now proposed.

The effect of the amalgamation of all the companies concerned will be that we shall have a total issued capital of, roughly, £1,200,000 in £1 shares, and, after adding the proceeds of the 250,000 shares to be offered to shareholders for subscription, we shall have cash and share assets to the amount of £3,000,000, while, in addition, we shall hold unquoted shares and other valuable interests, such as share interests in the Bells Reef Mine, the Athens Rhodesia Development Company, the Cam and Motor, the Mennell Venture, etc., about 325,000 acres of land in a good situation, and a total of over 3,500 mining claims, which will include, of course, the claims on the schist line of reef. It is proposed, as soon as the amalgamation scheme is carried through, to offer to the shareholders of the combined concern about 250,000 new shares at £2 5s. per share, which issue has been guaranteed by Mr. A. Bailey free of any commission, either in the shape of cash or options on further shares. This right, which will be offered to shareholders on the basis of one share for each five held, excluding fractions, is, I venture to say, a handsome bonus to the shareholders of the participating companies, and more especially as it is intended that the option holders both in our own company and in the Banket Company shall have an opportunity of converting their options into shares by a given date, in order that they may take up their quota of the new issue at £2 5s. This date the board will fix later, as soon as the shareholders of the other companies have been placed upon our own register. With regard to the Rhodesian Banket Company, the rights given to their holders of option certificates have, of course, to be maintained, and they are placed upon an equivalent footing by allowing them to exchange their option certificates for Rhodesia Exploration options on the same basis as the exchange of shares, but at the price of £3 11s. 5d. per share. This figure represents the amount which the Banket Company's option holders would have to pay if they exercised their right direct to the Banket Company. The liabilities to be taken over are insignificant, amounting in all to a net sum of about £4,600.

I would like to point out that by giving effect to this amalgamation we will bring about a very substantial reduction in the capitalisation of the amalgamated companies. The total capital of the combined companies at the present time is £2,084,126, while, after carrying out the scheme, the capitalisation will amount to something under £1,200,000, a reduction of some 800,000 shares, or over 40 per cent. To this, of course, has to be added the proceeds of the 250,000 shares to be offered to shareholders for subscription, which will then make, in round numbers, a total issued capital of £1,500,000. You will find it stated in the circular that the number of Rhodesia Exploration and Development Company shares to be given as purchase consideration to the other companies has been arrived at after taking into account the shares which your company already owns in these companies, or which it will become possessed of by reason of the amalgamation scheme. In this we have followed the usual procedure of practically cancelling—although legally this is not the proper term to apply—these shares which we own or shall own in the companies we are acquiring. By the extinction of what I may call inter-holdings, and as the result of the rearrangement of capital arising from the consolidation, the total capitalisation of the five companies will be reduced by the substantial amount I have just mentioned. You will, of course, have noticed from the circular that the board have in contemplation the acquisition of other interests, which will further strengthen the position of the company. As these interests are still under negotiation, I am not able to go into details regarding them at the present moment, but if acquired the company will stand in even a better position.

I have now traversed fairly fully the details of the scheme, etc. I would now like to devote your attention for a few minutes to the effect which this amalgamation will have as regards the future business of the company. While many existing Rhodesian finance companies, taken collectively, are possessed of considerable working capital, individually none of them are in a position to embark upon extensive development operations. Naturally, out of the large number of mining claims held by many of these companies a proportion—and, if experience teaches anything, a large proportion—will prove to be unpayable, more especially if exploited on a small scale. As things are at present, the loss of £50,000 expended in the development of a single block of claims which proved disappointing might embarrass one individual company, and it is only by a bold policy of development that the good mines can be located. The formation of the amalgamated company, with its large financial resources, will enable it to undertake the development of its mines on bolder lines than the individual companies have been able to do in the past, and thus development under such an organisation will be able to be carried out more systematically and more economically than was possible in the past. At the present moment a great deal of development work is being done in Rhodesia, the results of which will be forthcoming within the next year or two; but still even now the development work proceeding in the country is a mere fraction of what ought to be done if work were carried out in a manner commensurate with the prospects Rhodesia holds as a gold mining country. I would like to take this opportunity to impress upon you the enormous extent of mining ground which the enlarged company will come into possession of. The 3,500 Rhodesian claims are equivalent to at least 35,000 claims in the Transvaal. This is due to the fact that in Rhodesia claims entitle the owner to follow the reef indefinitely in all its depths, angles, and spurs. In giving the latter figure I have taken the normal angle of dip for the formation, and made considerable allowance for unpayable sections of reef. As the effect of the increased capital to one and a-half millions your company will have in cash and liquid assets no less a sum than £3,000,000, or £2 per share, apart from a gigantic holding in mining properties, land, and other assets. This, you will admit, will place your company in a very powerful position, raise its status, and enable it to conduct operations on a scale which has hitherto not been attempted in Rhodesia. It will enable us to concentrate and expedite development upon those properties that can be most rapidly brought to a producing stage, and by the technical organisation we intend to instal we shall be able to undertake extensive prospecting and preliminary development work. By the enlargement of our engineering department we shall be able more closely to supervise the mines at present under our control; we shall be able to finance other mines which, in our opinion, warrant the expenditure of capital; we shall be able to make improved arrangements for the purchase of mining necessaries and machinery, and we hope generally to become a fostering element similar to that which has so much assisted progress on the Rand. So much for the general benefits which will accrue as the result of this amalgamation.

I should like to say that the amalgamated company will begin with an assured income of over £100,000 per annum, arising from dividends, investments, etc., and it will, of course, be in an unrivalled position to undertake new business owing to its financial strength. There is one other point I would like to mention. There has recently been some agitation in the Press for the more frequent publication of details concerning the developments of Rhodesian properties. Now, while some of the companies were in process of acquiring new ventures, it was not always expedient in the interests of the shareholders themselves to publish certain information. On the results being obtained, frequently a judgment was being formed as to the value of neighbouring properties, upon which either options existed or which it was possible might be acquired. But, apart from this, I agree it is desirable, in order to establish confidence in Rhodesian mining, that, if anything, we should err on the side of too much, rather than too little, publicity, and it will be the policy of your Board and those of you who have examined the voluminous and frequent reports which it has been our custom to issue to shareholders may think I am giving an unnecessary undertaking—to afford the widest publicity to the development results and gold returns of the various ventures with which your company is, or may be, connected. In conclusion, I call your attention to resolution No. 4, which states that the maximum number of directors shall be ten. It is, of course, our intention to increase the Board by two or three new appointments, and we intend to invite gentlemen to join the Board whose co-operation we believe will be of material assistance in the conduct of your affairs. As regards resolution No. 5, it is not necessary for me to expatiate on this, but I think you will agree that the suggestion in that resolution is fair and reasonable. In view of the extent of the business to be transacted, we thought it advisable that we should have additional auditors, and we have included in the resolutions to be passed to-day a proposition for the appointment of Messrs. W. B. Peat and Co. jointly with our present auditors, Messrs. Arthur Goddard and Co. I will, therefore, now propose the first resolution, and shall then be pleased to answer any questions or to hear any remarks shareholders may have to put upon the business before you. The resolution is:—"That the directors be authorised to enter into agreements for the acquisition of the undertaking and assets of the Rhodesian Banket Company, Limited, Rhodesian Abercorn Shamva Trust Company, Limited, Gold Schists of Rhodesia, Limited, and the Etna Development Company, Limited, or one or more of such companies, upon such terms and conditions as the directors may approve."

The Hon. A. G. Brand seconded the resolution, and, there being no questions asked, it was put to the meeting and carried unanimously.

The Chairman next moved:—"That the capital of the company be increased to £2,000,000 by the creation of 1,550,000 new shares of £1 each, and that such new shares be issued at such times and to such persons and upon such terms and conditions as the directors may from time to time approve."

Mr. Brand seconded the resolution, which was unanimously agreed to.

On the motion of Mr. Joll, seconded by Mr. Hansford, Messrs. W. B. Peat and Co. were appointed to act as auditors of the company jointly with Messrs. Arthur Goddard and Co.

The Chairman also moved:—"That the number of directors of the company be not less than three nor more than ten."

This was seconded by Mr. Brand and carried unanimously.

The Chairman further moved:—"That Article 80 of the company's articles of association be varied by the omission therefrom of the figures '£1,000' and the substitution therefor of the figures '£3,000,' and by the omission therefrom of the figures '£5,000' and the substitution therefor of the figures '£10,000.'"

Mr. Brand seconded the resolution.

Mr. Ilsley suggested that before paying the directors the additional remuneration proposed the shareholders should receive 15 per cent instead of 10 per cent. by way of dividend.

Mr. H. J. West moved an amendment to the effect that the shareholders should receive 20 per cent. before the additional remuneration was paid to the directors.

Mr. Ilsley seconded the amendment.

Mr. N. Herbert Smith said he understood that the proposed amalgamation involved the bringing together of the capitals and the businesses of five companies. Presumably, the affairs of those companies were in the hands of five boards of directors, and before the shareholders voted on this particular question he thought it would be instructive to them to know the aggregate remuneration received at present by the directors for the management of the different properties.

The Chairman replied that the aggregate fees amounted to £3,950, whereas the amount stated in the resolution now proposed was £3,000.

Mr. Smith said that that showed that in point of fact they were going to pay less in the way of remuneration as the result of pooling, while the volume of work to be done by the directors was going to be increased.

Several shareholders appealed to Mr. West to withdraw his amendment, and ultimately he agreed to do so, with the result that the resolution was put and carried nem. con.

Mr. James A. Love Tindal, speaking as the representative of the holders of 40,000 shares in Scotland, stated that they cordially concurred in the proposals of the directors, but he wished to know why there had been no distribution of a dividend in connection with this company. Doubtless the directors had good reason for withholding a dividend. He could quite understand that on the eve of such an important development in the history of the company they might consider it wise and prudent to conserve their resources to meet any possible emergencies until the new arrangements had been entirely accomplished. Another suggestion he wished to offer was that, considering a very large number of the shares were held in Scotland, the Scotch shareholders should have direct representation on the board. In addressing a majority of Englishmen that point might not be fully appreciated—(laughter)—but it would be readily admitted that every board composed of Englishmen was immensely strengthened by the addition of a level-headed Scotchman. The fact was that the British Empire was very largely run by Scotchmen—(laughter)—and what was good for larger and national interests could not but be for the advantage of the smaller interests represented in this company.

The Chairman, in reply, said it was never the intention of the directors to pay a dividend now. They paid one some two or three months ago, and it was understood that they would pay another towards the end of the year. The capacity of the new company to pay dividends would not be impaired by the amalgamation. With reference to the suggestion that the Scotch shareholders should have representation on the board, he might say that he was in absolute agreement with what Mr. Tindal had said with regard to the capability of that great nation. The company's head man in Rhodesia and most of the members of the staff under him were Scotchmen, and he (the speaker) would certainly use all the influence he had to get a good Scotch representative on the board of the company. (Hear, hear.)

A vote of thanks to the Chairman concluded the proceedings.

NEW SUPERHEATER COMPANY.

The statutory meeting of the New Superheater Company, Limited, was held yesterday at Salisbury House, London Wall, Lieut.-General Sir Charles E. Knox, K.C.B., chairman of the company, presiding.

The Secretary, Mr. S. G. Bruff, having read the notice calling the meeting,

The Chairman explained the circumstances which had led up to the formation of a company. The idea of superheating was not new. The saving of fuel and the increase of efficiency by the use of superheated steam had been the object of almost innumerable experiments extending over many years, and engineers had almost unanimously come to the conclusion that it was bound to come. When it did come it would be practically universal. Among other companies formed for the purpose of exploiting a supposed solution of the problem was the New Century Engine Company, Limited. Possibly the system owned by that company had some good points, and certain experts pinned their faith to it; but it failed. The directors of the New Superheater Company had been fortunate enough to secure an option on an entirely new invention on terms with which the shareholders were familiar, and this company was the result. As a result of the trial on their railway, the Furness Railway Company had four locomotives fitted with the system, and they were in regular work on the line. A fifth engine was also being fitted, and he understood that they were more than satisfied with the working of the apparatus. The engines so fitted showed a remarkable gain in efficiency, and that the saving in fuel was not only a substantial one, but actually greater than was claimed for the system. The coal saving effected on the Furness Railway was slightly over 18 per cent. Since this report was handed in the Furness Railway decided to fit up a further four more locomotives, and the directors had every reason to believe that the results obtained were even better than those obtained by the first one. From this it would be seen that the company was not basing its claims on mere estimates, but on actual results. At the present moment they were in negotiation—serious business negotiation—with about a dozen railway companies, English, colonial, and foreign, for their rights were world wide, and they were fitting locomotives of various companies with their apparatus. They had no hesitation in saying that they would be able to show a saving in fuel of from 15 per cent. to 20 per cent. This was no rash prophecy, but a conclusion based on over a year's experience in practical every-day running. The field did not end with the locomotives, but there were other forms of steam engine, and the invention could be extended to marine, stationary and portable engines. Shareholders would better appreciate the magnitude of these fields when he mentioned that the coal consumption last year of locomotives on home railways alone was 12,270,000 tons. If these locomotives had been fitted with a new apparatus they would have saved something like two and a-half million tons of coal. The nominal capital of the company was only £50,000, so that the profits should be out of all proportion to the small capitalisation. He looked forward with confidence to big developments in the future, and not merely in the future but in the immediate future.

Mr. Henry Foster Grierson, the managing director, said he did not join the company until he had satisfied himself as to the success of the apparatus. He sent his own chief locomotive engineer and his assistant—gentlemen of great experience and ability—to pick every hole in it they could, but the report was so favourable, and they regarded the commercial value of the apparatus so highly, that after careful consideration he consented to be a director of the company. The negotiations with other companies were in his hands, and he had every confidence in being able to carry them through successfully. What struck him as a most important advantage was that the apparatus could readily be installed to any form of existing locomotive far more easily and at a cost considerably less than any other type of superheater. It might be asked that supposing the engineers could do all they claimed, was there a market for the apparatus. His answer was "Yes," and to-day he was satisfied, after hearing the progress made in three months, that that answer was right.

A vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the proceedings.

TEMPEH (JAVA) RUBBER PLANTATIONS.

Satisfactory Reports on the Property.

The statutory meeting of the shareholders in the Tempeh (Java) Rubber Plantations, Limited, was held on the 7th inst. at Winchester House, Old Broad Street, E.C.

Colonel Ivor Philipps, M.P., the chairman of the company, presided, and stated that the whole of the capital had now been paid up, with the exception of a few hundred pounds. Since the prospectus was issued the directors have received a fuller report from Mr. Brugman and Mr. Veltman. Mr. Brugman was the agent of the Java United Plantations, Limited, and Mr. Veltman was the administrator of the Goenong Goemitir. The telegraphic report of Mr. Brugman was referred to in the prospectus, but since then the board had received a detailed report which fully justified their opinion as to the value of the property purchased.

The report stated that the estate could be reached by road suitable for wheeled traffic, maintained by the Government, which was of considerable advantage to them. It went on to say that Hevea rubber was for the most part planted 20 ft. by 20 ft., while in the more recent plantation it was 16 ft. by 24 ft. In the robusto gardens the Hevea was in excellent condition, and the trees were not inferior as regards growth and girth to the best plantations in Banjowangi, a division which was known in Java to be the best adapted for Hevea cultivation.

The robusta coffee plants grew splendidly, and had a healthy look, while the cocoa gardens looked very favourable also. As regards the establishment and buildings, there was a larger establishment with sufficient machinery for the full preparation of coffee and cocoa. The directors had several letters from Mr. van den Bergh, their manager, and in one dated July 15 last he stated that the Hevea trees had grown well during the last few months, and that a lot of trees now had a circumference of more than 40 centimètres at a height of 3 ft. from the ground.

As to the nurseries, 50,000 Hevea seeds had been ordered, and would be planted out during the coming west monsoon. In the nurseries there were about 60,000 Robusta plants, which would be planted out at the same time.

The Castilloas from the nurseries had been planted along the roads and in ravines, and were not mentioned in the list of plantings; they would amount to about 20,000 trees. The shareholders would thus see that they had about 20,000 trees there more than was stated in the prospectus. There was plenty of labour available this year, so that the upkeep of the estates left nothing to be desired. They were arranging for the transfer of the property, and were doing all they could to hurry it on.

A vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the proceedings.

---

All Rights reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

THE HEART OF FOUQUIER-TINVILLE.

MONSIEUR DE PAURE accorded the newcomer a lazy uplifting of dark eyebrows, and a slight—a very slight—shrug of shoulders still delicately clothed in claret satin. Then, recognising him suddenly, though it was difficult to recognise anybody in the atrocious light, he started up.

"Mon Dieu!" he cried. "Gustave?"

The newcomer, a very young man, came towards him with a pathetic attempt at the jaunty swagger affected by the patrons of the Hôtel de la Conciergerie.

"But certainly," he said, holding out a slim hand which shook visibly, though, as a rule, merciful shadows concealed little weaknesses of that kind. "One comes here, I understand, nowadays, for the only good society to be found in Paris."

On his words, punctuating them grimly, broke the clanging of doors and the heavy "plob-plob" of a retreating jailer.

"But you are a child, Gustave; it is fiendish!"

"Even a child may plot against Fouquier-Tinville, it seems. None are too insignificant to join in this merry game."

The newcomer spoke bitterly, and rubbing his hands together strove to insinuate that cold, not fear, had rendered them unsteady.

De Paure gave a hopeless gesture.

"They are drunk with blood," he said. "They will tear at each other's throats in a week or two—curse them! Yet Heaven itself should weep to see you a guest in this salon."

"But being a guest, one must summon one's philosophy, eh?"

The boy asked this with such a dried-up man-of-the-world air, that on a less ugly occasion his friend would have smiled. As it was, he laid a hand on the quivering arm.

"Death of my soul, you are right!" said he. "After all, 'tis better to go thus—pouf—in an instant, Gustave, before one realises, than to linger out the saints know how many hideous days of pain, or to eat away one's heart with longing for the woman one cannot have."

De Paure's face was very earnest. He was not merely seeking to reassure the boy—he was stating what experience had taught him most surely to be the truth.

"You may be right. I have never faced such possibilities. I have scarcely known pain in my life; and as for women, I have a contempt for them all—save for my sister."

The face of De Paure changed—his tone dropped to further earnestness, and now it vibrated with emotion. His eyes grew luminous in their deep settings; he was transfigured.

"Your sister," he said, softly. "I thank the good God every day that she at least is safe from these sleuth-hounds."

"Yes," said the boy, and for the first time the nonchalance which he had carefully copied from his elders forsook him, and his voice, like his hand, trembled. "She is safe."

He lifted his eyes to the dingy ceiling and involuntarily, as it seemed, on his narrow chest he made the sign of the cross.

De Paure saw the look and the gesture, and the boy's tone, which was curiously soft and devotional, sent a terror to his heart such as the frequent howlings of the revolutionary mob had failed to bring.

"She is safe in London with her uncle," he whispered, quickly, for the walls of the Conciergerie were lined with ears. "They told me so—eh?"

He clutched his companion in the eagerness of his question, as if he would drag a reply from him.

Whereupon Gustave the boy seemed suddenly to become Gustave the man. He looked pitifully at his older friend, and then took his hand.

"Be brave, mon ami," he said. "I understand, and I think she understood, because she sent a message to you."

"How—why?" De Paure stammered, the fear flaming into an agony.

"It was the very day of your own arrest," the boy whispered. "We were stopped at the barrier. I was released, but—she was taken. She had a quick trial, and—and—she went at the next noon. . . . I watched the cart! God of my life! I saw her face—it——"

He could not finish the sentence, neither could he weep. He just stared with his young eyes expressionless. All the flood-gates of relief had been closed in the horror through which he had passed.

For a moment De Paure staggered as if he would have fallen, and his face was as the faces of those whom the high priests of La Guillotine dangled daily before the public.

Then, this red season being a season of effort, he mastered himself with a supreme one.

"Gustave," he said, with dry lips, "I would have given my life again and again for her. What times! What devilish times!"

He wrung his hands pacing to and fro: "Yet there is comfort for us . . . , you and I have not long to wait. . . . Once no one spoke of a meeting beyond—Paris or London. In here one has grown to believe much possible. But she so pure, so holy—a lily for those cursed wolves to trample. O God!"

He dropped on to a bench exhausted, and set his face in his hands, and the boy stood watching him.

"I, too—I would have given a dozen lives to spare hers; but my father's name is execrated—you know."

"I know, I know."

"She sent you a message, my sister."

"Yes, yes."

"She said, 'Tell Jean de Paure (it does not matter now) that I die, as I lived, loving him.'"

De Paure clutched at the words as the proverbial drowning man clutches at the proverbial straw.

"Thank the good God!" he said. "And I—I did not dare to hope—no death can be bitter now."

They paced up and down together, and the morning wore on.

The boy shuddered when the tumbrils came for the day's spoil—shuddered horribly when his own number was called.

De Paure embraced him.

"Adieu—courage," he whispered; "you are fortunate—it is hell, this waiting."

"De Paure, I am so young. I——"

"Courage again, one minute—less—it is better than a death-bed of pain."

"I know, I know. Am I very pale?"

"Not very."

"How they yell, De Paure. I can't."

"Think of your sister."

The words acted as an inspiration.

The boy swallowed, passed a hand before his face, drew himself up, and walked steadily away.

De Paure dropped back upon his bench, and again his head fell between his hands. An apathy came over him.

* * * * * *

A week more they had kept him waiting. Others, his friends some of them, as this boy, had come and gone quickly, but he still tarried. The spring twilight fell, the night followed upon its heels, making little difference to the twilight which always brooded within the Conciergerie.

With the morning a new official, pompous in tricoloured sash, with rosettes to match, strode in.

He held a paper in his hand.

"De Paure! I want De Paure!" he shouted.

De Paure yawned.

"If one may ask, what was to have been your business with him, citizen?" he demanded.

"Was to have been?" spluttered the official; "is, you mean. Fouquier-Tinville dined well last night and has been graciously pleased at the eleventh hour to procure this prisoner a pardon."

He passed on shouting pompously, "De Paure! I want De Paure!"

De Paure took deep and silent counsel with himself. His sunken eyes, glittering now with a little brief excitement, searched the room. The prisoners, sitting or standing about in listless attitudes, were a batch of newcomers who had arrived late the night before.

He was a stranger to them. The postponement of his sentence had made him the longest inhabitant of the place.

Still the domineering official went on from one listless figure to another with constant reiteration.

"You come too late, citizen," sneered De Paure, lounging in his corner.

"Too late! How?" questioned the official, who was stupid. "I was informed that De Paure is to die this morning."

"A lie, in keeping with other lies of a lying time. Monsieur de Paure died yesterday."

The official shrugged his shoulders.

"That was an unfortunate mistake," he said, "for Fouquier-Tinville is not always so soft of heart."

He strode away, tearing the paper in his hands to shreds as he walked.

And as he went, the tumbrils arrived.

TRUTH will be sent weekly to any address in the British Islands for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or £1 9s. 1d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). The subscription to Canada (Thin Edition) is: 7s. 7d. for 3 months; 15s. 2d. for 6 months; £1 11s. 6d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). To the Colonies and Foreign Countries (Thick Edition): 3 months, 8s. 8d.; 6 months, 17s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 15s. 10d. (including Christmas Number). All cheques and P.O.s should be made payable to THE MANAGER OF TRUTH, and addressed to Truth Buildings, Carteret Street, London, S.W.

BOOKS.

"VULGARITY and impropriety could alone arouse his indignation. Morny avoided them as he would dirt, and could find no excuse for those who tolerated them." That is all that even M. Frédéric Loliée, in Mr. Bryan O'Donnell's version of his memoir of the Duc de Morny, can say sympathetically of his hero, whom he admits to have been without heart or conscience, without loyalty or gratitude, without regard to any feelings, however sacred, or to any interests, however momentous, except his own. Yet even as a fine gentleman, or as a gentleman at all, Morny seems to me to have been an absolute failure. This man, whose only horrors were "vulgarity and impropriety," proclaimed from the house-top the frailty of his mother and that also of his more than mother—his devoted grandmother, to whom he owed everything—only in order that he might himself be credited with the brains of his grandfather, Talleyrand, and with the rank of his mother, Queen Hortense. When one considers the extreme pains both his mother and his grandmother took to hide their shame from every eye, this parade of it by Morny is about as revolting a piece of vulgarity as can be conceived. Again, could anything have been more vulgar and improper than his seduction of his Russian wife's dearest friend and dependent? "His wife had brought with her from St. Petersburg a young girl of noble birth, but without fortune, who had been her favourite companion at school, where, as schoolgirls, they had sworn that whichever married first would look after the welfare of the other." Yet Morny had no scruple in seducing this young girl, to the destruction of all her promising prospects. Once more, only the most vulgar-minded as well as the most unprincipled of men would have made the base use of his high position and of the political secrets it laid open to him that Morny did in his shifty speculations. The shadiest Stock Exchange sharpers and company promoters took Morny into partnership, paying him heavily for his profitable patronage, till it became a proverb to say of any fishy transaction of the kind, "Morny is in this business." Indeed, one of Henri Rochefort's wittiest and bitterest hits was his mot upon an infamous criminal case then on trial, "Do they not say that Morny is in this?" If, however, you come down to mere manners, of which alone perhaps M. Frédéric Loliée is speaking when extolling Morny's abhorrence of vulgarity and impropriety, I cannot say that even here the Duc shines as "the glass of fashion and the mould of form," to judge at least by the specimens of his politeness quoted to his credit. The vulgar host who reserved for his own consumption a special wine could hardly have been taught better manners by Morny's calling peremptorily for the brand and ostentatiously deluging the priceless vintage with water. There seems to me, too, less wit than rudeness in Morny's invariable address to his secretary, the famous novelist, Alphonse Daudet, whose wealth of hair the bald Duc resented, "Get your hair cut!" giving him the address of the hairdresser Lespes. Morny's great achievement—and no doubt it was chiefly his achievement—the Second Empire, bore his impress unmistakably. When his young Russian wife had become as intimate as she would condescend to become with its high society, she exclaimed at one of the Imperial receptions to her relative, Baron de Behr, "Look at the Dowager Empress"—of Russia—"from here, and tell me then what you think of the rest. Prostoi, prostoi! Wsejda prostoi!" which, being interpreted, means, "Vulgar, vulgar! One and all vulgar!" The whole story of the coup d'état of December 2, as told here again, reads like a sordid murder plot, and recalls Juvenal's famous line:—"Ille crucis pretium sceleris tulit; hic diadema." "Success," said a prince of the Church whose Founder died on the cross, "Success," said Cardinal de Retz, "justifies and consecrates everything that is lofty and daring," and the daring of the coup d'état, if not its loftiness, may be held by such Christian moralists as the Cardinal to justify it. But the daring was chiefly Morny's. Indeed, the more we read of the secret history of the Second Empire the more evident it becomes that Napoleon III. was an unpractical and often impracticable dreamer, needing, like the Laputans of "Gulliver's Travels," a flapper who "upon occasion would give with his dried bladder full of peas a soft flap on the eyes, because he is always so wrapped up in cogitation that he is in manifest danger of falling down every precipice and bouncing his head against every post." Morny, while he lived, was the Emperor's flapper, and might, if his life had been prolonged, have prevented him falling down the precipice of the war of 1870. Indeed, before his death Morny had forewarned the Emperor, "Do not attack the King of Prussia now; you are not ready. If you do so, he will throw you into the Rhine." After Morny's death the Empress governed, "interfered in everything and mixed up the cards of foreign politics. She was always trying to form what she was pleased to call 'coalitions.'" At the same time it must be admitted that Morny, who for shady speculative purposes had promoted the ill-fated Mexican expedition, thereby gave the first shake to the imperial structure he had himself done most to rear and fortify. I hope when a new edition of this interesting book is called for Mr. Bryan O'Donnell will express his author's meaning more clearly. Again and again you come upon such obscure or awkward passages as, "His mind was fed upon absolute scepticism about external forms of power provided he was able to enforce it," or as, "Youth is essentially mocking and enthusiastic of its nature," or as, "He was hopeless in metaphysics, for they could not long arrest his attention."

If Miss Wylie's book, noticed last week, excites a desire to visit the Black Forest, Mr. Hughes's "A Book of the Black Forest" (2) whets it till you long to pack your knapsack and follow in his trail. Follow in his company, rather, for Mr. Hughes is the cheerfullest and chattiest of companions and enlivens the few dull stretches there are in the Black Forest with its legends. Then there are Mr. Hughes's inviting illustrations to beguile you from one picturesque point to another, and his unfailing humour to lighten and brighten the road till you feel yourself in the pleasant and profitable company of an ideal guide.

A pleasant guide also, if not so profitable (since experts insist that his archæology is at fault) is Mr. Frederick Seymour in his "Up Hill and Down Dale in Ancient Etruria" (3). As Mr. Seymour's guidance leads you for the most part off the beaten track—away from such cities as have been often described—to the abandoned sites of Etruria, you find yourself wandering with him amongst tombs. Sometimes, indeed, you are taken farther back even than the Etruscans and Pelasgians and wander amongst "remains so ancient that in comparison with them the Pelasgic and Etruscan walls of Rusellæ take up almost a modern position." But at least you are always in cheery company, for Mr. Seymour is a veritable Mark Tapley amongst British tourists.

It is natural that in a volume intended for popular English consumption Mrs. Steuart Erskine, in her "A Royal Cavalier" (4), should lay disproportionate stress upon what was a mere episode in Prince Rupert's varied and eventful career—his gallant fight in the Civil War for his uncle, Charles I. Prince Rupert was a true child of the Renaissance in his adventurousness, his versatility, and the brilliance of his many-sided genius as general, admiral, inventor, and discoverer. Of these sides of his life and genius Mrs. Erskine gives you, it is true, glimpses and suggestions, but she is mainly con-

(1) "Le Duc de Morny." The Brother of an Emperor and the Maker of an Empire. By Frédéric Loliée. Adapted by Bryan O'Donnell, M.A. With Photogravure Portrait and Twenty-two other Portraits. (London: John Long, Limited. 12s. 6d. net.)

(2) "A Book of the Black Forest." By C. E. Hughes. With Twenty-one Illustrations and Two Maps by the Author. (London: Methuen and Co., 7s. 6d. net).

(3) "Up Hill and Down Dale in Ancient Etruria." By Frederick Seymour. With a Map and Twelve Illustrations. (London: T. Fisher Unwin. 10s. 6d. net.)

(4) "A Royal Cavalier." The Romance of Rupert Prince Palatine. By Mrs. Steuart Erskine. (London: Eveleigh Nash. 15s. net.)

(5) "Margaret Rutland." By Thomas Cobb. (London: Mills and Boon, Limited. 6s.)

(6) "Alice of Astra." By H. B. Marriott Watson. (London: Methuen and Co., Limited. 6s.)

cerned with his career as a Royalist captain, and of this she certainly makes the utmost in her picturesque and dashing narrative.

I do not think Mr. Cobb is at his best—which, as every one knows, is very good indeed—in his "Margaret Rutland" (5), whose hero, the poorest of creatures, marries for her money the heroine, a lady nearly a score of years his senior. An intrigue with a girl whose personal attractions are supposed to outweigh her moral and mental deficiencies estranges him from his saintly wife, but the motor accident which disclosed the intrigue led eventually to a reconciliation through the pity which "is akin to love," which is love itself, according to Heine, excited in the heroine's heart by the paralytic helplessness of her husband. On the other hand, Mr. Marriott Watson seems to me at his best in his "Alise of Astra" (6), whose ingenious plot turns upon a supposititious child thrown by an opportune railway accident into the hands of the wily Chancellor of Eisenburg at the moment when he needed an heir to the dead Grand Duke to keep out a Suabian successor. Every chapter of the story is interesting and even exciting with an ever-growing excitement till you reach its gracious close.

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

---

Messrs. Macmillan's list of announcements for the autumn comprises upwards of eighty works. Conspicuous among the art books is "An Illustrated History of Emma, Lady Hamilton," with thirty reproductions in colour of famous paintings and engravings, and also about fifty photogravures. It is promised that the memoir, which is by Mrs. Julia Frankau, will give an entirely new reading both of the character and career of Lady Hamilton. Among biographies "The Herkomers," by Sir Hubert von Herkomer, will present a striking picture of the artist's father, in addition to a record of his own career; and "The Life and Letters of Alexander Macmillan," one of the founders of the publishing firm, will be particularly attractive to all who are interested in literary history. Mr. Macmillan's correspondents included many leading figures in literature, a few of the names which occur more or less prominently in the volume being those of Tennyson, F. D. Maurice, Charles Kingsley, Tom Hughes, J. R. Green, Matthew Arnold, Thomas Hardy, Gladstone, and Lord Morley. The most important of the travel books to come from Messrs. Macmillan is Dr. Sven Hedin's new work, "Overland to India"—two illustrated volumes dealing principally with Persia.

Mr. Heinemann has just issued the third volume of "The Memoirs of the Duchesse de Dino," edited with notes and biographical index by Princess Radziwill. The first two volumes, which appeared some time ago, covered the years 1831-1840, and the present instalment brings these singularly interesting social and political recollections down to the year 1850. Mr. Heinemann's recent publications also include an English edition of M. Emile Michel's "Great Masters of Landscape Painting," fully illustrated, and a translation of Joseph Bédier's "Romance of Tristan and Iseult," with coloured plates and decorations by Maurice Lalau. In fiction Mr. Heinemann has ready this week Mr. William de Morgan's new novel, "An Affair of Dishonour." The author of "Joseph Vance" and "Alice for Short" has here entered an entirely new field. Leaving suburban and lower-middle-class life of Victorian times, he has gone back to the second half of the seventeenth century, and written a full-blooded romance.

It is curious that autograph-collecting is a much less popular hobby than postage-stamp collecting, though the former has more intrinsic interest, and is not nearly so expensive. Not infrequently a single stamp is sold for a sum which would suffice to buy a fine collection of autograph letters or documents of real historical or literary interest and importance. Some instances of this are given by Mr. A. M. Broadley in his "Chats on Autographs" (price 5s. net), the latest addition to Mr. Unwin's well-known series of guides for collectors. The book is, of course, intended for those who are, or aspire to become, autograph collectors in the proper sense of the term, not for the mere autograph hunters who pester famous (or it may be infamous) personages for their signatures. Writing from personal experience as a successful collector, Mr. Broadley makes his "chats" on autographs and the autograph cult both instructive and entertaining, and the volume is abundantly illustrated with facsimiles.

"The Silent Isle" is the title of Mr. Arthur C. Benson's new book, which will be issued by Messrs. Smith, Elder and Co. on the 20th instant. It is described as an attempt to sketch some of the details of life seen from a simple plane enough, and with no desire to conform it to a theory, or to find anything very definite in it, or to omit anything because it did not fit in with prejudice or predilections. In short, "it is just a little piece of life, observed and experienced and written down." The same publishers are bringing out shortly a book of sketches at home and abroad by Mrs. Lionel Cust. It will be entitled "From a Little Town Garden and Other Sketches."

There has been more than one announcement during the past three years of a new anthology in prose and verse, "In Praise of Oxford," by Thomas Seccombe and H. Spencer Scott. It has now been completed, and Messrs. Constable will publish the volume immediately as the first of a series of anthologies devoted to famous university and school towns.

It is an open secret that Mr. Arnold White is the writer of the remarkable essays which, over the pseudonym of "Vanoc," have long been a feature of the Referee. A selection of the essays, dealing with many subjects, from naval armaments and the ways of the War Office to "eugenics" and education, forestry and gardening, marriage and divorce, will be published next month by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench and Co. The title of the volume will be "The Views of 'Vanoc': An Englishman's Outlook."

Dr. Roland G. Usher is the author of an important work on "The Reconstruction of the English Church," which Messrs. D. Appleton and Co. are about to publish. The plan of the book embraces the political, constitutional, legal, and administrative history of the Church, and also of the Puritans and Catholics, from 1583 to 1610.

---

ART.

HOLMAN HUNT.

THE death of Mr. Holman Hunt at the age of eighty-three bears something of the same relation to the history of art as does the demise of a prince to the history of his principality. The prince may or may not have been a personality, but his name serves to identify his epoch, and Georgian houses or Napoleonic collars testify at least to a posthumous degree of usefulness. As the last painter-member of the famous Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood—of whom Mr. William Rossetti now alone remains—his death represents the official closing of an epoch, now become old-fashioned, but leaving an indelible mark upon posterity.

The Pre-Raphaelite brotherhood has suffered about equally from praise and blame. A well-known German critic saw in it the decadence of all British art; Ruskin's indiscriminating praise of the new movement may have done something to emphasise its limitations. Whatever its merits or demerits, it made for hard-won truth as opposed to easy-going Academicism. Its failings are, no doubt, due in part to the fact that it endeavoured to concentrate both upon realism and idealism. This double end sometimes led its precursor, Madox Brown, into grotesqueness, as was also the case with Hogarth, both painter and moralist: in the same way the meticulous labour of the Pre-Raphaelites often led them into sacrificing a greater truth to a lesser one. And the failings of the P.R.B are nowhere more evident than in the heroic failure of Holman Hunt to make extremes meet.

Of all the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood Holman Hunt made the deepest popular appeal. While Rossetti was responsible for "artiness" among a crowd of personal admirers who detached from their context his more superficial idiosyncrasies; while Millais latterly pleased Society with portraits and multitudes with "Bubbles," reproductions of Holman Hunt's "Light of the World" is about as common in books as Reynolds' Angels upon powder-pots and hairbrushes. Had it been painted within the last year or so, the painter would no doubt have proved a formidable competitor to a present-day religious artist, whose chief sinner in a pair of blue satin stays was exhibited in a Bond Street Gallery to the accompaniment of velvet curtains and footlights, entrance one shilling a head. The Biblical instincts of Holman Hunt indeed differed from those of his contemporaries, in that they were the outcome of an undiluted and consequently narrow Puritanism. In "Christ Washing Peter's Feet," with its virility and its intense vividness of imagination, Madox Brown's genius transcends the dogged and inartistic adherence to or protest against a creed whatsoever; the painter does not see the kneeling Christ and the unwilling Peter thus out of obedience to a principle; he sees as he cannot help seeing. Rossetti again savoured strongly of what your good Protestant loves to describe as "Popery," and thus was more or less suspect to the less cultured backbone of the British nation. Holman Hunt's pictures, however, echoed the chief Puritan characteristic in that they placed purpose before inspiration. "The Light of the World," with its emphasised pathos, its literal interpretation of a "text," above all, its bringing up-to-date a subject usually treated archaically, at once provided Evangelicalism with a legitimate artistic outlet, and appealed to thousands who lay stress on the evidence of their own senses. There is an infinity of matter in "The Light of the World," as in all the painter's pictures, but there is very little that every one could not understand.

Yet, based though it was on the Puritan—or more particularly on the Victorian love of religious titillation, the deep sincerity of Holman Hunt is unmistakable, and is conspicuous by its absence in the religious picture of to-day. Nor, as long as Keswick Conventions, Revivalist meetings, and English Sundays persist, is the peculiar force of his appeal likely to diminish. However much influenced by fashions, the sale-room is notoriously free from sentiment; the Pre-Raphaelite School, moreover, is at present suffering under the cloud of the fashion-before-last. At Sir Cuthbert Quilter's sale last year, however, "The Scape-goat" was withdrawn after a final bid of 2,800 guineas. It is true that this price was exceeded both by Landseer's "Midsummer Night's Dream," and Sir H. Herkomer's "Last Muster," but this was probably due to what I may call the greater topicality of their subjects. "The Scape-goat"—a work of infinitely stronger conception than "The Light of the World"—though it enjoyed for a time an enviable popularity, was hardly personal enough or "doggy" enough to make so forcible an impression upon a sentimental public. Painted at Oosdoom, on the margin of the salt-encrusted shallows of the Dead Sea, it is suggestive of deep religious feeling, and the mountains of Edom in the background have something of the beauty of the landscape in "The Hireling Shepherd." It was after Holman Hunt's return from Palestine that Madox Brown wrote of him: "I fear a nature that works beyond its strength." And indeed the extraordinary meticulousness of his work became with him an end in itself. The hardness that distinguishes much of it has been attributed by some less to his love of detail than to a remarkable quality of eyesight which enabled him, when in Palestine, to observe the satellites of Jupiter with the naked eye. Mr. Phythian notes the significant fact that his pictures, if looked at with only one eye, lose much of their hardness. Perhaps he actually saw more detail than did other painters; it is, however, a passion for sheer laboriousness which permits a painter to spend years working at a single picture. Had he possessed also the requisite breadth of vision this quality might have stood only to his credit; but only in certain cases, sometimes only in certain passages did his details become one coherent and inseparable whole.

The real significance of Holman Hunt is therefore less what he accomplished than what he stood for. Ruskin's irresponsible eulogies must not be counted unto him for evil. He declared himself latterly to have been the only true Pre-Raphaelite, which declaration is characteristic of his blind adherence to a principle.

MUSIC.

ART v. L.S.D.

A PROFESSIONAL musician writes:—

I read with interest your recent article on the decline of the provincial festival and particularly your remarks as to the falling off in the singing heard at these gatherings nowadays. I think, however, I can suggest part of the cause at least of the latter phenomenon—namely, the fact that the best talent available is not invariably secured. Artists are chosen not because they are the best procurable, but because they have a pull with the conductor or the committee, or someone else in authority. I do not say that the festivals are particularly conspicuous in this respect, but in the concert world in general the condition of things which I have referred to certainly obtains. Take any of the recognised serial concerts of note, for instance. What a partiality the conductors seem to display for those who have studied under them. In some cases, at least, the facts are flagrant and notorious. People in the profession go so far as to say, indeed, that it is absolutely necessary to take lessons in order to get engagements. Here, again, is a vocal teacher trading on his position as chorus trainer in order to get pupils. I do not say that he is to be blamed. But what is the inference? The aspirant says: "Mr. Blank, in virtue of his position, will be able to get me an engagement if I take lessons from him." Is this quite a healthy state of things? I hardly think so. Certainly it cannot fail to be prejudicial to artists who stand outside these rings and coteries, and who do not believe in choosing their professor because of his influence as a concert agent.

My correspondent is severe and somewhat sweeping, but there is undoubtedly force in his remarks. The evil which he refers to has long been a matter of comment in musical circles, and it is certainly not diminishing. It is not very easy, however, to say where the remedy lies. If conductors and concert managers choose to push their own pupils and protégés, who shall say them nay? The public would seem only to be concerned if the procedure entails inferior talent being foisted on them, as it undoubtedly does in some cases.

Another complaint put forward by a second correspondent is in regard to the practice which seems to be increasingly favoured by some concert agents of farming out certain artists, and pushing these exclusively to the detriment of other performers on their books, for whom they act on ordinary agency terms. Thus an agent having acquired the exclusive control of a singer's services for a comparatively modest salary, finds it to his interest to get him as many engagements as possible, since when his salary has been paid all the over-plus is clear profit. If, on the other hand, he obtained the same engagements for other artists on the usual ten per cent. agency terms, he would make nothing like so much. I see my correspondent's point, but hardly think that the agent is to be criticised in this case. If he chooses to buy up an artist's exclusive services, that is surely a perfectly legitimate speculation on his part, and naturally he tries to turn it to the best account by getting the artist as many engagements as possible. But doubtless it is galling to the "free" artists to see the "tied" man cutting them out.

It is suggested, however, that agents are tempted, in order to get as many engagements as possible for "tied" artists, to offer a share of the spoil to conductors and others having influence in the choice of artists. So long as the principals are a party to the arrangement there is doubtless nothing to be said against it. It amounts in this case merely to the agent lowering his terms to get the engagement. What is alleged, however, is that the conductor or other party concerned too frequently puts the money into his own pocket, and then, of course, unless the fact is disclosed, it amounts to nothing less than a secret commission and an infringement of the provisions of that monument of statutory futility, the Prevention of Corruption Act. I am afraid that practices of this order are a good deal more frequent in the musical profession than is generally supposed. 'Tis a sad world. In art or commerce it seems to be much the same nowadays. The money-getting spirit is paramount and universal. Graft, boodle, backsheesh, palm-oil—these are the watchwords of a mercenary generation. Art for art's sake may be the inspiring motto of a few, but so far as the vast majority are concerned they find that blessed word far more to their liking when it is spelt in terms of £ s. d. It is idle, perhaps, to expect anything else.

---

Mlle. Destinn seems to have been opening her mouth very wide, but this time not for singing purposes, in New York, and as a consequence she is not appearing again at the Metropolitan Opera next season. When Mlle. Destinn named £500 a night as the smallest sum for which she would consent to give New Yorkers the benefit of her art the management seem to have decided that even the services of a Destinn could be purchased too dearly. So she is making a tour on the Continent this autumn with a company of her own. But whether she will succeed in securing by this means her coveted £500 a night is, I should think, somewhat doubtful.

The recently formed Bechstein Hall Orchestra, which has announced a concert for the 20th inst., is shortly losing its capable conductor, Mr. Theodore Stier, who has been engaged for a six months' tour throughout the United States, Canada, Cuba, and Mexico, to conduct the orchestra which is accompanying—in both senses of the term—the famous dancer, Mme. Pavlova. The forthcoming concert of the orchestra will, therefore, be its last under Mr. Stier's direction, at all events for some time. The programme includes a suite by Purcell, while in addition Miss Nancy Price will recite and Dr. Deszo Szanto will contribute piano solos.

The fourth congress of the International Music Society will be held next year in London from May 29 till June 3, and the event will be one of considerable interest. Those responsible are already engaged on the necessary preparations, and I understand that a handsome fund has been raised privately to defray the necessary considerable cost which will be entailed by the entertaining of the numerous foreign members who are expected to attend the congress. Meanwhile it is requested that all communications on the subject should be addressed to the secretaries, London Congress, 160, Wardour Street, W.

New words from the new world! In the New York Musical Courier I notice a reference to Herr Weingartner and Herr Mottl as "members of the bâtonistic profession." "Bâtonistic" is good. The same journal contains an advertisement of M. Maurel to the effect that he gives "vocal and scenic instruction." What is "scenic instruction"?

Mr. E. H. Lemare has been putting in a good word on behalf of "orchestral" organ playing. "I can see no reason," he says, "why a true artist—who has a properly balanced sense of proportion coupled with refinement—should not even accompany the church service in an orchestral manner, provided always he gets a clear 'picture' of the orchestra in his mind, and gives effects which closely resemble it without resorting to anything bordering on coarseness or vulgarity. The style itself is perfectly legitimate in competent hands—it is the abuse of it which brings discredit. A true sense of discrimination is imperative to real art." Mr. Lemare will hardly 'scape whipping for this, but it may be noted as an extenuating circumstance that he does not advocate that the organist should strive to imitate the orchestra, but merely that he should "take it as his pattern in the way of expression and tone colouring."

I have received the following from a correspondent:—

From time to time concerts are given in aid of the Post Office Orphan Homes, and I doubt not that the artists on these occasions receive reduced fees accordingly. To my surprise, I have recently learned that the postmen are allowed commission on the sale of tickets for these concerts. This commission may enthuse the postmen and help to push the sale of tickets, but the method is not strikingly worthy, as for dignity it is about equal to Christmas Box touting. Perhaps a little publicity may fire the postmen with sufficient self-respect to refuse so unworthy a monetary bribe for services rendered in the cause of the orphan children of their departed comrades.

More graft!

---

THE THEATRES.

"A Bolt from the Blue," at the Duke of York's.

I SHOULD not be surprised if the effect of one or two of the recent adaptations from the French were to make London managers more disposed to think well of English plays and less inclined for hashed-up versions of French productions. In the original MM. Tristan Bernard and Alfred Athis's play "Le Costaud des Epinettes" is a witty comedy farce with a number of cleverly drawn characters in it and some curious pictures of unfamiliar aspects of Parisian life most faithfully presented. Mr. Cosmo Hamilton's English version is a rather grotesque melodrama. I do not say this is Mr. Hamilton's fault. He is a brilliant writer "on his own," but he had to purify impropriety and try to make intelligible to English audiences certain phases of life which our pits and galleries do not understand. The result is nothing but a rather tawdry affair, in which an impossible young man is hired to murder an impossible young woman in order that the villains of the piece may gain possession of a packet of the usual absurd incriminating letters. "Le Costaud des Epinettes," like so many modern French plays, consists of nothing but a situation. Everything moves towards this scène à faire. The authors conceive a situation and then laboriously build up to it, and the scene here comes when Claude Brévin, the hired assassin, finds an Apache about to do the job, and so saves the lady instead of killing her. Of course, he then falls in love with her. "Was ever woman in this humour wooed; was ever woman in this humour won?" There was something to me desperately pathetic about seeing Miss Irene Vanbrugh taking home to her flat at half-past one in the morning a young man whose acquaintance she had only made ten minutes earlier, and then explaining to him, while he undid her dress down the back (in order that she might put on a ravishing peignoir), that she was rather Bohemian but always had a preference for running straight. One would like to judge the English version independently, but how can one's thoughts help reverting to the French? It is a bit of a tax on your credulity, too, when the would-be assassin and his victim so quickly fall in love with each other, and when the girl, who is an actress, arranges that the man shall come to Brussels with her in the morning, where she will get him a place in the touring company of which she is a prominent member!

Possibly the piece is really a morality play, intended to show the inadvisability of attractive young women carrying off eccentric young men to their flats at midnight. They may be taking home murderers. Even from this point of view, however, the play fails, because the assassin repents, and all live happily ever after. The keenest pang of emotion I experienced during the play was when Mr. Arthur Wontner (who plays Brévin very cleverly) burns the ten-thousand franc note which has been given him as the reward for killing the lady and stealing her letters. If he had compunctions about utilising the money he might surely have bought Irma some little souvenir of the interesting evening or sent a handsome subscription to the Apaches' Benevolent Fund, or even to the Home for English Dramatists Ruined by French Competition. The play is exceedingly well acted and beautifully staged, but it seems to me deplorable that people like Mr. Dennis Eadie and Mr. Edmund Gwenn, to say nothing of Mr. Wontner and Miss Vanbrugh, should spend their time beating their artistic wings in this intellectual void. I hope, by the way, that this is not one of the plays that Mr. Frohman intends to produce in New York on Sundays, now that he has discovered that the stage is a great moral teacher and is trying to get permission to produce Sabbath plays! The most pathetic thing about the whole matter is that the people who are wasting their time adapting these plays have shown that they can write better plays independently. Mr. Hamilton certainly can, and so can Mr. Bésier, who adapted La Rencontre ("The Crisis"). Is it not time that we had a little less of the dumped drama?

"Sister Anne," at the Coronet.

Mr. Robert Arthur has made a bold move at the Coronet Theatre, and I see no reason why his enterprise should not be rewarded. Henceforward this theatre is to be a suburban house no longer. It is to rank among West End houses, and be devoted to the production of new plays—let us hope by English dramatists. If the Court Theatre could be run on these lines surely the Coronet can, for it stands in the middle of a fine residential neighbourhood. As proof of the fact that he means to do things well Mr. Arthur has engaged for his first production such excellent artists as Miss Marion Terry, Mr. Aubrey Smith, Miss Rosina Filippi, and Mr. Norman Trevor, and though Mme. Albanesi's play "Sister Anne" is not a masterpiece it makes quite a good start. As the central figure, the self-sacrificing Anne Brookdale, Miss Terry is so lovable and charming that she could carry a much worse play on her shoulders. The worst there is to be said about "Sister Anne" is that it is a novelist's play—wordy and diffuse, with far too much plot; moreover those extravagant acts of self-sacrifice which come out so well in novels often seemed strained on the stage. Self-sacrifice often comes perilously near to being a luxury, a vice, and poor devoted Anne giving up everything for the sake of her worthless little sister is a case in point. Anne carries her sacrifice to the point of marrying an extraordinary farmer, who brutally demands her hand as the price of joining in the conspiracy to save the minx of a sister. It is true that he loves Anne with a deep, undying devotion, but he dissembles his love so admirably that she never suspects it when he insists on her giving herself to him. Mr. Norman Trevor played this curious lover with great feeling, and the tragic scenes in the play made many people visibly affected, but to me it was all more than a trifle unreal. I never believe in sacrificing the worthy for the worthless, and that is what Sister Anne is always trying to do. It may be beautifully touching, but it exasperates me.

"The Chocolate Soldier," at the Lyric.

The much-talked-of "unauthorised parody" of Mr. Bernard Shaw's "Arms and the Man" has proved a pronounced success; indeed, there seems to be no reason why it should not attain the same popularity here as in New York. The plot of the Shaw play, as a matter of fact, is admirably adapted to comic opera, and Mr. Oscar Straus's setting is delightful. Indeed, good though the play is, it is the music that carries it to success, and after the first night the audience left humming the delightful waltz refrains and in the best of tempers with everything and everybody. Mr. C. H. Workman has an excellent part as the Swiss soldier, who escapes by appealing to the feelings of a Bulgarian maiden, and the first act in Nadina's boudoir is exceedingly funny. All the women of the household—mother, daughter, and daughter's cousin are weary for the sight of a man, and the worn out and sleepy refugee is shielded, protected, and finally lulled to sleep while the women sing a trio. The play follows the Shaw comedy very closely, though none of the original dialogue is used, and never for once does the humour or interest wane. Miss Constance Drever sings charmingly as the susceptible Nadina, and Miss Elsie Spain works hard as the cousin Mascha, while Mr. Roland Cunningham's fine tenor voice is of excellent value in the part of the "heroic" Bulgarian major who led a gallant charge because his horse ran away with him! Also Mr. Tom A. Shale and Mr. Lempriere Pringle as a Bulgarian colonel and sergeant respectively do excellent work. "The Chocolate Soldier" is a genuine comic opera, beautifully staged and mounted, and it is genuinely funny without any irrelevant "turns" or irritating comedian's business. It marks a step in the right direction, and the enthusiasm of its reception shows that there is a public for good light opera. But Mr. Oscar Straus's score is the great attraction. It is light, charming, admirably orchestrated, and full of melody, and I doubt if any one could have given greater value to the libretto. I ought to say, by the way, that the book in the first instance is by Messrs. Bernauer and Jacobson, and that it has been "Englished" by Mr. Stanislaus Stange.

"The Man from Mexico," at the Strand.

Mr. Stanley Cooke has opened the Strand (née Waldorf) with that mad and merry farce, "The Man From Mexico," by H. A. du Souchet. I saw this play a year or two since at the Coronet, and remember being very much amused with the troubles of poor Benjamin Fitzhugh when he finds his night out spoiled by the police raiding the haunt of gaiety where he is spending his time unknown to his wife, as he thinks. The subsequent troubles arise out of his endeavouring to explain an enforced absence from home by saying that he has been to Mexico. The prison scene is very funny, and Mr. Cooke, ably assisted by Mr. George Giddens and a good company, gets all the fun possible out of the embroglio. It is all wild old-fashioned farce, but there is a public for honest farce just as there is next door at the Aldwych for honest melodrama.

SPORT.

RACING NOTES.

THE successive withdrawals of Neil Gow, Greenback, Charles O'Malley, and Cardinal Beaufort from the St. Leger considerably reduced the expected field, but the race excited great interest at the finish. There had been all kinds of mysterious reports about Swynford, and some of his Newmarket admirers appeared to have lost their faith in him to a considerable extent. Lord Derby's colt went badly in the betting, for 9 to 2 was offered against him at the start, whereas 3 to 1 had been previously taken. I had expected Swynford to win the St. Leger ever since his success at Liverpool in July, but had feared that he might be beaten for lack of a strong pace. However, Nankeen made the running most successfully for Bronzino, and the pace was good from the start. There was a splendid finish, and my own opinion is that if there had been another twenty yards to go Bronzino would have won.

I wrote as follows concerning the winner on August 10, and there is nothing to add:—

> Swynford was wisely withdrawn from his two-year-old engagements last season after he had been beaten for the Exeter Stakes at the Newmarket First July Meeting, and this judicious policy has answered splendidly. He was well galloped before Epsom, and he would have come very near winning the Derby but for his being struck into and seriously injured. I predicted that Swynford would win a race at Ascot for which he did not start, but which was carried off by a stable companion. As he could not have entirely recovered from the effects of his Epsom mishap, his performance in winning the Hardwicke Stakes was a remarkably good one, and a horse which stays the Swinley course at Ascot may be trusted to achieve the St. Leger distance. Swynford is a very fine colt and still capable of much improvement.

Mr. George Lambton deserves to be heartily congratulated on his admirable management of Swynford, and F. Wootton rode a very fine race. Lord Derby's colt has only one other engagement this season, which is the Liverpool St. Leger, of £700, on November 9, and he will no doubt start for that race, as the horses engaged are a most moderate lot. Marajax was withdrawn when the minor forfeit was declared. Next season Swynford is in the Princess of Wales Stakes at the Newmarket First July Meeting, when he can again meet Lemberg, who would have 3 lb. the worst of the weights. In the Jockey Club Stakes, three months later, they would meet at 2 lb. Swynford is in the Rous Memorial and Hardwicke Stakes at Ascot, the Eclipse Stakes at Sandown Park (he would meet Lemberg at even weights), and the Atlantic Stakes at the Liverpool July Meeting Lord Derby's colt might meet Bayardo in the Hardwicke Stakes.

Bronzino confirmed the accuracy of the Grand Prix running by defeating Lemberg, and I expect that Mr. J. de Rothschild's colt was the best stayer in the field. Odds were betted on Lemberg at the finish, and there was some heavy plunging on the favourite. It has been over and over again asserted that the Derby winner's ignominious exhibition at Longchamps "must be ignored," but no good reason has ever been given for disregarding that form. Lemberg has been most sedulously written up, but there has really been nothing in his career (nor in that of Bayardo) to excite enthusiasm in any rational being. He was beaten by Neil Gow in the Two Thousand, and he was "all out" to beat Greenback in the Derby. His hollow defeat in the Grand Prix was a blow to the gushing ganders who had been eulogising him as a flier of the very highest class, and then came his dead-heat at Sandown Park with Neil Gow. It certainly seems to me, however, that Lemberg has been preposterously overworked, and the colt has not been given a fair chance. It was a great mistake to start him for the Eclipse Stakes so soon after his Longchamps race, and with his St. Leger engagement in prospect. Maher has been overwhelmed with invectives, and he must be quite surprised to find himself so abused, as a crack jockey is scarcely ever mentioned in the press except to be magnified. He failed to get through, but it is highly probable that Lemberg was by that time played out. I have always considered the Manton colt to be a non-stayer, and probably a mile and a-half is the length of his tether, but he might have done better if he had been more judiciously managed. A horse cannot be expected to win the St. Leger which has run severe races for the Two Thousand, the Derby and the Eclipse Stakes, besides fulfilling engagements at Ascot and at Longchamps, all in the space of four months. Lemberg can have had no rest since he was put into training for his three-year-old engagements early in the spring, and last season he started for seven races, six of which he won.

Lemberg has nothing much to beat in the Jockey Club Stakes unless Neil Gow can be got to the post in tolerable form. This rich race would be a good thing for Charles O'Malley if he were all right, as he has a 9 lb. breeding allowance. Duke Michael must have a good chance, as he will be receiving 25 lb. from Lemberg.

There had been a perfect cataract of the most horrid nonsense about Winkipop because she has won several races from moderate opponents. Mr. Astor's filly had discovered herself to be a non-stayer at Epsom, and I wrote as follows after her race at Stockton, over which a most elaborate noise was raised: "An animal defeats a few wretched crocks in a race of ten furlongs, and the public are at once assured that 'she is bound to finish in the first flight' in one of the great races of the year, the distance being an extra half-mile, with a much more severe course, and opponents of incomparably superior class." This was the more commonsense view, but the gullish herd were misled by the laudatory brayings of certain writers, and Winkipop started at 10 to 1, just half the odds which were to be had about Bronzino, whose public form was vastly superior when considered in relation to such a race as the St. Leger, inasmuch as he was certain to stay the course. Winkipop was a great tip for a place, and ridiculously short odds were taken about her. I plumped for Rosedrop for the Oaks, but it was absurd infatuation to expect her to win last week's race. The colts are not a grand lot, but the fillies are exceedingly moderate. The Russian candidate —Ksiaze Pan—ran respectably, and he would have done better on heavy going. Wolfe Land and the Irish colt, William Cope, both failed to stay. Swynford is still capable of much improvement, and he may develop more stamina than he is at present endowed with, but in last week's field the only starter which can at present be justly described as a good stayer is Bronzino. The winner is a grandly bred colt, being by John o'Gaunt (by Isinglass out of La Flêche) out of Canterbury Pilgrim (by Tristan out of Pilgrimage). Every one must regret that Swynford's breeder did not live to see his colt win the St. Leger, as there never was an owner of racehorses more truly popular or more highly esteemed than the late Lord Derby.

The running at Doncaster fully justifies the opinion expressed in Truth last week, "Whatever may be the result of to-day's race, I am disposed to think that the winner is much favoured in the absence of Nuage from the field. If the Grand Prix winner had been engaged at Doncaster he could have beaten all the Engish lot." It is obvious that, judging from Bronzino's running in the St. Leger Nuage would have won easily. The second horse is now favourite for the Cesarewitch his weight being 7 st. 12 lb. There have been dismal disasters in past years, when backers have relied implicitly on the Doncaster form when dealing with the Cesarewitch and Cambridgeshire. How very often the second and third horses in the St. Leger have been made favourites for one or other of these handicaps, with the result that they finished nowhere at Newmarket! Doodles who rush on Bronzino for the Cesarewitch will probably have substantial reason for deploring their rash impetuosity.

I predicted that Pietri would win the Champagne Stakes, but it was all that Mr. L. de Rothschild's could do to beat Wrinkler by a head. There was no excuse for Pietri, as he got off well in front. I am afraid this colt's racing career will not be a long one, as at Doncaster he did not appear to run game, while after the race he showed temper. He probably needs a rest. Pietri is engaged in the Rous Memorial Stakes at the Newmarket First October Meeting, and he has accepted for the £3,000 race at Kempton Park a week later, but the most prudent policy would be to reserve the colt for the Middle Park Plate. There had been thirty-six acceptances for the Champagne Stakes, but only four horses started. Cellini ran very badly, and it is evident that he is no flier. Mr. Neumann was lucky in winning the £5,000 stake at Sandown Park with so moderate a colt. Wrinkler is still capable of much improvement, and he ought to make a very useful three-year-old unless he becomes a roarer. He is certainly thick winded. The Duke of Portland's colt is also in the Middle Park Plate, which bids fair to be a most interesting race. Wrinkler looks like winning the Boscawen Post Stakes of £1,000 at the Newmarket First October Meeting.

Highness and Shikaree were both heavily backed for the Great Yorkshire Handicap, but Apache won very cleverly at the finish from Pure Gem, to the consternation of his numerous backers for the Cesarewitch. Apache certainly did not appear to have much chance on his late form, as he ran wretchedly in the Ebor Handicap, and also at Goodwood. It was predicted, however, that Apache would win a good handicap later on in the season when he had come into form, and the Cesarewitch was generally pitched upon as the race for which he would go. He is a really good stayer, but he requires to be ridden by a strong and resolute jockey. Lagos was a strong tip from Newmarket for this race, but he ran very badly indeed.

I gave a plumper for the Dame d'Or colt for the Tattersall Sale Stakes, and he won very easily indeed. This was a really good thing; it was a wonder to find 6 to 4 so freely offered against Mr. Whitney's colt. There was vigorous fielding for Tullibardine, who ought to win a good race in the course of the autumn. I was also right in predicting that Black Potts would win the Rous Plate, for which race Mary the Second was a general tip, as Lord Falmouth's filly was said to be much in front of Lady's Mantle, his winner at Derby. However, the Kingsclere filly had no chance with Black Potts. There were thirty-nine acceptances for the Rous Plate, but only five started, and 20 to 1 was offered bar the two favourites, which finished first and second. Mary the Second will very likely win a race at Newmarket during the autumn.

On Friday there was the "good card" for backers which has so often led plungers to perdition, and on the present occasion it proved a ruinous will-o'-the-wisp, as not a single favourite won during the afternoon, and the supposed "certainties" were ruthlessly upset. There was some heavy gambling over Bachelor's Double for the Cup and Rosedrop for the Park Hill Stakes. In the Cup the favourite could not give 21lb to Bronzino, and after the running of Mr. J. de Rothschild's horse in the St. Leger I did not see how Bachelor's Double could possibly be a good thing at the weights. The only chance was that Bronzino might be stale after his severe race on Wednesday. There was a wretched pace for over a mile, and it would be imprudent to attach much importance to the form, as Bachelor's Double is merely a tiptop handicap horse. The easy defeat of Rosedrop by Yellow Slave was another crash for backers. It was much against the Oaks winner that she was obliged to make her own running, and Sir William Bass would have been better advised if he had reserved his mare for this race, which, however, would have been a good thing for Winkipop if she had been kept for it. The last two races of the day consummated the disasters of backers, as neither winner carried any money. Shampoo had been a "red hot" tip, and was regarded as a reliable "retriever," but he was beaten some distance from home.

The officials at Doncaster were most severely and justly criticised on Friday morning for the amazing imbecility of their arrangement of the card. If they desired to cause the greatest possible inconvenience to all classes of visitors their object was entirely achieved. It was the extremity of folly, on the final day of the meeting, to place the Doncaster Stakes in the middle of the card, as it was known that this race would either end in an uninteresting match or would collapse altogether, and it ought, of course, to have been the last event of the day. The Prince of Wales' Nursery should have been one of the early races, instead of being the last but one, and it was the same with the Westmoreland Welter Handicap, which ended the meeting, as it was an event which was sure to bring out a considerable feld. It may be hoped that the stewards expressed their statement on the subject to the blundering officials in language suitable to the occasion and the offence

There will be racing next week at Lingfield Park, Windsor, Pontefract, and Newbury. The best sport will be at Newbury on Friday and Saturday, but no "cracks" are engaged in the weight-for-age stakes.

The Prince Edward Handicap at Manchester on Saturday is not likely to bring out a large field. Wolfe Land is a strong Newmarket tip, and Mr. Ralli's colt ran well in the St. Leger, and I expect he will win over this course. Electra is remarkably well handicapped, but she is also leniently weighted in the Cambridgeshire on her best form, so she may be reserved for Newmarket.

CRICKET—LAWN TENNIS—GOLF.

A good many people who are by no means young await the statistics of the year's cricket with far more interest than the average citizen does the monthly Board of Trade returns. The statistics of county cricket, which the Sportsman published last week, were more clearly understood than the meanings of the returns of exports and imports, judged by some of the rubbish that was written about the latter. Now, the weather this year has been simply vile, and yet for the first time the season has been gone through without a match being wholly prevented by rain. In previous years never less than three have suffered in this way. This result may be due to the waterproof coverings of the wickets, but it probably shows that things are not always as bad as we imagine them to be. Having regard to the new rule which treats drawn games as equivalent to losses, so far as the championship table is concerned, it is interesting to note that out of the 176 matches played (from this number are excluded matches abandoned owing to the death and funeral of King Edward), forty-three were drawn. This is a smaller percentage than last year, when fifty-nine out of 178 were drawn games. But only in about 20 per cent. of this year's games was the draw due to heavy scores. In the other matches the weather caused an indefinite result. It would be erring in favour of the new rule to say that a quarter of the games were drawn owing to the slowness of the game or the heaviness of the score. Wherefore this year, at all events, the new rule has resulted in the weather making draws count as losses in the majority of cases. However, Lancashire introduced the rule, and the other counties accepted it. Under the old rule Lancashire would have been second to Kent, and they are fourth, and Middlesex, who are third, would have been fifth, and Surrey third. Leicester are tenth, and they would have been fourteenth. And Leicester deserve their position, for the county has beaten both Surrey and Kent, and shown the glorious uncertainties of cricket in no uncertain fashion. Within one week they lost and won against Surrey, and with only a match intervening they won and lost against Kent. They lost at Tonbridge and won at the Oval. What a glorious higgledepiggledy cricket is, and yet people want to reduce the championship to five places of decimals. The highest score was 607 for six wickets by Kent against Gloucester, and the lowest was 41 made by Middlesex at the Oval against Surrey. For the first time in county cricket history a side set 400 runs to win in the fourth innings went in and made them. Lancashire did this, first against Notts

INCORPORATED A.D. 1720.

HEAD OFFICE

Governor: SIR NEVILE LUBBOCK, K.C.M.G.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

FIRE, LIFE, SEA, ACCIDENTS, MOTOR CAR, PLATE GLASS, BURGLARY, EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY, FIDELITY GUARANTEES.

The Corporation will act as TRUSTEE OF WILLS AND SETTLEMENTS. EXECUTOR OF WILLS.

Special Terms granted to ANNUITANTS when health is impaired.

Full Prospectus on application to the Secretary, and then against Hants, when the ultimate loser had applied the closure rule. That was the only occasion on which the closurers, to coin a word, failed to win. The closure was applied in fifty-three matches and thirty-one wins resulted. There were 123 individual scores of over a century, as against 119 in the previous year. The highest individual score was 234 by A. Hartley for Lancashire; fifty-three players made the minimum, a pair of spectacles. From this list a fine team, five of whom figure more than once in the century list, can be compiled. As a batting nucleus there would be E. Humphries (Kent), Hirst, Thompson, Gillingham, Plum Warner, McGahey, Langdon; and there is a plethora of bowling, Blythe, Fielder, Fairservice, Dennett, Kinneir, Leach, Shipman (of Leicester), and others. They would probably beat any team selected from the century list. Hirst and Tarrant have each taken over a hundred wickets and scored over a thousand runs for their respective counties, Yorkshire and Middlesex; and Smith, of Surrey, outdistances all the bowlers with 215 wickets at an average just over twelve and a-half runs for a wicket. And so farewell to the county cricket season begun in hope but continued in despair, for the finances of many are not what they should be.

Head Office: ROYAL EXCHANGE, LONDON, E.C. West End Branch: 44, PALL MALL, S.W.

* * * * * *

Comparatively fine and warm weather has favoured the Brighton Lawn Tennis Tournament. There have been the usual huge entries, and the management has been excellent, and so has the play. Some of the finest play seen this year was in the fourth round of the men's singles. At Brighton the holder of the championship has to play through, and he does not stay out until the final, as he does at Wimbledon. R. B. Powell was the holder, and Captain A. W. Davies, who has a genius for the game that makes one regret that he cannot give more time to it, beat Powell fairly easily. The great match was between Crawley and Ritchie, who was a hot favourite for the final, as Wilding, the present champion, was the only person who had beaten him on a grass court this year. But it was the case of the St. Leger over again—Ritchie could not stay. Age must tell against one at last. The favourite took the first set, and the second was tremendous. Crawley led at 6—5, until at the twenty-first game Ritchie led by 11—10, only to be beaten by 13—11 games. In the next set Ritchie was tiring, and yet he led at 4—1. Then Crawley pulled himself together and went for the net, and won three games off the reel, dropping only three points. Ritchie was not done with. He won the next game love, and then he was beaten 7—5 after a match which will be historical for many years in lawn tennis.

By the way, that Davis Challenge Cup is causing a lot of trouble. It seems likely to stop in Australia. America is not sending a team, as the two best players cannot go. As to the English team, well, the Australians will not give guarantees. Certainly the team would not inspire confidence over here. Its mission would be fruitless, in all human probability. But it was too bad of an Australian sportsman to say there were enough rabbits already in Australia. And yet one could not help smiling. At all events, America determined to export best players or none. The Lawn Tennis Association methods of negotiating these international matters are singularly undignified, and only calculated to bring English tennis into ridicule and contempt. They made a rare muddle over the last American visit. They ask Australia for a certain guarantee. Australia says "Show us the team you propose to send." "Messrs. X. and Y. and Z.," replies the L.T.A. "That's not good enough for a guarantee, but no doubt if they come they will pay their way." Such a snub for the L.T.A., and not at all a pleasant position for the players who had said they would go.

* * * * * *

There were not so many players as usual for the Queen Victoria Jubilee Vase, played for over the old course at St. Andrews by the members of the Royal and Ancient. The plus men held their own, and three of them got into the semi-final. The other player was J. W. Laidlay (seven). Large galleries followed the semi-finalists. R. H. De Montmorency (plus three) was two up on W. E. Fairlie (plus two) at the turn. Weak putting at the tenth and eleventh lost Fairlie both holes, and he was eventually beaten by three and two. Laidlay was three up, with seven to play against Edward Blackwell (plus three). At the Dyke Laidlay was one up, and then a bad pitch shot lost Blackwell the chance of being all square. The home hole was halved in six, Blackwell going into the Burn and Laidlay driving out of bounds. The final was most interesting. The plus man started off by winning the first two holes, but his opponent played up and turned one up after each had thrown away a hole by a shot putt. He won the tenth, but after that Montmorency played fine golf, and won by three and two. It is a thousand pities that the winner's duties at Eton keep him out of the Open and Amateur Championships. At Stoke he holds the record, as he did at Burnham. He has the temperament necessary for a big match. He is superbly accurate with his cleek and iron shots. He has played for England, and he won his match.

* * * * * *

The English Rugby Union lost the rubber in the international matches during their tour in South Africa. But for considerable firmness shown by Mr. Cail, who was managing, the team might have come home without completing its programme. Indeed, unless the South African authorities had yielded, as in fairness they were bound to do, to his request for an interval for rest before the Test match, the team would have come home. Mr. Cail had ordered them to pack up. Just about this time rumours reached England of misbehaviour on the part of the team. It is now said that a bill for £50 for damage done at an hotel by the team was presented to the South African Board for payment. In my experience I have known huge bills presented as the result of a university rag by a football team. Very reprehensible, no doubt. But as the whole matter will be the subject of inquiry by the International Board it will be well to await until its decision is arrived at. One can only hope that all reasonable information will be given to the public.

THE DYNAMICS OF FAST BOWLING.

(By one of our leading county express-merchants on reading a recent article in the Lancet.)

Freud's "complex"? I had never heard its name,
So far as I remember;
Yet I've been an exponent of the same
From May until September!

"Reflex activity"? The term is Greek
To me—sans rhyme or reason.
Yet I've exemplified it every week,
Throughout the cricket season.

I base my run on mathematic lines,
It seems, or very near 'em;
And execute my Spofforth-like designs
By nice dynamic theorem.

I work all out by algebraic sums,
Take care, by schemes well-reckoned,
Leg-energy arm-energy becomes
Just at the psychic second.

Proud me! That I of problems so abstruse
Have been a disentangler!
Proud county mine! Unknowing, to produce
A trundling Senior Wrangler!

TRUTH will be sent weekly to any address in the British Islands for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or £1 9s. 1d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). The subscription to Canada (Thin Edition) is: 7s. 7d. for 3 months; 15s. 2d. for 6 months; £1 11s. 6d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). To the Colonies and Foreign Countries (Thick Edition): 3 months, 8s. 8d.; 6 months, 17s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 15s. 10d. (including Christmas Number). All cheques and P.O.O.s should be made payable to THE MANAGER OF TRUTH, and addressed to Truth Buildings, Carteret Street, London, S.W.

MOTORS AND MOTORING.

THE new motor taxes are now in full force, and it is a case of paying up and looking pleasant or otherwise. It is tolerably evident, however, that further legislation will be required to clear up certain points and to remove various anomalies and injustices. The objectionable classification by group instead of by unit of power ("under 12 h.p.," "under 16 h.p.," and so on) has already been sufficiently dwelt on. Even more hardship is involved in the exacting of the full amount of the new duties from the unfortunate owners of old cars bought four or five years ago when the old scale obtained, and now practically unsaleable, with the burdensome new taxes attached to them. Then there is the case of cars which have been sold between January and June of this year. Is the ex-owner liable to pay up the increased duty on these? Or if he has since purchased a lower-powered car, should he still be assessed on his old one? The authorities—or some of them at least—answer Yes in both cases, and the new rates being payable as from January 1, 1910, there would seem to be no escape from their conclusion.

Still another point has been raised by Earl Russell—always vigilant in these matters—who takes exception to the demand for "particulars of engines of motor-cars," and maintains that this is quite unwarranted by the Act. Unfortunately, the authorities have a nasty knack in these cases of proving that they are right after all, to the confusion of the amateur Pym or Hampden who tries conclusions with them, and I should counsel caution, therefore, on the part of any inclined to play this game, though undoubtedly there are few joys greater than that derived from the discomfiture of a Government department—if you can manage to achieve the feat.

On the principle of being grateful for small mercies, as well as of not looking a gift horse in the mouth, motorists owe thanks to Mr. Harcourt for having raised the speed limit in Hyde Park from ten to twelve miles an hour. But why, when he was about it, did he not go the whole hog and abolish the special park limit altogether? There is not the slightest justification for any special limitations of speed in Hyde Park nowadays. A fair speed is far safer there than in the streets, and, what is more, it is doubtful if any one now wants the restriction maintained. The original regulation was conceived in the interest of fashionable carriage folk. To-day these people all own cars themselves and are inconvenienced rather than benefited by the maintenance of a rule which ought never to have been introduced at all.

For sheer ineptitude it would not be easy to beat some of the suggestions which have been solemnly put forward for the improvement of street locomotion in London by a body calling itself the London Ratepayers' League. One is to the effect that no vehicle or cycle should be allowed to go faster than ten miles an hour. I wonder if the League knows what ten miles an hour actually amounts to. Drivers of horses would object to such a crawl almost as much as drivers of cars. Another suggestion runs: "The bonnets [sic] of all motor vehicles should be provided with a wire screen catcher." But the gem of the list is the following:—

> Drivers should not smoke when on duty, as smoking is dangerous for various reasons, and cigarette smoking especially makes safe driving extremely difficult.

An explanation of this cryptic proviso is kindly furnished:—

> Cigarette smoking by drivers is dangerous, since the smoke is liable temporarily to obliterate the view. With pipes the danger is not so great, since the longer mouthpiece allows the bowl to be on either side of the face instead of immediately in front.

The author—or should it be authoress?—of this manifesto has surely missed his vocation. He should be enlivening the pages of Punch.

Another injustice to Ireland. An English firm is introducing taxis into Dublin, and the jarveys are naturally up in arms. As one eloquent orator put it, "Englishmen had no right to dictate to the citizens of Dublin whether taxicabs should be imported into Ireland to put money into English pockets and beggar Dublin in order to support an English monopoly." One can almost hear the "Hurroos" with which such an eloquent statement of the case was doubtless greeted. The concern expressed for the citizens of Dublin is especially touching. Doubtless, however, they will be able to look after themselves. There will be no compulsion to use the taxis. But one can't help feeling sorry for the jarveys all the same. Dublin without its jaunting cars will not be quite the same. Doubtless, however, the resourceful jarveys will adapt themselves to circumstances in due course. Some, it is stated, are already qualifying as chauffeurs. What is really surprising is that taxis have not made their appearance in Dublin before.

A correspondent writes:—

> In reference to the problem of corners, a much simpler plan than that of masts on cars would be to use signals on the horn, as ships at sea do in a fog. The same signals should be used. For instance, a short blast followed by a long blast to signify "I am going to left," or "I am coming round corner." All cars should have two horns—one low for the town and one loud-toned for country corners and where there is much traffic in towns. The tones should be police regulated. You sometimes think you have a loud enough horn, but in reality it is not loud enough for heavy traffic or in a wind or fog. Besides this, motors travel so quickly. The horn is the best indicator of the presence of someone coming round a corner. I have been in bad corners with powerful cars and never heard the oncoming car at all, although they always swear they hooted.

The writer contradicts himself, since he says in one sentence that the horn is the best indication of danger at corners, and in the next that it is often useless. I myself agree with the latter statement. The only drawback to the horn in the case of corners is that it is so frequently not heard, and what purpose a code of signals would serve I fail to see. If you hear a horn at

"THE GOODRICH AVERAGE."

Mr. BASIL CRUMP, writing in the Field, August 27th, says:—

"The wearing qualities of Goodrich tyres have been strikingly proved by some tests we have been making during the present year. At Easter we placed a set of the rubber-studded non-skids on a 14-20 h.p. Excelsior car, which won a cup at Brooklands at a speed of sixty miles an hour. Since then we have been running these tyres regularly on the road in all our testing work and general travelling, the mileage now amounting to close on 3,000 on all sorts of roads. Not a single puncture has been sustained, and the wear inevitably occasioned on the studded treads by the track work at the beginning has not been increased to any marked degree by the subsequent road work. These results confirm the good reports we had received from certain firms who use these tyres among-st others in their car testing. Not only are the materials first class, but also the vulcanisation seems to be unusually good, so that the various layers of rubber are very closely incorporated with the fabric, the whole forming a highly resilient and tough cover. The grey inner tubes are made of a very fine quality of rubber which stands a great amount of stretch, and therefore gives long and satisfactory service."

"ASK THE ROAD"
about
Goodrich Tyres
Manufactured by
The B. F. GOODRICH Co., Ltd.,
7, Snow Hill, London, E.C.

all that is surely sufficient, but it is the rarest possible occurrence to do this—when you are in a car yourself. With pedestrians it is different, of course, but that is another matter. The only safe course at present is to take all corners with unlimited care and caution. But eventually the right remedy will be adopted, and we shall cut down the hedges.

A vivid notion of the extent of the motor trade in America may be gathered from some particulars which have been published in connection with the visit to this country of Mr. H. M. Leland (head of the famous Cadillac Company). Among other things it is stated that the output of this company is no fewer than forty completely finished 4-cylinder cars per day, or over 12,000 a year, and it is hoped to treble even this output within the next three years. It is stated further that our total output in this country can be matched in several instances by single American firms, though this seems a rather tall order. The Cadillac enterprise alone is said to support over 30,000 persons.

Mr. Leland himself is evidently a man of original ideas. Thus he believes in letting anyone, including his rivals, know anything they wish about his factory methods, on the ground that it is to the advantage of the industry as a whole to have productive methods in general improved, while another of his theories is that it is cheaper to make good cars than bad ones. "The more accurate your methods, the less time there is spent on working to make a fit. It is not only that you save enormous expenditure in the assembling shops, but that your products are not spoilt by being made to fit with a file." Another of his maxims is "Don't make sharp bargains with anybody. Everybody must have a profit, and a good one, or you will not be getting goods that you can absolutely rely upon." And on the same principle he argues, "Don't cut wages. Try instead to increase the product per man by employing better methods and better machinery from year to year."

WOMAN.

TO HOBBLE OR TO WOBBLE?

THAT is the question; whether it is wiser in your dress to suffer the slings and narrows of outrageous fashion or to take arms against the decrees of Paris, and, by opposing, end them? Shall women fail in their allegiance to this great god of their fashionable idolatry, or continue to worship blindly, even lamely? Is the British woman bound in bondage? Is thy servant a slave that she should do this thing—that she should walk with mincing steps and shrunken hips to the throne of grace, there swearing fealty on unbendable knee, with head bowed beneath the burden of a monster hat, to receive dispensation for further sins against the canons of good taste, convenience, and common-sense?

It has been publicly asserted, writ even in large letters, that the powers ordain the circumference of the skirt shall be limited to a yard and a-half, that turbans shall plume themselves upon a height of 12 ins., and that the feminine form shall be tightly fitted from neck to ankle, its abundancies and deficiencies alike exposed to the fierce light of criticism which is as definitely invited as it is definitely disregarded. So it has been proclaimed; but should women meekly accept the conditions because they are assured by a few assistants who minister to their dressy desires that such is the will of their sartorial sovereign, France? I doubt it, like the carpenter, and I would further suggest that England and not France is to blame for the absurdities which beset feminine clothes.

The initiated are well aware that during half-seasons the Parisian authorities tentatively put forth ideas, novelty being essential in commercial creation to avert the danger that frocks should bear the burden of two seasons' wear. These new ideas in embryo are "tried upon the dogs"; they are submitted to the inferior buyers, who always arrive early, and seize upon the latest suggestions, and in an excess of zeal order their models to express these faithfully, even to exaggerate them. The styles duly appear in London, invariably being welcomed with surprise distempered by scorn; then vowing they will ne'er consent, women are speedily tempted to their purchase. The little more, and how much it is! what worlds away from the original intention of the artist who first uttered the conceit! English women caricature a new notion to death, and during its short lifetime English mankind points a finger of shame and blame at the country of its origin, where it might be observed by the observer it rules under very modified circumstances, if at all.

The experienced know that many fashions are prepared in Paris specially for the English market, where, it is recognised, any bait is greedily swallowed, absurdity is no drawback to enthusiasm, and anything with the label "Parisian" upon it will secure patronage. The imitative faculty is a common gift. Many sinners fall by the way of the sheep walk.

Every woman should realise that in dress she should make her own laws; she should follow the prevailing mandates at a becoming distance, and impress her personality upon her gowns. She should study her charms and want of them before she imposes upon herself any rules. But, when she does all this, the modish millennium will have arrived, and the cult of costume count, as it should, amongst the fine arts.

It is impossible to anticipate any great costume crisis when we could lock out foreign labour, for our national slowness and lack of æsthetic perception are incapable of realising the beautiful opportunities within reach. It is likely that the French may be intoxicated with the exuberance of their own fancy, and impressed by their belief in our gullible simplicity; but if England were to supply England's fashions, as many vain optimists and tariff reformers have suggested, our tale of dress would be considerably duller and less eventful. Eugenics must be considered, and the wit of the Frenchman is a most desirable element in the making of the world of costume. The union of like with like leads to degeneration and not to improvement. We want the blood of Paris infused into the old stock to create new stock. Our clothes need the inspiration of France, and our appreciation is amongst the most pregnant excuses for our intimacy. All the true dress artists of London, and there are not a few, adapt and control any foreign excesses to meet their clients' needs. And it must be conceded that their quarterly visits to the best ateliers of Paris—where they keep the real secrets of the prison houses well guarded from any but the worthy—provide an impetus to our textile industries we could ill dispense with.

We accuse the French of inciting us to extravagance, but must acknowledge that prodigality to women is a habit as alluring as flying to birds, or killing to men. A natural taste for economy is rare, though it may be fostered by intensive culture in the cold bed of necessity. The ordinary representative Englishwoman is doubtless a culprit, inasmuch as she will hearken and attend to the lightest whispers of Lutetia and hasten to acclaim them gospel. The "wait and see" policy of famous utterance might well be preached amongst the wise doctrines of dress for those unable to afford the cost of superior skill and judgment. The multitude, and it is the many who err, should inspect all, but accept or reject with discrimination and deliberation, remembering ever that there is a providence which has shaped their ends, their beginnings, and their middles, and that these should be earnestly studied in the interest of those privileges of beauty granted to women to hold and to glorify.

Success may be achieved only when the entente cor-

SCRUBB & CO., Ltd., caution the public against the many injurious imitations of SCRUBB'S AMMONIA that are being offered, and draw attention to their having affixed the signature of SCRUBB & CO. to each bottle, without which none is genuine.

ideale is well established between fashion and elegance, the individual intervening. Then would there be no need for a hobble in the gait towards grace, nor a wobble in the worship of novelty.

EDUCATION AT LARGE.

My recent articles on various kinds of schools have moved so many of my readers to correspondence, to say nothing of indignation, that I feel some reply is due to them. Space, however, unfortunately prevents me from selecting more than three letters to represent the rest. One correspondent, herself a schoolmistress, takes violent exception to my articles, "Pupil, Pedagogue, and Parent" and "The Seaside School," which she defends as follows, with perhaps more fervour than reason:—

Sir,—My attention has been called to a remarkable article, entitled "Pupil, Pedagogue, and Parent," in your issue of July 5. As no one seems to have made any answer to the charges brought by your contributor against schoolmistresses, and as another curious effusion, "The Seaside School" (presumably from the same pen), appears in this week's Truth, I trust that you will kindly insert my protest against this wholesale condemnation of the methods, and almost of the morals, of a hard-working and earnest class. There may be schools "run on the 'nice friend' system," and others whose pupils "bathe, take gentle exercise in the form of work, and inhale ozone." But it is utterly unjust to make such a sweeping statement as "The very advantage of the seaside school over its inland fellows makes on the whole for a less satisfactory education." This is nothing short of a libel upon all seaside schools.

There are in every profession people who care for their work only for the sake of the profit it brings. Is it just to judge a class by a few members, and those the least creditable? Headmistresses nowadays are not "academically inexperienced." They are women who read, think, and are in every way "up to date." Without such cultivation, they cannot prepare their girls for life. There are many whose whole lives have been spent in fitting themselves, often against heavy odds, for their chosen career, and in the faithful discharge of the duties they have undertaken. They find their reward in the joy of seeing the indifferent become earnest, the lazy grow diligent, the hoyden develop into the woman.

Surely the end of all true education is not to prepare girls for examinations, but to awaken in them a love of learning; not so much to impart knowledge, as to develop in the best possible way the powers which, varying in kind and in degree, are yet latent in every normal human being.

Such an end, kept consistently and faithfully in view in the training of a girl, will fit her to take her place in the world, and to fill it, be it high or low, honourably and successfully.—I am, Sir, yours truly,

Isabel H. Payne (B.A., London).

Calleva School, Folkestone.

Far be it from me to libel either seaside schools or the "earnest hard-working class" which conducts them. That headmistresses have "self-culture" I doubt not. Rather is this part of my complaint against them; nor do I quarrel with my correspondent's educational ideal, which is more or less my own. But hard work and earnestness by no means always imply that knowledge of the world essential in preparing girls to meet the world and make their place in it; too often, indeed, they militate, by their very exaggeration, against a sense of proportion which should be applied as much to fervour and gush as to history or hockey. Culture, too, is an unctuous word, and responsible for most of the shams, literary, moral, or artistic, which are the plague of present-day ideals. As to the seaside school, I can only repeat my own experience that education is often sacrificed to ozone. I should, however, attribute this largely to the parent whose demand creates the supply, and in no way to my correspondent whose ire I have been unfortunate enough to arouse.

Another correspondent is really deserving of my thanks in that he himself provides me with an answer to his objections. It is quite true that we make a difference in our treatment of colts and calves, but my correspondent might note for future use that colts and fillies have about equal opportunities:—

Dear Sir,—The writer of the article on "Co-Education" in your issue of September 7 ignores altogether, either purposely or because he over-generalises, the most insurmountable objection to them. He—or she—forgets that boys are not girls, and vice versa. We do not break and train colts along the same lines in which we rear calves, because we do not expect them to do the same work, yet there are even greater divergencies between the life-missions of boy and girl. There are still some of us—a waning band, it is true—who do not wish that our daughters should become "perfect gentlemen" and our sons "real ladies," and who accordingly avoid co-education schools as we would the devil.—Yours, etc., Senex.

Here is just one more letter:—

Dear Sir,—I should like to express my thanks for your outspoken comment in your article "Public Schools" on the attitude of the average parent towards the daughters they have made a point of educating. I was sent to one of the best public girls' schools in the country, and later to Oxford, where I and my brother took an honours degree in the same division. It was considered quite natural that he should go in for the Indian Civil Service, while I had not even the flowers to do. Instead I was expected, during the seven years that young men resisted my "allurements," to dance and dine, visit and motor, as though life contained nothing else. Luckily I married, and happily, but I have firmly determined that my daughter shall never have the ignominy of depending on chance for her happiness.—Faithfully yours, A Married Woman.

I must thank "A Married Woman" for her tribute, of which I do not feel altogether deserving. There is after all something to be said for the parental point of view, and a great many women who have to work would certainly have been glad of the opportunities she found so irksome. In justice to her parents she will probably admit that the bringing up of a little daughter on a "one and only" system is at least as interesting as being hon. secretary to a suffrage society or practising social reform in the East End.

"Queer Stories" from Truth. Now ready, Series XVI. Price 1s. at all booksellers, and from the Publisher, 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street. "They are one of the wonders of the world, these stories and people are never tired of asking who writes them."—Bystander.

As you go home to-night buy one of these useful

'KOH-I-NOOR'

POCKET PROPELLING PENCILS.

These are the handiest pocket pencils imaginable—fitting cases for the unrivalled "Koh-I-Noor" lead they contain. They are essentially Pencils for Business Men, as they fit snugly in the waistcoat pocket, never require sharpening, and the lead does not slip when writing.

On taking one of these pencils from his pocket the user almost mechanically performs the action necessary to bring up the lead, which, once up, stays up, until the reverse action sends it down again.

Remember, the "Koh-I-Noor" Pocket Propelling pencil is always ready for use, never requires sharpening, does not get out of order.

Made in many styles, and in 2 sizes (4 ins. and 5 ins.). Prices from 9d. upwards. Of Stationers, &c.

"Koh-I-Noor" Pencils—the most perfect pencils made. 17 degrees. 4d. each, or 3/6 by the dozen.

"Aviator" Pencils—outlast three ordinary pencils. 12 degrees. 2d. each, 1/9 per dozen.

"Mephisto"—the ideal Copying Pencil. Splendid for Manifolding. 2d. each.

"Koh-I-Noor" Rubber Bands—highest in quality, longest lasting.

Illustrated List free for the asking from L. & C. Hardtmuth, Koh-I-Noor House, Kingsway, London, W.C.

(Paris, Brussels, Dresden, Milan, Vienna, New York.)

MRS. A.'S DIARY.

Thursday.—Virginia, who with characteristic circumlocution visited Folkestone en route from Cornwall to London, rushed into my room this morning crying: "My kingdom for a hat!"

Of course, she does not possess a kingdom, and I am quite certain she has enough hats, but this is "pretty Fanny's way," and it persuaded me to leave the calm restfulness of an easy chair in front of an embroidery frame set at the right angle to catch the best light. We taxied with deplorable extravagance, even though Virginia nearly broke her neck while tumbling out at each destination in frantic desire to save the ticking twopences.

I urged her in vain to consider the advantages of exercise, suggesting that walking in the West End of town has just now the charm of temptation. But she petulantly protested she was a bitter enemy to the modern idols, fresh air and exercise, and had mainly left Folkestone because there were so many bands, and they played "God Save the King" so often, that she was quite worn out with her upstanding loyalty.

She is an absurd person, but I echoed her just resolution to buy no hat over whose crown a natural osprey waved. Fashion has, however, bowed her head to the cry of the humanitarian, and none of the best models exhibited this; therefore, was my most wise sister's determination easily encouraged. The world is full of new hats, and every carriage seemed to contain a head wearing a model of the mob cap description with a crown of soft ribbon and a brim of kilted petersham. I counted seven of these whilst we were on our travels; but alas! hats whom the multitude love die young! A draped high crown of black miroir velvet, twisted into a bow at one side, with a narrow brim, lined with ivory white satin, falling down over the hair, was a pleasant acquaintance, and another had a crown made of loops of black satin ribbon and a soft upturning brim of mole-coloured velvet. Fountain feathers nod their fronds over crowns of coloured velvet, and Virginia, under my able and patient ciceronage, selected a low, flat velvet hat, with a crown of Indian patterned cretonne and a band of velvet held by a spray of roses formed of silk and tinsel.

Then we went into lunch with Joan, who insisted upon describing Etretat to us at long length. The literary woman has her prosy moments, and phrase-airing is amongst Joan's besetting sins I hate being instructed, and Etretat is too small to merit great efforts to explain it. Joan vows to patronise it again, because the sea thundered into her window so that she could not hear herself write. However, she gave us an excellent lunch, including eggs and American corn in happy union, and a celery and walnut salad with the partridges, and she supplied a definite note of amusement when her maid announced that her usual hairdresser was not able to come but had sent a substitute.

Would Madame have him?

Madame replied: "Yes, but explain to him that I am deaf and dumb."

Saturday.—Sydney sought to secure his position in my good graces by taking me to see Gerald du Maurier act at Wyndham's Theatre. I thoroughly enjoyed the play; not a dull moment in it, and many pregnant with sincere emotion. Gerald du Maurier is a fine actor, and moved us to laughter and to tears as he listed. Lilian Braithwaite plays the erring mother with unerring taste, and wears some delightful clothes. In the first act she has a blue crêpe satin gown with a draped skirt and a very plain cross-over bodice with odd Oriental buttons decorating it down one side, a turn-down collar being at the throat, and some fine lace finishing the sleeves. Over this she has a capital black satin coat lined with blue and gold-edged, with a monster gold threaded tassel dangling decoratively down the back. Her second dress is of old rose satin, again very simple, with ornaments of tarnished gold and silver soutache and some deft touches of velvet in yellow and blue and scarlet. The garden scene she also graces in rose colour, with lace bound at the edges with hems of satin, a long stole of lace and satin being down one side of the skirt, while a bunch of pink roses and pale green leaves is tucked into the belt. The grey charmeuse of her saddest hour is decked with silver and embroidered in grey.

Charmeuse dress worn by Miss Lilian Braithwaite in "Nobody's Child."

In the intervals I noted amongst the audience that the curl has returned to favour; every little and big head were running over with them. Bandeaux and jewelled combs were rampant; and careful carelessness was much studied, even to the pitch of untidiness. And alas! the barber had evidently just "left off shaving" before a man on my immediate right had called upon him. His cornflower-blue chin distressed my æsthetic sense, I was further vexed by the ill-matching of a lady's front and back hair. She should have questioned, "How are my front waves graying?" and bought her coil accordingly. Later, we supped at the Savoy, and met various members of various worlds in excellent frocks. I realised that on fashion's field all colours are fighting for supremacy, and black and blue are winning. They have often been associated with successful pugilism.

Monday.—A letter from my dear friend M. announces a novelty discovered at Aix. This should be transported to every well-conducted bridge club—the Cleveland please note. She writes:—"None of the women here wear large hats when playing cards, but all adopt mob caps with velvet or ribbon crowns and lace brims. These are most becoming, a little hair all round is visible, and with frocks the effect is attractively like an old picture. To be a young woman and look like an old picture is amongst my highest ideals in clothes and conduct. One capital specimen of cap is of white lace threaded with gold, and another has a crown of satin and a frill of lace. What do you say to heading a crusade in favour of the like at matinées!"

I say "Yes." I have always said that the vexed question of hats at matinées could be easily and becomingly solved if women would only wear the right hats. Yet this week I met a zealot who amused me vastly by having cut all the crown from her toque, and wearing merely a fur brim. A funny joke she looked.

Turbans for evening use are amongst the revivals in French circles, and these for the most part are of gauze or golden tissue, with a group of feathers at one side. They accord well with the narrow, tight frocks which are enjoying continued patronage, and they add considerably to the sum of extravagances which are the dear delight of our dressy days. "Don't prose," said Nita, when I mentioned the latter fact gravely to her this morning, after it had been born in upon me from information privately received that my bank balance was not in the bank's favour. "Preaching down a daughter's dress account will never become you," continued my impertinent young friend, and yet I invited her to spend the week-beginning with me, and we took an express train to a secluded spot in Wales, and had occasion to remember Owen Hall's description of express trains: "Those which stop outside all the stations instead of within."

And now I am at Capel Curig, where it is raining heavily, and I am hoping to get home without being compelled to ascend Snowdon. It is a bourne whence few travellers return without being wet through, and my mountaineering ardour is easily damped. And why did I leave London? Lured by twenty-four hours' sunshine; and suns were deceivers ever.

---

Mrs. A.'s Letter-Box.

I have been persuaded to counsel through these columns all wise women who send me their dress difficulties to solve. But their inquiries must be clearly addressed to Mrs. A., "Truth" Office, Carteret Street, S.W.

Phlox.—The blouse to wear with that coat and skirt would be best made of a green-grounded paisley veiled in brown ninon; and to make it specially becoming I should insert at the neck a transparent collar-band and small round yoke of cream-coloured net. The hat should have a brown felt or velvet brim, and a tightly stretched crown of paisley with a narrow band of brown velvet or petersham at the base of this. You could also use paisley on the revers of the coat, braiding these over with green or brown braid. I think the effect would be extremely good. Many of the new coats are short, but the long ones are still acceptable, and if these are very becoming to you I should advise you to remain faithful to them.

Mousley.—Musquash coats are as popular as ever, and many of them are trimmed with flounces of fox or flounces of skunk. Personally, I prefer them plain, and I go always to the International Fur Store, 163, Regent Street, for they fit their furs as smartly as cloth. It is early days yet to see any models of fur hats, but undoubtedly the loose, full turban lends itself to fur, and the pendant tassel at one side could be of dull gold. Thank you for your letter.

Mac.—Make a princess dress, not quite tight, of the velveteen that you have, and over it a tunic of ninon to match, hemmed with bugle trimming of the same colour. The yoke and sleeves of this tunic should be transparent, the collarband also, and hemmed with the bugles. The sleeves should be cut in one with the tunic and rather loose. Beneath the tunic, of course, the velveteen would be sleeveless and cut round back and front. I should suggest that you supplied this underdress with ficelle-coloured lace sleeves and yoke. This would be revealed through the ninon tunic, which you could dispense with when you wanted to create a change, and then round the shoulders you should place a deep shaped collar of lace like the yoke, with long ends on either side of the front tasselled with the violet bugles. I hope you quite understand this collar would be a separate thing, and would only be put on when you do not wear the tunic, whereas the lace yoke and sleeves would remain permanently attached to the velveteen and would show through the tunic.

Sykes-Josephine's "Haute Nouveauté" Corsets are ideal; being built on anatomical principles, an elegant and graceful contour is created. Mesdames are specialists for Fashionable, Surgical, Gestation, Restoring, Obesity, and Hunting Corsets. Only address, 220, Regent Street, London. 'Phone: 6345 Gerrard.

New Fiction.

Mr. Bernard Capes has given us a story in "Jemmy Abercraw" (Methuen, 6s.), which has all the qualities which give such distinction to his writing. It is a story with a historical background, of the year 1760, when the Jacobites still cherished the hope of the return of the Stuarts, and it has for its central figure that popular figure of romance, a gentleman of the road. Jemmy Abercraw is, indeed, in spite of his profession, a true gentleman, and one can understand why Kitty Clare, who at one time imagined that he was the real Prince, when vouchsafed a glance at the genuine Stuart, had a preference for the sham. Time was when Mr. Capes was rather apt to overlay his narrative with too great a number of highly coloured words and phrases, but that day has passed, to his readers' advantage. Now his stories run freely and surely to the dénouement, while in his power of visualising a situation, and presenting it dramatically, there are few if any writers to-day who can equal him.

But Mr. Bernard Capes will not be able to claim a monopoly of the highwayman. There is a very pretty figure of one in Wild Will, the hero—and heroine—of "The Romantic Road," by Guy Rawlence (Fisher, Unwin, 6s.). It is true that so soon as it is realised that the Wild Will who terrorises the countryside is Mistress Julia Vane, who has taken to the road in order to gratify the cupidity of a miserly father and to save herself being sold to a brutal lover, both the highwayman and the lady become a little incredible. But such is the briskness of Mr. Rawlence's narrative, so fast does he dash from adventure to adventure, that it is only at the end that you pause to question his psychology, and perhaps for those who adventure on the romantic road psychology is not the object of their quest.

There can be no fault to find with the psychology of the characters in "The Charm," by Alice Perrin (Methuen, 6s.). Mark Rennard is a type of the young

SUPERIOR FURS
are obtainable at
The International Fur Store
AT MODERATE PRICES.

New Designs in
EVENING WRAPS and OPERA CLOAKS,
VISITING COATS,
CARRIAGE and TRAVELLING COATS,
made in various Furs.

A Large Stock of
STOLES, PELERINES, SCARFS, TIES, and MUFFS,
In Russian Sable, Sable-coloured Marten, all kinds of Foxes, Skunk, Fisher, Chinchilla, Musquash, Ermine, and the New Russian Silver Musquash, ready for immediate wear.

ONLY ADDRESS—
163 & 165, Regent Street, W.

Englishman who goes out to India in the belief that he is going to a country where everybody rides and shoots, dances, plays polo and tennis, and lives chiefly in the open air as a matter of course. Where he becomes no longer typical is in his relationship with Teresa Nottage, the beautiful Eurasian widow, whose "hopelessness" of character Mrs. Perrin reveals so clearly. The book from one point of view might indeed be considered as a statement of the difficulties arising from the intermingling of the East with the West. Mrs. Perrin has no illusions on the subject; her acquaintance with India has shown her that East is East and West is West, and that a turbid current is the result of the intermingling of the streams. Yet though she treats the subject seriously, the story has its lighter moments, and it never fails to interest.

It is a far cry from India to Stoke Newington, from Mrs. Perrin to Mr. Pett Ridge, yet there is this in common to both authors, they study their characters seriously. In "Nine to Six-Thirty" (Methuen, 6s.) Mr. Pett-Ridge, indeed, studies his characters rather more seriously than he has been wont to do in the past; he lays bare their foibles, their pettiness, their spiteful little ways, with not quite so kindly a sympathy as he has shown to the lower middle-class people of his acquaintance. Perhaps this is because they are one degree higher in the social sphere, and their pretensions strike a higher note of vulgarity, but it is a fact that the Harrison family do not excite sympathetic interest. Even Barbara, the household drudge, who launches out for herself, is too self-centred a young person to awaken any very lively emotion in her welfare. All the same the book is one which well repays reading and re-reading.

"Sentenced to Death," by Robert Machray (Chatto, 6s.), is of the sensational type. The sentence has been pronounced by Bengali conspirators on Halliday Browne for the part he has played in suppressing an Indian conspiracy. Mr. Machray, you see, is quite up-to-date in his plot. The conspirators follow him to England with bombs—luckily none of those bombs burst, and so it happens that in the end the conspirators are defeated and Browne retires into married life with the lady who supplies the love interest of the story. Mr. Machray has written more credible sensation than "Sentenced to Death," but he handles his material skilfully and makes a good story out of it.

WORK AND PLAY.

Madame Curie, quiet, persistent, and unadvertising, goes from height to height. She announces her discovery of pure radium with considerably less fuss than most people make about discovering a lost brooch, being probably, in fact, already engaged on discovering something else. She is very busy also with the final preparation of the radiography establishment which is to bear her husband's name, and over which she will preside. Madame Curie is the most impersonal of all famous people. She not only does not seek for personal glory, but seems literally unaware that it exists.

* * * * * *

The ethics of the garden were suddenly rediscovered some years ago, when he had a flood of books, headed by the ever-delightful "Elizabeth," which meandered charmingly from flower beds to philosophy, from cookery to emotions. Somewhat behind the main body of these garden books there comes another. The lady who wrote "Leaves from a Life" now gives us "Leaves from a Garden," which seems a more appropriate place for them to come from. Why does not somebody write her experiences in the kitchen, or "Thoughts in a Linen Cupboard?" Why should the garden be considered the only place from which these gentle and charming musings can emanate? "Lavender and Linen" is quite an inspiring title, and anyone who cannot find food for thought, humour, philosophy, and homeliness in the sight of an orderly kitchen, when the fire begins to glow, the light begins to fade, and the kettle begins to sing, is quite as dead mentally as the person who found that a primrose by the river's brim was a yellow primrose and nothing more.

* * * * * *

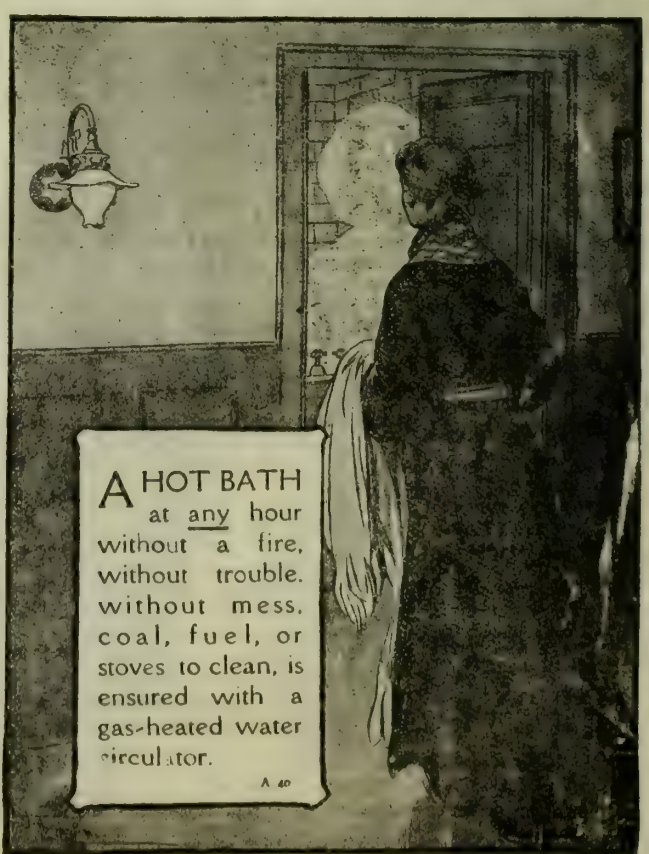
Dr. Florence Willey made a good point at the Women's Conference on Hygiene when she said that mothers in the working classes nurse their children not because it is natural, but because it is cheap; that the mothers themselves are the worst-nourished members of the family; and that they apparently expect nature to provide food for the baby when they have had none themselves. Another point she made was the fact that with all the attention we give to infant mortality we are apt to overlook the child who is just strong enough not to die of inanition. These points of view make it clear that the work that is being done in educating mothers is far more important than the care which is being taken of children. Women seem scarcely to realise the enormous mass of work that is waiting for them to do without any restrictions or difficulties to be encountered before they are allowed to do it. They fail to see that so soon as they have proved themselves capable they will be acknowledged capable.

* * * * * *

The plaint we so frequently hear anent the education of young Orientals in Western ways, that it can only bring them misery when they go back to their homes, is echoed from an unlikely quarter by a letter in the Lagos Weekly Record. "Ibrahima" writes indicting foreign education for African girls, pointing out that "England ladies," as they are called, are considered to have no knowledge of native matters; they are simply looked on to lead foreign fashions. The civilised native finds no choice in a wife between the useless "England lady,"

"QUEER STORIES" from TRUTH. Now ready, Series XVI. Price 1s., at all booksellers, and from the Publisher, 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street. "They are one of the wonders of the world, these stories, and people are never tired of asking who writes them."—Bystander.

HOT WATER AT ANY HOUR.



THE GAS LIGHT & COKE CO.

who is a sort of incompetent hybrid, and the "native lady" who cannot share his thoughts. "Ibrahima" says the fault lies in trying to turn the native twig into the foreign tree. This is a complaint one hears in various forms from widely different quarters of the earth. If anybody tried to teach a British working man to be an Oriental potentate we should hear plenty of complaints as to the waste of money, and the cruelty of bringing him back from emerald-strewn palaces to hoeing in the fields. Translated into terms of the intellect, that is what is being done in too many places.

* * * * * *

There is a growing sense of dissatisfaction among women golfers that so many courses near London are closed to them on Sundays. It seems to be the rule to forbid lady members to play on that day, though, of course, there are exceptions. The contention of the male sex is that theirs is the strenuous life, and women can play any day in the week while men are toiling in the City. But the last part of this argument becomes less and less true as the number of women increases who are actively engaged all the week and can only get a free day—Sundays. It is a real grievance that such women should be debarred from golf solely by sex disqualification.

LETTER FROM MADGE.

Dearest Amy,—Sir James Crichton-Browne says we neglect our splendid fish supply, and he is perfectly right. But what we want is to be taught how to cook it. The average cook's ideas do not get beyond boiled or fried with perhaps an occasional idea about baking, and an almost total ignorance of sauces prevails among the very classes who find it difficult to supply their families with sufficient nourishment. As we know, the sauce for the fish is half the secret of cooking it. But instead of preparing fish for table by cooking it in the sauce, the general idea is to send it up boiled in water with salt in it, looking very uninviting and tasteless, and to serve with it a more or less insipid sauce which is called melted butter. Clever Mrs. Clarke, of the National School of Cookery, made enough money to build that great concern by her cheap fish dinners at one of the exhibitions many years ago. She had mastered the art of cooking the fish and of suiting it with a fair variety of sauces. Have you ever seen fresh fish at the working man's dinner table? Probably not. He does not care for it, and small wonder. But if it were cooked in a savoury way and served in a tempting manner he would soon find out how good it is, and also how much cheaper than meat.

Another thing that is against fish as an article of diet among the poor is that they cannot always afford the fat for frying it, nor the butter for the sauce in which it may be so deliciously cooked. You may possibly be aware that the cheapest lard is 5d. per lb., and of a very inferior description. And margarine is seldom, if ever, sold below 8d. So what is the poor man to do with his fish?

In poor neighbourhoods in London the fried fish shops abound, and any one who has ever come within sniffing distance of them must have observed the stale smell that the fish invariably has. This points to another great difficulty about a fish diet; that of obtaining it quite fresh. That supplied to well-to-do customers by respectable fishmongers is usually beyond reproach, owing to fast trains and other facilities for fetching it from the sea to town. But the poor have to buy the second-best because it is cheaper than the very fresh, and what with inferior fat and fish that has lost its first freshness, the piscatorial menu must be far from satisfactory. And another thing against it is that fish is so very easily digested that about an hour and a-half after a meal composed chiefly of it the working man is hungry again. This suits neither his sensations nor his pocket. There is no doubt that fish is an excellent diet, but it has many disadvantages.

There are so many things that we want altered here in London that one wonders less at the number of missions and crusades going on than that they are so few. If some one with a little money and plenty of leisure would take up a mission against the exposure of fish and meat in open shops it would be a good deed. The other morning I was in a well-known and very fashionable West-End street, and, according to our disgraceful method of dust collecting, a cart came along and emptied a couple of dustbins from the pavement into the cart. There was a high wind, and while the emptying was going on a quantity of the refuse was blown from the cart all over the place. This process was carried on outside a fishmonger's shop, where salmon, turbot, sole, lobsters, and smelts were lying on the marble slab.

This happens every morning in almost every street of our West-End, in what is considered by many to be the most civilised city in the world. Butchers' shops are subject to the same experience, and the possibilities of contamination are excessively gruesome and disagreeable. What a chance for a successful crusade! Do you feel inclined to undertake it?

Apropos of the food supply, I read in a paper the other day that there are practically no young partridges this season. What luck was ours, then, last week, when Jim invited us to a perfect little dinner at which a baby partridge for each guest formed an item of the menu—so perfectly cooked, too. He possesses a treasure in his Italian cook, a man who delights in the practice of his accomplishment, and who—marvellous to relate—is not above taking a hint. He knew nothing about cooking game when he came to Jim, and now is past-master of what is a section of cookery in itself. He knows whose are the best-fed pheasants in England, a certain well-known duke's, and though these delicious birds are never in the market, he can manage to get some on occasion. How, no one knows. And another of his pleasing traits is that he can find fresh caviare when no one else can. I suppose he knows so many chefs of various nationalities that he picks up information and buys it when it is not to be

Poehl's SPERMIN Essence.

Sperminum is the

NATURAL SOURCE OF HEALTH and vital strength isolated and purified from organic bases.

In the form of the essence, Spermin acts as a

REVIVER OF VITAL ENERGY

and so stimulates healthy body juices which resist disease and retard vital decline.

NERVOUS BREAKDOWN, FATIGUE from OVERWORK, and MENTAL and PHYSICAL EXHAUSTION brought about by over-indulgence in athletics, will find a corrective in

POEHL'S SPERMIN ESSENCE.

It is of SPECIAL CURATIVE VALUE in all DISORDERS of the BLOOD, the NERVES, and the HEART.

Sold in original bottles under the warranty of the ORGANO-THERAPEUTIC INSTITUTE of Professor Von Poehl and Sons, by all chemists, 8/6 per bottle.

Address for free literature—
A. & M. ZIMMERMANN, 3, LLOYDS AVENUE, LONDON, E.C.

had for nothing. Jim gives him a free hand, and well he may!

The annual dinner of the Atlantic Union is fixed for next Tuesday, at the Criterion. It is always interesting to find out what other people think of us, and this dinner is one of the few chances of the kind we have. A doctor from Philadelphia and gentlemen from New South Wales, Victoria, and Bloemfontein are all to tell us what they think of the Old Country. Tickets are 7s. 6d. each, and can be bought of Mr. T. Driffield Hawkin, the secretary of the Union, 13a, Cockspur Street, W. I wish you would come up and go with me. I delight in these dinners.

Now that we have at last a little summer weather, let me remind you of the refreshing properties of a little Scrubb's Liquid Ammonia in the bath. It seems to put fresh energy into one, and gives such a pleasant feeling of alertness after any extra fatigue. Do not forget this good advice.

I find I have practically written my whole letter about food in one shape or other. How very greedy!

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

Dearest Madge,—After the stir, hurry, and excitement provided so generously for some weeks by society came a flat calm; we found ourselves left to our own resources. Under the circumstances, it was pleasantly brought home to us that there were advantages in belonging to a country with a question. The present phase of our question seems to reduce us to a country very much "on the make." A kind of lend-a-hand club ramifies all over the land to deal with everything in heaven and on earth that all the philosophies have dreamt of. Grania, aged nineteen, who, according to modern fashion, gracefully rules the decisions of her elders, after wavering about joining the crusade to teach remote mothers how to bring up their babies, finally elected to take up the "Celtic dream." It's much easier to deal with ideals than reals," she explained. "Things that nobody understands are no worry, and one feels so delightfully clever handling them. Just like reading Browning."

This choice brought us to the wild west, to Connemara, where the hotels are oases, not in a desert, but in a country of mountains, loughs, and weirdly beautiful bogs and moorlands. A land of deep silence as regards the "hum" of humanity's mighty workings, but in which "the large utterance of the early gods" might well be heard, a land in which to see visions and to dream dreams. And to think that we were only a few hours distant from the capital which had been indulging in such excesses of modernity such a short time ago! The country looked much the same as it must have looked in the days when Cromwell sent the forfeiting proprietors to "Hell or Connaught" from their home comforts. Very picturesque, very lovely, and very uneconomic. Fred, however, declares that it is not uneconomic now, but full of industrial possibilities. "Look at the splendid prospects for the rest cure here. You'd have to rest, you couldn't stop resting no matter how much you tried. There would be nothing else to do." And as for fresh air, there certainly is enough and to spare for a whole army of faddists. It goes about—like the little pigs of the nursery rhyme that wanted to be eaten—just simply clamouring to be inhaled. What a paradise the whole spacious solitary countryside would be for the simple-lifer and the caravanner! Even the Celtic dreamer comes into Fred's economic schemes, the place abounding with ideal sites for "heather and bog garden cities," for poets and dreamers, with suburbs, as it were, for fairies, leprechauns, and the spirits of those mighty heroes of the past whom we have lately abstracted from obscurity to "push" with modern vigour. "It is easy to laugh," Grania disdainfully reproves her uncle. "It is," Fred agrees; "there is not a public body in the country that could be fairly accused of failing to make frequent and full contribution to the hilarity of nations."

Lord and Lady Normanby have been staying in their picturesque sporting lodge amongst the Connemara Mountains. Kylemore Castle, in the same country, is, off and on, occupied by the Duke and Duchess of Manchester, and its owner, Mr. Zimmerman, who is not the only American proprietor there. It is curious that several large proprietors in the West now are Americans—not of Irish descent—comparatively new settlers, whilst scattered through the country are the tenantless cabins—every year increasing in number—of the Irish peasantry, emigrants to America.

Lord Granard, having finished his missions to foreign courts, has now gone to America to join Lady Granard. Castle Forbes has lately been restored with befitting splendour and brought up-to-date as regards modern ideas of beauty and comfort. Lady Granard enjoys much popularity in the neighbourhood. The Dowager Lady Granard, who, with her daughters, was in Dublin for the Horse Show, has not yet fixed on the residence she has been looking for in the neighbourhood.—Yours ever,

Clare.

Here is the recipe for the Poularde à l'Ambassadrice to which I referred last week, and I send you also a recipe for partridges to try when you tire of the roast bird:—

Truss a chicken for boiling, braise it in good stock for three-quarters of an hour. When it is cold, cut the meat from the breast and remove the breast bone, leaving a sort of case; cut the breast into scallops and as many round pieces of red, cooked tongue. Make 6 ozs. of raw chicken into very delicate quenelle, and, after rubbing it through a wire sieve, work in half a pint of thick cream. Cut a braised sweetbread into scallops, and stuff the chicken with the quenelle, the sweetbread scallops of chicken, and the tongue, placing them in layers and making the quenelle the top layer. Dress the chicken on a large croûte of fried bread coated with Montpellier butter. Garnish it with cornets of ham, hearts of lettuce, and croûtons of bright aspic jelly. The cornets of ham are made in this way:—Cut triangular-shaped pieces of cooked lean ham, dip them in liquid aspic, and fix them round some small cornet moulds, using bands of strong paper if necessary to make them take shape. On removing them from the moulds, glaze them with quite cold aspic, and fill them with a salad composed of all kinds of cold cooked vegetables mixed with mayonnaise sauce, putting a spoonful of chopped aspic at the top of each one.

Partridges à la Parisienne.—Cut into neat joints two roast (underdone) partridges. Arrange them in egg-shaped moulds which have been well lined with grated bacon. Cover these with fine breadcrumbs that have been soaked in good gravy. Over these place slices of truffles and morels that have been stewed again in gravy. Again place a layer of partridge and a few breadcrumbs, screen them with the yolks of hard-boiled eggs cut in halves and grated lemon peel. Season them with pepper, salt, and grated nutmeg. Cover each mould with slices of bacon. Set them in a good oven for twenty minutes. When they are done, remove the slices of bacon and fill the moulds and spaces with a liquid jelly made from the trimmings of game or game consommé. Set them aside until next day. Dish and serve them with black currant jelly.

Ever your loving cousin, MADGE.

BOLLINGER'S

CHAMPAGNE.

A PRIVATE INDUSTRIAL COMPANY with Head Office in Cape Colony, and Branches in other South African centres, doing sound profitable business (15 per cent. net profit last year), and excellent prospects of expansion, OFFERS at par limited number of its £1 ORDINARY SHARES, also 7 PER CENT. £1 CUMULATIVE PREFERENCE. The new Capital will be used to increase the stock and manufacturing facilities at the Company's depôts. Managing Director now in London.—Full particulars will be given to bonâ fide investors (only Principals need apply) on application, by CHARLES COMINS & CO., Chartered Accountants, 50, Cannon Street, London, E.C.

EMPIRE HOTEL, BUXTON.

EMPIRE HOTELS

The Empire Hotels are the only first-class hotels who freely quote their lowest and absolutely inclusive terms for all their hotels.

Occupies finest position. Stands in its own Magnificent Gardens and Grounds of 10 acres. Une celled for Luxury and Comfort. Garage for 60 Cars. Orchestra. Telegrams "Empire, Buxton." Inclusive terms for September, from 15/- a day. Write for further particulars, list of Empire Hotels in London, Seaside, and Country, and details of unique residential scheme.

St. Clements Press

LIMITED,

PORTUGAL STREET,

KINGSWAY, LONDON, W.C.

Works Open Day and Night.

Wires: "Printshop, London."

Telephones:

National—5800 Holborn (2 lines.)

Printers of "TRUTH" and 50 other Publications.

Amusements.

GAIETY THEATRE.—Manager, MR. GEORGE EDWARDES. EVERY EVENING at 8, a Musical Play, OUR MISS GIBBS. Next MATINEE, SATURDAY, Sept. 24th. Box-office open daily 10 till 10.

DALY'S THEATRE.—EVERY EVENING at 8.15, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES' Production, THE DOLLAR PRINCESS, a Musical Play. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY at 2.15. Box-office 10 to 10. Return of Miss LILY ELSIE as Alice.

ST. JAMES'S. Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER, Sole Lessee and Manager. LAST 9 NIGHTS (Final Performance September 23rd). At 9. THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST. By Oscar Wilde. Mr. ALLAN AYNESWORTH in his original part. Preceded at 8.30 by A MAKER OF MEN, by Alfred Sutro. Last two MATINEES (both plays) TO-DAY and SEPTEMBER 21st at 2.30. SEPTEMBER 27th, New Comedy, D'ARCY OF THE GUARDS.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE. THE ARCADIANS. EVERY EVENING at 8. MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2. Lessee and Manager, ROBERT COURTNEIDGE.

VAUDEVILLE, STRAND.—Under the Management of Messrs. A. and S. GATTI. TO-NIGHT, at 8.30, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES' New Musical Production, THE GIRL IN THE TRAIN. MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2.30. Tel., 3815, Gerrard.

ALHAMBRA.—"FEMINA," GRAND BALLET, LEONORA, FAICO, BRITTA, CARMEN TURIA, TERRY and LAMBERT, FUJI TROUPE, ON THE SANDS, JURY'S PICTURES, etc. Evenings at 8. Managing Director, ALFRED MOUL.

EMPIRE.—"THE DANCING MASTER," FRED FARREN, PHYLLIS BEDELLS, etc. THE PEREZOFFS, GEORGE MOZART, SYBIL ARUNDALE, and Specially Selected Varieties, etc. Evenings at 8. Manager, Mr. H. J. HITCHINS.

PALACE.—MARGARET COOPER, NAT. M. WILLS, MARY GREY, KAUFMANN TROUPE, SIX AMERICAN DANCERS LES TROMBETTA, BIOSCOPE, &c. EVENINGS at 8. MAT., SAT., at 2. Managing Director, Mr. ALFRED BUTT

MASKELYNE AND DEVANT'S MYSTERIES, ST. GEORGE'S HALL, W.—DAILY at 3 and 8. New Holiday Programme. PSYCHO, Mr. Maskelyne's famous automaton. THE SCARAB, New Magical Farce. Mr. Archie Naish, Humour at the Piano. MEMORA, the Human Encyclopædia. Mr. Owen Clark with novel Magical Problems, etc., etc. Seats, 1s. to 5s. 'Phone, 1545 Mayfair.

Concerts.

PROMENADE CONCERTS, QUEEN'S HALL. NIGHTLY, at eight. THE QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA. Conductor—Mr. HENRY J. WOOD. 1s., 2s., 3s., 5s. ROBERT NEWMAN, Manager, 320, Regent Street.

Exhibition.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION. — Lifelike Portrait Models of the World's Most Famous Men and Women. Tableaux, Scenes, and other attractions. Cinematograph Performances throughout the day. Open 9 a.m. till 10 p.m.

3/9 The WHS Self-filling 3/9

FOUNTAIN AND STYLO PENS

So simple a child can fill them

A thoroughly reliable writing instrument at a popular price. No complicated mechanism. Manufactured of the best materials, the Pens are fitted with iridium tipped 14-carat gold nibs, and in 3 styles of barrel, thin, thick & stub, and each style of barrel can be supplied with either fine, medium, or broad pointed nibs.

The Stylo is fitted with adjustable spring needle and is non-leakable.

To be obtained from all the leading Stationers, or post free, on receipt of P O for 3/10 from W. H SMITH & SON. 186 Strand. London. W.C.

3/9 FULLY GUARANTEED BRITISH MANUFACTURE 3/9

"Give a man a book he can read."—James Thomson.

Kindly write to Messrs. METHUEN for their new Announcement List of Autumn Books. There is something for everyone. Kindly also note their list of forthcoming Novels.

METHUEN'S POPULAR NOVELS

Messrs. METHUEN will publish to-morrow CLAYHANGER, by ARNOLD BENNETT, THE MISSING DELORA, by E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM, THE WILD OLIVE, by the Author of "The Inner Shrine." Crown 8vo, 6s. each. CROSS AND DAGGER, by W. SCOTT DURRANT, M.A. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. SIR PULTENEY is the sensation of the moment. Buy it and read it. It costs 1s. You will find all your friends in it.

THE LANTERN-BEARERS - Mrs. A. Sidgwick
ASTRAY IN ARCADY - - - Mary E. Mann
A SPIRIT OF MIRTH - - - Peggy Webling
SIR PULTENEY: A FANTASY (1s. net) E. D. Ward
THE CHARM - - - - Alice Perrin
WIND ALONG THE WASTE - Maude Annesley
JEMMY ABERCRAW - - - Bernard Capes
NINE TO SIX-THIRTY - - - W. Pett Ridge
INTO THE NIGHT - - Frances Nimmo Greene
HARMEN POLS - - - Maarten Maartens
THE HYENA OF KALLU - - - Louise Gerard
LAURISTONS - - - - - John Oxenham
KINSMEN'S CLAY - - - - Mary Crosbie
THE LOST HALO - - - - Percy White
THE LITTLE COMPANY OF RUTH Annie E. Holdsworth
ALISE OF ASTRA - - H. B. Marriott Watson

Messrs. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS

Messrs. METHUEN will publish to-morrow KINGS' FAVOURITES, by FRANCIS BICKLEY, Illustrated, 10s. 6d. net; HANDICRAFTS IN THE HOME, by MABEL TUKE PRIESTMAN, Illustrated, 10s. 6d. net.

AN OPEN CREEL (5s. net) - H. T. Sheringham
WOMAN IN ITALY (10s. 6d. net) William Boulting
JOAN OF ARC (10s. 6d. net) - Grace James
OLD KEW, CHISWICK, & KENSINGTON (12s. 6d. net) L. Sanders
THE UPPER GARDEN (5s. net) Robert de la Condamine
A HISTORY OF VERONA (12s. 6d. net) Miss A. M. Allen
THE ENGLISH HOME (12s. 6d. net) Banister F. Fletcher and H. Phillips Fletcher
THE TOWER OF LONDON (10s. 6d. net) Richard Davey
PERSIA AND ITS PEOPLE (10s. 6d. net) Ella C. Sykes
JACK'S INSECTS (6s.) - - - Edmund Selous
AVON AND SHAKESPEARE'S COUNTRY (10s. 6d. net) A. G. Bradley
MOUNTAIN ADVENTURES (7s. 6d. net) G. D. Abraham
NEGRO IN THE NEW WORLD (21s. net) Sir Harry Johnston
THE DOLOMITES (7s. 6d. net) - S. H. Hamer

Kindly ask for METHUEN'S SIXPENNY BOOKS everywhere. The last number is PRINCE RUPERT THE BUCCANEER, by C. J. CUTCLIFFE HYNE, and the last volume of their Sixpenny Dumas is SAINT QUENTIN.

METHUEN & CO., LTD., 36, Essex Street, London, W.C.

STERILE MARRIAGE: Its Causes and Curative Treatment, By a late Senior Physician to a Hospital for Women. Post free, 3s. 9d. Shelley & Co., Limited, 38, Gracechurch Street, London.

JOHN LONG'S ANNOUNCEMENTS

Messrs. John Long, Limited, have now commenced the publication of their Autumn Novels, and, as is usual with John Long's Novels, they are sure to be in popular request.

SIX SHILLINGS EACH.

THE TENDER PASSION.

M. E. FRANCIS, Author of "The Wild Heart," &c.

The Morning Post says:—"Mrs. Francis has given us this time an amusing volume somewhat after the style of W. W. Jacobs' inimitable sea yarns. The savour of 'The Tender Passion,' however, is not of salt, but of the earth of her beloved Dorset. We heartily welcome and warmly recommend so entertaining a volume."

A BORDER SCOURGE.

BERTRAM MITFORD, Author of "A Legacy of the Granite Hills."

The Globe says:—"The story is told with conviction, with dash, and with a deft intermingling of the tender passion."

DID CUPID COUNT? M. KNIGHT (A new Author). | The TRANSIT of SOULS JOHN HENRY WALLMER.

The GREAT LOCK-OUT

"Within the last few years the Unions and the Trade Union funds have been captured by the Socialists, and THE RANK AND FILE HAVE BEEN PROMISED THE MILLENNIUM. THE RESULT HAS BEEN BITTER DISAPPOINTMENT."—Vide Daily Express.

READ

HYPOCRITES & SINNERS

VIOLET TWEEDALE'S

Great Anti-Socialist Novel.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

LE DUC DE MORNY,

The Brother of an Emperor and the Maker of an Empire.

By FRÉDÉRIC LOLIÉE. English Version by BRYAN O'DONNELL, M.A.

With Photogravure and 22 other Portraits of the Celebrities of that Period. This Work is based upon Family papers and the Archives of the French Home Office. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

London: JOHN LONG, Ltd., 12, 13, 14, Norris St., Haymarket

From Mr. HEINEMANN'S List.

THE NEW DOOLEY BOOK.

MR. DOOLEY SAYS.

By F. P. DUNNE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [To-morrow.

A new book of Mr. Dooley's opinions will be welcome everywhere. Among the subjects on which he discourses are: DIVORCE—THE BACHELOR TAX—DRUGS—WOMAN SUFFRAGE—OCEAN TRAVEL.

MR. DE MORGAN'S NEW NOVEL.

AN AFFAIR OF DISHONOUR.

By WILLIAM DE MORGAN. One vol. Crown 8vo, 6s.

By the same Author. Uniform with the above.

IT NEVER CAN HAPPEN AGAIN.

New and cheaper Edition. In one vol., 6s.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

"TRUTH"

can be obtained in IRELAND

from EASON & SON, Ltd.,

Middle Abbey Street, Dublin; 17, Donegall Street, Belfast,

and at the Railway Bookstalls.

ON TUESDAY NEXT

Messrs. HUTCHINSON & CO. WILL PUBLISH

3 IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS

Leopold II. King of the Belgians

By DR. RAPPOPORT

In Cloth Gilt with Illustrations 12s. 6d. net.

Mrs. THURSTON'S New Novel

Max

By the author of "JOHN CHILCOTE, M.P.," &c.

With Illustrations in Cloth Gilt 6s.

And

Mrs. HUGH FRASER'S New Novel

The Golden Rose

By Mrs. HUGH FRASER and J. I. STAHLMANN

In Cloth Gilt, 6s.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. are pleased to announce a 4th Large Edition of

"HANDASYDE'S" New Novel

The HEART of MARYLEBONE

In Cloth Gilt, 6s.

And a 2nd EDITION of

Mrs. STEPNEY RAWSON'S successful Biography

BESS of HARDWICK

In Cloth Gilt, 16s. net, with Illustrations

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO.

Macmillan & Co.'s List.

REST HARROW. A Comedy of Resolution.

By MAURICE HEWLETT. 6s.

A sequel to "Open Country," which continues the history of Sanchia Percival and John Senhouse. [Friday.

BOOKS BY STEPHEN REYNOLDS.

A Poor Man's House. By STEPHEN REYNOLDS. Second Edition, Crown 8vo, 6s.

"An extremely interesting and valuable book. . . . A study remarkable for its sympathy and poetry as well as its minute observation."—Spectator.

The Holy Mountain. By STEPHEN REYNOLDS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A clever story well told."—Punch.

"The fame of Mrs. Henry Wood widens and strengthens."—MORNING POST.

MRS. HENRY WOOD'S NOVELS.

Cloth, 1s. net per vol.

May be obtained at all booksellers, where a list of the thirty-seven stories may be seen.

 Macmillan's Announcement List post free on application.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

STAMMERING PERMANENTLY CURED. Adults and boys taken in residence or as daily pupils.—Booklet of particulars and testimonials from Mr. A. C. SCHNELLE, 119, Bedford Court Mansions, London, W.C.

The GREENING Books

Instantaneous Success of

DAVID WHITELAW'S

New Romance,

PRINCESS GALVA,

and

COLIN COLLINS'

Surprisingly Sensational Story,

THE BLINDING LIGHT.

ORDER FROM YOUR LIBRARY AT ONCE.

OTHER RECENT FICTION.

| | |
|---|---|
| FOR NO MAN KNOWETH | Vere Campbell |
| RAGNA | Anna Costantini |
| THE FALL OF A SAINT | Eric Clement Scott |
| A FOOL'S ERRAND | Anthony Hamilton |
| JOHNNY | Herbert George |
| ALLAH THE AVENGER | Cowley Whitehouse |
| THE GAY LORD WARING | Houghton Townley |
| MISTRESS CYNTHIA | May Wynne |
| FOR PRINCE OR POPE | Jas. Gissingham |
| THE DUKE'S VENGEANCE | Michael W. Kaye |

SIX SHILLINGS EACH. At all Libraries.

The new volume in GREENING'S SHILLING SERIES is

MOON OF VALLEYS,

By DAVID WHITELAW.

Red Cloth with Frontispiece by H. R. MILLAR.

ONE SHILLING NET.

GREENING & CO., Ltd., 91, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

— THE —

ADVENT OF LIQUID FUEL.

According to statements in the Evening Press of August 23rd, and the Daily Press of August 24th, a new era is about to dawn for the battleships of the world.

THE FIGHTING LEVIATHANS OF THE DEEP ARE TO BE MOTOR DRIVEN.

By what power—Coal, Gas, or Oil?

The statements may or may not be true, but the fact remains that the question is under serious consideration.

Should the NAVIES OF THE WORLD use Liquid Fuel the MERCANTILE MARINE will follow, and so will THE RAILWAYS, but not until Navies, Mercantile Marine and Railways can see a sufficient supply of Liquid Fuel ahead, at moderate cost, for their needs.

This can only be achieved by the opening up of NEW OIL FIELDS, and the development of Oil in the following countries should be carefully watched by the speculator in Oil:—BARBADOS, CANADA, EGYPT, INDIA, NEWFOUNDLAND, NEW BRUNSWICK, NEW ZEALAND, NIGERIA, MEXICO, RUSSIA, SPAIN, and TRINIDAD.

All interested in the importance of Liquid Fuel should write for a copy of Pamphlet dealing with this subject to—

GEO. MACDONALD, Oil Specialist,

560-3, Salisbury House, London, E.C.

THE

ADVENT OF LIQUID FUEL.

GOOD POSITIONS

can always be found for men with Special Ability. There are hundreds of men with special Aptitude for a certain class of work who are in positions where that Aptitude has no scope, and is accordingly not appreciated or properly paid for. We want such men. If you are one of them and can prove that you are capable of filling a Responsible Position, write us to-day—or call.

HAPGOODS Ltd., 167-168, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. Barton Arcade, 55, Deansgate, Manchester.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.

Crowns, Bridge-work, Inlays, and all Latest Methods at lowest Fees.

FIVE YEARS' WARRANTY.

MR LABOUCHERE in Truth writes:—"One of the largest practices in the world Can do everything science and experience suggest to satisfy every customer."

WRITE FOR PAMPHLET.

GOODMAN'S, Ltd., 2, LUDGATE HILL (Facing St. Paul's).

BRIGHTON: 10, Castle Square.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The List of Applications opened on Monday, September 12th, and closes on or before Thursday, September 15th, 1910.

THE LIVERPOOL VICTORIA INSURANCE CORPORATION, LIMITED.

Registered under the Companies Acts, 1862-1907.

Chief Office: 45-49, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

| | |
|---|---|
| CAPITAL AUTHORISED - - - | £500,000. |
| CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED - - - | £361,408. |
| CAPITAL PAID-UP - - - - | £65,352. |

Issue of 60,000 Shares of £1 each, at a Premium of 5s. per Share.

PAYABLE:—5s. per Share on Application; 5s. per Share on Allotment; 7s. 6d. per Share November 1st, 1910 (including 2s. 6d. of Premium); 7s. 6d. per Share February 1st, 1910 (including remaining 2s. 6d. of Premium).

Directors.

JAMES M. LITTLEBOY (Chairman of the Liverpool Victoria Legal Friendly Society), Chairman, 8, Fulham Park Gardens, Fulham, S.W.
SIR HENRY DALZIEL, M.P., Deputy-Chairman, 8, Temple Avenue, E.C.
JOHN LOOSELY (Director, Liverpool Victoria Legal Friendly Society), 7, Heathland Road, Stamford Hill, N.
D. McCARTHY (Insurance Manager, Kirkham House, Prestwich, Manchester.
GEORGE ROYLE, J.P. (Barrister-at-Law), 18, Rutland Road, Bedford.
JOHN SPENCER (Director, Liverpool Victoria Legal Friendly Society), Brunlee, Barnes, Surrey.
WM. H. WOLSTENCROFT (Insurance Manager), Dumbreck, Wylam-on-Tyne.
ARTHUR HENRI (Secretary and Director, Liverpool Victoria Legal Friendly Society), Parkfield, Hopton Road, Streatham, S.W.
WILLIAM LONG (Treasurer and Director, Liverpool Victoria Legal Friendly Society), Rhodehurst, Leigham Court Road, Streatham, S.W.
THOS. R. BARRY, 37, Cromwell Road, Hove, Sussex.
Managing Directors.

Actuary and Secretary.

JAMES BACON, F.I.A.

Consulting Actuary.

T. G. ACKLAND, F.I.A., F.F.A., 5 and 6, Clement's Inn, Strand, W.C.

Bankers.

THE LONDON CITY AND MIDLAND BANK, LIMITED, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.
HEAD OFFICE: Threadneedle Street, London, E.C., and Branches.

Brokers.

SHEPPARDS, PELLY, PRICE & POTT, 57, Old Broad Street, E.C., and Stock Exchange.
BUCKMASTER & MOORE, 18, Old Broad Street, E.C., and Stock Exchange.
J. H. TOWNLEY & SON, 5, Tithebarn Street, Liverpool, and Liverpool Stock Exchange.
HARRISON & HOARE, Prudential Buildings, Mosley Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Newcastle-on-Tyne Stock Exchange.

Solicitors.

KINGSLEY WOOD & CO., 15, Walbrook, London, E.C.

Auditors.

JAMES E. COSTELLO, Chartered Accountant, 90, Cannon Street, E.C.

FORMATION OF CORPORATION.—The Corporation was registered in December, 1907, when, by an agreement with the Liverpool Victoria Legal Friendly Society—a Society registered under the Friendly Societies Acts and established in the year 1843—it secured for an agreed consideration the joint-user of the whole of the Society's Branch Offices, thus ensuring for the transaction of its business suitable accommodation and effective representation in every city and town of importance through the United Kingdom.

AGENCY ORGANISATION.—The Corporation has appointed approximately 13,000 Agents operating from about 300 Branch Offices.

CLASSES OF BUSINESS TRANSACTED.—The classes of business transacted embrace Ordinary, Life, Fire, Accident and Sickness, and General Casualty business, including Burglary, Plate Glass, Fidelity Guarantee, Third Party, and Motor Car Insurance.

PREMIUM INCOME.—The Premium Income record of the Corporation to the present is as follows:—

| | |
|---|---|
| For the year ending March 31st, 1909 .. | £28,788 |
| For the year ending March 31st, 1910 .. | £66,524 |
| Estimated Premium Income on the books at present date, including business recently acquired ... ... ... ... ... | £110,000 |

NEW BUSINESS.—The new policies now being issued in all departments are producing an increase of Premium Income at the rate of over £1,000 per week, and in addition there will be a considerable increase in the Premium Income coming from re-insurance treaties which have been negotiated.

EXPECTED INCOME FOR CURRENT YEAR.—The Directors confidently anticipate that the Premium Income for the Current year will not be less than £160,000.

RECORD OF THE LIVERPOOL VICTORIA LEGAL FRIENDLY SOCIETY.—It will be seen that at the present rate of progress the Corporation is likely to become a powerful organisation in the course of a few years, and should, by way of comparison, repeat in the Ordinary Life, Fire and Accident departments of Insurance the success which has attended the operations of the Friendly Society in Industrial assurance work. The Society was established in 1843; it has paid in Claims a sum exceeding £7,000,000; its Premium Income last year was £1,258,146; its income from Investments £133,700; and its Accumulated Funds at December 31st last totalled £3,804,146.

DIVIDEND PROSPECTS.—By the Articles of Association the shareholders of the Corporation receive 10 per cent. of the divisible profits of the Life Department, the balance of 90 per cent. going to the Participating policies, and the shareholders receive the whole of the divisible profits of the Fire, Accident, and other Departments, as well as the income derived from the investment of the share capital and reserve funds. On completion of this issue the interest from invested funds should yield an annual income equal to a dividend of over 3½ per cent. on the total paid up capital of the Corporation, apart from the profits from the business. Assuming, therefore, that the Corporation secures the average profit ratio of British offices on the various classes of business transacted, the resulting profits on the rapidly growing premium income, added to the income from invested funds, should provide certain and progressive dividends on the share capital after making prudent reserves which will be a source of strength and security in the future.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained at any of the Branches of The London City and Midland Bank, Limited, or from the Solicitors or Brokers, or at the Head Office of the Corporation.

September 8th, 1910.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

The Liverpool Victoria Insurance Corporation, Limited.

TO THE DIRECTORS OF THE LIVERPOOL VICTORIA INSURANCE CORPORATION, LIMITED.

Gentlemen,—Having paid to your bankers, the London City and Midland Bank (Limited), the sum of ..... pounds, being a deposit of 5s per share on ..... shares of one pound each in the above-named company, I request you will allot me that number of shares, and I hereby agree to accept the same, or any less number that you may allot to me, upon the terms of your prospectus dated September 8th, 1910, and the articles of association of the company, and I authorise you to place my name on the register of members of the company in respect of the shares allotted to me, and agree to pay the further sum of five shillings per share on allotment and the further instalments as provided by and as specified in the said prospectus.

Usual Signature .....

Name (in full) .....
(Please state title, Mr., Mrs., or Miss)

Address (in full) .....

.....

Profession or Business .....

Please write clearly. Date .....1910.

If at present a shareholder in the Corporation state the number of shares held.

....."A" shares. ....."B" shares.

FURNITURE

IMPORTANT PRIVATE SALE,

WITHOUT LEAST RESERVE, OF

High-class Modern, Antique, and Oriental Second-hand Furniture, Carpets, Draperies, and Complete Effects,

WHICH

THE FURNITURE AND FINE ART DEPOSITORIES, Ltd., will SELL PRIVATELY, on their Premises, at 48 to 50, Park Street, Upper Street, Islington, London, N., EVERY DAY, from 9 till 9, Thursdays 9 till 5.

Any item, however small, can be selected now, and if not required for immediate delivery will be stored free till wanted. Payment when goods are required or delivered at once, town or country, or shipped for abroad.

These goods comprise one of the finest collections of genuine high-class modern, antique, and Oriental Furniture and Household Effects possible to be seen, and in most cases are being offered at less than one-fourth their original value.

Including amongst numerous other items the following :—

Persian, Aubusson, Axminster, Brussels Carpets and Rugs, several real Turkey carpets of finest quality, being offered as low as 65s. each, with rugs to match, 15s.; Aubusson tapestry silks and lace curtains and table covers, from 15s. up to 35 gs.; genuine antique pierced front brass fenders with standards and implements complete, from 27s. 6d.; two very fine antique design carved oak Welsh dressers, fitted shelves, cupboards, etc., in perfect preservation, 5 ft. wide, at 75s., with the fine majestic old armchairs, table, and dowry chest of the same period, some delightful pieces of extremely fine Royal Dresden figure groups, etc., Old Staffordshire, Worcester, and other china, choice carved ivories, quantities of very fine silver, quantity of plate by Collis, Regent Street, and others, table linen, three magnificent polished oak canteens containing cutlery by Mappin & Webb, Elkington, and Rogers; some choice oil and water paintings by the late William Powell Frith, C.V.O., R.A., and others, beautifully-executed engravings and coloured sporting and other prints.

The Bedrooms comprise several very fine antique bow-front and other chests of drawers at extremely low prices from 35s., and handsome gent's wardrobes of Queen Anne, Sheraton, and other designs, fitted with deep drawers and sliding trays, from 3 gs.; also several very beautiful complete bedroom suites with bedsteads to match, including Queen Anne, Heppelwhite, Sheraton, and Chippendale designs, white enamelled and solid English oak suites from £3 15s., and ditto, with large double glass door wardrobes, from £7 15s.; two very magnificent large Sheraton design inlaid mahogany bedroom suites, 12 gs. and 18 gs., a very choice Queen Anne design bedroom suite with 5ft. 6in. wide wardrobe, superbly designed and manufactured by Plesner et Fils, being offered at the ridiculously low price of 18 gs., the other larger suites in satinwood, silver ash, and other choice woods being offered equally low in price; one Sheraton design exhibition suite being most superbly inlaid with real mother-o'-pearl flowers, etc., comprising a 7ft. 6in. wide wardrobe priced at £72 10s., is honestly worth over treble. Several very fine square pillar all brass and enamelled French, Italian, and other bedsteads with nearly new horsehair bedding complete, from 35s. set.

The contents of Reception, Dining, Smoking Rooms, and Libraries comprise some very fine old carved oak furniture, also some exquisite examples of Adams, Queen Anne, Chippendale, Heppelwhite, and Sheraton furniture, a choice dining-room complete set of Queen Anne design, comprising 5 ft. wide Queen Anne sideboard, fitted drawers, cupboards, etc., oval extending dining table to match, choice overmantel, six covered dining chairs with cabriole-shaped legs, and two fine carving chairs to match, the entire lot being offered for 20gs.

Also handsome set in solid oak, comprising massive sideboard, extending dining-table, overmantel fitment, two carving chairs, and six small chairs to match. The whole set complete, £17 10s.

And a very choice set of Sheraton design dining-room furniture, complete for 25gs.; two luxuriously spring upholstered Chesterfield settees, very fine make, 65s.; four very fine luxuriously sprung easy chairs to match, at 45s.; carving wagons, bronzes, dinner services, and two valuable sets of English cut table glass.

The Drawing Rooms comprise a rare collection of fine old Dutch, French gilt, satinwood, and Indian carved furniture, including very fine rare old Dutch weight clock over 250 years old, very unique set of Dutch inlaid chairs, with large display cabinet, centre table, side tables, and other pieces.

Very unique set of most magnificently-carved Indian chairs and settees, upholstered in very choice silk, tables, pedestals, etc., to match.

Two delightfully gilt and carved settees, pair of Louis XV. carved and gilt fauteuils to match, carved and gilt occasional chairs to match, with footstools, gilt table with Scagliola top, formerly belonging to George IV.; carved and gilt screens, pedestals, etc., with the Vernis-Martin, Boule, and other writing bureaux and escritoires.

Superb Pocket grand piano, rosewood case, 45gs. (worth over treble), magnificent upright grand in Sheraton design, £28, and a nice-toned instrument by Erard; in good condition, 8gs.

Boudoir comprises well-made Chesterfield suite in silk, complete, manufactured by Wood and Co., £9 17s. 6d.; elegant French design cabinet to match, 4ft. 6in. wide, £6 15s.; overmantel to match, 35s.; and dainty centre table, 22s. 6d.

Two large, comfortable Chesterfield settees at 45s.; etc.

Some very fine natural history specimens, lions, tigers, and bears mounted as rugs, quantity of curios, books, electric light fittings, cigars and wines, fine bed and table linen, iron safe by Milner and Co. and one by John Tann, laudau, motor brougham, garden furniture, and numerous other items impossible to enumerate here, but full catalogues may be had upon application.

Magnificent Decauville Motor Car, original price over 1,000gs.; will accept £275.

The Whole is NOW ON VIEW, and any items may be selected at once, and can remain stored free till required, or will be delivered free in town, or packed for country or shipment.

THE FURNITURE AND FINE ART DEPOSITORIES, Ltd.,

48 to 50, PARK STREET,

UPPER STREET, ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

(A FEW MINUTES FROM HIGHBURY STATION, NORTH LONDON RAILWAY.)

CAB FARES REFUNDED TO ALL PURCHASERS.

Hours 9 till 9. Thursdays 9 till 5.

CATALOGUE (S) NOW READY, AND FULL PARTICULARS FREE ON APPLICATION.

"Truth" Foreign Hotel List and Business Guide.

BADEN-BADEN.—HOTEL MINERVA. Fst.-cl. fmly. hotel. Lichenthal-Alee. Btfl. lge. pk. Open-air restau. Rooms with bath.

BASLE.—THREE KINGS HOTEL. The unique, beautiful quiet pos. on the Rhine. Universal rep. L. A. BOSSI, late Gd. H., Territe.

BLANKENBERGH (Belgium).—KURSAAL HOTEL. 1st-class, leading pos. on beach. Large restaurant, ex. cooking. Mod. comf.

COLOGNE.—EXCELSIOR HOTEL ERNST. The nwst. and most up-to-date hotel in town. The same prop. as Baur au Lac, Zurich.

COLOGNE.—HOTEL DISCH. First-class leading hotel. Patronised by Eng. and Amer. New bath suites. Mod. charges.

COPENHAGEN.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class. Leading hotel. Up to date. Connected with Carlton and Ritz hotels.

DRESDEN.—HOTEL BELLEVUE. The leading Hotel, pat. by Eng. & Amer. soc. All latest improve. R. RONNEFELD, Gen. Man.

DRESDEN.—GRAND UNION HOTEL. Nearest first-class Hotel to Cen. Stn., open location, Grdn. on front & back, mod. terms.

DRESDEN.—SENDIG HOTEL. Europaischer Hof. First-class. Sendig Hotels Schandau, Nurn., Wies., are all of best reputation.

DUSSELDORF.—HOTEL ROYAL. Thoroughly first-class. Aprts. & single rms. with baths.—H. Hengst, Dr., prev. H. Europe, Hamburg

FLORENCE.—HOTEL MINERVA. Quiet and central. Patronised by English and Americans.—G. CANDRION, Proprietor.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL REGINA ET VICTORIA. First-class. Every modern comfort. Lately improved and redecorated.

CHEMISTS.—H. ROBERTS & CO. English and American chemists. Via Tornabuoni, 17.

HAMBURG.—LLOYD-HOTEL. The nearest first-cl. hotel, facing Cen. Stn. (Townside). Every mod. comft. Lge. Restnt. Terms. mod.

TAILOR.—HERMANN JAHN. 8-10, Schmiedestrasse. First-class Eng. and Amer. Tailor. Perfect fit. Finest English Goods in Stock.

HEIDELBERG. — SCHLOSS HOTEL, HOTEL BELLEVUE. Leading hotels near Castle ruins. Unique position, splendid views. All latest improvements.

INNSBRUCK.—JACOB ZINK, Karl Strasse 13, First-class Gent's Tailor, also Sporting Outfits.

INTERLAKEN.—HOTEL BEAU-SITE. English family hotel, near central station and steamboat landing. Quiet position. Splendid views. Large garden. Modern comforts. Terms moderate.—J. WURTH, Proprietor.

LAUSANNE.—ALEXANDRA GRAND HOTEL. First class. Most up-to-date. Splendid view on the Lake and Mountains.

LAUSANNE.—CARLTON HOTEL. Splendid sit. Close to English church. Mod. comfort, moderate charges.—H. MULLER, Pr.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL VICTORIA. The nearest first-class family hotel to the Rly. Station. Newly built, up-to-date every respect.

TAILORS.—KOCH & RIEBEL. High-class English Tailors, 17, Boulevard de Grancy, Lausanne.

LOCARNO (Lake Maggiore).—THE GRAND HOTEL. Open the whole year. Best resort on the Italian lakes. Also winter season.

LOCARNO.—HOTEL DU PARC. The most modern family hotel. The favourite residence for English families.

LUCERNE.—GRAND HOTEL NATIONAL. Hotel de Luxe.

LUGANO.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. Fst.-clss. Unrvlld. pstn., with ltst. imprvmnts. Htl. faces Eng. ch.—Pr., P. BROCCA.

LUGANO.—SEEGER'S HOTEL & Boarding House. First-class, large shdy. grdn., chrmng. view, lake, mountains & town. Mod. terms.

MAINZ.—HOTEL DE HOLLAND. The leading family Hotel, facing landing of steamers, overlooking the Rhine and Mountains.

MERAN (S. Tyrol).—HOTEL FRAU EMMA. New, first-cl., finst. vw., comf.; same owner Hl. Wildsee Prags, Pustertaler Dolomiten.

MILAN.—HOTEL DE LA VILLE. Fst.-cl., nr. Cathedral. Post, Telegraph, & Rly. Office in hotel. Centl. Heating suites with baths.

MONTREUX (Territet), Switz.—GD HOTEL & ALPES Well known rendezvous of Eng. and Amer. clientèle.—A. AHLBURG, Dr.

MONTREUX.—GRAND HOTEL EDEN. First-class. Built 1905. Unrvd. pos. overlooking Lake & Alps. Close to Kursaal. Patrnsd. by English & Americans. Garage. Own park.—FALLEGGER-WYRSCH, Prop.

MONTREUX (Territet).—GRAND HOTEL EXCELSIOR AND BON-PORT. Fav. Eng. house. Apmts. with baths. Most sheltd. pos.—L. BARONI, Mgr.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL NATIONAL. First-class Ideal English Winter Hotel Newly renovated. R. TURNER, new Manager.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL DE L'EUROPE. First-class Eng. fmly. htl. Rently. enlgd. Mod. tms.—Madam BETTSCHEN, Prtress.

MUNICH.—HOTEL ENGLISCHER HOF. First-class. Finest pos. Opp. P.O., Roy. T., Roy. P. H. & c. water running each room.

NAPLES.—PARKER'S HOTEL. The English and most comfortable; splendid view of bay; enlarged and redecorated.

NAPLES.—EXCELSIOR HOTEL. Hotel de Luxe.

CHEMISTS.—H. ROBERTS & CO. English and American chemists. Via Vittoria, 21-22.

NICE.—TERMINUS HOTEL. Only first-cl. htl., opp. stn. Branch houses: HOTEL SUEDE & HOTEL BERNE. Vacuum cleaner.

TAILOR.—F. MacGOWAN. English and American Tailor for Ladies and Gentlemen. Established 1879 19, Avenue de la Gare, NICE.

OSTEND.—HOTEL DU LITTORAL. First-class family hotel, facing the sea. The most select in every respect.

OSTEND.—CONTINENTAL & SPLENDID HOTELS Leading on beach. 400 beds ea. Hotel de Plage is htl. & restau. de luxe.

OUCHY-LAUSANNE.—HOTEL DU CHATEAU. The only first-class hotel close to landing of steamers. Beautiful view. Most comfortable.

PARIS.—HOTEL DE L'ATHENEE, Rue Scribe. One of the leading hotels.—E. AMBRUSTER, Manager-Proprietor.

PARIS.—HOTEL MEURICE. Rue de Rivoli (opposite Tuileries Gardens). "The Hotel de Famille de Grand Luxe."

PARIS.—HOTEL St. JAMES & ALBANY, opposite Tuileries. Favourite rdvous. of Eng. & Amrns.—Pr.-Mgr., A. LERCHE.

PARIS.—HOTEL MONTANA. (Avenue De L'Opera). Up to date, with all latest and modern improvements.

ROME.—EXCELSIOR HOTEL. Hotel de Luxe.

ROME.—HOTEL QUIRINAL. First-class. Sit. on famous Via Nazionale. Up to date in every respect.—BUCHER-DURRER, Prop.

CHEMISTS.—H. ROBERTS & CO. English and American chemists. Corso Umberto 417-418.

ST. MORITZ.—THE BELVEDERE. English Family House, residential quarter, numerous suites of rooms with baths.

ST. MORITZ.—PALACE HOTEL. The most fashionable. Baths with suites of rooms.—Prop., CASPAR BADRUTT'S ERBEN.

TRIBERG (Black Forest). — SCHWARZWALD HOTEL and KURHAUS WALDLUST. First-class leading hotels. Near the waterfall, and the great forest.

VIENNA.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Kärntnerring next to the Opera. The most leading hotel in the town. Own fishing and shooting.

VIENNA.—MATSCHAKERHOF. I., Seilergasse 6. Pat. by the Austro-Hun. Nobility. Spity. Vienna gd. cookg. Best wines. Shoot & fish

TAILOR.—JOHANN MANNINGER. I. Krugerstrasse 5. High-class Tailor. Latest fashion, perfect fit.

WIESBADEN. — FOUR SEASONS HOTEL and BATHS.—Finest pstn., opp. Kurhaus and Opera. Own mineral spring.

WIESBADEN.—HOTEL NASSAU. The English home, with magnificent bathing & medical estabmt. Situated at the Curplace.

WIESBADEN.—PALACE HOTEL and BATHS. Up-to-date family hotel. Every room with tel. and running h. and c. water.

TAILOR.—JEAN MARTIN. Langgasse 41, Gents' Tailor. First class and perfect fit guaranteed.

WURZBURG.—HOTEL RUSSISCHER HOF. First-class fmly. hotel. Every mod. c m. GEO. OTT, Man. Dir. Pur. to the Roy.

ZURICH.—HOTEL BAUR AU LAC. Latest improvements. The same proprietor as Excelsior Hotel Ernst, Cologne.

ZURICH.—DOLDER, THE GD. HOTEL, May 15 to October 15. The WALDHAUS open all year, quietest position, finest view.

ZURICH.—GRAND HOTEL VICTORIA. First-class family hotel, facing station, open all the year. Pat. by English & Americans

ZURICH.—HOTEL & PENSION EDEN AU LAC. New comf. family hotel facing the Lake. Up-to-date in every respect.

Foreign Pensions.

BRUSSELS.—Miss POOLE, PENSION des ANGLAIS, 83, Rue Leshroussart (Avenue Louise). Fst. cl. Every comf. Excel. cooking.

BRUSSELS.—PENSION ROEGIERS, 94, Rue du Prince Royal (Avenue Louise). All comfs. Excel. cooking. Large grdn. Trms. mod.

DRESDEN.—PEN. WILLKOMMEN, Sedanstrasse 6. Fst.-cl. Best & healthst. pos. Only pen. entirely for ladies. H. HARNISCH Pr.

DRESDEN.—PENSION KEMPF. Sedanstrasse 3. Eng. & Amer. visitors will find here a comfortable home & excellent cooking.

DRESDEN.—PENSION DONATH, Lüttichau Strasse, corner Struve-Strasse, near Central Station, Theatres, and Gallery. Comfortable, up to date. H. COLLIN, Prop.

FREIBURG (Black Forest).—PENSION UTZ INTERNATIONALE.—First-class fam. pen. Fine position. Excellent cuisine. Modern comfort. Moderate terms. Reduction for families.—Frau L. UTZ.

GRIES (nr. Bozen, Tyrol).—HTL. & PEN., AUSTRIA. —The leading first-class fam. hotel, finest sheltered pos. & modern comf.

HAMBURG.—PENSION ALSTERUFER. Alsterufer 7. Fst-cl., fine pos., fcg. Alster, new, fur. Every mod. com. Best ckg. Nice gdn.

HAMBURG.—PENSION GUTMANN. Alte Raben-strasse 10. Harvestehude. Fst. cl. Most select position. Modern comfor.

HAMBURG.—KLOPSTOCK PEN. Klopstockstrasse 2. 2 min. from Damintor Ry. Stn. Rooms with or without pen. Excel. cookg.

LAUSANNE.—PENSION SEILER. First-class, finest part, nr. Eng. Church. Most up to date & comf.—H. SEILER-WINTON, Pr.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL PENSION EDEN. First-class family house, fine pos. Every modern comfort. Very moderate terms.

LUCERNE.—PENSION VILLA MARIA. First-cl. fmly. hse., select, charm. psn. overl. lake & mntns. Every mod. comf. Terms mod.

MUNICH.—PENSION PFANNER, 2 Finkenstrasse. Fst.-cl. fam. pen., cent. pstn., ex. cuisine, cent. heatg. FRAU PFANNER, Pr.

MUNICH.—PENSION WAGNER, Akademiestr. 9. Opp. Kunstakademie. Eleg. fur., baths, mod. tms. Fr. MARIA WAGNER, Pr.

NAPLES.—PENSION BAKER, 10, Via Caracciolo. The leadg. English pension, fine sit., facg. bay, magnificent view of Vesuvius.

ROME.—PENSION CARGILL, Via Collino 23.—Select, com. fam. pens., quiet sit.; lofty, sunny rooms.—Eng. Prs., Miss CARGILL.

VIENNA.—PENSION HIGH LIFE. I. Rosenbursenstrasse 4. Cen. pos., close G.P.O., Prater, & Exhibition. Newly fur. Every mod. com.

VIENNA.—PENSION TRIS. I. Laurenzberg 1. Opposite G.P.O. Newly furnished Rooms, with or without Pension; good cooking.

WIESBADEN.—PENSION ANGLAISE, Sonnenberger-strasse, 37. Est. 1880. First-class, near Kochbrunnen, Kurhouse, and opposite Park. All modern comfort.

PLEASURE CRUISE.

SELECT CRUISE
BY OCEAN STEAMER,
Leaving Marseilles Oct. 13th,
visiting
SICILY, ASIA MINOR, TURKEY, GREECE, ITALY.
24 Days - 20 Guineas.

Illustrated Programmes free.
THOS. COOK & SON,
LUDGATE CIRCUS, LONDON,
and Branch Offices.

"TRUTH"
Can be obtained at THE GALIGNANI LIBRARY,
224, RUE DE RIVOLI, PARIS.

"TRUTH"
Can be obtained at Galignani, No. 8, Avenue Massena, NICE.

"Truth" Hotel List.

BELFAST.—GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL.—The Finest Hotel in Ireland. 200 rooms. Electric light throughout. Passenger lifts to all floors. Magnificent public rooms and suites of private apartments. Most central position. Very moderate tariff. Omnibuses from Hotel attend all steamers and trains. Telegrams, "Grand Central, Belfast."

BEN RHYDDING HYDRO HOTEL, Wharfedale, Yorkshire. 500 ft. alt. On the edge of the Moor. Home farm. Bracing air, lovely scenery. 9-Hole Golf Course, adjoining grounds, free to visitors. Fine new Lounge. JOS. I. KIRBY, Managing Director.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors. GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

DUBLIN. — HOTEL METROPOLE, SACKVILLE STREET (next General Post Office). Convenient for Railways, Steamers, and Amusements. Modern and luxurious. Electric Light and Passenger Lift. Sanitation officially certified. High-class Restaurant attached. Moderate Tariff. Descriptive matter on application to the Manager.

GLASGOW.—WINDSOR HOTEL.—A First-class Family Hotel. PATRONISED BY ROYALTY. Excellent cuisine. Every Modern Comfort and Luxury. Electric Light. Passenger Lift. CENTRAL POSITION, WITHOUT NOISE OR TRAFFIC. MODERATE TERMS. A. M. THIEM, Proprietor, also at Hydro., Peebles.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position. Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER, & CO., Colonial House, Water Street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

LIVERPOOL.—EXCHANGE STATION HOTEL.
Owned and Managed by the
Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co.
NEAREST FIRST-CLASS HOTEL TO THE LANDING STAGE.
Telegraphic Address: "Station Hotel, Liverpool."

LONDON.—WELLINGTON HOUSE, BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W.—The Ideal RESIDENTIAL HOTEL. Delightful combination of hotel life and private flats. Self-contained suites. Récherché Restaurant; magnificent public rooms. Valeting, attendance, light, baths, inclusive. No extra charges. 2341 Vict. W. M. NEFZGER, Gen. Man.

MALVERN has more landscape beauties and the most invigorating air in the Kingdom. Only 2¼ hours from Paddington. THE IMPERIAL HOTEL faces due South and the famous hills. Every comfort at moderate charges. Cheerful lounge, electric light, garage and pit. Brine baths as at Droitwich. Vichy massage, douches, and hydrobaths. For tariff apply to the Resident Prop., F. MOERSCHELL.

MARGATE.—WHITE HART HOTEL.
Most picturesque position. Every comfort, no ostentation.
All English meat and poultry. No gas stoves. Reasonable terms.
Original Headquarters Auto. Club, also Motor Union.
Address, Proprietor.

MARGATE.—NAYLAND ROCK HOTEL.
Old established for families and gentlemen. Premier position. 20 yards from and facing sea. Nearest hotel to golf links. Noted cuisine. Vintage wines. En pension and à la carte. Wedding receptions. Special dinners. Illustrated tariff. T. E. FORMAN, Proprietor.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely new Management. New Sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
W. WORSTER, Manager.

THE FIRST NATURE-CURE IN ENGLAND.
BROADLANDS, MEDSTEAD, HANTS.
One Hour and Forty Minutes from Waterloo. Altitude 500 feet. Pure Bracing Air.
An Ideal Holiday for Tired People. With or Without Treatment.
Sun, Air, and Water Baths in one of the most beautiful spots in England, with absolute privacy. Sleeping in Air Huts. Non-Flesh Diet. Golf. Tennis. Croquet.
For Prospectus, apply MANAGER.

MATLOCK BATH "The Switzerland of England"
ROYAL HOTEL AND BATHS
High-Class Residential Spa.
ORCHESTRA. Telegraphic Address: "ROYAL." Telephone: 193.

PEEBLES HOTEL HYDROPATHIC.
SUMPTUOUSLY APPOINTED. Magnificent Situation. Charming Scenery. GOLF, 18-Hole Course near. MOTORS. Outdoor Games. Complete HYDRO and ELECTRIC BATHS. Resident Physician. Send for Illustrated Tariff.
A. M. THIEM, Resident Director.

TORQUAY.—GRAND HOTEL.
MOST MODERN, BEST EQUIPPED. UNIQUE POSITION, FACING BAY AND CHANNEL. UNRIVALLED VIEWS. SOUTH ASPECT. NEAREST STATION AND SEA. ELECTRIC LIGHT & LIFT. GARAGE.

THE FAMOUS BROMO-IODINE CURES.
WOODHALL SPA. VICTORIA HOTEL.
Pump-room in Hotel grounds. Famous Bromo-Iodine Waters and Baths for Rheumatism, Gout, Neuritis, etc. Wonderful results. Charming gardens. Golf, Tennis, Croquet. Tariff of Manager.

TOURS BY THE R.M.S.P.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| £9 | SPAIN. | £53 | CEYLON. |
| £10 | PORTUGAL. | £62 | RIVER PLATE. |
| £15 | AZORES. | £63 | STRAITS. |
| £21 | MOROCCO. | £75 | CHINA & JAPAN. |
| £21 | CANARY ISLANDS. | £89 | CHILI. |
| £21 | MADEIRA. | £102 | ROUNDS. AMERICA. |
| £24 | EGYPT. | £110 | ROUND WORLD. |
| £40 | WEST INDIES. | £124 | AUSTRALIA. |
| £50 | BRAZIL. | | |

Apply to THE ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET COMPANY.
London: 18, Moorgate Street, E.C., and 32, Cockspur Street, S.W.

The Rock of . . British Reputation

has no name more deeply engraved than

Trade Mark.

AVON

for Avon Tyres, the world over, are famed for the British qualities of strength and endurance. Avon Tyres are long lived, because of the high percentage of pure rubber employed in their manufacture, and the unique Avon process of vulcanising tread and casing in one operation.

AVON INDIA RUBBER Co., Ltd., Melksham, Wilts., and AVON HOUSE, 35, LONG ACRE, — LONDON. —

Prices on application to Tyre Department.

LEAMINGTON

The Home Seeker, the Holiday-maker, and those in quest of health, should visit

LEAMINGTON

THE HEART OF ENGLAND.

Less than 2 hours from London, and readily accessible from every part.

A bright and social Town, with a continuous round of refined pleasures.

The remedial qualities of the Royal Leamington Spa, and the full range provided of medical bath treatment at the Royal Pump Rooms are no surpassed by any Continental resort.

Municipal Bulgarian Health Milk a feature.

Booklet free from Town Clerk, Royal Leamington Spa.

BENGER'S

Benger's Food, prepared with fresh new milk is all food.

It is distinguished from others by the ease with which it can be digested and absorbed. It can be served prepared to suit the exact physical condition of the person for whom it is intended.

Benger's food is for infants, invalids, and all whose digestive powers have become weakened through illness or advancing age.

Benger's food is sold in tins by Chemists, etc.

VITTEL Grande Source

is an agreeable, non-effervescing Table Water having marked curative properties in all Rheumatic and kindred affections. It is bottled at the famous Vittel Mineral Springs in the Vosges, and exported to the extent of over seven million bottles annually.

For all Ailments arising from Uric Acid, Gout, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Kidney Troubles, etc.

In Whole, Half and Quarter Bottles.
— At Leading Hotels, Chemists, Stores, etc. —

General Agent for United Kingdom: E. DEL MAR, 27, Mincing Lane, London, E.C.

The HACKNEY FURNISHING Co. Ltd.

Parties Furnishing should visit their West-End Premises, situated in the finest position in London,

103 & 103a, OXFORD STREET, W.

Next door to Henry Heath's and facing Newman Street.

View our Model Flats.

Three Minutes from Tottenham Court Road and Regent Street.

Their New Galleries are acknowledged to be the most Artistic combined with Elegance in London.

Parties can Furnish on their Deferred Payment System as follows:—

GENERAL TERMS.

| Worth | Per Month | Worth | Month | Worth | Month | Worth | Month |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| £10 .. | £0 6 0 | £30 .. | £0 17 0 | £50 .. | £1 8 0 | £200 .. | £4 10 0 |
| £20 .. | £0 11 0 | £40 .. | £1 5 0 | £100 .. | 2 5 0 | £500 .. | £11 5 0 |

Free Life Insurance. Free Fire Insurance. No Security. No Deposit.

Head Offices and showrooms } 1, 2, 3, 4, Town Hall Buildings, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, The Grove, adjoining Mare St., London, N.

Catalogues and full particulars post free.

A. M. STEWART, Managing Director.

EFFERVESCENCE PURELY NATURAL

MATTONI'S GIESSHÜBLER NATURAL MINERAL TABLE WATER.

at all Chemists, Wine Merchants, Stores, Hotels, &c.
Sole Agents: INGRAM & ROYLE, LTD., LONDON, LIVERPOOL, BRISTOL.

GREAT SALE

OF

Ladies' and Children's

WINCEY NIGHTDRESSES

At Messrs. COPLAND & LYE'S.

Ladies' Nightdresses.

Made of Fine Cream Scotch Wincey (a material which combines comfort with durability). Simple style, made with small collar edged with feather frills.

Full size, 9/11; Outsize, 11/9.

If by post, 4d. extra.

The same style of Nightdress may also be had with an edging on collar and cuffs of fine Torchon. Price 13/11.

Children's Cream Wincey Nightdresses.

In a full range of sizes, made in simple style with small collar edged with a feathered frill.

SIZES AND PRICES:—

| 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 5/11, | 6/6, | 6/11, | 7/6, | 7/11, | 8/6 | 9/6. |

Or if by post, 3d. each extra. To fit from 3 to 14 years.

SALE CATALOGUE POST FREE.

Carriage Paid in Britain on Orders of £1 and upwards. All Goods delivered free within 10 miles of Glasgow.

COPLAND & LYE,

Caledonian House, Sauchiehall Street, GLASGOW.

STAMMERERS and all interested in the subject should read a book by one who cured himself after suffering forty years. "Stammering, its Treatment; and Reminiscences of a Stammerer." POST FREE.

B. BEASLEY, Dept. H., Tarrangower, Willesden Lane, Brondesbury, N.W.

"TRUTH" DOLL AND TOY SHOW.

PRELIMINARY NOTICE.

It seems early days yet to be reminding my readers of an event which is still some months ahead. But the fact that some 4,000 of dolls have already arrived from the manufacturers, and are crying aloud for clothes, impels me to direct the attention of TRUTH'S lady friends to their condition, and to the fact that they will be required for exhibition at the Albert Hall in the middle of December, prior to distribution among the London Poor Law Schools and Hospitals.

I hope that many ladies will take pity on the poor dolls, and forward their applications as soon as possible. The usual prizes for the dressing of the dolls will, of course, be awarded after the Show.

HOME-MADE TOYS.

The exhibits in this class last year did not come up to expectations. This year special efforts will be made to stimulate amateur toy-makers to take part in the Competition. With that object in view the Editor of TRUTH has decided (assuming the entries warrant it) to give a Special Prize for

HOME-MADE DOLLS' HOUSES,

in addition to the usual Prizes offered in the Home-Made Toys Class.

He desires me now to direct particular notice to this, as he is of opinion that the making of Dolls' Houses is an art in which amateur talent is likely to find congenial scope for its exercise. Moreover, a Dolls' House is a peculiarly serviceable sort of plaything for children, both because it is one in the delights of which several can share simultaneously, and also because it is better able to withstand the wear and tear of daily use than smaller and more fragile toys.

A further and more detailed announcement of the Show will appear in due course. Meanwhile, let readers of TRUTH make a careful note of the date, which is Wednesday and Thursday, December 14 and 15, 1910.

"TRUTH" PUZZLES.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,648.

The Sixteenth Series of "Queer Stories from Truth," which was published a few weeks ago, has met with such public favour that it has already been found necessary to print a third impression in order to meet the demand for it. And I imagine that most of my regular readers have already invested in this sprightly shillingsworth of holiday literature. It seems to me, therefore, that it might afford an interesting competition to invite them to apply their critical discrimination to the stories in the volume. So, in that conviction, I offer herewith the usual Prize of Two Guineas to that competitor who shall prove most successful in

NAMING, IN ORDER OF MERIT, THE THREE BEST STORIES IN THE RECENTLY PUBLISHED SIXTEENTH SERIES OF "QUEER STORIES FROM TRUTH."

The Prize award will be made by plébiscite.

No competitor may submit more than one list of three best stories; and all lists must reach TRUTH Office by the first post on Monday, Sept. 26.

SPECIAL ADVERTISEMENT PRIZE AWARD.

I have now completed the long and laborious task of examining the numerous sets of answers sent in for this competition.

Competitors are certainly to be congratulated on the quality of their work. Indeed the general level of excellence attained has rendered the process of selection more than ordinarily difficult.

The final results works out as follows:—

REDDER and CRESCENDO, each with 95 per cent. marks, will divide the First Prize of £15.

JOHN, M.P. and PIERS PENILES, each with 90 per cent. marks, will divide the Second Prize of £5.

VICTOR, STAMMER, PIBOS, SKYLARK, and MRS. B., each with from 85-88 per cent. marks, will divide the remaining £5 Prize money, each receiving £1.

The following competitors must also be singled out for honourable mention, viz., SAPPER, WONDERLAND, ARUNDO, MRS. JELLYBY, ALMA, MEDICUS PRIMUS, and QUI' APPELLE.

I regret that considerations of space render it quite impossible for me to print the prize winners' answers. But if any of those who have taken part in the competition wish to know any pertinent particulars, and will communicate with me, I shall be happy to reply to them in my "Answers to Correspondents."

"TRUTH" PRIZE No. 1,642.

STANZAS OF SIX RHYMED LINES IN WHICH THE FORMATION OF THE LETTERS M, A, N ARE EMPLOYED.

The Prize of Two Guineas in this competition is equally divided between ARCADIE and R. N., whose stanzas were printed in TRUTH of August 24 last.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret Street, Queen Anne's Gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom-de-plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on postcards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand, whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name, with the address, of JESSICA, winner of TRUTH Prize No. 1,624, is Mrs. W. J. Cook, Wheatley, Holbeck Hill, Scarborough.

I should point out to JESSICA that, owing to her having failed to apply for her Prize within the three months specified by Rule 10, she has, strictly speaking, forfeited her claim to the Prize. But, as she appears to have misapprehended the rule, I am waiving the objection in her favour.

 The real name, with the address, of PROT, winner of one-sixth of TRUTH Prize No. 1,638, is Miss M. Page, 1, Lansdowne Road, Hove, Sussex.

 The real name, with the address, of SCOTUS VIATOR, also winner of one-sixth of above, is J. S. Shepard, Esq., 2, Devon Parade, Northampton.

 The real name, with the address, of MANCUNIAN, also winner of one-sixth of above, is Joseph Carley, Esq., 30, Richmond Grove East, Longsight, Manchester.

 The real name, with the address, of HOPEFUL, also winner of one sixth of above is Miss P. W. Roose, 18 Alexandra Road, Birkenhead.

 The real name, with the address, of ALICUJUS, also winner of one-sixth of above, is W. H. Middleton, Esq., 236, High Street, Exeter.

 The real name with the address, of PRAK, winner of 10s. 6d. in connection with TRUTH Prize No. 1,634, is the Hon. Mrs. Norbury, Sherridge, Malvern.

 The real name, with the address, of PETRUCHIO, winner of one-third of TRUTH Prize No. 1,639, is Eric P. Hill, Esq., 145, Merton Road, Wimbledon.

 The real name, with the address, of MOUNT PHO, also winner of one-third of above, is Dr. L. Booth, Haddon House, Shelly Road, Worthing.

 The real name, with the address, of ALICUJUS, also winner of one-third of above, is W. H. Middleton, Esq., 236, High Street, Exeter.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1645.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

TEN LINE RHYMED ODES, CELEBRATING THE FIRST DAY OF PARTRIDGE SHOOTING.

P artridges are calling to the fields all day,
A nd welcome the September with joyous notes and gay;
R unning hither, thither, little do they know
T hat their days of brightness are so soon to go.
R eaping men are coming, all on slaughter bent.
I s this so-called sport, what the Creator meant?
D eath and pain and maiming men scatter as they go;
G uns are levelled gaily at the helpless foe.
E very English sportsman loves September's opening day.
S port has a wondrous power—'tis the poor birds have to pay.

Anti-Sportsman.

P erhaps in times of deep despair
A longing comes for days gone by,
R ecalling scents and moorlands, where
T he wild thyme and the heather lie.
R emembrance comes of past delight
I n tramping o'er the mountain side,
D rawing new life and power and might,
G aining fresh strength to breast the tide;
E ncouraging the burdened soul
S omehow to feel there is a goal.

J. E. T.

P leasure mountain and moor to man must supply,
A nd he dreams of enjoyment when the season is nigh,
R ecasing his action and his skill with the gun,
T rusting to the heavens for the light of the sun.
R ender gracious, what day for the first of September,
I dolised by the Nimrods who thy glories remember.
D ear to their hearts is the sport that implies,
G rand visions of slaughter to their rapturous eyes;
E choes are sounding and voices are calling,
S weetest day of the year when the birds are fast falling.

Mary.

P leasures attend us through the year,
A ll seasons are to sportsmen dear.
R ace follows race, match after match;
'T is change affords what rest we snatch.
R ound summer seas the yachtsman sails,
I n far-off lands the hunter trails.
D eer-stalking satisfies a king,
G rouse moors to wealth attraction bring.
E xcels to all for sport and bird,
S eptember, when the guns are heard.

Snap-shot.

P artridge! we hail thy advent once again,
A s August to September yieldeth place;
R ising from stubble, 'mid autumnal rain,
T o glut the market, at so much per brace,
R ecalling seasons past in quest of thee.
I hail once more the sport which autumn brings,
D eath to thy race, but, ah! new life to me.
G aily the poet of thy slaughter sings.
E nthusiasm now is rising high,
S eptember's op'ning day is drawing nigh.

Ballantrae.

P leasantly dawns the first of sweet September,
A cross the stubble shines a golden sun,
R ecalling days that you and I remember.
T hose golden days, with friend and dog and gun.
R etrievers! High Tegh Blarney and the rest of them
I loved them more than I have e'er confessed to them.
D ear dogs, who realised what they were meant for,
G etting the birds, and anything you sent for.
E ngland has need of them to-day, as sweet and low,
S eptember calls us, where the mangold-wurzels grow.

Klondyke.

P artridges, partridges, where are you hiding?
A re you so scanty because of the weather?
R eally the shooters you're bent on deriding,
T hose of them who've had enough of the heather.
R ecords of you are no longer recorded—
I 've an old game-book that drives me to tears.
D ays which for friends best of bags are afforded
G one—with the friends of those happier years.
E hen fagaces—Postume, Postume!
S port such as that is lost to me, lost to me!
Malignant.

P oor wee little bird! Now so gaily you strut
A round in the stubble,
R evealing brown wings when you fly gaily up;
T hough heedless of trouble.
R ight early you'll know what a sportsman can do,
I n spite of your beauty,
D emanding your life, yes, and taking it, too,
G reat Scot! as a duty.
E xpectant he waits on the first for the light,
S hoots straight, and your troubles are soon put to flight.
Almaviva.

"P erdrix! Perdrix!! et toujours Perdrix,"
A warmest of welcomes awaits you from me.
R oused at the dawn of St. Partridge's day,
T hrough turnips and mangolds I hasten away.
R ight, then to left, with accurate aim,
I bring to the ground many brace of the game.
D riving's no sport, and I think it's a shame—
G reat Scott! I've expended the last of my cartridges
E 'er luncheon arrives; so farewell to more partridges.
Roumanian.

P ick at 'em, snick at 'em, bring 'em to earth.
A im at 'em, claim at 'em, show 'em your worth.
R ub at 'em scrub at 'em, e'en as of yore;
T hrow at 'em, go at 'em—slaughter galore.
R ush at 'em, brush at 'em; steady your aim;
I tch at 'em, switch at 'em—beautiful "game."
D ash at 'em, crash at 'em; fill up your bag.
G et at 'em, let at 'em; sportsman, don't lag.
E dge at 'em, wedge at 'em; surfeit your thirst.
S mack at 'em, crack at 'em—September first!
Cercueil.

P artridge! plump and tender-breasted,
A lways easily digested;
R are in value—as a present,
T russed and skewered, like the pheasant.
R egal tables bear the weight of you,
I ll-bred hirelings voice a hate of you;
D umping down a "lofty" brace of you,
G lad to mop away all trace of you.
E ach bag bears witness to the sportsman's aim,
S uch game you were alive, and dead, still game!
Georgina.

P raise we first this day the olden
A rt, as we with pointer fare
R ound park, tilth, crisp stubble golden,
T ramping turnips, while the air,
R edolent of summer, braces
T ruly as with autumn wine.
D riven, too, right in our faces,
G reet we thee in fenced line
E agerly, though many a cartridge,
S laying not, salute thee, partridge.
Ben Ezra.

P lump, pretty partridges
A re plainly meant for cartridges.
R acing gives not half the fun
T hat's afforded by a gun.
R oaming over roots and stubble
I s the way to cheat life's trouble
D ogs are waiting, fit and keen,
G uns are furbished, bright and clean.
E very month may urge its plea,
S eptember is the month for me!
Cleveland.

P oor birds! Ye hapless partridges,
A ll, all are doomed, for cartridges,
R ed, blue, and brown, surround each waist.
T he keeper calls the dogs in haste—
R etriever, setter—all are ready,
I ntent and keen, yet trained and steady.
D estroyed is now the poor birds' shelter.
G uns popping send them helter-skelter.
E ach covey mourns full many a bird;
S ad calls resound—no answer heard.
Sportsman.

P rince Partridge, we'll fill up the cup
A nd toast thee as chief runner-up,
R ight close to that "second to none,"
T he grouse, best beloved of each gun.
R ing out crack of shot speeding cartridge,
I ts ping proclaims feast of Saint Partridge.
D isturbed in the roots and the stubble,
G ood coveys start, fly, dodge, and double;
E arth groans as they fall dead and dying,
S port's two-sided there's no denying.
Bel Demonio.

P rince, patrician, country squire,
A nd a host with guns to fire,
R eady are to kill once more
T he young partridge by the score.
R ound the corners, in the grass,
I n the coverts, which to pass
D ang'rous is, and might disturb
G reatly the sweet tempting bird,
E ver loved and ever the
S hooter's joy annually!
Ybloc.

P urple heather gleams around,
A utumn's scents and stores abound;
R ipening grain and fruit salute thee,
T reacherous man alone can shoot thee.
R oaming thro' the lanes and hedgerows
I shall see thee where the sedge grows,
D arting from the neighbouring copse,
G ladly o'er the golden crops.
E ven while I blush to say,
"S portsmen! luck be yours to-day."
Nurse.

P rime up your barrels and drink to your fill
A ir from the moorland and heathery hill!
R out out the gamest and plumpest of birds;
T ensely we watch them—too eager for words.
R ake them and pepper them! Gad! how they fall
I nto our bag! What a rapturous haul!
D rink to our meet in a mellowed old brew;
G rip of good-fellowship plighted anew.
E ver and aye shall we proudly remember
S uch a bluff, glorious First of September!
Forcat.

P repared for his journey, the sportsman sets out,
A ll eager to shine among comrades, no doubt;
R ight loyal to custom and hopeful withal
T hat not a few birds to his gun will soon fall;
R ushing wildly about to secure his prey—
I n truth he possesses a long-sighted eye.
D umbfounding his party with his prowess with gun,
G aining plaudits galore with his gesture and fun.
E ager he strives for a full bag in the end,
S o that he may forward a brace to each friend.
Cardiffian.

P erfect day,
A mbient air,
R ising birds,
T his is rare!
Rather warm
I n the sun,
D rink not bad.
G ummy yum!
E ighty brace—mine twenty-three.
S atisfied and home to tea!
Pagan.

P erchance one native-born of Berks or Kent,
A cross the seas by fate an exile sent,
R eflecting sadly on those days of yore,
T hat spent so blithely were with dog and gun,
R estless; of cities weary and heart-sore,
I n fancy dreams of days the happiest one—
D reams of broad stubble fields and rows of mangel,
G lories of gorse and bramble all a-tangle.
E ftsoon he wakes—alas! no sign of partridges;
S eptember's opening day! No gun! No cartridges!
Piers Peniles.

P oor, pretty birds, thy doom is sealed;
A t dawn the sportsmen take the field,
R ejoicing that September's here.
T hey reck not of the pain and fear;
R esounding shots disturb the air.
I n field and hedgerow dogs are there.
D elighted men come in to tea;
"G rand sport," they say, "to-day had we."
E ach man declares that nought can beat
S eptember's sport amidst the wheat.
Qu'Appelle.

PRELIMINARY ANNOUNCEMENT.

A Prospectus will be issued on THURSDAY, September 15th, of THE

CAM AND MOTOR GOLD MINING CO., LTD.

(Incorporated under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908.)

CAPITAL, £500,000, in 500,000 Shares of £1 each, of which 225,000 will be allotted to the Vendors in part payment of the purchase-money. 225,000 Shares will be Offered for Subscription at 27s. 6d. per Share.

DIRECTORS.

JULIUS WEIL, 3 and 4, Lothbury, London (Chairman of the London and Rhodesian Mining and Land Company, Limited).
SAMUEL WEIL, 3 and 4, Lothbury, London (Chairman of the Giant Mines of Rhodesia, Limited).
THOMAS BLAIR REYNOLDS, of 12, Old Jewry Chambers, London (Chairman of the Globe and Phœnix Gold Mining Company, Limited).
GILBERT ROY LEWIS, of 28, Bishopsgate Street Within, London (Director of the Hay Gold Mining Company, Limited).

Bankers.

THE LONDON JOINT STOCK BANK, LTD., 5, Princes Street, E.C.
THE STANDARD BANK OF SOUTH AFRICA, LTD., 10, Clements Lane, E.C.

Solicitors.

COWARD and HAWKSLEY, SONS, and CHANCE, 30, Mincing Lane, E.C.

Auditors.

DELOITTE, PLENDER, GRIFFITHS and CO., 5, London Wall Buildings, E.C.

Brokers.

J. C. BONE and SONS, 8, Copthall Court and the Stock Exchange, London.

Secretaries.

THE LONDON AND RHODESIAN MINING AND LAND COMPANY, LTD.

Registered Offices.

5, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON, E.C.

The Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring 138 Gold Claims in the Gatooma District, Southern Rhodesia. The claims have been reported on by Mr. V. S. Allen, of Messrs. Pearse, Kingston and Browne, the well-known Engineers, and, as will be seen from this Report, the work has been principally confined to the "Motor" and "Cam" Claims, on which a large amount of development work has been done. The amount of Working Capital required for the equipment of the Mine and for necessary shaft sinking and development, to bring the Mines to a producing stage, is estimated by Mr. V. S. Allen at £150,000; but the Board has decided to increase this to approximately £200,000, to provide amply for any excess on the estimates and to pay the preliminary expenses of the Company.

The Vendors to the Company are (a) The London and Rhodesian Mining and Land Company, Limited, of 5, Moorgate Street, E.C.; (b) African and European Investment Company, Limited, of 28, Bishopsgate Street Within, E.C.; (c) Rhodesian Abercorn Shamva Trust, Limited, of 408, Salisbury House, E.C.; and (d) The Enterprise Gold Mining and Estates Company, Limited, of 5, Moorgate Street, E.C.

The purchase price has been fixed at £325,000, payable as to £100,000 in cash and £225,000 in fully-paid shares of the Company.

Assurance and Banking Announcements.

GENERAL
Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corporation Limited.

ESTABLISHED 1885.

Assets - - - - £1,650,000.
Claims Paid - £3,000,000.

LIFE and PROPERTY INSURED, and Every Liability Covered at Low Rates.

LIVE STOCK & PLATE GLASS DEPARTMENTS NOW ADDED.

☞ The Bonds of this Corporation are accepted by all Departments of His Majesty's Government.

Insurance Agents and Gentlemen having spare time on their hands will find this Corporation's terms and methods of work particularly advantageous.

Prospectuses and every information free by return post.

CHIEF OFFICES:
GENERAL BUILDINGS, PERTH.
KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.
F. NORIE-MILLER, J.P., General Manager.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.
NOTICE.

Members of the Stock Exchange are not allowed to advertise for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than their own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, nor in any way under the control of the Committee.

Members issuing Contract Notes are required to use such a form as will provide that the words "Member of the Stock Exchange, London," shall immediately follow the signature.

A List of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

BANK OF EGYPT, LIMITED.
Telegrams—"SPHINX, LONDON." Telephone—312 LONDON WALL.
Incorporated by Royal Charter in 1856, and Registered as Limited in 1887.
CAPITAL £1,500,000 in 60,000 SHARES OF £25 EACH
(10,000 BEING UNISSUED SHARES).
£12 10s. per Share is paid, and the balance can only be called up in the event of the Company being wound up
CAPITAL PAID UP—£625,000. RESERVE £680,000.

Board of Directors.—The Lord Rathmore, George T. Biddulph, Esq., The Hon. S. Carr Glyn, The Lord Grenfell, G.C.B., Sir Colin Scott Moncrieff, K.C.S.I., R. L. Barclay, Esq.
Bankers.—The Bank of England; Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co.; Messrs. Barclay & Co., Ltd. Solicitors.—Messrs. Bircham & Co.
Auditors.—Messrs. Price, Waterhouse & Co. Secretary.—Arthur Nichols, Esq.
BRANCHES at: Alexandria, Cairo, Port Said, Khartoum.
AGENCIES at: Mansoura, Tanta, Zag-Azig, Fayoum, Beni-Souef, Minieh, Assouan, Suez Suakin, Damanhour, Girgeh, Chebin Elkom, Esneh, Luxor, Tahta.
The Bank issues Drafts, Letters of Credit, and negotiates and collects bills on Egypt and the Soudan. Buys and Sells Egyptian and other Securities, and transacts every description of Banking business. Remittances made by cable, and current accounts opened. Deposits taken for fixed periods; rates on application.
Egypt House, New Broad Street, London, E.C.

THE UNION BANK OF AUSTRALIA, Ltd.
Established 1837. Incorporated 1880.

| | |
|---|---|
| Paid-up Capital .. .. .. .. .. .. | £1,500,000 |
| Reserve Fund .. .. .. .. .. .. | £1,310,000 |
| Reserve Liability of Proprietors .. .. .. | £3,000,000 |

HEAD OFFICE—71, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.
Drafts are granted on the Bank's branches throughout the Australian States and Dominion of New Zealand. Telegraphic remittances are also made. Bills are purchased or sent for collection. Deposits are received for fixed periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

BIRKBECK BANK. ESTABLISHED 1851.
Southampton Buildings, High Holborn, W.C.
ALMANACK, with full particulars, POST FREE.
C. F. RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY
(LIMITED),
HOLBORN BARS, LONDON, E.C.
INVESTED FUNDS - - £75,000,000

ALLIANCE
ASSURANCE CO., Ltd.
Head Office: Bartholomew Lane, LONDON, E.C.

Accumulated Funds exceed £17,000,000.

Chairman:
Rt. Hon. LORD ROTHSCHILD, G.C.V.O.

THE OPERATIONS OF THE COMPANY EMBRACE ALL BRANCHES OF INSURANCE.

DEATH DUTIES.—Special forms of Policies have been prepared by the Company providing for the payment of Death Duties, thus avoiding the necessity of disturbing investments at a time when it may be difficult to realise without loss.

INCOME TAX.—Under the provisions of the Act, Income Tax is not payable on that portion of the Assured's income which is devoted to the payment of annual premiums on an assurance on his life. Having regard to the amount of the Tax, this abatement (which is limited to one-sixth of the Assured's income) is an important advantage to Life Policyholders.

Full particulars of all classes of Insurance, together with Proposal Forms and Statement of Accounts, may be had on application to any of the Company's Offices or Agents.

Applications for Agencies invited.
ROBERT LEWIS, General Manager.

THE OCEAN
FOUNDED 1871. EMPOWERED BY SPECIAL ACT OF PARLIAMENT.
CHAIRMAN:
SIR THOMAS HEWITT, K.C.
GENERAL MANAGER & SECRETARY:
RICHARD J. PAULL.

ACCIDENT & GUARANTEE CORPORATION LTD.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
POLICIES AGAINST LIABILITY FOR ACCIDENTS TO THE PUBLIC.
Horse Driving, Motor Car & General.
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.
EXCESS BAD DEBT.
MOTOR CAR.
BOILER & LIFT INSPECTION AND INSURANCE.

FIRE BURGLARY.
ASSETS EXCEED —— £2,000,000.
CLAIMS PAID OVER —— £8,000,000.
LICENCE & MORTGAGE INSURANCES.
GUARANTEES OF FIDELITY.

HEAD OFFICE.
MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

A "CAPITAL & INCOME" POLICY
is a SOUND INVESTMENT. Capital created, then Income paid until Capital required. No medical examination.
Full particulars forwarded by post.
THE NATIONAL BENEFIT TRUST, Limited,
10, FINSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.
Vacancies for first-class representatives.

Refuge Assurance Company Limited.
Chief Office: OXFORD STREET, MANCHESTER.
London Office: Refuge Assurance Buildings, 133, Strand, W.C.

Premium Income exceeds £2,601,000
Total Claims paid, £13,330,000 Funds exceed £6,838,600

Beecham's Pills

by their purifying effect on the blood, cleanse and tone up the entire system, causing every organ of the body healthfully to perform its allotted function, thereby inducing a perfectly balanced condition, and so

Make Life a Pleasure.

SCHWEITZER'S

Cocoatina

THE PERFECT PURE COCOA WHICH DOES NOT

constipate

Of Grocers, Chemists, and Stores.

H. SCHWEITZER & CO., Ltd.,
143, YORK ROAD, LONDON, N.

For GOUT, GRAVEL, RHEUMATISM, &c., drink

VICHY-CELESTINS (State Spring)

Can be used with light Wines, Spirits, or Milk.
Sole Agents: INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd., 26, Upper Thames-st., E.C.
Of all Chemists, Grocers, Stores, &c.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
SIR MORELL MACKENZIE,
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
MISS EMILY FAITHFUL,
THE LATE GEN. W. T. SHERMAN,

and many other persons of distinction, have testified to the remarkable efficacy of

Himrod's Cure for Asthma.

Established over a Quarter of a Century.

Prescribed by the Medical Faculty throughout the world. It is used as an inhalation and without any after bad effects. A free Sample and detailed testimonials free by post. In tins, 4s. 3d. British Depôt—46, Holborn Viaduct, London; also of NEWBERY & SONS, BARCLAY & SONS, I. SANGER & SONS, W. EDWARDS & SON, MAY, ROBERTS, & CO., BUTLER & CRISPE, JOHN THOMPSON, Liverpool, and all wholesale houses.

¶ "They are one of the wonders of the world, these stories, and people are never tired of asking who writes them."

This is the comment of the Editor of the Bystander on the SIXTEENTH SERIES of

QUEER STORIES

3rd Edition.] FROM "TRUTH." [3rd Edition.

The Justice of this Criticism is fully borne out by the following Extracts from Reviews of this Latest Volume:

SCOTSMAN.—"Have long enjoyed well-deserved favour."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A selection from this well known and deservedly popular feature in our popular contemporary. All its stories are wide awake."

REFEREE.—"It contains thirty stories, all of which are interesting, and some of which are very good indeed."

THE JEWISH WORLD.—"A splendid exchange for a shilling."

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.—"Very engrossing. They are 'queer' stories in that practically every one ends in an unexpected way, and contains a good surprise."

BAZAAR.—"This latest series should have as large a circulation as those which have preceded it."

SPORTSMAN.—"We need not commend them; they are well known to be entertaining."

ULSTER GUARDIAN.—"There are no short stories to compare with those which appear weekly in TRUTH, and we cannot think of a better shillingsworth of holiday fiction than one of the volumes . . . which contain thirty of the brightest and best of these famous stories."

SUSSEX DAILY NEWS.—"A brilliant shillingsworth. Practically every one of the thirty stories it contains is of much more than ordinary interest. They are of that happy magnetism which compels the reading of the whole story once the first page has been scanned."

WORCESTER HERALD.—"Brighter reading for the railway carriage or the odd half-hour anywhere cannot be found."

THE NORTHERN WHIG.—"244 pages of true enjoyment."

CORK EXAMINER.—"Extraordinary value for the modest sum charged for the book."

NOTTINGHAM GUARDIAN.—"Comes opportunely to serve for holiday and seaside reading."

SPORTING LIFE.—"Better holiday fare it would be difficult to find. The stories are, needless to say, varied and bright, and form an exceptionally good shillingsworth."

FINANCIAL TIMES.—"May be recommended to those who are taking their holidays."

HOSPITAL.—"We strongly recommend this excellent shillingsworth."

FINANCIER.—"Well up to the level of excellence established by the first volume of this always entertaining series."

(By Post, 1s. 3d.) PRICE ONE SHILLING (By Post, 1s. 3d.)

"TRUTH" Office, Carteret Street, London, S.W., and at all Railway Bookstalls, Newsagents, etc.
Publishing Office: 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Printed for the Proprietor by St. Clements Press, Ltd., Portugal Street, Kingsway, W.C., and Published weekly by H. Labouchere at 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to Reginald E. Booker, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret Street, Queen Anne's Gate, S.W. Entered as Second-Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

· TRUTH ·

'Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1760. Vol. LXVIII. Wednesday, September 21, 1910. Price Sixpence.

Contents.

| | PAGE |
|---|---|
| Entre Nous | 693 |
| Scrutator:— | |
| British Bogeys for Germany | 705 |
| The Patent Agent in the Dock | 707 |
| The Wiles of the House Agent | 707 |
| Notes from Paris | 708 |
| Letter from the Linkman | 710 |
| Correspondence: | |
| Votes and Wages | 711 |
| Drink Cures | 711 |
| The "Undeveloped Land" of Medicine | 711 |
| Mammon:— | |
| Round the Markets: Home Rails and Labour—Cheap Mexican Southerns. Rubber: Dividend Estimates—Crude Rubbers.—Kaffirs and Rhodesians—Nigerian Tin Developments—Bank Shares for Investment—A Rubber Share Ramp—The Bucket-Shop Brigade—"Vigilant's" Letter-Box | 712-720 |
| Insurance | 720 |
| Company Meetings | 722 |
| Queer Story:— | |
| Lady Victoria's Lapse | 723 |
| Books | 725 |
| Art | 727 |
| Music | 728 |
| The Theatres | 729 |
| Sport | 730 |
| Motors and Motoring | 733 |
| Woman:— | |
| Beauty the Unbeautiful | 735 |
| Mrs. A.'s Diary and Letter-Box | 736 |
| Work and Play | 737 |
| Letter from Madge | 738 |
| Chessboard Patience | 740 |
| "Truth" Puzzles | 749, 750 |
| Amusements | 741 |
| Banking Announcements | 751 |
| Publishers' Announcements | 741, 742, 743, 744 |
| Selected Foreign Hotels | 746 |
| Foreign Pensions | 747 |
| The Truth English Hotel List | 747 |
| Insurance Announcements | 730, 733, 740, 751 |

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Inquiries to which an answer is desired by post must in all cases be accompanied by the Coupon printed on the third page of the cover of Truth and by a stamped envelope.

Replies cannot be given by post or by telegram to inquiries relating to Investments, Insurance, or other matters within the department of the City Editor. Such inquiries can only be answered in the paper, and they must comply with the rules printed under the heading "Vigilant's Letter Box" in the section of Truth entitled "Mammon."

ENTRE NOUS.

IT would take a great weight off my mind if a few kind ladies would undertake to dress a few more of the dolls which are required for distribution among the workhouses and hospitals in connection with the Truth Toy Fund. For some reason unknown, volunteers have not been coming forward in the usual numbers up to the present date, and the general manager of the Truth Doll Department tells me that he has still upwards of 1,200 dolls on hand in a state of nudity. I feel sure that when this is known further applications will be forthcoming. Most of those on hand are of the small size, but there are still a few large dolls left, and I have been particularly disappointed in not receiving any applications for the "Natural" dolls, which are a new feature this year, and present special opportunities for ladies to exercise their skill upon, as well as being calculated to give special pleasure to their ultimate owners.

---

The King and Queen will be in residence at Windsor Castle from the second week in October until they come to town for the season in February, except for two visits to Sandringham. It is understood that the King's first shooting in Norfolk will take place during the third week in November, and the second battues are to be early in December. The King is to stay at York Cottage, and he will probably be accompanied to Sandringham by the Queen on one of his visits. The first week of shooting will be occupied with partridge driving, and the second is to be devoted to pheasant and wildfowl.

---

The King drove last Tuesday morning from Balmoral to Mar Lodge, accompanied by the Prince of Wales and Lord Crewe, and they joined the Duke of Fife and Lord Farquhar for a deer drive on the Glen Quoich beat of Mar Forest. Several heavy stags were killed, and two fine heads were secured. The King will join in the deer drives over the Glen Derry and Glen Ey beats of Mar Forest before he leaves Balmoral.

---

The first big deer drive of the season in the Royal forests took place last Wednesday over the south-eastern beat, near Loch Muick. This is a part of Whitemonth Forest, on the Abergeldie estate. There were seven guns (including the King, the Prince of Wales, and Prince Henry of Prussia), and five heavy stags were killed. There is to be a drive this week (if the weather is favourable) in Ballochbuie Forest, where the stags are at present very numerous. There will also be a drive in Abergeldie Forest. The King has been salmon fishing on the Abergeldie and Balmoral waters on the Dee with fair success, and Lord Kitchener (who was staying at Balmoral Castle) had some excellent sport last Tuesday.

---

The Prince of Wales returned on Friday evening to the Royal Naval College, Dartmouth, from Balmoral. The Prince is to leave Dartmouth in April. Prince Albert went back to Osborne on Friday, and he is to be transferred to Dartmouth after the Christmas holidays. It is expected that the two princes will leave England about twelve months hence on a voyage round the world, during which they will visit the principal colonies. If this plan is carried out the Prince of Wales will enter the Army when he returns home, while Prince Albert is to join the Navy. This arrangement will be in accordance with the family precedent.

---

It was stated in Truth several weeks ago that after Queen Alexandra's visit to Mar Lodge she would embark at Dundee in the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert for Copenhagen. A number of daily and weekly journals have been constantly stating that Queen Alexandra would not go to Denmark this year, and that her visit to Mar Lodge would extend over several weeks. Her Majesty never entertained any other plan than to join the Empress Marie in Denmark, but she has left England a fortnight later than the date which was originally fixed for her departure owing to her having prolonged her stay at Sandringham last month. It is not expected that Queen Alexandra will return to England before the beginning of November at the earliest, when (according to present arrangements) she will settle at Sandringham Hall for the winter. However, her Majesty's plans are very uncertain.

---

If the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland are not able to visit Denmark during the autumn, it is probable that Queen Alexandra and the Empress Marie will pay them a strictly private visit at their country seat in Upper Austria, where they would stay for about a fortnight. Queen Alexandra and the Empress Marie are very anxious to meet their youngest sister, who has been in a delicate state of health for some time past. If Queen Alexandra pays this visit she will go to Gmunden towards the end of next month when she leaves Denmark.

---

The Queen of Norway and the Crown Prince Olaf are to arrive in England about the second week in November, and they will spend the early part of the winter at Appleton House. King Haakon will join his wife and son early in December, and the Royal party will return to Norway either just before or directly after Christmas.

---

When Prince Christian had concluded his "cure" at Kissingen he proceeded thence to Schloss Primkenau, in Silesia, on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Schleswig-Holstein-Augustenburg. Prince Christian was at Vienna last week, and he is now paying visits in Hungary, and will proceed thence to Munich, in order that he may spend a few days at Tegernsee with the Duchess Dowager of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha.

---

The Duc and Duchesse de Chartres are now residing at the Château of Saint Firmin, their place near Chantilly. They will probably go to Copenhagen early next month on a visit to Prince Waldemar of Denmark at the Château of Bernstorff.

---

The Comtesse de Flandre has arrived at her villa near Lucerne, from Mont Dore, where she had been taking the waters. H.R.H. will spend next month at the Château d'Amerois, her place in the Ardennes, where she will receive visits from the King and Queen of the Belgians, the Prince and Princess of Wied, the Duc and Duchesse de Nemours, and Prince and Princess Charles of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen. The Comtesse de Flandre will probably pay a visit to her brother the King of Roumania, at Bucharest in November, before she settles at Brussels for the winter.

The Marquis de Soveral returned to London last week from Lisbon, and on Thursday night he left the Portuguese Legation on a visit to the King and Queen at Balmoral Castle.

---

Mr. Haldane left Cloan, his place in Perthshire, on Monday for Balmoral, where he has succeeded Lord Crewe as the Minister in attendance on the King.

---

Queen Victoria granted an apartment in St. James's Palace to Sir Fleetwood Edwards many years ago, and he occupied it until his death. It is expected that this residence (which is in Colour Court) will be granted by King George to Lady Edwards in recognition of her husband's long and valuable service.

---

Sir Dighton Probyn has been residing for some time at Birkhall House, the King's place in Glen Muick, which was placed at his disposal by his Majesty. During the last ten years of Queen Victoria's reign Birkhall was the autumn residence of the Duchess of Albany.

---

Grouse-driving has been going on briskly over the principal moors in Scotland during the last fortnight, and some very heavy bags have been obtained. On the Duke of Richmond and Gordon's Blackwater moors, in Banffshire (let to Mr. J. D. Cobbold, along with Glenfiddich Forest) seven guns killed over 1,000 brace of grouse in five days last week. On Lord Ancaster's Glenartney moors, in Perthshire, a party of five guns (including Lord Ridley, Lord Middleton, Lord Charles Beresford, and Lord Willoughby de Eresby) killed 1,258½ brace in five days. The deer forest and moors of Glenartney, near Comrie, are this season in the hands of Lord Willoughby de Eresby. Last year these celebrated shootings were let to Mr. Robert Fleming.

---

Lord and Lady Eustace Cecil are this week entertaining a family party for the celebration of their golden wedding at Lytchett Heath, Dorset. Lord Eustace Cecil is the fourth and youngest son of the second Marquis of Salisbury by his first wife, who was the daughter and heiress of Bamber Gascoyne, a prominent figure in the House of Commons during the reigns of George IV. and William IV. Lord Eustace, who is married to a daughter of the second Earl of Eldon (great granddaughter of the Chancellor), sat in Parliament as one of the Tory members for Essex from 1868 until 1885, and he held the office of Surveyor-General of the Ordnance from 1874 until 1880 under Lord Beaconsfield.

---

Sir George and Lady Julia Wombwell had their usual party at Newburgh Park last week for the Easingwold Agricultural Show, and Lord and Lady Londonderry and Lady Howe were among their guests. It was the Jubilee Show, and Sir George was presented with a very handsome Queen Anne silver cup. The Duke of Cambridge was his guest at Newburgh for this show during twenty-two consecutive years, and on one occasion Sir George was accompanied to Easingwold by King Edward, then Prince of Wales.

---

Sir George Wombwell, who is an admirable landlord and a pattern squire, inherited the Newburgh estates from his grandmother, who was the daughter and heiress of the last Lord Fauconberg, to whose ancestor (Anthony Belasyse) the manor had been granted by Henry VIII. Newburgh is a picturesque house, standing in a well-wooded park, and it is noted for a collection of Cromwellian relics and some good portraits. Cromwell's daughter, Mary, was the second wife of the second Lord Fauconberg, and it is believed that his remains were brought secretly to Newburgh and walled up under the staircase. This place is in the parish of Coxwold, of which Sterne was vicar, and his house (Shands Hall) was carefully restored by Sir George Wombwell. Lady Julia Wombwell is a granddaughter of both Sarah Countess of Jersey (the great "Child" heiress who figures in several of Lord Beaconsfield's novels) and the first Sir Robert Peel.

---

Lord and Lady Brownlow will return shortly to Ashridge Park, Hertfordshire, from Glencanisp Forest, Sutherland, where they are spending a few weeks. They intend to pass the autumn at Ashridge, and early in December they will proceed to Belton Hall, the family place near Grantham, for the winter. Glencanisp, which belongs to the Duke of Sutherland, is a comparatively new deer forest, near Loch Inver, and it comprises over 33,000 acres. There is very grand scenery all round the lodge.

---

Mrs. Harcourt Mitchell, who died on Friday at Llanfrechfa Grange, Monmouthshire, was the eldest daughter of the late Mr. Rolls, of The Hendre, and sister of Lord Llangattock. She was married in 1860 to Mr. F. J. Mitchell. She was a clever, bright, and cultivated woman, and she wrote some novels and two volumes of verse. She had a remarkable knowledge of antiquarian subjects.

---

Sir George Bartley sat in the House of Commons for over twenty years, and he took an active part in Parliamentary affairs and became notorious as an expert in obstruction when Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Bill of 1893 was in Committee. During Lord Salisbury's third Government Sir George took an independent line on several occasions. Partly, no doubt, for this reason he was not one of the most popular characters in the House; but he was a conscientious, well-meaning man, who took his Parliamentary duties very seriously and discharged them faithfully.

---

Mr. Duguid-McCombie, of Easter Skene and Lynturk, who died last week, was a well-known Aberdeenshire laird, and he was distinguished as an antiquary and an authority on heraldry. He succeeded in 1890 to the large estates of his uncle, Mr. William McCombie, the famous cattle breeder.

---

Mr. L. B. Starkey, of Norwood Park, Notts, who died on Friday, was for many years a prominent figure in Yorkshire politics. He unsuccessfully contested the Southern Division of the West Riding in 1868, and he was returned in 1874 as one of the Tory members, but he lost his seat in 1880. Mr. Starkey was a director of the great woollen manufacturing business of Starkey Brothers, of Huddersfield, which had been established by his father and uncle nearly a century ago. He took a keen interest in the charitable and educational institutions of Huddersfield, and he was a staunch and generous Churchman. He was a thoroughly practical man of business, and dealt with affairs from the strictly commonsense point of view. His eldest son, Mr. J. R. Starkey, is the Tory member for the Newark division of Notts. Mr. Starkey had resided for many years at Norwood Park, near Southwell, a place which was formerly a hunting seat of the Archbishops of York.

---

Sir Charles Stirling, of Glorat, whose death was announced last week, was the third and youngest son of the late Captain George Stirling, who was himself a younger son. He travelled extensively for several years in Asia and Australia before he succeeded his brother, in 1861, in the baronetcy and estates. He was a popular landlord, and took a most active interest in all the local affairs of Stirlingshire, and he was a keen sportsman. He increased the family estates by purchasing the property of Bencloich, and he rebuilt the house at Glorat and greatly improved the place. The family of which he was the head is a very ancient one, and Sir Charles was a direct descendant of Sir John Stirling of Glorat, armourbearer to King James I. of Scotland.

---

In view of the recent railway accidents in France, the appended account by a friend of his experiences when travelling from Paris to Lausanne at the beginning of last month is interesting and instructive. When a special express can be despatched from Paris without notifying any of the stations en route that it is coming—and this is only an isolated illustration of the almost incredible slackness and inefficiency that are displayed in the working of the holiday traffic—it is scarcely surprising that disasters occur. My friend first of all describes the scene of confusion at the Gare de Lyon, where he eventually got into a train labelled "Interlaken," after receiving an assurance that, "whatever the indications, the train was directing itself to Lausanne." That "directing itself" was in this case a peculiarly appropriate phrase may be judged from what followed:—

A French lady and gentleman shared our compartment. The lady was very communicative. According to her, the ordinary train to Lausanne was (as I thought) the Milan express, but that during the summer a Lausanne special was sent three nights each week. To-night was not a special train night, but so many passengers had booked to Lausanne that the Interlaken train had to be commandeered to carry them. Dijon was our first stopping place. To our surprise the chef de la gare there came round ordering all voyageurs for Lausanne to descend. Everybody in the train descended except a gentleman who had created a ruction at the Gare de Lyon. He fiercely declared that he was forced into the train at the Gare de Lyon, and he would stay in it till it took him to Lausanne. All the descended passengers joined in the dispute with French fluency. We could not make head or tail of what was going on till our fellow-travellers returned, and the lady said to the gentleman, "Allons, the valise may now re-enter." This seemed good enough to justify our re-entering, too. When we were all reseated we asked the gentleman where the train was really bound for. "Ah," he answered, "we are in a train directing itself nowhere. The suffrages of the voyageurs decide the indications." From his more communicative wife we learnt that there had been a struggle between the chef de la gare at Dijon and the passengers as to whether the train should go to Interlaken or to Lausanne, and the passengers had triumphed. A similar struggle took place at Pontarlier, and again the passengers triumphed. There was considerable delay there, apparently for the purpose of ascertaining that the line to Lausanne was clear. After another delay at Vallorbe the train reached Lausanne safely at about half-past eight. I am not certain whether she still was labelled "Interlaken," but think she was.

Sackville Mechano-Therapeutic Institute.—Radiant Heat and Light Treatments. Electric Baths. Massage. Hospital-trained Nurses. Hours 10 to 7.30.—28, Sackville St., Piccadilly. Tel. 7402 Gd.

The Ritz Hotel and Restaurant, Piccadilly. Gerrard 8090. Overlooking the Green Park. Magnificent Ball and Banqueting Suites. Same Management and Tariff as the Carlton.

It was an uncommonly clever move of Mr. Lloyd George's to get together a caucus of experts to discuss the pros and cons of Form 4. It is perfectly obvious that a gathering of surveyors, land agents, solicitors, and such-like professionals could not seriously pretend to see any difficulty in answering the questions propounded in the famous document. Neither could they admit that it is an iniquitous atrocity that a man who experiences such difficulty should have to pay a solicitor, surveyor, or land agent to help him. What was to be expected under these circumstances followed. The conference could only pick a few insignificant holes in the form; the objections were easily answered by a few promises of consideration and assurances that every tenderness will be shown for landowners; and the Chancellor of the Exchequer marched off the field with colours flying.

---

The effect has already been to knock the bottom out of the agitation which was raging so furiously a fortnight ago. This is no matter for regret, because it was a factitious agitation, prompted for the most part by hatred of new taxation and for the rest by the lack of interesting matter to fill newspapers in the dull season. But all this does not alter the facts. The return demanded is in many respects beyond the comprehension of a layman; to this moment I have been unable to discover for certain the meaning of "total site value," as distinguished from the various other novel kinds of value which an owner is invited to calculate. The making of the return has put thousands of unoffending citizens to endless trouble and often a good deal of expense which they can ill afford. There is a strong probability that a great deal of hardship will be done by the valuation; and the benefit to the State which will result from all this annoyance is remote. The thing has been done in the wrong way, and most of all in being hurried through so violently.

---

A profoundly impressive rebuke was administered by the Times to an ill-timed jest of Mr. Lloyd George to the effect that the newspapers had lately divided their attention about equally between Form 4 and Dr. Crippen:—

> We regret that in the course of the conference he could not altogether abandon his habitual levity, but let fall an observation of an exceedingly unbecoming character, introducing the name of a man who is at this moment appearing to a charge that places his life in jeopardy.

---

When I read this sort of thing I feel—as I hope do other humble brethren of the press—what a great profession I belong to, and what a privilege it is to be associated, however remotely, with the great Panjandrums who ply their pens in the solemn and sacred precincts of Printing House Square. What a pitiful figure does this poor wretch of a Radical Minister cut before our august brother! What a contrast between the levity of the feather-headed politician, who cracks his paltry jokes in the very Treasury, not even hesitating to introduce the name of a man who is at this moment, etc., etc., and the majestic solemnity of the leader-writer, who delivers his scathing rebuke in language at once so apt, so dignified, so inspired by the great traditions of the place where he sits enthroned!

---

It would be too much to hope that the habitual levity of Mr. Lloyd George will be reformed by public censure. But the solemn pomp of our great contemporary may at least shed its elevating influence upon baser organs of public opinion In this frivolous age there is levity in newspaper offices as well as in Whitehall. The gravest matters—politics not excepted—are made the subject of misplaced jests by shallow-witted pressmen. Let us, then, look to Printing House Square and learn to compose our features, even as the haruspex of old, in a manner befitting our high calling. God save us all from a sense of humour!

---

No one appreciates more strongly than I do the importance of the wage-earning classes being represented in Parliament by men of their own order. It is important not only for them, but for the rest of the community that the Legislature should get their views and opinions at first hand. Nevertheless, I think that the trade unions are altogether wrong in the attitude they have now taken up towards the Osborne judgment. Mr. Shackleton and one or two other speakers at the Trade Union Congress recognised the difficulties in the way of restoring the status quo ante Osborne by Act of Parliament. But generally speaking the Congress failed altogether to grasp the objections to this course, whether from the public or trade union point of view. The way in which some speakers railed against "judge-made law" and impugned the impartiality of the Law Lords was absolutely foolish.

---

It is utterly wrong in principle that members of Parliament should be paid out of funds privately subscribed, no matter by whom. Members are supposed to represent the constituencies which return them. If they are, in fact, the paid agents of some organisation altogether independent of the constituency they are supposed to represent, the constitutional theory of representation is nullified. There is the strongest reason for insisting on rigid adherence to the constitutional theory, because to allow the payment of members by any voluntary organisation exposes us to the danger of having a House of Commons controlled by associations of wealthy private individuals with M.P.'s in their pay.

---

Of all sections of the community the working classes have the most reason to fear this danger, for they are the least able to fight the power of the purse, which is already far too strong in politics. It is astonishing that they do not perceive this. The direct danger to trade unionism of setting aside the Osborne judgment by legislation ought to be equally obvious to trade unionists. Mr. Osborne undoubtedly represented a considerable section of unionists, though they may be a minority. After what has happened it is highly probable that if power were given to the unions to subscribe for the payment of Labour M.P.s a great many of this minority would secede. Not a few working men already stand outside the unions because they disapprove of their political tendency. The more trade unionism is identified with current issues in politics the greater will be the number of non-unionists. In short, you cannot make trade unions political organisations without sacrificing their character as real "unions."

---

That the only remedy for the Osborne judgment is the payment of members and all election expenses out of public funds seems to my mind a proposition not open to serious question. This is the only safeguard against the danger of having M.P.s retained in the service of private organisations, and the only remedy for the undue influence which wealth at present exercises at parliamentary elections. Nearly all countries which have adopted representative government have seen the advisability of providing for the payment of members. The great majority of the Liberal party in this country has long been in favour of it. I hope, therefore, that the Government will make a firm stand for this measure as the proper solution of the difficulty raised by the Osborne judgment.

---

An additional reason why Ministers should take this course is now to be found in the fact that two of the leading organs of Conservative opinion in London have during the last week pronounced in favour of payment of members. It may take a good deal to reconcile old-fashioned Tories to this measure; but the old-fashioned Tory must be getting accustomed to sacrifice his most cherished principles on the altar of Tariff Reform. Do not the very eels get used to being skinned? What the high priests of Tariff Reform think to-day, the Unionist party thinks to-morrow. It looks, therefore, as if payment of members whenever a Liberal Government chooses to propose it is no longer likely to be opposed very strenuously.

---

During Mr. Gladstone's last Premiership an effort was made by the Radicals to induce him to bring in a Bill for this purpose. To this he would not consent, but he offered this compromise: All members who might declare that they had not more than £300 per annum were to be entitled to payment if they asked for it. Instead of bringing in a Bill, Mr. Gladstone proposed to include this payment in each year's Estimates. When it was suggested to him that he might as well include payment to all members in the Estimates, he asserted that this would be improper. But I never could understand why it would be proper to pay a few members through the Estimates but improper to pay all. When his offer was notified to the Radicals they declined it, on the ground that it would be most undesirable that there should be two categories of members—the paid and the unpaid.

---

The Government should bear in mind at the present juncture Mr. Gladstone's idea of providing for payment of members through the Estimates instead of by a special Act. If a resolution were passed providing the money in this way the charge would fall on the Estimates of next year—indeed, for the matter of that, the payment might be made at once, and the money obtained by a supplementary estimate on this year's Budget. The solid objections to the Osborne judgment would then disappear, whilst at the same time the objections to the trade unions compelling their members to pay for M.P.s out of their funds would also disappear.

---

The wonder to me has always been that any one should be against payment of members. Peers and M.P.s are handsomely paid for their services as items in an Administration, and the number of M.P.s who get large salaries for their services is perpetually on the increase. In these services is included a strict attendance in the House of Commons and the share that they have to take in its debates. But why, if they are to be paid, should M.P.s who do not form part of an Administration be called upon to work for nothing? Outside our country, in most all cases members of the Legislature are paid. Italy was till lately the one important exception, but an Act was recently passed there providing salaries for Parliamentary representatives of the country.

After asking for Labour exchanges the trade unionists now repudiate them, unless they are absorbed in their organisation, for the three resolutions which the Sheffield Congress passed by an overwhelming majority are nothing more than a demand that the exchanges should be run by the unions in place of Government. If all the workers were members of unions this proposal might go down; but as only about one-fifth are, I don't quite see where the non-unionists would come in.

---

Miss Emily Davison sends me another letter on the theory that to give women votes will lead to their labour being more highly paid. I publish a reasonable quantity of the letter in another column, but I have been unable to find room for a great deal which seems to me to have no bearing whatever on the point, and even what is left seems to me very wide of the mark. Miss Davison now admits that wages would not rise automatically as a direct result of votes, which is, after all, the point for which I have been contending. That they would rise as an indirect result seems to me a vain speculation, at variance with economic principles and with the facts in the case of men.

---

In order to show how confused and unconvincing are the arguments on this subject, I have printed Miss Davison's account of the "cock and hen" dispute in the printing trade at Edinburgh, although I cannot see that it has any bearing on the question of votes. The lady tells us in the first instance that men have been "ousted and undercut" by women compositors, whose work is equally efficient with that of men. The men refused to admit them to their union. This is described as "a pull," though it seems to me to have been foolish on the part of the men, seeing that if they admitted women to their union the women would have been compelled to accept the union rate of wages instead of "blacklegging."

---

The women then set up their own union. This was wise, if they desired to raise their standard of wages, but as one reads further one is surprised to discover that this does not seem to have been the idea. The wicked men next tried to "force the women to agitate for higher wages," but this the women would not do, because if they accepted the same wages as the men they would have been "squeezed out." In the name of wonder, why? If their labour was equally efficient, why should employers refuse to engage them? However, notwithstanding that the women were equally efficient and cheaper, the men's union succeeded in "forcing" the employers to discontinue the use of female labour. This result having been arrived at, we are bidden to infer that it is because men "have the sovereign power"—meaning, apparently, the parliamentary franchise.

---

Now, here we have an ordinary labour dispute. It happens to be a dispute between two unions, one of which accepts a lower standard of wages than the other, but for this reason it is precisely analogous to a dispute between unionists and non-unionists. In hundreds of such disputes between men the unionists have carried their point and compelled employers to discontinue the use of non-unionist labour. In such cases it has availed the non-unionist nothing that he happens to be a parliamentary voter. When a precisely similar dispute arises between male and female workpeople, and the union wins, why are we to infer, contrary to all experience, that the victory is due to the fact of the winners having votes?

---

Great Northern Central Hospital, Holloway, N. In serious and urgent need of immediate help. No reserves available. —L. H. Glenton-Kerr, Secretary.

In what way does the possession of the parliamentary franchise enable these Edinburgh compositors to "force" employers to sign an agreement excluding women from their shops? Common sense tells you that if the employers could get an adequate supply of equally efficient labour below the union rate they would have snapped their fingers at the union. They would have filled their shops with women, and left the unionists on strike in the street until they starved. The fact that the strikers were voters and that the "blacklegs" have no votes would never have influenced the mind of a business man for one moment. An employer has only to consider in such a case what will pay him best in the long run. The only conclusion that I can draw from this case is that the employers found that it would pay them better to accept the terms of the men's union than to rely exclusively upon female labour; in other words, Miss Davison seems to beg the whole question by her initial assumption that the female labour is as efficient as the male. From beginning to end her narrative points to the conclusion that the work of the women is not worth the same price as that of the men, and that this is why the women go to the wall.

I am told by those who are by way of knowing what is going on in Egypt, that there is likely to be a social and a political storm there next winter. The first will be due to the Khedive being determined to push forward his second wife—a certain Countess Torök. This lady is to receive officially the ladies of the Corps Diplomatique and other European ladies at the Palace, as Khediva, in lieu of the Khedive's first wife and his mother. As regards the political position, which is a good deal more important, the Nationalists are by no means cowed by Sir Edward Grey's protests against their action, and it is feared that a campaign against them will be met by more political murders like that of Boutros Pasha.

Our position in Egypt is a very difficult one. When with the assent of Europe we assumed the administration of the country, we gave the assurance that the occupation would only last until we had managed to bring into existence a national Government, based upon representative institutions. But far from endeavouring to create such a Government, we have established our own rule, and the so-called Khedival rule has been nothing but a farce. The Khedive and his Egyptian advisers occupy the position of one of the native rulers in our Indian Empire. Lord Cromer was an able administrator, and probably had soon come to the conclusion that it was desirable that we should permanently remain there and maintain our rule by suppressing rather than by encouraging nationalist aspirations. In this he may have been right or wrong. But it is hardly surprising that the Egyptians themselves should wish to become independent of us. The educated Egyptians see no reason why in Europe independence of all foreign rule is deemed patriotism, whilst in Egypt any attempt to secure this independence is to be regarded as a crime. The mass of the population are of the same opinion, although there is no doubt that we have greatly bettered their lot. On the other hand, if we were to leave Egypt, it is not improbable that the country would relapse into anarchy, and in any case it would certainly not be as well governed as it is now. How the difficulty will be overcome, it is difficult to say.

For my part I have been from the first against our occupation of Egypt, and I think I have been justified by the result. The occupation was brought about by the Khedive Ismail having recklessly incurred foreign loans and squandered the proceeds. Financiers had made huge profits out of these loans. The public could not be cozened into lending more money, and a general financial collapse was impending. Our original interference was promoted by financiers, with the object of warding off this collapse. The plea that it was necessary for us to uphold law and order in Egypt because the Suez Canal was an essential link in our line of communication with India was a flimsy excuse. We might have neutralised the canal by an international agreement, whilst it would always have been easy for us to close it in time of war, and use the Cape route to India.

It is a curious thing that no man held more firmly to the strategical error of our occupation of Egypt than the late Lord Salisbury. M. Waddington, in a despatch to the French Government penned when he was French Ambassador in London, gives an account of a conversation that he had with Lord Salisbury, and which was published in a French Yellow-book. Lord Salisbury had, he said, told him that he regarded the occupation as an entire mistake, and that this was not only his opinion, but that of all the naval and military experts that had been consulted. I am curious to know whether that is their opinion to-day.

In another column I publish a letter from Mr. H. A. Barker on the attitude of the medical profession towards the "bonesetter." What he says is worth notice in connection with the point raised the other day in the Truth article, "An Outside Oculist." Since that article was published I have had additional testimony from one or two quarters to the success of Mr. Mellor in cases where ophthalmic specialists have failed. As in the case of the bonesetters, there is too much of this evidence for it to be lightly dismissed as mere "chance cures." I have also had a letter from Mr. Mellor himself, who again expresses his willingness and his desire to explain his practice, and the theories on which it is based, to any specialist who cares to investigate the subject. It is a great pity that the medical profession should take up such a supercilious attitude towards "outside" practitioners who have achieved remarkable success by methods of their own, and who do not wish to make any secret of their methods. There can be little doubt that the public suffers from this attitude. A wise man is always ready to learn, and will not refuse the opportunity merely for some social or professional prejudice against a possible teacher.

When referring the other day to an organisation at Lincoln for the benefit of newsboys, I happened to remark that it was something for the proprietors of London halfpenny papers to think about. I have since learned that a number of people, one or two newspaper proprietors amongst them, have been doing something besides thinking about the subject, and as a result "The Newsboys' Club" is to open its doors in Farringdon Street early in October. Here will be provided baths and washing accommodation, the means of having their clothes repaired and replaced, a dining-room where they can obtain good plain food properly cooked at cheap rates, a well-equipped gymnasium, and a reading and amusement room. In addition to these physical attractions, the club also proposes to provide the lads with financial assistance in case of need, and secure just that element of kindly supervision in their off hours which the nature of their employment renders so desirable. I hope we shall go on from this to a more civilised organisation of the business of selling newspapers in the streets.

---

A large stone coffin found recently at Berwick-on-Tweed caused great excitement amongst local antiquaries. The letters E. J. were found inscribed on the floor of the coffin, and upon this foundation has been built the hypothesis that the coffin had been the temporary resting-place of King Edward I., who seems to have taken about a year to have made his last journey from the Border where he died to Westminster Abbey. Unfortunately for the hypothesis, a wag has come forward and made a declaration that he carved the letters on the coffin while it lay in a garden. The antiquaries will not, however, believe him. I wonder if they have a Pickwick club at Berwick.

---

Recently a gentleman in the country arranged with a firm of book auctioneers for the sale of a quantity of volumes, mostly first editions, which he regarded as valuable. On one set he placed a reserve of £50. The auctioneers advised that this was too much, saying that similar sets had only fetched about £25, and he thereupon withdrew his reserve altogether. The books were then knocked down for £3. Since the sale the former owner has indirectly tried to buy them back, but the dealer into whose possession they passed now asks £38 for them. The story has an obvious lesson for those who are unacquainted with the ways of the trade.

---

Apropos of a paragraph in last week's Truth, Mr. Lewis Melville, the author of the recently published biography of William Beckford, has asked me to make it clear that the erroneous statement as to Beckford having died "a ruined man" appeared in a review of the book, not in the book itself. As a matter of fact, this was one of the ridiculous stories about Mr. Beckford which Mr. Melville has exposed.

---

The references in Truth to the training of teachers by the London County Council largely in excess of the requirements of the schools has brought me a good deal of correspondence dealing with the question both from the Council's and the teachers' points of view. To me the problem seems much more like the notable triangular duel in which Mr. Easy fired at the boatswain, the boatswain fired at Mr. Easthupp, and Mr. Easthupp at Mr. Easy. If the unfortunate London ratepayer is placed in the position of the boatswain to receive the fire of Mr. Easy, representing the L.C.C., the parallel seems complete. The only action he can possibly take is bound to be at the expense of the teacher, who has spent his time and money in fitting himself for a non-existent post.

---

One correspondent urges that the difficulty is largely due to the democratic desire to afford equality of opportunity to scholars in the Council's schools. According to him, the scholar, either ambitious himself or responding to parental ambition, determines to train as a teacher. If in the early days lack of aptitude makes itself manifest pressure is brought to bear upon managers and inspector by relations and friends to allow the pupil teacher to have a chance of becoming fit, so that it is less difficult to let the would-be teacher go on and find out his or her value as a teacher from the fact that her services are not wanted. A more damning indictment of the present system could not possibly be framed. It is extravagant, wasteful to the ratepayers, and cruel to those who have been allowed to believe that they were being fitted with a vocation in life.

---

The same correspondent touches upon another point, the employment of married women in the schools, which a number of those who urge the grievance of the teachers write about very strongly. I agree with him that there is no reason why a first-class teacher should be got rid of because she is married if her domestic calls do not interfere with her work. In fact, in large girls' schools she is likely to be of particular value, though if what my correspondents tell me is correct, the efficiency of school work suffers in many instances through the retention of such teachers. The L.C.C. regulations permit, and in some circumstances enforce, the absence with or without pay of married teachers, whose places are taken by temporary substitutes. As a result, many such teachers are not in attendance for more than 75 per cent. of the possible days in the school year, and a case has been given me where the attendance fell as low as 60 per cent. Good results can scarcely be expected where classes are left to this extent in the hands of deputies.

---

A growl reaches me from the North in regard to the instruction which is provided at the various technical schools. The complaint is that the teachers have little practical knowledge of the application of the subjects to the respective trades, while the policy of those responsible for technical education is one of theoretical perfection rather than practical application. Consequently many students find life too short for the elaborate courses in which a study of the subsidiary sciences is considered essential, while those who pass through them find that their diplomas have little wage value in the eyes of shrewd employers. This perhaps explains the remarkable progress which the International Correspondence Schools have made in this country, for their courses are so devised that the instruction is of practical value from the first lesson.

---

Many places suffer from the immoderate ringing of church bells, but at Cambridge this affliction seems to be exceptionally severe. A letter that I have received gives a heartrending account of the ear-torturing and nerve-shattering clangour of the bells of two churches —the University Church, Great St. Mary's, in the middle of the town, and the Roman Catholic Church at the corner of Lensfield Road and Hills Road. The latter is the worse offender. Night and day the quarter hours are chimed with seven strokes for the first quarter, thirteen for the next, twenty for the third, and twenty-six for the fourth. Hearing the chimes at midnight means listening to thirty-eight strokes. The angelus (eighteen strokes in one note) is rung thrice daily, followed on each occasion by a hymn tune. On Tuesday evenings the bellringers practise for an hour or so, and on Fridays and Sundays there is a lot of ringing for services. The bells, I am told, are of such a tone that they can be heard to advantage two or three miles away. In the immediate neighbourhood they create a hideous din.

---

It has always struck me as an extraordinary thing that the law provides no practical protection from a church bell-ringing nuisance. There is, of course, the possible remedy of an injunction, but that would mean costly litigation. The German band and the Italian organ-grinder must stop their noise (or run the risk of being fined) if any householder requests them to do so. I see no reason why there should not be a similar means of dealing with the church bell question. It would perhaps be going too far to give the power of suppression to a solitary complainant; but certainly it ought not to be possible for the authorities of a church to persist in the infliction of such an annoyance—as has happened at Cambridge—in spite of the petitions and remonstrances of a considerable body of the local residents.

---

The most important of the numerous building works which have been going on at Oxford during the last year is the extension of the Bodleian, which was so urgently required. An underground chamber has been constructed, which connects the library with the Radcliffe, and it is estimated that this new chamber will suffice for the needs of the Bodleian during the next half century. The cost has been about £13,000, which has been taken out of the Chancellor's Fund.

---

I read the other day an interesting article on the politics of bishops, in which it was stated that in 1893 Mr. Gladstone was anxious to hurry on the consecration of Bishop Sheepshanks for the see of Norwich, in order that one member of the Episcopal Bench might vote for the Home Rule Bill. The writer of the article has made a strange mistake. At that date the new Bishop of Norwich was not entitled to take his place in the House of Lords until there had been five vacancies on the Episcopal Bench, and Dr. Sheepshanks did not obtain a place for some years.

---

Lord Loreburn has been favoured with quite a run of Church patronage since he attained to the Woolsack. He has presented to a great number of benefices, and he has filled up three stalls at Rochester, two at Norwich, one at Bristol, and one at Gloucester. His appointments have in every case met with general approval.

---

A residentiary stall in Rochester Cathedral has been placed at the disposal of the Lord Chancellor by the death of Canon Pollock, who was appointed by Lord Chancellor Halsbury about eighteen years ago. The stalls at Rochester were formerly worth £1,000 a year, but the revenue of the Chapter has been reduced by agricultural depression, and the stipend of a canon is now £600 a year, with an excellent house and garden, while the Dean is cut down from £2,000 a year to £1,200.

---

Lord Estcourt has presented the Rev. Canon Estcourt, vicar of Swindon, to the rectory of Shipton Moyne, near Tetbury, which is of the net value of about £320 a year, with house, and vacant by the death of Canon Golightly. Canon Estcourt has been working in the same diocese for thirty-four years, and he has been successively curate and rector of Long Newton during twenty-five years before he went to Swindon in 1901.

---

The Duke of Rutland has presented the Rev. C. T. Wills, late chaplain at Las Palmas, to the vicarage of Rowsley, Derbyshire, vacant by the resignation of the late incumbent. Rowsley is a picturesque village at the junction of the Derwent and the Wye. There is a very pretty modern church, which was restored about thirty years ago. The north chapel contains a very beautiful monument to Lady John Manners, mother of the present Duke of Rutland.

---

Bishop Dawes, who died last week, filled with conspicuous efficiency the Australian See of Rockhampton (Queensland) for sixteen years, having previously been Coadjutor Bishop in the diocese of Brisbane for six years. He retired through ill-health in 1908. During the early seventies he was one of the most active and popular Evangelicals in South London, and he took a prominent share in several important missions. His good work was recognised in 1877 by Bishop Jackson, who presented him to the vicarage of St. Mary, Charterhouse, where his nine years' incumbency was in all ways most successful. He was a man of much practical common sense and wide sympathies.

---

The Rev. William Oswald Massingberd, whose death was announced last week, had been a familiar figure in Lincolnshire for nearly forty years, and he belonged to one of the oldest families in the county. He was exceedingly popular, and his parishioners held him in the highest respect. He was a distinguished authority on all architectural and archæological questions, and he edited the "Lincolnshire Notes and Queries." He was a man of genuine culture and an accomplished scholar. Mr. Massingberd had been for thirty-seven years rector of South Ormsby, a living in the Wolds which has been held by members of his family for more than a century. The parish church, which was restored about forty years ago, is one of the finest in the district, with a remarkable font and two very good brasses. The park surrounding Ormsby Hall (Mr. Massingberd Mundy's place) is very pretty, and has a charming arched lime avenue. The vacant rectory of Ormsby is in the gift of Mr. Massingberd Mundy, and of the net value of about £500 a year, with an excellent residence.

---

The death of the Rev. Charles E. Chard is widely regretted in West Somerset, as he was one of the most popular ecclesiastics in the county. He was an excellent parish clergyman, and he was also a familiar figure at the neighbouring meets of the Taunton Vale Foxhounds, and had become a great favourite in the hunting field and in county society generally. Mr. Chard, who was a brother of "the hero of Rorke's Drift," had been vicar of Hatch Beauchamp, near Taunton, since 1885, having been presented to that living by the late Bishop of Bath and Wells (Lord Arthur Hervey). He will be much missed in his parish and throughout the district.

---

That old bugbear of the Nonconformist Conscience, the Continental Sunday, has been trotted out at Rhyl to prevent Sunday boating on the Marine Lake. It produced the usual effect. The Councillors nearly fainted with horror at the thought, and refused the permission asked for by the lessees of the lake. It is true that here in London boating goes on in the Royal parks as well as those under the control of the County Council, and yet we are no nearer the ideal of a day of innocent recreation which makes the real Continental Sunday so attractive. But the righteous men of Rhyl would probably not believe it. It takes a long time to remove the belief that the Founder of Christianity was not a mute at a funeral.

"SANITAS" is the Brand or Hall Mark of value for Disinfectants of all kinds, for use in the House, Stables, Kennels, &c. Pamphlet free. The Sanitas Co., Ltd., Limehouse, London, E.

---

TO A BARD OF WILD WALES.

O Bard of wild Cymry, impassion'd and ballad-y,
Sing us a song of the times that are old,
Days when the season for poets was salad-y,
Days when thy kin weren't left in the cold.
Tell of dark deeds that were bloody and odious;
Light them up here with the glow of thy song;
Rede us a rune that is purely melodious:
Good Bard, get along!

Sing of the chieftains of Wales, how they followed her,
Lived for her, died for her; raise thy sweet notes
Here for a hymn to the kingly Cadwallader
And of the love that he bore to his goats!
Speak of each ancient Druidical mystery,
Some that we never have heard of as yet,
Some that we try to remember from history—
But only forget!

Then let the smouldering fire of thy poesy
Burst into flame o'er the scenes of thy birth,
Torrent and mountain and valley and blowy sea
Flogging the sands of thy bold bit of earth!
We know of the charms of the Highlands of Scotia,
Anglia's angry and blustering gales,
Erin's dear beauties, and Wessex's otia,
But what of wee Wales?

Alas! art thou silent, thou relic of heathendom?
Cannot the thought of the past bid thee spout?
Rillet and runnel, have they no power? Be then dumb!
Plague on thee, Bard, thou hadst better get out.
Stay! is it the stress and the strain of the present time,
Is it political troubles that squeeze
Songs in thy breast of yon far-off and pleasant time—
Dull Bard, is it these?

---

With reference to the complaint of a correspondent in regard to the monopoly for the supply of spectacles at the Manchester Eye Hospital being held by a single firm of opticians, a well-known oculist tells me that his experience, after twenty-five years as surgeon in a London ophthalmic hospital, has convinced him that in no other way can the hospital really ensure that the work is properly done without putting the patient to unnecessary expense and inconvenience. Possibly this may be true in the case where the optician is definitely appointed and the scale of prices definitely fixed by the hospital authorities. But this, as I understand the complaint, is not the case at the Manchester Eye Hospital, where the holders of the monopoly merely have a stall, the customers having to go some distance to get their glasses fitted. In the case of patients attending from outlying districts additional expense and inconvenience would, in fact, be obviated if their prescriptions were filled by opticians living in their own neighbourhood.

---

I have to acknowledge 10s. from Mrs. Croker de Bland, and 2s. from J. H. O., towards the Toy Fund. J. H. O. also sends 2s. for the Tress Barry Fund, and Mrs. Croker de Bland 10s. for Lady St. Helier's Children's Holiday Fund.

The Duke of Connaught has appointed Major Lowther, Scots Guards, to act as his private secretary during the Royal visit to South Africa.

---

Colonel Cavendish will shortly vacate the command of the 2nd Battalion Grenadier Guards, and it is expected that he will be replaced by Major Corry, 3rd Battalion. The colonels commanding the battalions of this regiment are among the Field Officers in Brigade Waiting on the King. Colonel Cavendish is younger brother of the late Lord Chesham, and he is at present next heir to the title.

---

The promotion of Sir Edward Leach to the rank of full general recalls some early episodes in his career. When he was a junior captain of Engineers during the Afghan War of 1878-79 he was sent by Sir Sam Browne to make a survey of the Shinwari country near Gundamak, taking a company of the 45th Sikhs with him as escort. The tribesmen surprised the party, which would have been wiped out but for Leach's cool leadership. Barclay, who commanded the Sikh escort, was shot down at once, mortally wounded. Throwing away his sextant, Leach seized a rifle from a dead Sikh and took command of the company, withdrawing it with all its wounded men by alternate retreats of sections, one section covering the others till its turn came to retire. Leach shot four of the Shinwaris with his own hand, clubbing a fifth, who tried to rush him, with the butt end of his rifle, and receiving a nasty sword cut on the arm in return. The party escaped with comparatively small loss, and Leach was given the Victoria Cross which he had so well earned. Poor Barclay died a few hours after being carried into camp.

---

General Leach was also in McNeill's zariba in 1885 when it was rushed by the dervishes, and there again the cool courage of the boy-looking sapper major did wonders in preventing panic. The louder the dervish yells the brighter Leach's smile as he stood among the men with his hand upraised, not after the South African fashion to signal surrender, but as a warning to the men that they had got to stand. These incidents have always been deciding factors with the Selection Board whenever the Military Secretary has submitted Leach's name "for consideration with others" for any appointment or promotion which might be going.

---

A Service correspondent writes:—

In the August number of the Journal of the United Service Institution the General Staff give their views on "War and the Arme Blanche," and the vexed question of the armament of cavalry. Such a procedure is novel, but not unwelcome. But for whom does the General Staff speak? Is the voice that of Mr. Haldane or the Army Council, or are the views expressed merely those of military students at the War Office? The matter is of some importance, as the gist of the article is to the effect that Yeomanry should train in peace with the rifle only. To deprive the cavalry of our Territorial Army of their swords may be sound tactics, but any such measure will be highly unpopular and affect recruiting.

---

When the 20th Hussars returned to Ireland the other day it was found that about sixty horses had been so knocked up by the manœuvres that they were not capable of the comparatively easy march from Dublin to the Curragh. These animals were sent by train, but one, if not more, died on the road to the camp. An

For Mosquito Bites, Wasp or Bee Stings, nothing allays the irritation so quickly as Scrubb's Ammonia. Price 1s. per bottle. Beware of imitations.

Irish correspondent makes some comments upon these facts from the standpoint of a lover of animals, but I am afraid that it would be of little use to discuss the matter on those lines. In manœuvres the object is to reproduce as nearly as can be the conditions of actual warfare, and it is hardly likely that humanitarian consideration for the horses can have much weight in working out the plan of operations. A more practical question is whether it really is necessary and worth while to sacrifice costly horses in this way. I do not profess to know myself, but in view of the condition in which the horses both of the 20th Hussars and the 5th Dragoon Guards returned to Ireland the question might well receive attention, if only in the interests of the taxpayers.

---

Owing to the shortage of candidates for the commissioned ranks the proposal is being revived to get youths for the Army in the same way as for the Navy, by catching them young and training them at junior military schools affiliated to the cadet colleges at Woolwich and Sandhurst. I have discussed this proposal before in Truth, and am inclined to favour it, provided the schools are self-supporting. Although Royal Commissions and Committees without end have encouraged the public schools to cater for the Army, they have never responded to the call, and as they can't supply the demand the only thing to do is for the War Office to set up schools of its own.

---

The German cadet schools (Cadetten-Hausen) still hold the field as models of efficiency, and were copied by the Japanese when they started to organise their Army with a clean slate to work upon. Osborne College is only a partial success, because education and discipline are stupidly separated, and the boys have two sets of masters who don't always pull together. The first postulate of a sound system of training is that indoor and outdoor work should be directed by the same head.

---

In connection with the removal of the Duke of York's School to Dover, reference has once or twice been made to the similar institutions in Ireland and Scotland. One is the Queen Victoria School, Dunblane, which was established by public subscription as the Scottish national memorial to Queen Victoria and the Scottish sailors and soldiers who fell in the South African war. I was glad to hear the other day that the school has made excellent progress since its opening by King Edward two years ago. There is at present accommodation for 170 boys and staff, but when some additional buildings are erected the number will be increased to 250. This summer the chapel has been finished and opened, and on Sundays the services are attended by many visitors, who afterwards witness the parade and trooping of the colour by the boys.

---

My attention has been called to an advertisement appearing within the past few days in the Morning Post for fifty retired naval and military officers to take part in a "Great Naval and Military Tournament of Empire" now completing arrangements for a three-years' tour of the provinces and the colonies. The advertisement stated that between 800 and 1,000 are to be enrolled; that "the whole of the surplus profits are to be devoted to charity;" and that all particulars will be given by Colonel A. G. Burn, who is taking the entire military command. Applicants are invited to apply to 12b, Pembroke Gardens, London, W. I am also in possession of a sort of prospectus which gives further particulars of this venture, from which I gather that one of the principal objects of the tour is to "stimulate and revive that ardent spirit of patriotism which has distinguished the British race in the past."

---

Patriotism, it seems, is to be stimulated and revived by an imposing display. On arrival at each town the forces will be marshalled by the officers and, headed by the cavalry band, will march through the streets to the camping ground, where tents will be pitched and a colossal arena erected, in which a performance, including the Charge of the Light Brigade, is afterwards to take place. Some idea of the necessary equipment is given by a statement that 600 horses, a dozen guns, 2,000 carbines, rifles, and bayonets and ammunition will be required to be transported. On the question of management the prospectus is somewhat vague, for the name of no single responsible person appears in it. I am entirely at a loss to understand this modesty on the part of the authors of this patriotic scheme, especially as they are, I presume, giving their services gratuitously in the cause of Empire and charity.

---

This view of the matter also struck a retired officer who called at Pembroke-gardens with a view to securing an engagement. He asked to see Colonel Burn, but Colonel Burn was absent, and he was introduced to a Captain Burn, but when he proceeded to put some pertinent questions this gentleman retired and left a civilian to answer them. A point on which information was particularly desired was whether the scheme had been officially sanctioned by the War Office, since if such sanction had not been obtained the inquirer did not see how the enlistment and arming of from 800 to 1,000 men to tour the country and visit the colonies could possibly be carried out. No definite reply could be obtained, however. I presume that if the officer in question had seen Colonel Burn, whose name appears on the Active List of the Indian Army, he would have had no difficulty in obtaining the assurances he required. At the same time it seems somewhat remarkable that the War Office should have sanctioned the organisation of what is nothing more or less than a huge military circus by some nameless syndicate, and I shall be glad to hear either from Colonel Burn or any one else concerned what is the real position in regard to the scheme.

---

Rear-Admiral Sir Douglas Gamble has selected Captain R. Y. Tyrwhitt as his flag-captain in the Bacchante. When a lieutenant in the Cleopatra, cruising off the baked coast of Nicaragua, Captain Tyrwhitt was landed at Bluefields to protect the more peaceable inhabitants during one of the periodical local revolutions. This may have been contrary to the Monroe doctrine, but it achieved its purpose, and Captain Tyrwhitt preserves a most grateful letter of thanks from the inhabitants.

Thos. Goode & Co.—Exhibition of old and modern Wedgwood, including many specimens never previously exhibited.—South Audley Street, London.

Truth Cautionary List for 1910, 128 pages bound in cloth, price 1s. net, by post 1s. 2d., is now ready, and may be obtained from all booksellers and railway bookstalls.

Captain Drury-Lowe, who since his promotion to post rank in June, 1909, has been in command of the cruiser Diadem, has just gone on the President for a course of instruction at the Staff College, Camberley. This officer was a midshipman in the Calliope when she came out of Apia in the famous hurricane of March, 1889, and he commanded the naval contingent at the capture of Illig. For the benefit of the uninitiated who may not understand how an officer can be "on the President" when stationed at Camberley, it may be explained that every naval officer employed must have his name borne on the books of one of H.M. ships. Thus a man in the Portsmouth Naval Barracks is "on" H.M.S. Victory, although he never by any chance goes near that venerable hulk.

---

Captain R. J. B. Keys, who is just appointed Inspecting Captain of Submarines, is one of the very few living officers who have taken part in a cutting-out expedition. Ten years ago, when commanding the destroyer Fame in Chinese waters, he took possession of four Celestial destroyers by this Nelsonian method, gaining not only the "thorough approbation" of the Admiralty, but the more substantial recompense of promotion. One of these craft, the Taku, is still in commission in our Navy. Captain Keys wears a number of foreign distinctions, having been Naval Attaché at Vienna and Rome; likewise the Royal Humane Society's medal for jumping into the Peiho River and saving a midshipman of the Bayard.

---

The politics of dockyard towns may not be without their effect in the councils of Whitehall. It had long been the custom for the numerous foreign warships calling at Plymouth to anchor in the Sound, about two miles from the nearest landing place. As they generally coal, and as a south or west wind brings in a lot of sea, the inconvenience of this arrangement is considerable. Latterly the Commander-in-Chief has invited all foreign warships to proceed up the Hamoaze, which means to Devonport. But Plymouth tradesmen were wroth that the money previously spent with them should now go to the other end of the Three Towns. They persuaded their senior member, Mr. C. E. Mallet, who holds some small office in the Government, to make representations to the Admiralty. In a letter to the Plymouth Liberal paper last week, Mr. Mallet stated that he had done so, and that henceforth foreigners are to keep to the Sound. Devonport tradesmen will thus pay the penalty for returning two Conservative members, and foreign naval visitors will continue to be uncomfortable for the benefit of Plymouth.

---

It has been decided that the court-martial in connection with the loss of the Bedford, which promises to be the most interesting of its kind since the Victoria court-martial, shall be held in England. The officers implicated are to come home specially, but how many these may be is known only to a very limited Admiralty circle. If the published reports of the disaster are correct, the Bedford was steaming in station with the rest of the China Fleet at the time when she struck. If this was so, not one ship but several were miles out of the proper course.

---

Norwich still remains deaf to the wail of Postwick, and continues to dump its sewage in the near vicinity of the unfortunate village. The latest result is that the newly appointed rector of Postwick has found himself obliged to resign the living. Afflicted with a plague of flies and without benefit of clergy, the inhabitants may well consider that they have been delivered over body and soul into the hands of Beelzebub.

---

To escape the by-laws of the Belfast Corporation a number of the local butchers have established slaughter-houses in the district of the Castlereagh Rural Council. At a meeting of the latter body a few days ago it was reported that a quantity of diseased meat, intended for the Territorials at the Victoria Barracks, had been seized at one of these slaughter-houses, and, furthermore, that the premises were in a most filthy state. No prosecution was ordered, the Council contenting itself with a resolution to take proceedings if the slaughter-house "was found unclean again!" Evidently the butchers knew what they were about when they placed themselves within the jurisdiction of these rural councillors.

---

Commenting upon the remarks in Truth in regard to the sensible action of the Castleblaney magistrates in adjourning for six months a police prosecution of some publicans for hanging flags out of their windows, the Freeman's Journal remarked that there are plenty of people in the Castle to furnish Mr. Birrell with that constant argument of Chief Secretaries "precedents," and that if a thing has been done often in Ireland it appears to be a conclusive reason for doing it again, however foolish it is. The Freeman's Journal appears to have been quite right in its anticipation. Last week application was made by counsel for the Crown before the Vacation Judge for a mandamus to quash the order of the justices, and the order was made. I rather think that if I were compelled to adjudicate in a case like this, where a mere technical offence had been committed, I should salve my conscience by imposing the lightest fine possible, and leaving the prosecutors to pay their own costs.

---

The Leeds police are not to be congratulated on the latest method they have adopted to effect an arrest. A betting man managed to evade capture by running into another man's house and closing the door. Thereupon a constable hit on the idea of sending for some cayenne pepper, placing it on brown paper, and after lighting it, thrusting it under the door. The culprit was nearly suffocated as the result, and had to go and see a doctor. The street bookmaker is not an ideal citizen, but the fact that he manages to dodge a policeman is no justification for treating him as mere vermin.

---

Last week I pilloried the Isle of Wight County Bench for imposing a fine on a dairyman named Beardsall for gross cruelty in respect of two horses which he owned. Beardsall, as it happened, was unable to pay the fine, and went to prison in default, whereupon certain persons in the town of Ryde organised a subscription on behalf of the poor persecuted milkman and paid his fine for him. Evidently the magistrates adequately represent the intelligence and humanity of the locality.

---

But the Isle of Wight is not the only place where cruelty to animals continues to be lightly penalised. At Slough last week the magistrates had before them a drover who was convicted of beating a steer. It was mere senseless brutality without the faintest provocation. Six previous convictions were proved against the offender, and yet a fine of £1 was the only penalty imposed. Again at Edinburgh the Midlothian J.P.s only imposed fines of 10s. in two cases where men had unmercifully lashed horses with the object of making them carry out tasks beyond their strength. It is such senseless exhibitions of leniency as these which continue to bring the unpaid magistracy into contempt.

Sheriff Campbell Smith at Dundee last week had before him a young hooligan who, on being refused liquor at a public house, attacked the landlady, knocking her down, breaking her wrist and smashing her thigh. The poor woman has been lamed for life, but the Sheriff merely fined her assailant £5, with the alternative of forty days' imprisonment. Your Scot has such a reverence for the bawbee that he imagines a fine will atone for any offence.

The Lancashire Warehouse Company, of 306, Bury New Road, Salford, have recently had the following advertisement appearing in the Daily Sketch:—

PAIR BLANKETS, pair sheets, Lancashire quilt, all full size; one bolster, two pillow-cases. 1s. secures the best bargain ever offered.

People who forward the company 1s. receive a circular informing them that they have thereby "secured" the bargains as advertised, and on their sending 17s. 6d. balance it will be forwarded to them. For sheer impudence this piece of trickery would be hard to beat.

At the beginning of August a firm of bookmakers named Barlow and Titt, Camelford Street, Marine Parade, Brighton, wrote to a correspondent that they would be pleased to have his business. In the following week he sent them bets whereby he won £13 11s. 10d. Apparently Barlow and Titt were not pleased after all—at any rate, they have made no response to applications, including a reply-paid telegram and a registered letter, for the settlement of the account. They describe themselves as "Established 1898." If this is their usual mode of procedure it seems time they were disestablished.

Miss Marie Shedden-King (No. 102 TRUTH Cautionary List), of 50, Archer Street, Bayswater, is just a year older since my last reference to her, but she still finds it necessary to appeal to total strangers for financial assistance. Nor has the style of her communication changed in the interval. She still covers ten pages of note-paper with feminine gush, and draws a vivid pen picture of herself, slim, bright, dark-haired, and hazel-eyed, as an inducement to people to lend her £25, to be repaid with £5 interest on February 28, the anniversary of her birthday. Marie will be forty then, an age at which one would expect "a Scotchman lassie," as she describes herself, to have realised the indiscretion of begging from total strangers, and accompanying the epistle with a description of her personal attractions.

I am pleased to hear from the Rev. Canon Hogan, vicar of All Saints', Dublin, that he has refused any longer to receive replies to the begging epistles of James Denniston (No. 71, TRUTH Cautionary List), and I trust that the withdrawal of the Canon's implied approval of the appeals will result in less attention being paid to them. The Canon sends me at the same time a trade circular addressed to Denniston by a firm which makes a specialty of the reproduction of facsimile letters, offering to quote a price for some of his work, as they understand that he sends out big quantities. "The prices quoted," it is stated, "will only cover out-of-pocket expenses, and you will be able to save quite a large amount." I do not know whether all the beggars in TRUTH Cautionary List have been the recipients of similar circulars, but in any case the proposal is a striking recognition of the commercial side of the begging-letter writer's business.

ROYAL SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—6,550 convictions last year. Complaints marked "Private" absolutely confidential.—SECRETARY, 105, Jermyn Street, London.

I am flattered by the receipt of the appended communication from the son of the King of Sawhee, and though I do not see my way to send the samples, I shall be glad to give my best attention to any "indent" with which his Highness favours me. TRUTH cannot be disseminated too widely, and as the largest—indeed the only—manufacturer of the genuine article, I am ready to supply, on the usual terms, any quantities of it that may be required in Sawhee or elsewhere:—

Accra Town, Seccondee,
17 : 8 : 1910.

DEAR SIR,—Your name and address has been highly recommended to me by a certain friend that you are the largest manufacture in the city of London I therefore entreat you to send me you object list Samples to make my Indent and also I want to make your west african agency because my father is King of Sawhee, had many lands and inheritance.—Your faithfully,
J. K. AGGREY.

Address: J. K. Aggrey, c/o Olivia Charles Blankson, Kyikyirimsanho Chambers, Oboho,
Accra Town, Seccondee.

The Rev. Dr. Minifie called upon me last week in reference to my recent comments upon the Buena Vista Fruit Co., of Boston, U.S.A., which he represents over here. He denied that plots of the company's land in Cuba have been sold to a number of people belonging to the Baptist churches of which he was formerly minister. He has been careful, he says, not to introduce the business to members of his old congregations, though if it is the good thing he considers it to be it is really rather unkind to leave them out. He also questioned the statement that one of the purchasers is a domestic servant. As to this, I can only say that the statement was perfectly correct. The young woman, whose contract with the company is now in my possession, is a housemaid, and her name is at the disposal of Dr. Minifie if he will assist her in securing the repayment of her money, which she desires. Dr. Minifie told me that his list of buyers was chiefly composed of lawyers, bank managers, insurance officials, and other business men. I am afraid I must regard this as a proof of his persuasiveness as an agent rather than of their soundness of judgment.

Besides the visit from Dr. Minifie I have had a letter from Mr. Basil Hone, of the Empire Button Works, 118, Alma Street, Birmingham, who, it seems, is a purchaser of several acres of the company's land. The letter is evidently based upon information supplied by Dr. Minifie, but in simply repeating this information Mr. Hone calmly says "he is aware" my statements are totally incorrect. Not only does he deny the undoubted fact as to the domestic servant, but he asserts that "the proposition is not being hawked about as you would lead your readers to suppose." Well, it was put forward at a meeting of a religious body in Westbourne Park, and as the outcome not only this servant but a dressmaker, an ex-butler and his wife and a coachman were urged to invest their money in the scheme. Dr. Minifie repudiates the idea that he pushes the business among people of this class, but though he may not do the pushing personally it is done all the same, and as the company's paid agent he cannot be absolved from responsibility in the matter. Mr. Hone says that "it is not true that the fruit trees have yet to be planted as there are already hundreds of acres under cultivation." The latter statement may be true, but the former suggests that this business man has not read his contract with the company. The contracts that I have seen at any rate show quite plainly that the company is selling uncleared and unplanted land which it undertakes to clear and plant—"as soon as practical"!

For people in this country to invest their money in the purchase from a Boston company of one-acre or two-acre patches of orange groves in Cuba, leaving the company to plant and cultivate their land and gather and sell the fruit (when the trees produce it), seems to me to be sheer folly. Dr. Minifie talked enthusiastically of the profitableness of fruit-growing in the district where the property is situated, but it is unnecessary to go into that question. From the point of view of the English investor there are two objections which, in my opinion, are sufficient to condemn the scheme. In the first place, the contract with the company provides that anybody desiring to withdraw before he has completed his purchase must sacrifice 25 per cent. of the amount that he has paid. Secondly, if he wishes to get rid of his acre or so of Cuban land after the purchase is completed he will have to sell it himself as best he can. I said before that, in my opinion, it was a mischievous and reprehensible proceeding that such an essentially speculative business as this should be recommended as a better investment than an endowment insurance policy or an annuity, and to that opinion I adhere.

A gentleman who has received a request for particulars of his life for insertion in Mr. Ernest Gaskell's new county volume, "Suffolk Leaders," tells me that he cannot understand "where the fraud comes in," nor does he see how the modus operandi can bring Gaskell any profit. As a matter of fact, there is nothing legally fraudulent about Gaskell's little enterprise, nor have I ever said that there was. Gaskell is merely a pander to people's vanity. He tells them, as in his latest circular, that he is bringing out "an exceptionally beautiful new county illustrated work," to be issued solely for private circulation under the patronage of influential gentlemen in the county, and in order that it may be complete he asks them for particulars of their lives. On the form to be filled up is a request to give the number of copies required of the work when published. What he does not say is that every Tom, Dick, and Harry who sends particulars of his life and subscribes to the volume will be biographed as a "Suffolk Leader."

As Mr. Ernest Gaskell is a printer by trade, and as the subscription price of the volume is fixed at £3 3s., it is easy enough to see where his profits come in. In his last circular Gaskell states that he is "gratified to say that the new Suffolk volume is meeting with the support of the Lord Lieutenant, Sir Thomas Theydon Warner, Bart., and many other noblemen." I wonder whether Sir Thomas Warner is aware that Gaskell, or Gaskill, was fined £20 at the Old Bailey in May last for contravention of the Gaming Act by printing coupons for the use of one of the football betting houses which carry on their operations from Flushing.

"QUEER STORIES" from TRUTH. Now ready. Series XVI. Price 1s., at all booksellers, and from the Publisher, 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street. "They are one of the wonders of the world, these stories, and people are never tired of asking who writes them."—Bystander.

PAN.

(A Tale of September.)

Will you hearken for a spell as I relate a lay of Hellas,
And a tale of one who flourished when the Golden Age began,
Who was fashioned like a satyr, though that doesn't really matter,
For he's known to every creature by the potent name of Pan.

You may read in Homer's pages of those far, romantic ages,
How young Hermes woo'd a pretty little "bird" called Dryope.
She was shyer than the plover, but she married her bold lover,
And a little later Pan arrived in dreamy Arcady.

He was such a funny mortal that he made Olympus chortle,
But the heaven-born son of Cronos gave a stern and awful nod;
So, despite the endless laughter, little Pan was ever after Recognised as lord of Nature and the shepherds' special god.

Then, in face of facial failings and the nymphs' and naiads' railings,
On a gentle summer's even Pan had lost his godly heart
To sweet Syrinx, Ladon's daughter; long he loved her, soon he sought her,
But she scorned his protestations, she shunned each wily art.

So, o'ercome with heartfelt rapture, he decided on her capture,
But she wouldn't try a wedding of the Grecian Gretna type.
Pan was ugly, she was pretty, so the gods, in wondrous pity,
Turned the maiden into rushes, and he made of her—a pipe.

Oft he'd fill the woodlands shady with his tunes on this young lady
That would set the hearts of Corydons and Phyllises on fire;
While the lads would kiss the lassies 'mid the Grecian mountain passes,
And Apollo in Olympus felt it time to twang his lyre.

So this excellent musician once arranged a competition,
And appointed good King Midas as the umpire, it appears;
But when Pan had won the laurel, dread Apollo, keen to quarrel,
As a punishment to Midas lengthened both that worthy's ears.

When you hear the soft winds sighing as the summer's hourly dying,
When September's mellow melodies are wafting you away
Where the greenwood trees are rustling and the busy streams are bustling,
Bear in mind the little hero of my legendary lay.

SCRUTATOR.

BRITISH BOGEYS FOR GERMANY.

AN article in the current number of the Saturday Review touches in a very instructive way upon the present relations of this country and Germany. Professor Brentano—whom the Saturday describes pretty accurately as "an old-fashioned dogmatic Radical of the Benthamic school"—has written an article in justification of his country's naval policy. He does not like the policy, but he considers it necessary; it has been forced upon Germany by our adherence to "our traditional rights of blockade, inspection, search, and prize-money." Our supremacy at sea involves the commercial ruin of any power with whom we may be at war. "The tyranny is intolerable, and it is as a protest against it, as an assertion of her own right to a free path across the ocean, that Germany is equipping her fleet." I have not seen the article; I merely quote the Saturday Review's statement of its effect, which is obviously accurate. It is particularly interesting to know that Professor Brentano dates the growth of a national feeling in Germany on this point from the "Bundesrat" incident in the Boer War, when the German ship of that name was forcibly taken into Cape Town and searched on an unfounded suspicion of carrying contraband. The Professor here confirms what has been said over and over again in Truth during the last seven or eight years; namely, that Germany's determination to become a great naval power arose from the demonstration during the Boer War of our omnipotence upon the high seas, the immense arbitrary power which it gives us, more especially outside Europe, and the ignominious impotence as against ourselves to which other Great Powers are consequently reduced. During the last three or four years other reasons, to which I referred only a fortnight ago, may have stimulated German anxiety to be able to defend herself at sea against the British fleet; but it was the position which we occupied during the Boer War that started Germany on the course which she has since followed.

Professor Brentano protests against our maritime policy, and particularly our adherence to the right of capture of private property at sea during war. He lays upon this the blame for the naval armaments which his country has had to undertake at such enormous sacrifice. What is the answer to him? The Saturday Review gives it by arguing that if we ever fight a Great Power again it will be owing to commercial rivalry, and with the intention to "crush our rival's commercial pretensions." It is, therefore, preposterous that we should be asked "to spare his commerce." Why two nations should fight, any more than two shopkeepers, because they are commercial rivals is not easy to see. There is, indeed, less reason in the case of two nations than that of two private citizens, because a shopkeeper may succeed in ruining his rival by competition, and his summary extermination might, therefore, be altogether to his rival's advantage; whereas in the case of nations the increased prosperity of one is always of advantage to its neighbours. As between England and Germany nothing is more evident than that the commercial and industrial development of the two countries leads to a corresponding increase of business between them. We are mutually one another's best customers, and the advance of each in wealth is consequently reflected in the balance-sheets of the other. Commercial rivalry which has this result seems a curious motive for quarrelling, especially when war means the stoppage of this immense volume of trade and a doubt as to its ever reviving.

However, this is a by-point. The more essential matter is that we think, or a certain number of shallow-minded people among us think, that by stopping Germany's oversea trade in time of war we could injure her desperately, and that this is a weapon which we cannot afford to part with, especially as it is our only available weapon for striking at a Continental power. It seems to me a very poor sort of weapon. One great disadvantage attached to is that other nations can use it as well as ourselves, and that we are of all nations the most vulnerable when this weapon is turned against us, for the simple reason that our sea-borne commerce is about equal to that of all the rest of the world put together. We stand, in fact, to gain more than anybody else by the abolition of this right. In time of peace we should be relieved of the necessity of spending huge sums on cruisers and other craft designed for commerce protection. In time of war we should carry on our oversea trade without interruption, thereby adding enormously to our resources, while our whole fleet would be free to devote itself to its primary duty of dealing with the enemy's fleet, and thereby protecting our coast from invasion and keeping the sea open for the passage of our army to any destination where we may desire to employ it.

On grounds of expediency, therefore, arguments for and against the right of capture are pretty evenly balanced. But there is a moral side of the question which in these days is not without practical weight. The Saturday Review observes that the average German, including such an anti-militarist as Professor Brentano, regards the right of capture as "a species of piracy." How else can a citizen of any other maritime State regard it? Except in this instance, it is now the universal rule among civilised nations that private property is respected in time of war. We ourselves scrupulously adhered to this rule in the only great land war in which we have been engaged of late. The first thing Lord Roberts did when he entered Boer territory was to proclaim officially that no Boer's property would be taken from him without payment. This is the chief difference between civilised and uncivilised warfare. Savages when they go to war aim first at carrying off the enemy's women, and after that his cattle and any other portable effects he may possess. Our rude forefathers waged war on somewhat similar principles. Civilised nations are so far ashamed of the essential savagery of war that they have eliminated these incidents when fighting on land, confining the operations as far as possible to the official combatants, and even here striving to limit the barbarity of the procedure by various conventional regulations in the interest of humanity. How can we, accepting these conventions on land, consistently repudiate them at sea?

It comes, then, to this: we insist on adhering to methods of barbarism at sea which we renounce on land, and we do this on the ground that unless we remain barbarians we cannot wage war effectually. If the last proposition were logically sound, the argument would still be unworthy of a civilised people. If, as shown above, its soundness is open to serious doubt from our own point of view, our position becomes utterly untenable. At any rate, however wrong-headed our arguments, we should recognise this: that if we cling to rights which everywhere else are regarded by civilised nations, ourselves included, as obsolete, justifying our attitude by the power it gives us of injuring any neighbour with whom we may pick a quarrel (for no reason than "commercial rivalry"), we also justify our neighbours in regarding us with suspicion, in being constantly on their guard against us, and in taking all the precautions they can to nullify our kindly intention of injuring them. There can be no question that the right of capture makes the maritime supremacy of England a terrible bogey to German eyes, or that the bogey becomes more terrible with every increase of German oversea trade. It would be far wiser on our part to divest this bogey of its terrors than to accentuate them by proclaiming in public that we feel bound to retain in our hands the power to sweep the German flag off the seas whenever we feel so disposed.

The Best for Annuities—The Sun Life of Canada, 93, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C. Funds £6,500,000. Income £1,593,045.

Truth Cautionary List for 1910, 128 pages bound in cloth, price 1s. net, by post 1s. 2d., is now ready, and may be obtained from all booksellers and railway bookstalls.

THE PATENT AGENT IN THE DOCK.

The conviction at the Old Bailey of Arthur A. Crozier removes from practice for the time being one of the most active of the harpies who prey upon the simple inventor. I must confess, however, that the lightness of the sentence awarded him causes me some surprise. Six months' imprisonment in the second division seems to be hardly an adequate punishment for a rascal who has for three or four years past been systematically swindling those whom he could get into his clutches. He was by way of being an inventor himself, for the trick with which he gulled his victims had distinct claims to originality. I never heard, however, that he applied for letters patent for it. He got into touch with inventors through advertisements offering to provide them with capital, and having done so he pretended to submit their inventions to a foreign syndicate. Crozier was an expert letter-writer, and in the earlier communications with his victims he made a great parade of recommending the inventor to employ any patent agent to take out the patents. This usually resulted in the inventors giving him the job. Then his task was easy. The foreign capitalist was represented as approving the invention, but would require to have it protected abroad. Thus the inventor was induced to pay fees for protecting his patent in Belgium and France. Next the phantom capitalist required proof of universal novelty, and this was an excuse for getting fees for taking out patents in Germany. And so the game went on until Crozier had obtained all the fees possible from his clients. Then the capitalist was represented to have made some ridiculous offer, or his fellow-directors were said to have refused to entertain the purchase, and the patentee was left to console himself with his patents. Crozier originally came under my notice in 1908, when I published some particulars of his methods in obtaining money in the case of a lady who had patented a plaster for removing superfluous hair. My remarks on her case brought Crozier to Truth office. He looked to me like a candidate for the dock at the Old Bailey, and I gave him to understand that if he wanted to persuade me that he was not a swindler he had better introduce me to the mysterious syndicate he professed to have behind him. He said that he would, but he made no attempt to do so, and I should have been surprised if he had.

As a result of my comments I heard of any number of people who had been gulled. The apocryphal capitalist had been held up as the prospective purchaser of improvements in ladies' purses, a track rail grinding apparatus, recipes for sauces and lozenges, a life-saving apparatus, and an improved razor strop, and in all these cases Crozier had pocketed fees for taking out foreign patents. The swindle was palpable, and I called on Crozier to fulfil his promise to produce his capitalist. At last, finding he was getting into a tight corner, he made a futile attempt to impose upon me by bringing late one evening to Truth office a confederate who refused to give his name or produce any credentials. Needless to say, I was not to be fooled by so artless a trick, and I recommended Crozier to the attention of the Board of Trade.

Meanwhile the Chartered Institute of Patent Agents had accumulated some evidence regarding Crozier's doings, and supplemented by that I was able to supply them with, the Institute took action against him under the Patent Act to deprive him of the power to act as an agent at the Patent Office. That action was successful. Fortunately, proceedings did not end there. Had they done so, though Crozier's activities might have been limited to some extent, he would still have been able to prey on his dupes by inducing them to pay him fees for patenting inventions abroad, which was by far the most lucrative portion of his business. But the evidence of his malpractices produced before the Board of Trade Committee was sufficient to move the Treasury to prosecute him for fraud. The whole case against him hinged on the existence of the bogus capitalist whom he had represented to scores of clients as negotiating for the purchase of their inventions. The anonymous gentleman who played the part at this office evidently thought it undesirable to face a judge and jury in the witness-box, and Crozier accordingly has met with part of his desert.

The case suggests that inventors are an abnormally gullible class. But this is only partly true. Many inventors have all their wits about them. But there are hundreds of people—thousands perhaps would be nearer the mark—who are continually imagining that they have discovered some device which may be turned into a fruitful source of profit. The majority of these are people in humble circumstances, many of them are more or less illiterate, not a few are women. They are easily imposed upon by any swindler who feeds their hopes by specious promises and skilful flattery. They fall readily into the toils of bogus patent agents of the Crozier type, and only when they have been bled of their hard-earned savings are they allowed to realise that they have wasted both time and money upon some quite valueless invention. Of course, it is easy to advise that the inventor should have nothing to do with the agent who is not a member of the Chartered Institute, but the majority of these humble folk have never heard of the Institute, nor if they had would they realise how it is that an agent's membership is a protection against unfair dealing with his clients. In the absence of this knowledge such prosecutions, as in this of Crozier, besides securing punishment for a rogue, provide a useful warning to the public.

THE WILES OF THE HOUSE AGENT.

All those who have had to undergo the weary round of house-hunting I am sure will sympathise with me in a few remarks which I have to make. Like many another, I set out on the forlorn quest quite cheerfully with an ideal residence in my mind. It must be neither too old nor too new. It must have well-proportioned rooms, a pleasant secluded garden, and of course the rent must not be too high. I carefully studied scores of advertisements, and armed with a selection of those which looked most promising I made daily visits of inspection. Now I am an embittered, disillusioned creature, and my soul is filled with wrath against those literary geniuses who write the glowing particulars of houses to let for house agents. Of course by this time

The Luxury of a Bath is incomplete without the addition of Scrubb's Ammonia, which refreshes and invigorates. Sold everywhere, price one shilling per bottle.

I am fairly good at translating these accounts into plain English, but the knowledge has been dearly bought with wasted time and money. I have one infallible rule now. When I read a description of a place which sounds exactly like what I want, and see that it is offered at a moderate rent, I ring up the agent and boldly ask him what is wrong with the place. You may be perfectly certain that it has some serious defect, and it is just as well to know at once whether this failing is one that you mind before making a dreary pilgrimage of inspection. You generally then elicit the fact that the drains are wrong; that it is immediately adjacent to a noisy public house; that it is forty miles from a railway station; or that it is tumbling to pieces, and that under the terms of the lease you will be expected to rebuild it.

At the moment I am inclined to write a few thoroughly honest descriptions of certain houses I have seen. They would read something like this:—

Disgusting little bijou villa to be let in a half-made suburb. Four bedrooms and three reception-rooms; the three last occupy nearly the space of one decent-sized room. Very artistic, which means that the decorations are carried out in an appalling medley of styles, including spurious Jacobean, Nouveau Art, and imitation Adams. No garden, but a cat-walk could be added if required. Within two minutes of Shoddy Park Station, whence there is a fitful service of trains.

From this you can easily conjure up a picture of one of those "delightfully quaint" little homes which are springing up like clusters of mushrooms all round London. I will now try to give you an idea of that "charming, old-fashioned cottage residence, The Dell, situated close to station in a picturesque part of the country":—

Loathsome Victorian stucco atrocity in thorough ramshackle order. Exposed garden, beautifully overlooked by palatial workhouse. Orchard containing two valetudinarian apple-trees and a few moribund gooseberry bushes. Rising neighbourhood, which means that electric trams clank and clatter by all day and most of the night. Eight rooms most inconveniently arranged, owing to the horrid place having been originally two cottages, which are now converted into one villa. Garage—this meaning an old shed.

This is the sort of place that you would not accept as a free gift, but the porch artfully photographed from behind the apple tree has quite a picturesque air. If there is one word I am now more tired of than another it is "picturesque." Then there is the place which attracts you because it has a well-matured garden and is near the station, with excellent train service. My hopes were cruelly dashed here. The matured garden was an unhappy-looking lawn, with a monkey puzzle as a centre-piece, and the nearness to the station was simply appalling. The garden ran along the side of the platform at a busy station on one of the main lines to the north! Express trains thundered by your windows day and night, and the music of a shunting yard took the place of the song of the nightingale. The house itself was gaunt and bare, with the air of having committed a crime in allowing itself to be built.

After a few of these unfortunate experiences, in a misguided moment I allowed myself to listen to a friend who offered me his flat, averring that it was one of the nicest in London. When I told him I must have a view from my study window he explained proudly that he enjoyed a view of the Crystal Palace. Why any one should want to look at the Crystal Palace I don't know. Accordingly I tracked my friend down and found him at the top of one of those modern blocks which seem a sort of hybrid between workmen's dwellings and offices for shady adventurers. The wretched place was in a back street stuffed away among public-houses. As I stumbled into the "hall" from a dingy staircase, kitchen, bathroom, and bedroom seemed to converge on me, though there certainly was a large and light living room. The sham Elizabethan decorations were most distressing, and the view was of chimney tops and telephone wires. I believe that by standing on a chair and looking between a smoke stack and an iron fire ladder on the opposite building you could on a clear day see one of the hideous towers of the Crystal Palace. There is nothing to be done in a case like this but to express your admiration and say something feebly about "wanting to go further out of town."

As a final experience I must mention an old manor house. Into the house agent's description I have interpolated the truth in parentheses.

Beautiful old Cromwellian manor house (was once). Thoroughly modernised (entirely ruined) by late owner. Fine hall (decorated with Lincrusta Walton, having been stripped of its panelling by some Vandal). Every modern improvement (art copper door-plates and Moorish lamps for electric lights—these to be taken as fixtures). Eight bedrooms and two sitting-rooms (the panelling remains in these, but there is canvas stretched over it, and this is covered with imitation stamped leather paper). Oak beams across the ceilings (painted and grained so that they look like no wood on earth). The whole in perfect condition (restored and renovated from top to bottom by a wealthy builder who had tried to graft his up-to-date ideas on to a perfect specimen of sixteenth century architecture).

I suppose there are attractive houses unlet, but looking for them is a sad and sorry business.

"Queer Stories" from Truth. Now ready, Series XVI. Price 1s., at all booksellers, and from the Publisher, 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street. "They are one of the wonders of the world, these stories, and people are never tired of asking who writes them." —Bystander.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

M. PICHON is back from Ver-en-Montagne, the place he has bought in the Jura. He looks worried. The prospective Turkish loan bothers him, and the possible effect, if the Bourse quotation be refused, of Turkish anger on Algeria and Morocco. France has been too successful in sweeping away, as a power, the Algerian Kaids. Their reverence for the Caliph at Constantinople resembled that of English Church of England people for the religious supremacy of Queen Victoria or her successor. It was quite platonic, and these native nobles rather inclined to regard the Cheriff of Morocco as the true heir to the Prophet, but without any driving force behind them. They have been succeeded by marabouts who swarm in Tunis and Algeria, fuse with the common people, and carry on the agitation in the thickets of the Atlas. It is, because of their ubiquity and numbers, impossible to lay hands on them. The Kitani and the affair of the Turkish flag in the Oasis of Djanet, with what goes on in Europe, are taken seriously enough to try the nerves of a very conscientious Minister whose health is not robust. M. Pichon is also sorry for the departure of Prince Radolin, a Pole of natural as well as practised courtesy, and a sensibility that brings him into sympathetic touch with those Frenchmen with whom he has to deal. Whenever Chancellor von Bülow charged him with an unpleasant message he delivered it in the coldest, most mechanical manner, without any fore or after words other than the official courtesy strictly required. Until the matter had blown over he avoided all contact with the Foreign Minister. If he chanced to meet him he was merely the courteous gentleman, and chatted agreeably on current topics. Nobody could throw more meaning into a smile, whether of dissent or censure—a necessary accomplishment when he acted as Grand Chamberlain to the Crown Prince and Princess Frederick. Tongues in their circle were unguarded, and spies of the terrible Bismarck everywhere. Of course, he could not have been an admirer of a disciple of Bismarck, so attached to his memory and methods, as Von Bülow, and had to depend greatly on the good will of the Emperor. It was sometimes thought that the ex-Chancellor, in being disagreeable to the French Foreign Office, wanted to render the situation of Prince Radolin difficult. The retiring Ambassador, when a Grand Chamberlain, was known as "the handsome Radolin." He has still a fine and manly presence. His first wife, Miss Lucy Wakefield, was, I heard at Nancy, when she stayed there with her children soon after the war, a cousin of Elizabeth Fry. His second wife, born the year of his first marriage, in the early sixties, is a Berliner, née Countess von Oppersdorf. She played her part remarkably well as directing lady at the German Embassy and in French society. In home life nobody could be more simple. Her principal amusement lay in ornamental needlework, in which she acquired rare skill. The Prince took pride in this talent, and was known to boast that she could do better with her needle than many an artist with his paint-brush. Prince Radolin's retirement is due to his breakdown of health and spirits ensuant on his son's death.

---

President Faure liked to be addressed by his stablemen and grooms as "mon Empereur." Whenever any of them did so he made a pretence of reproving him, but ended by patting him on the shoulder and offering him out of his own cigar case three or four Havanas to smoke "by and by." He delighted to hear from M. Guyot Dessaigne—afterwards Minister of Justice, and destined to die on the floor of the Senate and be buried in state at the cost of the country—how the Emperor Napoleon passed his evenings at Vichy. The conversation of the Grand Duke Vladimir was so informing on the menus plaisirs of the august class that M. Faure more than once took pleasure in hearing him hold forth at Rambouillet or the Elysée smoking-room in his brusque, direct, and graphic style on leurs faiblesses. He was German in his frank and unvarnished manner, and might be called, had his monologues been consigned to paper, the Lieutenant Bilse of the monarchs of his time and of their courts and favourites. Naturally, M. Faure, who thought of working himself into a life Presidency, wished to imitate them in those points which had most fixed themselves on the Grand Duke's attention. Not that he was a great sinner himself: he was merely a nineteenth-century variety of Molière's bourgeois gentilhomme. You may remember how, from a wish to imitate the fine gentlemen of the court, Monsieur Jourdain became a vieux marcheur.

M. Faure usually went with all the state he could command into the provinces. Whenever he arranged to do so prefects were confidentially informed by word of mouth, and with a smile, that the President would not take ill some sociable distraction, toute à fait en petite comité, after the ennui of official harangues: déjeuner in the suites of rooms placed at his disposal, presided over by an amiable and engaging lady not averse to laughter, would be to his taste. It would give him pleasure were a few amusing gentlemen bidden, so as to spice chit-chat and to raise spirits. M. Guyot Dessaigne, who with his brother, Guyot Monpayroux, used to animate the soirées of the Emperor Napoleon III. at Vichy, was a good card for such a party. He knew how to raise to hilariousness a head of a State wanting a little non-official relaxation.

Nothing resembling this is now seen. M. Fallières's esprit, joviality, culture, and taste for things of the mind, banish flatness from soirées when he is on a State tour in the provinces. His manner, though not without dignity, is quite simple and almost paternal. His ceremonial speeches are simply exquisite in their fine touches, traits, and nicely turned sallies. But they have one drawback. They render him too attractive to the amiable persons who have gone through girls' lycées and can appreciate phrases brightened with sparkling touches and yet sufficiently formal to appear in the Journal Officiel. Were he a Félix Faure we should hear stories good for a Grand Duke Vladimir to repeat of his sojourns in prefectures. But he is not, and so we may in the main credit a bit of gossip that has come round from a Departmental chief town in Savoy.

The patriotic presents he received from Savoyard societies, leagues, municipalities, and manufacturers were one morning piled on the tables of his private sitting-room as he entered to ask what news from Paris. "None. But," with a smile, "here is a letter that may be read with amused interest." It was on scented mauve paper, and in four pages, in a light, cursive hand—the hand of a fluent and ready writer. Its author declared the impression she received on reading the President's speeches. She stated that she was of good family, and expressed patriotic pride at the proof they gave of the first place in the State being filled by one so worthy and so kindly. She envied the damsels chosen to present him with flowers, recite verses of welcome, and receive his paternal salutation. Lastly, she presumed to enclose her photo. It was the photo of a person answering to J. J. Rousseau's description of the sweetly engaging young ladies of Annecy and Chambéry.

"What a pity it is," cried the President, "to be a grandpapa and to have this white barbiche on my chin. It is impossible to answer this missive myself. It would be offensive to answer it through a secretary, and in some degree a treason. Might it not be well to prompt the local papers to convey to the public general thanks for the great number of letters of sympathy received, and to say that it is materially impossible for my secretaries to answer them in particular?"

At this point the chef du protocol entered to announce that the Prefect's motor awaited the President for an excursion into the mountains, and that a crowd had gathered expecting to see him for a few moments on the balcony. M. Fallières stepped out on the balcony, waved his hat, and bowed. Every one noticed how much he seemed rejuvenated since the day before. Was it because of the impression made by the scented letter and the photo?

Fifty years ago the staple products of Savoy were sweeps, organ grinders, marmosets, trout, salmon-trout, and rabbits. The trout and salmon-trout were held in high respect by the great chefs and by gourmets. They remain equal to their old reputation. The Tsar's chef has latterly imported so many of them to Peterhof and Tsarskoe Selo as to make them scarce in the Paris Halles. He learned to value them in preparing a déjeuner in the Imperial train in its passage from Italy to Switzerland through Savoy. M. Pichon, who had awaited the Tsar on the French side of the Mont Cenis tunnel, and partook of the Imperial déjeuner, apropos of a dish of trout informed Nicholas II. of their good name among gastronomes. Savoy is fast becoming one of the richest provinces in France. This is due to the "white coal" furnished by its torrents and waterfalls and to French capital. The free trade zone behind Geneva has been roused to extraordinary activity. Its hotels are now the serious rivals of those of Switzerland, and Evian and Thonon are great water-drinking and bathing healtheries. The boss of the latter is that agreeable, albeit Calvinist, Baron de Neuflize, Master of the Chantilly Hunt, and a Crœsus who can rank with the American multi-millionaires who flock to Evian. It is due to the intelligent administration of the Baron that the completest manner of testing the purity of water is applied to that intended for bottling at Evian. M. Fallières witnessed a bottling operation, and drank in water to the health, wealth and happiness of the boss Baron. There was no need. That genial Nimrod is as healthy as wealthy, and is the image of the happiness that comes of a well-balanced mind and a benevolent disposition.

The Savoyards are easy-going and simple-minded. They contrast thus with the Swiss. The suave eloquence of Francis de Sales, their typical saint, drew the grandmother of Mme. de Sévigny from the management of her estate, château, and family in Burgundy to conventual life. She founded under his direction the Order of the Ursulines for the education of young ladies. The dining-hall of the Dukes of Savoy at Annecy, in which he sometimes delivered lectures, is, now that the Grands Augustins Monastery is no more, said to be the finest in Europe. It dates from the reign of that duke who brought home to Annecy Yolanda of France as a bride and gave his sister in marriage to a Dauphin.

---

The celebration of the millenary of the great Cluny Abbey, founded by Saint Benoît, was an interesting event. In granting the land on which the vast and majestic abbey arose the Duke of Aquitaine bound the grantee to refuse to nobody asking for food and shelter generous hospitality. All that now remains is the ruins of a church, the ancient kitchens, and the comparatively modern side of a cloistered court, where there is a School of Arts and Manufactures. The monks were skilled vine-dressers and vintage-makers, and replanted the vineyards of Cæsar Augustus, which the Burgundians had destroyed. Their wines, with which they furnished the Papal Court at Avignon, were so excellent that neither Pope nor cardinals could endure the idea of returning to Italy.

During the weeks of festivity recalled by the millenary of Cluny dinners were cooked for the courts of Byzantium, France, Navarre, Provence, and for Pope Innocent IV. and their lordships of the Œcumenical Council he had been presiding over at Lyons. Saint Louis brought with him his mother, spouse, and daughter, later married to the King of Navarre. There were seventy attendant ladies, most of whom rode on horseback; packs of hounds, falconers and their birds, hawking being then a new sport brought in by the Crusaders, and in great vogue. Of course, there were also troubadours, for Blanche of Castile and her devoted Count Thiebault of Champagne were lovers of poetry. They hunted and hawked on their way, and overstrained the resources of the towns to give them lodgings and entertainment. At Troyes the knights nearly ruined themselves in buying fairings for the ladies. How the monks managed to house the attendant dames and demoiselles we can have no idea. But doubtless the Queens and Empress had a special privilege to enter the monastery. As to the Greek Emperor, he had come hard up. But the business that he did in relics with the French King, the Queens, the Latin Churchmen, and great feudal nobles more than set him up.

All this could not be brought out in the millenary procession, which contained 400 figurantes. Historical processions are generally as plants in the herbarium, and ill bear daylight. The best I have ever seen were at Lille in the presence of M. Sadi Carnot. They represented the entrance into that city of Philip II. in the week following his father's abdication and the taking over of Lille by Louis XIV. It was to celebrate this event that President Carnot went down there. The white suit of Philip (personated by the son of a rich manufacturer) cost 50,000 frs. The whole city entered into the feeling of the dates and events represented. That taste for pageantry which the Counts of Flanders had so constantly cultivated in their dominions has survived to this day. In no French city is historical costumery so well understood and felt as in Lille. There is nothing of this in Upper Burgundy, and the Flemish taste for spectacular splendour is dead in Dijon—the French capital of the Dukes of Burgundy.

M. René Bazin, of the Catholic University of Angers and member of the Academy, presided at what might be called the intellectual part of the Cluny celebration. He made a good enough speech. It had an elegant gloss, comparable to that given by the mangle, and also to the flatness. An imaginative grip on the events that had unrolled themselves in the course of a thousand years was needed.

---

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

THE situation is bristling with impossibilities, dear Lady Betty. "We must have war abroad to preserve peace at home," is the theory of the alarmists.

There is no "War Cloud"; there is a mist—the mist of discontent is spreading throughout the country. The few who thrive in feudal conditions object to their removal, and the many who wither under a system developed by successive generations of oppressors are seriously dissatisfied. Not to adapt our political institutions to New World conditions is to couple a donkey cart with a motor car.

"The populations in our various self-governing colonies and the people of the United States are our brethren; the members of the 'governing class' in England are usurpers," recently said a representative artisan. "The latter are rapidly becoming an alien colony in our midst."

. . . . .

There is a new community of the nations—it is to be the chief factor in European politics in the near future; the community of the many in all Old World countries who require constitutional equality as established in New World countries.

. . . . .

It is a peculiar attitude that the Conservatives assume. "We manufacture the brands of patriotism which alone are 'patriotic'; all others are spurious," they insist in effect.

* * * * * *

"Under Five Reigns" is the title of the volume of further reminiscences which Lady Dorothy Nevill publishes this week (Methuen and Co.); a book which has been admirably edited by her son, Mr. Ralph Nevill, and will be read by all who take an intelligent interest in interesting things.

The present volume contains a letter from the late "Ouida" to Lady Dorothy, in which the former writes: "That I hold a place in your memory is an honour indeed, filled as that memory is with such brilliant crowds, drawn from all which is best and most illustrious in your time. . . . When will you give us more memoirs? I sigh when I think of all you must know and all you cannot tell!' The compliment is not exaggerated, and the regret is shared by those who are best acquainted with the social and political life in England in the past half-century.

Lady Dorothy Nevill has been more communicative in 'Under Five Reigns' than in the volumes of reminiscences published by her on previous occasions. It is obvious, however, that the very qualities of amiability, judgment, tact, and discretion which have earned for Lady Dorothy the friendship and confidence of the foremost men and women of the time render it impossible that the trust reposed in her will ever be betrayed.

. . . . . .

The late Cardinal Newman preached the first sermon at the opening of the Oratory, Edgbaston. His Eminence had only shortly before seceded from the Established Church, of which he had been a distinguished member, and all the wealth and talent of Birmingham were present. The celebrated divine described the failings and follies of "society," which was then an exclusive group, concluding with this appeal to the congregation he was addressing: "And, dearly beloved brethren, were this example your guide in every particular, and did you resemble the pattern however closely, still would you be little else than bad imitations of polished ungodliness."

The decrease of "polished ungodliness" in England is obvious; the increase of the "bad imitations" is overwhelming—these are the two main features of social life here at the time. A fashionable Rip Van Winkle would imagine there had been an irruption from the servants' hall, and that they were masquerading in their masters' finery. To have all the vices and none of the virtues of the polished ungodly is a distressing condition. Lady Dorothy Nevill has been destined to witness the change from start to finish, but her criticisms concerning the alteration never surpass the limits of the benignly temperate.—Believe me to be, very truly yours, MARMADUKE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

VOTES AND WAGES.

Sir,—Having given to my letter on Votes and Wages the hospitality of your columns, and further having honoured it by a criticism in "Entre Nous," I feel confident that you will accord me further space to put my remarks more convincingly.

Of course, I should not attempt to prove that wages would rise automatically as a direct result of votes. What I want to emphasise is the need of the power to bring pressure to bear. Women in the labour market to-day are in the same position as the working man was before he got his vote. They are bottom dog and defenceless. Between forty and fifty years ago the working man was powerless, exploited, and disregarded. To-day, especially at election times, he holds a very different position. Both great parties in the State take good care to play up to the working man, and that is how he gets what he needs, for the representative is obliged to keep his promises to his constituents; whereas he may safely (at present) forget his promises made to women. But as the women to-day, whether they wish to or no, must fight the battle of life, in humanity's name give them a fighting chance.

I should be glad to be allowed to explain my point about trade unions a little further, as you state that you cannot see the connection between direct Parliamentary representation and conditions of labour. [As I am perfectly able to see it, and am concerned only with the relation between votes and wages, I take the liberty of omitting the next eight paragraphs.—Ed.]

May I give you a case in point, where the male trade unionists are getting the better of women trade unionists? The printing trade in Edinburgh has been undergoing a severe crisis. The men are gradually being ousted and undersold by the women compositors, who, however, have shown the same efficiency as the men for their work. The first pull that the men had over the women was that they refused to admit them to their trade union on the same footing. They would only admit the women, although skilled workers, into an inferior branch. The women then set up their own trade union.

The next point scored by the men was to try and force the women to agitate for higher wages, equal to themselves. The women, having no power to force the wage up, would, of course, have been squeezed out if they had consented; the only alternative was to keep the lower wage.

The third point is that the men, having authority and power at their back, have forced the employers into signing an agreement to take on no more women till after June, 1916, and to hand over all new key-boards to them. The men have won, hands down, because they have the sovereign power.

Lastly, may I draw attention to the fact that 92 per cent. of the sweated workers are women, the other small percentage including old men or young boys; and may I quote the words of Mr. James Samuelson, in his book, "The Lament of the Sweated," wherein he says: "We have only to look back on the recent history of labour—indeed, for that matter on all English history—to see that an accession of political power invariably means higher pay and better conditions of existence. It has been so with men, and it would undoubtedly follow the enfranchisement of women."—Yours, etc.,

Emily Wilding Davison (B.A. London).
22, Tichborne Street, Hyde Park, W.,
September 15, 1910.

DRINK CURES.

Sir,—May I make a firm but gentle protest against the method of argument adopted by Mr. H. M. Riley? He says "there are more inebriates in this country than ever there were," and that "if the remedies cured all they profess to do there ought to be a large decrease in the number of patients." There is no logical connection between the two things. If for any reasons inebriates are increasing at the rate of 5,000 a year, of whom, say, only 1,000 a year adopt the Normyl or any other treatment, there would still be an increase in the number of inebriates, whether all or none of those who were treated were cured.

One who can argue in this way did well to cease "to tabulate statistics for the reason that they are quite unreliable." They would be.

Mr. Riley quotes the case of a patient of his own who was supposed to be cured, and whom he met nearly every day for some years without any suspicion that anything was wrong. Her sister testified to the same effect, but her medical man reported one or two relapses in the course of—apparently—four years. This case may or may not have been a "cure," but that the treatment resulted in benefit seems undeniable. Mr. Riley is unjust to himself.

Evidence of great benefit from the Normyl treatment is abundant. The claim of the Normyl Treatment Association is that out of 5,500 treatments in four years "the failures known to the association have not amounted to more than 8 per cent." This is a sound statistical method of statement, which, after making all possible allowance for the difficulty of obtaining completely trustworthy evidence, is sufficiently striking.—Yours faithfully,

William Schooling.

THE "UNDEVELOPED LAND" OF MEDICINE.

Sir,—I have to thank the British Medical Journal of September 3 for teaching us these words. They are of immense significance. Some thirty-five years ago Hutton came to London and practised with extraordinary success the art of "bone-setting" in the West End. Of course, the doctors were unfriendly. They declared that he was a quack, just as they declared that Harvey was a mere circulator, and asserted that all Hutton's science lay in chance cures. But the movement thus instituted went on. There are now eight schools of bone-setting under Governmental recognition in the United States, with 12,000 students, who pay annually £40,000 in tuition fees alone. These startling facts have induced Dr. Alexander Bryce, of Glasgow and Cambridge, to take the matter into study.

He admits that he has been interested in the bone-setter's methods of treatment because of the "remarkable improvement" in some of his "own reputedly incurable patients." And after careful examination he has come to the conclusion that there must be "virtue in a method which has such vitality as to spread all over a continent in a few years, and at the present rate of progress bids fair to travel all over the world." Dr. Bryce points to the fact that Dr. Wharton Hood, after a thorough investigation of the methods of the late Mr. Robert Hutton, declared that his experiences were invaluable and the results astounding. But Dr. Bryce, while fighting for "the admission of this new form of scientific bone-setting among the recognised methods of treatment practised by the medical profession," is not as generous to me as was Dr. Wharton Hood to Mr. Hutton.

Yet for nearly twenty years, as Hutton's successor, and after operating on over 30,000 cases, I have repeatedly exhorted the Faculty to investigate this important branch of therapeutics. Almost four years ago I wrote to the medical papers offering to submit these methods to any test before an authorised committee of qualified surgeons, but no heed was given to my plea.

I beg of you, Sir, to insert this letter in your columns, and thus direct the attention of surgeons to Dr. Bryce's paper on the subject,, which is of such vital importance to suffering humanity, and which the Lancet years ago described as a "neglected corner of the domain of surgery."—Yours faithfully, H. A. Barker.

Hamilton House, 12a, Park Lane, W.,
September 15, 1910.

MAMMON.

ROUND THE MARKETS.

Cheap Money—Consols Steady—Home Rails and Labour—Yankees Strong—Latest View of the Political Situation—Cheap Mexican Southerns.

AFTER being roused into mild animation by the satisfactory position disclosed at the carry-over and by the lightness of contango rates, the Stock markets towards the end of last week relapsed into a state of quiescence. But prices in most departments held their earlier advances fairly well. The cheapness of money was again an important factor. The Bank of England last Thursday published a total reserve of no less than 30½ millions, which is unusually high for the time of year, and the open market in consequence of large redemptions of Treasury Bills by the Government is abundantly supplied with loanable capital. In view of the keenness of the export demand for gold from Egypt and the Continent it is probable that a higher range of money rates will rule in the last three months of the year, but at present there is no indication of coming stringency. The Consol market has managed to keep firm under the influence of low money rates. The buying of Goschens is still of a restricted character, but the idea is still held in some quarters that the quotation has about touched bottom, because the banks and other leading financial institutions would take steps to prevent the quotation going below 80, and thereby obviate the necessity for further writing down their holdings.

The Home Railway market has again had a chequered existence, the dose of labour troubles actual and threatened being sufficient to prevent any material rise. Events in the labour world need to be closely watched, for upon the outcome of the present disturbances the course of the market is likely to turn in the immediate future. The trade of the country is increasing so satisfactorily, and railway traffic returns continue to expand in such excellent fashion, that the market must have its turn before long. I still think Great Northern deferred, Hulls, Midland deferred, Chatham first preference, and Brighton "A" are among the most promising selections in the group. The Yankee market has shaped in a way that will surprise all those who are apt to forget that Wall Street is a place where the unexpected most frequently happens. The elections in the State of Maine resulted in a distinct score for the Democrats, but instead of Yankees slumping on the figures they started to boom. The argument of Wall Street appears to be that while events are tending towards a win for the Democratic party in November, that party is unlikely to get a big working majority; while as the Senate will still remain Republican it will be impossible for a Democratic House of Representatives to alter existing legislation for at least the next fifteen months. And in fifteen months much may happen to divert the market's mind from politics. General business, which at present admittedly leaves much to be desired, may in that time be booming. This new way of looking at the political outlook has a very important bearing upon the market situation, and while it seems in the nature of things too much to expect that prices of stocks will not fluctuate rather nervously as the date of the elections draws nearer, there is the more ground for anticipating that reactions in Americans will be powerfully contested. The market, in fact, is likely to be of that give-and-take character which gives plenty of opportunities for in-and-out jobbing.

Investors continue to patronise the Foreign Bond market to such an extent that the floating supply is practically exhausted, and prices have been raised to levels that in many cases would involve losses to present purchasers who had their bonds drawn for early redemption. A notewo thy instance of the popularity of the Foreign Bond market was supplied the other day by the reception accorded to a 4½ per cent. loan issued at 95 by the City of Tammerfors (Finland). There was nothing specially alluring about the terms, and probably the great majority of investors in this country until they read the prospectus hardly knew such a place as Tammerfors existed, yet the loan was heavily oversubscribed. South American bonds continue to be specially favoured, a feature in the last few days having been a run on the 3 per cent. bonds of the Province of Buenos Ayres. These bonds, which were issued to replace the old Provincial Cedulas, bear interest at 3 per cent. until January, 1912, and 3½ per cent. thereafter. At the existing price of 72 the yield is just over 4¾ per cent. This is still not a bad return as yields upon foreign bonds go nowadays, but some of my readers who bought when I recommended the bonds at a little over 60 will be getting over 5½ per cent. upon their outlay.

Investment buying has again been seen in the Foreign Railway market, the coming of the dividends, as usual, helping to arouse interest in that section. Mexican Rails have had a further rise, the record character of recent traffics, coupled with the fact that the company has reduced its expense ratio to about 50 per cent., leading to confident talk. The dividend for the June half-year will be announced on the 29th inst., and there is every reason to look for the full 6 per cent. being declared upon the second preference stock, with a margin representing about ½ per cent. upon the ordinary. For the benefit of the investor looking for a sound security offering every prospect of capital appreciation in the next few years I would again draw attention to the ordinary stock of the Mexican Southern Railway. The Mexican Southern is now leased to the Interoceanic Railway of Mexico, which has guaranteed dividends upon the stock on an ascending scale as follows:—1910, 3½ per cent.; 1911, 4 per cent.; 1912, 4½ per cent.; 1913 to 1915, 5 per cent. each year; 1916 and 1917, 5¼ per cent.; 1918 and thereafter, 5½ per cent. The present price of Mexican Southern ordinary is 101, and as the dividend is increased the quotation will almost certainly rise, for there can be practically no question about the adequacy of the guarantee. In an article published about three months ago I suggested that the stock would probably settle down some years hence at about 120, and I still regard this as a reasonable prediction.

RUBBER.

Some Dividend Estimates—Valuation Scales—Crude Rubbers.

My readers frequently ask me what dividends will be earned this year on some of their holdings, and I cannot do better than give some extracts from an excellent table which has been sent to me by Messrs. Hickson Bros., whose calculations are based on the assumption that the official output estimates for the current year will be realised, and that a net profit will be obtained of 6s. per lb.—a sufficiently reasonable estimate, and one which may well be exceeded:—

| | Last year's dividend. | Estimated earnings for current year. |
|---|---|---|
| Anglo-Malay | 80% | 140% |
| Batu Caves | 50% | 168% |
| Batu Tiga | 5% | 42% |
| Bukit Rajah | 150% | 162% |
| Castlefield | Nil | 41% |
| Cicely | 140% | 283% |
| Consolidated Malay | 80% | 174% |
| Federated Selangor | 125% | 153% |
| Glenshiel | Nil | 49% |
| Golden Hope | 30% | 54% |
| Harpenden | 20% | 74% |
| Inch Kenneth | 50% | 210% |
| Kepong | 10% | 40% |
| Lanadron | 27½% | 46% |
| Linggi | 165% | 283% |
| Pataling | 125% | 306% |
| P.P.K. | 15% | 28% |
| Selangor | 287½% | 450% |
| Sungei Kapar | 32½% | 66% |
| Sungei Way | Nil | 40% |
| Tremelbye | 10% | 59% |
| Vallambrosa | 250% | 252% |

Selangor, it will be seen, seems likely to retain its pride of place, and an examination of this company's position reveals the interesting fact that although the whole of its planted acreage is not yet by any means in full bearing, the company would this year, if it earned on its present output of rubber a profit of no more than one penny per lb., be in a position to pay a dividend of 6¼ per cent. on its whole capital. This fact may be regarded as a practical illustration of the possibility to which I called attention in these columns on July 20, that moderately capitalised plantation companies will, when their estates are in full bearing, be able to pay annual dividends of 10 per cent. with rubber giving but a penny per lb. profit.

Rubber is just now rather in disgrace with investors because profits have fallen to the region of six shillings per lb.; but the plantation industry is yet young, and its votaries will have no reason to complain when it has had time to show what handsome dividends it can pay, when the struggle has become keener and profits are cut much finer than they are now. Five years hence many of our younger companies will be producing as much rubber per acre as Selangor produces now, and if profits have then fallen to, say, sixpence instead of as many shillings per lb., company dividends of over 30 per cent. should not be uncommon. In the early future the price of the commodity may go higher, but in the end it is certain to fall, and I want my readers to put a fair proportion of their money in those moderately capitalised companies which, as regards the future, are in a position of exceptional strength.

Rubber valuations of late have been based upon a very high scale, justified only by the exceptional price which the commodity has recently commanded, but we may in a year or two have to revert to the lower scale which obtained a few years ago when rubber was at a normal price, and I give below the very moderate valuation scale upon which the Lanadron estate was floated in 1907:—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 8 year old rubber valued at | | £180 | per acre. |
| 7 | ,, ,, | £160 | ,, |
| 6 | ,, ,, | £140 | ,, |
| 5 | ,, ,, | £120 | ,, |
| 4 | ,, ,, | £100 | ,, |
| 3 | ,, ,, | £60 | ,, |
| 2 | ,, ,, | £35 | ,, |
| 1 | ,, ,, | £15 | ,, |

The figures will give a rough notion as to what in quieter times a rubber estate may be worth, and they allow me to emphasise a point which I have made in these columns before, viz., that given suitable location and good management a young estate should increase in capital value more rapidly and more certainly than can a fully developed dividend-paying property. On the Lanadron scale seven-year-old rubber at £160 should be worth £180 in the following year—an increase of, say, 12½ per cent. At the age of three years rubber is fairly well established, and an increase from £60 to £100 when four years old means an increase in capital value of over 66 per cent. Moreover, as the younger rubber is, of course, farther from the maximum value which, although now undefined, must some day be reached, the purchaser may look forward to further substantial increases in future years. As to what will eventually be a fair value for a fully developed rubber estate no one can yet say, but the Economist put forward the view that £200 might be regarded as a normal figure, and although the market regarded the view as pessimistic, it can hardly be regarded as wholly lacking probability.

Assuming then that when the commodity falls to 3s. per lb., an acre of old rubber will be worth £200, my view is that investors should give a preference to the shares of companies whose estates are now valued by the market below that figure, such as, to mention a few, Glen Bervie, Merlimau, Bandar Sumatra, Tebrau and Bukit Mertajam. To those who like a good present dividend with a minimum of risk Batu Tiga, Glenshiel, Shelford and Tremelbye may be recommended for present purchase, while on a higher acreage valuation Inch Kenneth's dividend for the current year seems likely to yield the purchaser a handsome return.

At a time when the relative qualities of wild and plantation rubber are being much discussed it is of special interest to hear the views of a rubber manufacturer on the subject, and the remarks made at the Tebrau meeting last week by Mr. P. M. Matthews (who is also managing director of a rubber manufacturing company) are well worth the investor's attention.

It is represented (said Mr. Matthews) by those interested in the Brazilian rubber trade that cultivated Para is not equal in durability to the wild product. There is no proof of this, and there is no foundation for the statement. There are some purposes for which it is still found necessary to employ old fine Para in preference to plantation rubber, but not for reasons connected with its durability. The difference in the method of coagulating and curing the two rubbers necessitates different treatment in the various processes of manufacture, but when this is thoroughly understood I do not hesitate to say that for nine-tenths of the purposes for which wild Para is now used, the best plantation rubber can be employed with equal advantage. I have subjected plantation rubber to the severest tests, including those for durability prescribed by the Admiralty and the War Office, with the most satisfactory results.

The fall in the shares of the Crude Rubber Washing Company has given holders some not unnatural anxiety, and I have this week made careful inquiries both as to the cause of the fall and as to the present position of the company. It will be remembered that the issue was well received by the market on flotation; the substantial premium which the shares soon afterwards attained was based very largely upon the profits which the company was known to have made during the first month or two of its career, and upon negotiations which were then pending for the sale at a very considerable profit of its foreign rights and patents. Unfortunately, however, a large speculative account was built up in the shares by speculators who apparently had no intention of taking the shares off the market, and heavy continued selling was unavoidable when the general setback in rubber occurred. The position of the company remains, of course, quite unaffected by these purely market troubles. Next month, when the new works at Edmonton are completed, the company's output capacity will be increased nearly twenty times, and the directors claim that the installation will be the finest of the kind in the world. Three days are to be set apart for a demonstration to shareholders, and the publicity which will naturally be given to that event should not be without its effect upon the shares. The company, no doubt, has a magnificent and highly profitable business. It will readily be conceded that no list of the leading Mincing Lane houses would be complete which did not include Messrs. Lewis and Peat, S. Figgis and Co., Gow, Wilson and Stanton, and W. J. and H. Thompson, and on looking through a trade journal the other day I was glad to notice that the Crude Rubber Company's ordinary trade advertisement contains the names of these four houses as brokers to the company; and the fact that firms of such high standing are content to divide the business amongst them and to allow their names to be used sufficiently indicates the company's importance in the rubber world, and the regard in which it is held by the leading houses. The shake-out in Crude Rubbers has been severe, but a turning point in the market has, I believe, at last been reached.

The Most Complete List of Rubber and Oil Share Quotations will be found in every Saturday's issue of "The Financial Times." 1d. daily. On sale everywhere.

Rubber Shares as Investments, by Henry T. Brice, 1s. 1d., post free. The most up-to-date book published concerning Companies in Malay, Java, and Sumatra. Straker, 61, Old Broad St., E.C.

A correspondent asks for an opinion as to an alleged synthetic rubber with regard to which he sends a news cutting. My readers need not be alarmed, for synthetic rubber has been with us for the last twenty years. During that time, however, the product of the chemist (which is rubber only by courtesy) has shown but little improvement, and the problem of producing artificial rubber on a commercial basis still remains unsolved. The manufacturer demands a substance which not only looks like rubber, but which will wear like rubber, and these synthetic productions have a wonderful way of collapsing when put to the test of hard wear.

MINES.

Kaffirs and Rhodesians "Marking Time"—Rhodesian Publicity—Modder Ore Reserves—Latest Nigerian Tin Developments—Broken Hill Revival.

Although last week was the first half of a new account, it cannot be said, so far as mines are concerned, that it was any improvement on the second half of the preceding one. As a financial writer alliteratively put it, the mining markets are "marking time" with maddening monotony. If an individual group falls out of step temporarily and tries to break away forwards or backwards it is soon whipped back into line again. The only definite signs of mutiny are in the Broken Hill camp, whose supporters made a surprise sortie at the end of last week, and on the part of the Nigerian Tin Companies, which continue to creep quietly forward on the flank of the West African market.

As I foreshadowed last week, the shareholders of the four concerns being absorbed by the Rhodesia Exploration Company—namely, the Banket, Shamva Trust, Gold Schists, and Etna companies—duly approved the amalgamation scheme at their separate meetings. Although it is true that formal confirmatory meetings have still to be held, the carrying through of the combine is now, for all practical purposes, assured. It would, therefore, be wasted effort to go into the various objections which have been raised by a few individual members of the companies and by the market. Most of the complaints have, I imagine, arisen—directly or indirectly, consciously or unconsciously—out of the fact that a number of holders of shares in the various companies concerned see a loss at present as compared with the prices which they originally paid for their interests. But that is a matter which will probably be soon remedied whenever Rhodesians become active again. For Explorations, as soon as the amalgamation is completed and the special settlement held, are likely to rank, even more certainly than heretofore, among the half-dozen leading shares of the Rhodesian market. Apart from the gigantic interests in all parts of the colony which the amalgamated company will own, its £3,000,000 in cash and share resources will enable it to have a finger—or shall I say a whole hand?—in every Rhodesian "pie." Thus it would be difficult to conceive of any new development in the progress of the colony which will not reflect upon Explorations almost as much as upon Chartered. "Unity is strength," and the amalgamated concern should, with the capable men it has in control, go forward from strength to strength in a way which it might not have been possible to ensure with the five individual enterprises at present existing.

I am glad to see that Dr. Sauer, the chairman of several of the amalgamating companies, endorses the policy consistently advocated in these columns of the fullest and promptest publication of mining information. Speaking at the Exploration meeting Dr. Sauer, while pertinently remarking that in the case of new ventures and new discoveries the too early publication of news might interfere with carrying through business on favourable terms, added:—

> But, apart from this, I agree it is desirable, in order to establish confidence in Rhodesian mining, that, if anything, we should err on the side of too much, rather than too little, publicity, and it will be the policy of your board—and those of you who have examined the voluminous and frequent reports which it has been our custom to issue to shareholders may think I am giving an unnecessary undertaking—to afford the widest publicity to the development results and gold returns of the various ventures with which your company is, or may be, connected.

I hope this hint will be taken to heart by some other Rhodesian concerns.

The Surprise is again a delinquent in the supply of development information. Two months ago it was cabled that the value of the reef at the bottom of the deep winze had decreased to 9 dwts. over 10 ins., while the consulting engineer commented: "Do not think there is cause for anxiety as long as values continue in winze." Although in the interim the annual report has been issued and the meeting held, at the moment of writing any further information as to the above winze is still lacking. During the past few days there has been what looks like significant buying of Surprises. Is there any new development in the mine unknown to the directors?

By the time this issue of Truth is published the extensive repairs to the Globe and Phœnix main shaft should have been completed and haulage of ore and development work resumed after two months' interval. It may be remembered that when operations were suspended the directors published a circular giving a very full and clear statement of developments up to that date. They are, therefore, restarting with a clean slate, and I would urge them to issue fortnightly, or at least monthly, cabled statements keeping shareholders in touch with the latest developments. The revolution in the fortunes of the Globe and Phœnix Company has had so much to do with the improved standing which the Rhodesian market now enjoys as compared with a year or two ago that the directors of that particular concern owe it to the industry as a whole that they should be above criticism in the treatment of their shareholders. High hopes are expressed by bulls as to the probable outcome of development work at the Globe's seventeenth level in the next few months.

The Kaffir market pursues the even tenor of its way undisturbed by anything more than a temporary flicker of interest here and there. It was hoped after the conclusion last week of the election for the first Parliament of United South Africa that colonial operators would turn their attention to business once more, but so far they have not been very active. An election speech by Mr. Hull, the defeated Finance Minister, caused fears of increased taxation on diamond mines, and had some sentimental effect on the Kaffir market generally, since it was argued that if part of a Budget deficit was to be made up by imposing fresh burdens on diamond and base metal mines, it was to be feared that no human Finance Minister would be able to keep his hands off the gold mining industry also. But it was rapidly recognised how exaggerated the whole scare was. As the Financial Times pointed out, the £500,000 knocked off the market valuation of De Beers Deferred shares alone last Thursday was equivalent to the whole amount which requires to be made up in the South African Budget by the non-renewal of the income-tax. In any case, this tax apparently cost De Beers at least £100,000 for the year 1908-9, and it is not likely that the re-imposition of the charge in the same or another form would make the burden much, if any, heavier.

But the Kaffir market has not been absolutely without "bull" points. The cabled figures of development results on the New Modderfontein for the past year direct renewed attention to the possibilities of the Eastern Rand. While the ore reserves have been increased by over a million tons to two and a-half million tons—a wonderful record enough—the average grade has risen from 6.3 dwts. per ton to 7 dwts., a surprising contrast to recent experience in mining on a large scale. With the higher grade and with the present rate of progress in crushing it is hoped that the Modder should be able to distribute £1 per annum on its shares from the middle of next year.

While "Jungle" gold shares have rapidly wiped out the effect of a little forced liquidation in connection with last week's Settlement, chief interest in the West African market is still for the present concentrated on the Nigerian Tin group. The reports of the engineers sent out by the various syndicates continue, I am told, to be uniformly favourable. Of course, should the competition for properties grow, there will, no doubt, be cases where uninformed or impatient prospectors will stake out useless areas, but if there is much alluvial such as that referred to in a circular issued the other day by the Benue (Northern Nigeria) Tin Mines, the Straits Settlements will have to look to its laurels. According to that company's engineer, from test washings alone he has secured 3,000 lbs. of tin in five days. The Benue has secured, so far, eleven square miles of what is claimed to be rich tin-bearing ground. The company has a capital of only £10,000, of which, I believe, £8,500 is issued, and the shares stand at about £4. The shares of another Champion subsidiary—the Tin Fields of Northern Nigeria—were introduced on the market last week at 1½. The company has a capital of £100,000, and owns two properties covering an area of seventeen square miles in extent. It is calculated that, producing 800 tons of tin oxide per annum, the life of the concern should be well over twenty years, and with block tin at only £80 per ton, or far below the current quotation, it is claimed that profits should be over 25 per cent. per annum on the capital. Production is expected to commence within the next few weeks. Still another Nigerian flotation—the Bisichi—is pending. This property is owned by a syndicate with a capital, I understand, of £45,000, the shares of which are quoted about £3. It is anticipated that syndicate shareholders will receive four or five shares in the enlarged company for each one they at present own.

In view of the recent strength of spelter (as zinc is commercially termed) the rise in the shares of the Broken Hill zinc producing companies at the end of last week was only natural. The Zinc Corporation has been making its estimates of profits this year on the basis of £21 per ton for zinc, whereas the quotation is now up to £23. Little wonder that the Amalgamated Zinc Company has entered into a contract to buy 150,000 more tons of zinciferous tailings from the Broken Hill Block 10 Company. I am pleased to see that Zinc Corporation ordinary, which have been consistently recommended in this column, are now up to their best price of the past two years. As the time for the commencement of dividends approaches (say the middle of next year, if not earlier) I think these shares should go somewhere near £1, but it does not follow that the Stock Exchange will await that period before definitely discounting the promising outlook for Zinc ordinary. The Barrier mine shares have also been good in sympathy with a better tone in the lead market. I imagine a purchaser of Broken Hill South Blocks or Norths, at present prices, would do himself no harm in the long run even if the current activity should be temporarily interrupted by profit snatching on the part of those who got in lower down.

Mexican Mining Results.

With its quartet of rich mines—the El Oro, Esperanza, Mexico El Oro and Dolores—the El Oro Goldfield of Mexico easily ranks among the big quartz gold mining districts of the world, although it has not been known so long to the British public as, for instance, Kalgoorlie's Golden Mile or the Kolar Goldfield of India. But already the yellow metal taken from the field must be reckoned by the million sterling. Indeed, the El Oro Mining and Railway Company, whose annual report is just issued, has distributed in dividends to date no less than £1,350,000. Its comparatively young subsidiary, the Mexico El Oro, whose annual meeting was held this week, has returned to shareholders only £300,000 so far, but in both cases the issued capital of the companies has been more than paid back. More satisfactory still, both concerns seem in a very sound position intrinsically, although, as it has a habit of doing when things are going well, the market may be discounting the future too far ahead in the quotations which are at present put upon the respective shares.

Giving the El Oro precedence as the parent company, its report shows that the total profits for 1909-10 were £227,000, an increase of over £12,000 on the previous year, and making with £87,000 brought forward a distributable total of £314,000. After payment of two 1s. 6d. dividends, the same as for 1908-9, and making various allocations for depreciation, etc., the slightly increased balance of £90,000 is carried forward into the current year. The most important feature of the year's operations was, perhaps, the completion of the improvements to No. 2 mill and the placing out of commission last February of the old No. 1 mill. With the more efficient plant the ore treated was raised from 285,000 tons to 316,000 tons, and a better extraction was secured at a smaller cost, so that altogether, although the average return of gold was slightly lower at $8.10 per ton, the aggregate profit, as I have already shown, was slightly higher. As regards development work in the mine, the ore reserves, as announced about a month ago, were increased on balance during the year from 383,000 tons to 442,000 tons, but the average value in gold and silver is now put at only $9.50 per ton, against $11.10 a twelvemonth ago. At the present price of about 27s. El Oros yield roughly 11 per cent. per annum, so that it would take nine years' dividends for a purchaser to get his money back, without considering interest, whereas the ore actually developed is less than eighteen months ahead of the mill. I should not care to buy into a quartz mine, whose life is always indeterminate, on such a basis for "investment" purposes. But the big area of the El Oro gives speculative chances of new discoveries.

Now let us see whether the Mexico El Oro, about which such sanguine talk has been heard in certain quarters during the past few months, makes any better showing than its parent. Unlike the latter, a slightly reduced profit was made by the Mexico El Oro for 1909-10, but as the variation from the previous year was only £200 in £155,000, it is hardly worth mentioning, except as showing the business-like regularity which so often characterises mining operations now-a-days. In this case also the efficiency of the plant was increased as regards the amount of ore dealt with, 136,000 tons against 101,000 tons for 1908-9, but the extraction was not so good, and as the average yield fell from $12.44 to $10.21 per ton, profits would undoubtedly have suffered had it not been for the able administration which secured a compensating reduction in working costs. As I chronicled some weeks ago, the Mexico El Oro substantially increased its ore reserves during the past year, the total of 284,000 tons containing $12.50 per ton in gold and silver comparing with 192,000 tons averaging $14.40 a twelvemonth ago. Nevertheless, the ore reserves are only about two years ahead of the mill, whereas even with the dividend increased last year to 14s. per share (as against 12s. 6d. for 1908-9), the yield at the current quotation of £9 is under 8 per cent., or, say, 12½ years' purchase, without allowing for any interest on one's money. Of course, the reason Mexico El Oros stand at what seems such an inflated price is the speculative chance that the west sulphide veins—the formation which resuscitated the fortunes of the Esperanza—may develop into something really big instead of the matter of a few tens of thousands of tons of ore so far proved. But on the principle of a bird in the hand being worth two in the bush, I am not surprised that the directors of the El Oro thought it discreet to dispose during the past year of the company's holding of Mexico El Oros at the handsome profit available. As the recent slump in Waihis has shown, one may just as easily pay too much for the shares of mines which may claim to rank among the great gold producers of the world, as for those of more modest pretensions.

INDUSTRIALS.

Demand for Brewery Stocks—Oils Again in Favour—Pearson and Knowles, Palmer's Shipbuilding and Associated Cement Results.

While business in iron and steel shares and textiles and other leading groups has been checked by the disturbed state of labour, there have been one or two features of interest in the Industrial market during the week. Some inquiry has been reported for brewery debenture stocks, on the feeling that prices had been unduly depressed by the effects of recent legislation, and with hardly any stock on jobbers' books values have experienced a substantial recovery. The oil market, too, has maintained an appearance of some activity. Buyers have again come forward for some of the most promising shares in the Maikop group, those referred to in this column a week ago all being in favour. Californias were bought for investment, and in some quarters a rumour has been circulating that the interim dividend due next month will be increased. Shells have been a lively and uncertain market, and it is pretty clear that until a settlement of this company's differences with the Standard Oil Company is arrived at Shells will experience frequent spasms.

Like many other coal and iron companies, Pearson and Knowles in the year ended June 30 registered an improvement in profits, the net receipts being £66,600, as compared with £61,900 for the previous year. Yet the dividend is only 3¼ per cent. as against 4½ per cent. for the preceding twelve months, and 11¼ per cent. for 1907-8. The directors state that business has been conducted under conditions of difficulty, the depression in the iron and coal trades having continued throughout the year, while the position has been aggravated by the disturbing influence of the Miners' Eight Hours Act. Accordingly, the board has reduced the dividend and increased reserves. An interesting reason underlies the proposal to issue new capital for £140,000. Originally the company manufactured iron only, but as cheap forms of steel have in many cases superseded iron, it has become advisable for the company to establish steel works for itself. At present the semi-manufactured steel, which is the raw material for the company's trade, has to be obtained from other manufacturers, which obviously places it at a disadvantage. To remove this disadvantage by enabling the concern to erect its own steel plant is the object of the proposed new issue.

Palmer's Shipbuilding and Iron Company shows a distinct improvement in trading results as compared with a year ago, a working profit of £12,600 being shown against a loss on trading of £63,700 in 1908-9. But the outcome of the year's operations is £11,300 short of the sum required to meet debenture interest, and the accumulated debit balance now reaches the substantial figure of £138,700. It is so far good to read from the report that prospects are distinctly brighter in all directions than a year ago. The Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers, Limited, discloses annual profits of £337,668, which are a few thousand better than in 1908-9. The company had to face very low prices and a poor demand until near the end of its year, but, fortunately, it was able to offset these disadvantages by further savings in manufacturing costs. As usual, debenture and preference interest have been paid, but there is nothing available for distribution upon the £1,925,000 of ordinary capital. As a matter of fact, throughout the company's ten years' existence the ordinary shareholders have never received a penny. "Water," not cement, must be blamed.

BANK SHARES FOR INVESTMENT.

Bank shares are not exactly the things for the very small investor, who is wise to keep in mind the liability for uncalled capital that attaches to a holder, and also the latter's liability, as a rule, for the notes in circulation where such exist. In the event of liquidation the liability of shareholders in limited companies extends in both respects to one year after the date of transfer; with unregistered companies the period is three years, unless otherwise stated. There is, however, the limitation that all present shareholders must first be exhausted, and, further, that past shareholders are in no case responsible for debts incurred after they ceased financial connection with the company. But, while it is necessary not to overlook the particular liabilities attaching to bank shares, the danger with the majority of banks whose shares are known on the London market is exceedingly remote. The record of the leading banks working under British management in this country and abroad has for many years been a story of remarkable progress and of very conservative finance. Dividends on bank shares are, of course, subject to fluctuations, according to the varying state of trade; but in actual practice the fluctuations have been very small, thanks to the liberal policy adopted by most banks in regard to reserve appropriations during good years. With the majority of banks whose shares are quoted in the Official List the record of earnings and dividends over the past fifteen years has been one of almost unbroken progress, and during that period calls upon the shareholders, so far from being a matter of suffering, have taken the form of issues upon terms involving substantial bonuses.

In the following table I have made a selection of eight bank shares that seem worth the attention of investors:—

| Bank. | Share and Paid. | Div. % p.a. Prev. | Div. % p.a. Last | Divs. due. | Price. | Yield. £ s. d. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Anglo-Egyptian | 15 -5 | 10/- | 5/- | J. D. | 12⅜ | 5 17 9 |
| Anglo-South American | 10 -5 | 5/- | 5/- | A. O. | 8¼ | 6 1 3 |
| Imperial Ottoman | 20 -10 | 18/- for yr. | | July | 17½ | 5 3 0 |
| London and Brazilian | 20 -10 | 10/- | 24/- | A. O. | 30½ | 5 10 9 |
| London Joint Stock | 100 -15 | 15/- | 15/- | J. J. | 28 | 5 6 3 |
| National of Australasia | 8 -5 | 6 | 6 | M. N. | 5⅛ | 5 6 9 |
| National of New Zealand | 7½-2½ | 10 | 14 | J. J. | 5 7/8 | 5 8 0 |
| Union of Lon. and Smiths | 100 -15½ | 17/- | 17/- | J. J. | 31½ | 5 6 3 |

This is a fairly cosmopolitan group. Having regard to the financial strength of each of the institutions the yields offered are without doubt attractive. The Anglo-Egyptian Bank, registered in 1864, has made big strides of recent years in company with the commercial development of the Delta. Dividends of 15 per cent. have been regularly maintained since 1905-6, and the outlook continues bright. The Anglo-South American Bank (until recently the Bank of Tarapaca) dates from 1888, and its progress has been a reflection of the wonderful expansion that has taken place in the Queen Republic of South America. Since 1901-2 dividends have been gradually raised from 6 to 10 per cent. At the current price of about 8 the shares look a decided bargain. Another South American institution whose shares I have included in the above table is the London and Brazilian, which has a history dating back to 1862. For the past nine years the dividend on the shares of this bank has been 10 per cent. plus bonuses, which after being 5 per cent. each year from 1905 to 1909 have lately been increased to 7 per cent.

The Imperial Ottoman is a very big and powerful institution, which has played a leading part in Turkish affairs since its establishment in 1863. It has a subscribed capital of £10,000,000, of which £5,000,000 is paid up. The last report of this bank marked an important stage in its affairs. The method of distributing profits has been as follows:—After payment of 5 per cent. to the shareholders a sum equivalent to 10 per cent. of the total profit went to the statutory reserve fund, and of the surplus nine-tenths were handed to the shareholders and one-tenth was divided in equal proportions between the founders and the board of directors. In the last financial year there was placed to reserve £51,507 from profits, and in addition a sum of no less than £200,300, representing amounts that had been put aside from time to time to meet contingencies which had not arisen. The reserve was thus increased to a total of £1,250,000, equal to one-fourth of the paid up capital, and further additions will therefore no longer be obligatory. For the past four years the dividend on Ottoman Bank shares has been 9 per cent. per annum.

Of the two colonial banks included in the table the National of Australasia, while not at present a big dividend-payer, has been steadily going ahead for years. The dividend, which was 3 per cent. in 1904, has risen by steps to 6 per cent., and the general conditions ruling in the Commonwealth suggest that the recent rate of progress will be continued. The National Bank of New Zealand, which between 1900 and 1909 increased the dividend on its shares by stages from 8 to 13 per cent., reduced the distribution for 1909-10 to 12 per cent. But at the meeting in July the chairman gave a very satisfactory account of the position. A premium amounting to £62,500 derived from a new issue of shares had been put to reserve, and with the amount allocated from profits the bank's reserve now amounts to £460,000, or within £40,000 of the paid-up capital as it will be on October 1. The profits of the bank were affected in the early part of the past financial year by a continuance of the depression that had followed a bout of over-speculation in land, but according to the chairman's statement, made two months ago, "it may safely be said that this depression is now a thing of the past."

The two London banks I have included in my table are in the front rank of English institutions. My reason for singling them out from amongst their kindred is due solely to the fact that the yield on each is relatively high, namely, over 5¼ per cent. as against less than 5 per cent. upon the majority of London bank shares. The only reason I can think of for this discrepancy in the method of valuation is the heaviness of the uncalled liability existing in both cases. The Joint Stock for each of the past five half-years has maintained its dividend at the rate of 10 per cent., and there is reason to expect the margin behind this rate to grow rather than to diminish. The Union and Smiths has since 1895 paid regular dividends at the rate of 10 per cent. plus bonuses during the greater part of the period. For each of the eleven half-years to June, 1904, the bonuses were 3s., while for each of the ensuing eight half-years they amounted to 1s. 6d. In the two half-years to June, 1909, the bonuses were dropped, but for the following two half-years, which brings us down to date, bonuses of 1s. 6d. have been resumed. The dividend and bonus together work out at 11 per cent.

A RUBBER SHARE RAMP.

The latitude which the law allows to bucket-shop sharps is strikingly illustrated by a confiding investor's experiences with Campbell, Robertson and Co., of Copthall House, E.C., whose name is enshrined in the Truth Cautionary List. Hitherto these people, who impudently style themselves "stock and share brokers," have come under my notice chiefly in connection with flat-catching 1 per cent. cover gambles. In the present case, however, a gentleman whom I will call Mr. X was induced by a circular to purchase 60 Spies Petroleum and 40 Lobitos Oil shares through Campbell, Robertson and Co. His instructions were given on May 17, and he was beguiled into paying the amount due, £159 8s. 6d., on the following day, although the next Stock Exchange settlement was not until May 27. He was promised transfers in due course, but it was only by putting on pressure that he eventually obtained the Lobitos shares, while the Spies have never to this day been delivered, nor is there any likelihood that they ever will be. Simultaneously with this unfortunate deal in oil shares Mr. X ventured into rubber with an equally disastrous result. On the publication of the prospectus of the Beranang (Selangor) Rubber Plantations, Limited, on May 17, he wired to Campbell, Robertson and Co. to apply in his name for 3,000 shares. At their request his cheque for £75, the amount payable on application, was forwarded to them the same day. The firm wrote back that they had applied, and in a further letter on May 23 they said:—

> With regard to your application for 3,000 Beranang rubber shares, we are now holding these shares for you, and as there is a call of 6d. per share on allotment, will you please forward to us your cheque for this amount?

By a stroke of luck Mr. X happened to mention the matter to a friend before he had complied with this request. Knowing that the Beranang issue had been very largely over-subscribed, the friend expressed the opinion that Mr. X could not have been allotted the full 3,000. He thereupon telegraphed to Campbell, Robertson and Co., and they wired back: "1,350 Beranangs allotted; can offer you the balance at par." This message was followed by a letter, in which they told a cock-and-bull story to the effect that they applied for and "held" Mr. X's shares in conjunction with a larger number belonging to other clients; that he was only "entitled" to 1,350, but that they had asked him for the allotment call on the 3,000 because they were in a position to supply the balance of 1,650 if he required them. It has since been ascertained from the Beranang Company that the name of Campbell, Robertson and Co. did not appear in the list of applications. No shares in that company were delivered to Mr. X, and when at length the firm undertook to return his money the cheque they sent was dishonoured. Altogether they owe him £157 10s. A few weeks back a firm of solicitors wrote on their behalf that the books, which were "in a very bad state," were being examined by chartered accountants, pending whose report nothing could be done. Perhaps the state of the books was even worse than was supposed—at any rate, Campbell, Robertson and Co. are no longer to be found at their former office, and there does not appear to be the remotest prospect that Mr. X will recover a penny of his money.

So far as the oil share transactions are concerned I suppose that Mr. X has no cause of complaint against the law. In the case of shares, as in the case of any sort of goods, if the buyer fails to get the things for which he has paid his remedy against the vendor is by means of a civil action. It may be a worthless remedy, but that is his look-out. He should not part with his money to people of whom he knows nothing. The question of the Beranang application, however, wears a different aspect. Obviously the letters and telegrams of Campbell, Robertson and Co. amounted to false pretences. No doubt some of those false pretences were made subsequently to the payment by Mr. X, and so would not, perhaps, form material for a criminal charge. But the letter of May 23 seems clearly to have been an attempt to obtain a further payment by a false pretence, and one would think that it ought to be made the subject of a prosecution. Naturally, however, the victim does not care to throw good money after bad by launching proceedings, and the authorities supposed to be responsible for the administration of the law have—as usual in such cases—declined to do anything. The consequence is that Campbell, Robertson and Co. are free to continue their predatory operations, and it is quite likely that they are already doing so under some fresh alias.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

A Mexamerican Proposition.

For a company incorporated in Arizona, owning mines in Colorado, and having its headquarters in New York, to be described as "of London" seems a trifle far-fetched, even though an office has been opened here. That is how Mr. E. E. Jenkins, "London Secretary," writes of the Mexamerican Company in a circular from 20, Copthall Avenue, E.C. In June last the company, whose nominal capital is £1,000,000, gave the English public the privilege of subscribing shares to the amount of £100,000 for working capital. It was a most dazzling prospectus—ore to the value of £16,000,000 already proven in the mines, an estimated annual profit of no less than £750,000, and so on. Yet it appears that applicants for several thousand £1 shares in this auriferous enterprise have failed to make the instalment payments as required, and the said shares are now procurable from Mr. Jenkins at what he calls the "pick-up-price" of 15s. each. He mentions that it is at the suggestion of a "mutual friend" (unnamed, of course) that he is urging you to "take a flyer in Mexamerican." He is confident it is the best "spec" the market affords; but, then, as he is the vendor of the shares, his judgment may not be unbiassed. Why hawk them about at a discount if they are so valuable? This may be the Mexamerican method of business, but it would not induce me at any rate "to take a flyer."

THE BUCKET-SHOP BRIGADE.

The bucket-shop keeper styling himself the Industrial Development Corporation—I understand he is an individual formerly associated with the notorious National Share Exchange—has lately devised a new lure for the greenhorns who want a gamble without risking the loss of their money. As he modestly observes, he cannot control the American market, and therefore he cannot guarantee a profit from what he is pleased to call a "combined speculation" on the cover system in Yankees. Of course, he is pretty confident that there will be a very handsome profit, but "in the very unlikely event" of a loss he undertakes to "give you £9 15s. value for every £9 forwarded." But whereas you have to part with £9 in hard cash, the return in "value" is to consist partly of unmarketable rubbish in the shape of rubber shares and partly of equally worthless call options on such shares. Criticism of such a flat-trap is superfluous. It is, however, amusing to note that this precious corporation of "bankers, underwriters, and stock and share dealers" speaks of "£100 stock" in connection with 100 dollar American railroad shares, while it describes a "call" on sixty shares as "sixty call options."

Cecil Chapman and Co., 59, Bishopsgate Street Within, E.C., have qualified for a place in the TRUTH Cautionary List by means of a circular headed "Diamonds," which they sent out at the beginning of last week. De Beers being "expected to go to £20 in the near future," they recommended a "temporary investment," in which £25 would "control" fifty shares, and, on the predicted rise, show a profit of £150. No doubt the innocents who tumbled into this flat-trap quickly learned what a very temporary investment it was, the shares at once falling just enough to run off the cover forwarded to Chapman and Co.

NEW ISSUE.

The prospectus is issued for 40,000 shares at par of the Reinforced Rubber Company, with a capital of 100,000 shares of £1 each. The company is formed with the object of acquiring and developing a process for cheapening the cost of rubber production.

"VIGILANT'S" LETTER BOX.

1. Inquiries addressed to me, which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through my "Letter Box." A coupon will always be found at the foot of the third page of the cover of TRUTH.

2. Three different stocks or shares are the limit for an inquiry covered by one coupon. If it is desired to make an inquiry respecting a larger number of stocks or shares an additional coupon or coupons (one for every three stocks or shares) must be forwarded. Inquiries in regard to Rubber shares must not be included in letters relating to other classes of securities.

3. Name and address, which must accompany all inquiries, should be written on the communication.

4. A nom-de-plume or initials (the former preferably) should be given if it is desired that the real name shall not appear in the paper.

5. Inquiries should be put as briefly as possible, plainly written and numbered.

6. Communications received after Friday may not be replied to in the following issue.

MINES.

AIDA.—1. Hold for a better market. 2. No.

BLOCKS.—Joining the scheme would, I fear, be throwing good money after bad.

CAERLAVEROCK.—A further purchase of No. 1 would be promising, and Nos. 2-5 are worth keeping, but I see no special reason to look for a rise in No. 6. CARP.—These shares are very much of a speculation.

DAMIER.—Sorry, I do not know the company, neither are the directors, nor the Secretary known to me in any other connection.

INOCCUFIC.—I must really refuse to give a blank cheque to other writers such as you request. You must use your own judgment, and if you are in doubt I am always pleased to advise on any contemplated operation.

LAMBRUIN.—No. 5 are a promising lock-up, but the others are a very mixed lot, and your money could be more hopefully employed elsewhere.

NEVERN.—I should be inclined to secure the present price.

PIERRE LOUYS.—A statement has now been issued foreshadowing a start of crushing, but I am not sanguine as to prospects.

SCOTT (Laurencekirk).—Take your profit. SEESTU.—I am told a 6d. dividend will be paid shortly, and on that basis a further purchase would seem promising. SOLDIER.—City Deeps and Zinc Ordinary.

TRIFOLIUM.—Prospects are very speculative and entirely dependent on how the development of the company's area turns out.

MIXED SECURITIES.

ALICE.—You might select New York Telephone Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Bonds and Metropolitan Electric Tramways Five per Cent. Debentures. I should prefer these to the deposit.

BEROLNIA.—1. See Rule 2 above. 2. A promising lock-up. Apparently dividends will be paid half-yearly. BILLIKEN.—1. Not recommended. 2. Hold in hope of better developments. 3 and 4. Sell on small recoveries.

CHESHIRE.—1. I can predict no improvement. 2. See Rule 2. 3. I have stated my opinions fully in many recent issues. CONSTANT READER (Folkestone).—1. An excellent investment. I am dealing with them in an article. 2. Taking the long view, there is room for some improvement. CARLTON.—They are three sound investments. CIRCARS.—1 and 2. I should prefer No. 2. As regards 3, prospects are in favour of an improvement before the year is out, and it should not be long before the company resumes dividends at the full rate. CLIFFE HYDRO.—No. 2 is the pick of your list. I would suggest New York Telephone Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Bonds as a second security in place of either of the others you name. CYPRUS.—a. See Rule 2. b. 1. Prospects poor. 2. Yes. 3. They should see some improvement in the next few months.

GUNNER.—Nos. 1 and 2 are good selections. You might select Metropolitan Electric Tramways Five per Cent. Debenture stock in place of No. 3.

HARLOW.—I have a poor opinion of No. 1. I do not regard 2 as particularly attractive. The preference of No. 3 is a fair industrial investment.

JUSTIN.—1-4. I cannot make any recommendation, but would recommend you to leave outside brokers alone. 5 and 6. Prefer Tanganyikas of the two.

KNOBS.—1. I have not seen a recent price for the shares, but your broker might be able to get you an offer. Nos. 2 and 3 are high-class investments, and should be held.

MOTT.—1. As a regular correspondent you surely know by this time that inquiries as to rubber shares must be made in a separate letter. 2 and 3. I prefer the latter, but am not specially enamoured of them just now.

OBOE.—Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Four per Cent. Mortgage A bonds.

ROMA.—Keep Nos. 1, 3, 4, and 5. Sell No. 2 on a small recovery.

UNFORTUNATE.—1. Sell. 2, 6, and 7. See Rule 2. 3 and 4. Hold for a better market. 5. An exchange into Californias would be worth making. See Notes last week.

RUBBER.

ADMIRER (Belfast).—1. Yes; average, certainly. 2. Not just at present. 3. Hold for improvement. AMBLESIDE.—See Rubber Notes. A HOT COAL.—1. Hold. 2. Not so good. ALEMBIC.—I agree. See Rubber Notes. AUTUMN.—Hold them all for the present and write at the end of the year. ANXIOUS (Ashton).—Yes, wait. Do not fear synthetic. AILEAN ROY.—Quite sound, and in good hands, but all Trusts are out of favour just now. ACCURATE.—Sound company. Hold for steady improvement. AJAX (Scarboro').—1. One of the best. Limit too high, but hold for the present. 2. Difficult to fix limit, but I look for substantial improvement. 3. Yes. AD REM.—Average. ANXIOUS.—No difficulty in securing ample supplies. ANXIETY.—1. None whatever. Buy more if you can. 2. Yes, but cannot fix amount. AMATEUR.—Hold Nos. 1 and 2 for dividends and improvement. No. 2 is not so promising. Sell when you can do so without loss. You might buy Bukit Mertajam. ABU.—Glen Bervie at about 2¼ premium, or Batu Tiga up to 6. Nos. 2 and 3 quite good. ANXIOUS ONE.—1. Has speculative possibilities, but when you see a profit take it. 2. Sound, and should improve. For present purchase prefer Merlimau. 3. Good of its class, but the Malayan companies are less speculative. ARNEL.—Watch for opportunity to sell No. 1. Average 2 and 3. Hold 4. No. 5 is sound, but I do not advise No. 6 for present purchase. ADARE.—Hold for the present. ASHLET.—Nos. 1, 2, and 5 are promising. No. 3 is sound enough. No. 4 is more speculative, but should develop rapidly next year. Cannot fix selling limits at present. AJAX (Lurgan).—1. Exceptional drought and depressed markets. 2. Tapping recommences next month. Hold for improvement. 3. No change, but more suitable for speculation in active markets.

BAYSWATER.—Hold 1, 2, and 5. Buy more No. 3. Await further news as to No. 6. BYDAND.—Sound, but at present quotations I prefer the junior Malayan issues. BOS.—1. Somewhat speculative, but should improve. 2. Very fair holding. Say 10 per cent. BROWNE.—See Rubber Notes, and hold all for improvement. BEDFORD.—Reported sale did not relate to this company. Prospectus estimate was only 3s. per lb. Higher prices and increasing shipments expected. Shares should improve. BLACKBIRD.—1. This year's dividend will certainly exceed last year's distribution, but you might exchange for a cheaper share, such as Glen Bervie or Batu Tiga. 2. Yes. BEECH.—Average both. BOB.—1. Fair speculative holding. 2 and 3. Exchange these for Merlimau. BITS.—Is now producing and earning profits. You may safely hold for steady improvement. BHOY.—Will develop early next year. Hold your shares. BALLARA.—1. Tapping commences 1912. Small profits from tapioca meanwhile. 2. End 1911. 3. Yes, 6d. per share paid July and 6d. just declared. BETHER.—See Rubber Notes as to dividends. Batu Tiga is a good purchase. BUFFS.—Hold for better markets. Should earn a small dividend this year. BUNKERED.—Trusts depend partly upon promotion profits, and operations are curtailed in dull markets. Hold for an improvement.

CARTER.—1. Yes. Look for improvement. 2. Should come out well next year. 3 and 4. Tapping re-commences next month. 5 and 6. Hold. CALEDONIAN.—1. Should improve, but cannot fix limit. 2. Outlook good, but too early to say now. CANDID.—Cannot trace your letter. Please repeat inquiry. CHINE.—1. Yes. 2. Hold. 3, 4, 5, and 6. Yes. CARROTS.—1. Should pay dividend this year. 2 and 3. Somewhat speculative, but should improve. 5. Tapping commences 1912. Worth buying. CARTON.—1. See Rubber Notes. Average now. Profit varies, but is said to average about 6d. per lb. 3. Very small. No profits in dull times. Shares may became unsaleable. COCOCIGRUES.—1. 52,664 lbs. 2. Annually in April. 3. Sound share. I should prefer Batu Tiga or Singapore Para. CARLTON.—Neither very promising. Both quoted daily in Financial Times. Exchange at favourable opportunity for the shares recommended in my Notes. CLERICUS.—The limits are too high for dull markets, but all should improve, particularly No. 1. CARTHAGE.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2. Not a favourite of mine. 3. Yes. CLUE.—1. Buy Glen Bervie instead. 2. Fair lock-up. 3. Not at present. CERTIFICATE.—1 and 2. I now have full details, and am quite satisfied. 3. Certainly. C. H. W.—A good list. Sell No. 6. Hold the others. Output returns are published in all the financial dailies. CORINUM.—More suitable for speculation when markets are active. The land was cleared preparatory to planting in wet season. Trees not damaged. Hold for improvement. Langkat Sumatra is a sound investment. CHELTERN.—I quite agree. Land sold £5,000, cash £25,000 shares. Tapping recommences next month. Management satisfactory. Should improve. CLANBRASSIL.—All in good hands. Hold for the present, and write again. COURTFIELD.—All good, although No. 3 is developing slowly. Buy more No. 1. CHAMAN.—Yes, both good. CRUDES and CYNTHIA.—See Rubber Notes.

DELTA.—Hold for steady improvement. DUBIO.—Average certainly. DAISY B.—Buy more No. 1 and Glen Bervie. DOMINGO.—Hold them all for the present. DIVITIACUS.—See Rubber Notes. 1. I think next month. 2. Nothing. D. J. M.—Hold for the present. Sell No. 2 on an improvement. Dangan meeting probably next month. Others next year. DURHAM.—Sell 1 and 2. Retain 3 for the present. DAKAR.—1. Next July. 2. Not bad, but prefer Glen Bervie. DISCOUNT.—See last week's Rubber Notes. Have suffered in common with all speculative shares, but company's position is sound. Look for an improvement.

ENNIS K.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2. Sound, but Trusts out of favour at present. Buy shares of plantation companies instead—say, Batu Tiga. EAST LYNNE.—He is not acquainted with the position. Outlook is improving. Hold. ETRON.—1. Thank you. Of course, the company is tapping the trees. 2. Remarks referred to Amazon district, where Para rubber is grown. Bahia conditions are better, and Nyassa is an African company. 3. Yes. ERNE.—Good shares. Hold them all for steady improvement.

E. R. C.—It is a case in which the shareholders, if properly organised, might possibly—the law is full of uncertainties—have a remedy. Experience shows, however, that it is practically impossible to get them to combine for such a purpose, nine out of ten declining to take the risk of throwing good money after bad.

FIDES.—Yes, average. Outlook is improving. FISHERGATE.—1 and 3. See Rubber Notes. 2. Yes, certainly. FREDERICK.—Poor. Should prefer the cheaper Malayan issues. FEE.—I can recommend both. FELICITAS.—Glen Bervie, Merlimau.

GRIEGATE.—Ill-informed criticism. See Rubber Notes. GALWEGIAN.—1. Average. 2. Quite right. Cheap, but developing very slowly. 3. Good, but earning only small profits at present.

HARVEST.—A good list. All should gradually recover to your prices. Buy more of 1 and 7. Nos. 1, 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 are earning dividends. Write again at end of year as to selling prices. HESS.—See Rubber Notes. Average. HOPELESS GLOOM.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2. A sound holding with good prospects. Limit based on speculative outlook, which has since changed. 3. Controls 4,000 square miles. Good speculative possibilities. HEAVY SICK.—Yes. Hold for substantial recovery. HUMBER.—1 and 2. Average now with view to profit early next year. 3. See Rubber Notes. 4. Or very soon after. 5. After close of year.

IMPERIAL.—Hold them all. Average No. 2, 4. 6. Quite possible. INOCCUPE.—Hold certainly. Yes, average. IRONCLAD.—You would do well to average now. IGNORANS.—1. Quite good. 2. Reasonable, but you could do better.

JOHN COWAN.—See Rubber Notes. JIM.—Hold. JUR.—1. Hold. 2. Yes. 3. Yes, as a speculative investment. JUGGINS.—1. Hold. 2. Yes. 3. Company likely to earn 50 per cent. this year. JOB.—Sell Nos. 1 and 6. Exchange No. 3 for Bukit Mertajam. Hold the others. JERUM.—Quite good. JAX.—Ill-informed criticism. I will deal with it. J. J. G.—Average 1 and 2. No. 3 is not a favourite of mine. Sell on an improvement. See Rule 2 as to No. 4. JACK TYKE.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2. Speculative, of course, but you might average now. 3. Nothing wrong. Very fair speculation.

KERRY.—Both very fair holdings. KILCHOAN.—1. Speculative. 2. Instead of averaging, buy Bukit Mertajam or Merlimau. KITTISFORD.—See Rubber Notes. KUKRI.—1. A fair holding. I prefer Glen Bervie. 2. Good company, but small profits for first few years. 3. Both quite sound. Profits good. KYNANCE.—Hold No. 2. Sell No. 1. No. 3 is a fair speculative holding. KENMARE.—1. Hold. 2. Frequently condemned in these columns. Sell. 3. I should sell. KILKEE.—See Rubber Notes.

LUX.—You might average them all. 2 and 3 are somewhat speculative, but should improve. LEX.—1. Yes, average. 2. Await further news. LUZ.—A good speculative holding. LLOYD.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2. Hold for the present, but you might exchange later for a cheaper share. LOWKO.—1. Look for substantial recovery. 2. Yes. 3. Yes. 4. Setback in American trade. LINTON.—Sell No. 3 when you see a profit. Hold the others. LEBFAST.—Thanks for letter. Average No. 9. Later on you might exchange No. 13 for Merlimau. LEGH.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2. Good prospects. Hold.

M. O.—1. No. 2. In good hands. 3. Yes. Output for last six months 17,471 lbs. MAX.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2. Yes, average. 3. Outlook is improving. Look for recovery. MACOMBE.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2. Certainly, buy now to average, as you suggest. 3. Nothing. 4. 32½ per cent. for last year. May be nearly double for this year. MACGREGOR.—Described in these columns as over-valued at a premium. Now at a reasonable figure. Should improve gradually. MAMMON.—The fully-paid were rather a better bargain, but hold your shares. MARLBOROUGH.—1. Yes. Buyer indemnifies seller. Hold. 2. See Rubber Notes. Average now. MARSHALL.—Tapping recommences next month. Look for steady improvement.

NEBUER.—Very sound dividend payer. May improve, but should prefer lower-priced share. NERO.—1. Hold all for improvement. Buy more of a and d. 2. Not at present. 3. See Rubber Notes. NORMAN.—See Rubber Notes and hold for improvement. NOMINEE.—1. Yes. See Rubber Notes. 2. A fair holding. 3. Yes. NARUHODO.—Regret inability to advise on companies not quoted in London. NOTLOB.—See Rubber Notes. NERVOUS.—Good shares. All quoted in Financial Times on Saturdays. Dividends this year from a, b, and d. Hold these and buy Batu Tiga or Glen Bervie.

OLLY.—1. Yes, buy to average. 2. Tapping recommences next month. OXON.—1 and 2. See Rubber Notes. Cannot fix limit, but look for substantial improvement. 3. Yes. OKNI.—Buy b. f. and Batu Tiga. OLD PLANTER.—I quite agree, but have been unable to ascertain what principle, if any, governed the allotment. ONEX.—Hold them both, and buy more of No. 1. OAKIN.—1. See Rubber Notes. 2. A lower figure, but do not sell now.

PENGUIN.—What I have said in reply to "E. R. C." applies also to your case. To all intents and purposes the company was a swindle, but whether the promoters and directors could be brought to book—the law gives much latitude to such gentry—is another question. PUNCH.—1. Fair, but should prefer Glen Bervie or Batu Tiga. 2. Quite good. 3. No. PRIMA VERA.—1. Hold. 2. Exchange into Bukit Mertajam or Melimau, now relatively cheaper. 3. Lumut. PIBROCH.—Drought and market depression responsible. Tapping on both properties recommences next month, and you might now average your holdings. PAT.—1. See reply to "Pibroch." 2. In 1912. PENCE.—1. Hold. 2 and 3. Cannot say definitely. 4. No. 5, Moorgate Street, E.C.

R. E.—1. Next year. 2. Yes. 3. Poor. RIESGO.—Thanks. I will deal with it. RINIL.—1. Not a favourite of mine. 2. I should prefer Merlimau or Glen Bervie. 3. Yes. ROSEBUSH.—Hold them all and increase your holding of No. 6. RICE.—Sell the Ceylon company and buy Batu Tiga, as you suggest.

SREAM.—No. Buy Merlimau or Batu Tiga. SEDURC.—See Rubber Notes. STOURTON.—All good. STIRLING.—Not a wild cat among them, and you need not be anxious. Hold for better markets. STRANORLAR.—1. See reply to "Pibroch." 2. Sound, and should improve. 3. A good share, but you might take a profit when you can and buy cheaper shares. SMILER.—1. Look for early improvement. 2. Fair speculative holding. S. G.—Glad to see your calculations, but the young rubber is valued too high. Allow for unexpended capital, and test Garing Malacca for even better results. Pelepah quite sound, but market limited. SOLENT.—Prospect of early improvement, but limit too high. SCOTSMAN.—(a) Hold. (b) Drought and market depression. (c) Tapping recommences next month. SPERO.—See Rubber Notes. SEAL.—Average 1, 3, and 4. Buy No. 6. SANGUINE.—1. See Rubber Notes. Dates of meeting and dividend not yet fixed. 2. Company in good hands. Await further news from the estate, and then inquire again. 3. Very promising. 4, 5, and 6.—Hold for improvement. Cannot fix limits at present. S. W.—

Trusts are out of favour, as promotion business has received a check. Not possible to fix limits or dividends. Hold a, b, e, and f. Sell c at reasonble opportunity. As d is in respectable hands, await developments Slainte.—1. Partly trading profits, but chiefly tapioca. 2. Ordinary floating trade liabilities. Paid out of £250,000 since received. 3. Required for developing estates. Some lent at interest meanwhile. 4. Certainly expect dividend, but cannot forecast amount now. 5. The other is a first-class holding, but appreciation depends upon price of the commodity. Silver Pencil.—1. Yes. 2. No. 3. No. Slaney.—See Rubber Notes, and average your holding.

Tilney.—Delay annoying. No need for anxiety. Tired.—Buy 4 and 5.

U. C.—See Rubber Notes. Sorry to hear of your loss. Group now likely to improve. Bangawan sound enough as a planting proposition if you are prepared to wait. Ullingswick.—You hold a cheap share with good prospects. The other company is developing well, should have 3,500 acres of rubber by next year, and the shares have a freer market.

Vivid.—Hold a and b, average c. Exchange d for Merlimau or Bukit Mertajam. Viridian.—1. The dividends should steadily increase for some years. 2. Date uncertain. 3. Yes. 4. Don't sell No. 6. Average No. 3 if you can. Viti.—Certainly average both now, and write again as to selling limits.

Wubber.—All sound. Diregard limits and sell 1 and 2 when you see a profit. No. 3 might be exchanged for Merlimau, if you can wait for dividends. White Heather.—Both sound holdings, and earning small profits. No dividends just yet. Wooloomooloo.—Yes, and your best plan is to average now.

Xania.—Hold 1 and 2. Average No. 3. No. 5 is sound but small, and 6 is a fair speculative holding.

Yucca.—Regret cannot forecast dividend at present. Yap Yap.—Nos. 1, 2, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 have reached tapping stage, and early dividends may be expected. Sell Nos. 4 and 6 when you see a profit. Buy Glen Bervie, Batu Tiga, and Merlimau.

Zealous.—1. Quite satisfied. 2. Without difficulty. 3. Sells several grades at good profits, but price varies with market. 4, 5, and 6. Yes. 7. Not possible to say definitely, but general opinion favours a rise. Zossenheim.—1. Date not fixed, but company is earning substantial profits. 2. Yes. 3. Cannot fix limit at present.

Miscellaneous.

A. M. D. G.—It has once or twice been criticised in Truth, and a further reference might be made if you could furnish any concrete case, with the correspondence, etc., illustrating what you say. Of course, the customer's name would not be disclosed.

Bos.—I do not advise dealing with any outside firm. Do your business through a broker who is a member of the Stock Exchange.

Cobbles.—1-2. Have nothing to do with them. 3. Take my advice and put your money in the P.O. Savings Bank. In the long run you will be much better off than if you dabble in essentially speculative securities. C. T.—They might be held as a speculation. Cautious.—Avoid this concern, which has never issued an audited balance-sheet. The figures given in your enclosure have been published without an alteration for over three years past!

D. P. H. Land.—In the event of a failure depositors would rank as ordinary creditors, and would, of course, come in before the shareholders, whose position would be that of proprietors of a bankrupt undertaking. Though the last report showed some improvement, it is not an investment I should recommend.

Exeter.—1. The shares should be a fair purchase. 2. Prospects still doubtful. Enniskillen.—Three good holdings, and worth keeping.

Force Crag.—1. I have not changed my opinion of the shares. The market in them is not a very free one, but they are officially quoted, the buying price being 5-16. 2. Zinc Ord.

Fusilier.—1. You might write demanding repayment, but it would not be worth while to incur costs in suing them for so small a sum. 2. Probably the bonds are genuine, but the dealer you name sells them at most exorbitant prices. The proper place for a soldier's savings is the P.O. Savings Bank.

G. A. P.—Certainly not. Warnings against Duncan Forbes and Co. have appeared in this column for months past. Gunn.—Messrs. N. Keizer and Co., 31, Threadneedle Street, E.C., will probably give you the information you require.

Ignoramus.—1 and 2. Have no information which would justify me in recommending the shares. 3. A question upon which I do not care to express an opinion.

J. B. S.—I should get rid of them.

Kew.—The company has had a long and good record, but its shares are not known much in London, the market being in Edinburgh. You might ask the secretary to explain the decline in the dividend.

Lex.—1. The proprietors are a bucket-shop firm, and it is used to puff shares of which they are sellers. 2. I regard them as rubbish. 3. Not an investment I should recommend (unless it was made indirectly through the medium of the shares of a land company) for anyone here. It is essentially a matter in which local knowledge is required. Ledger.—The outlook for the company is still hard to determine, but the reconstruction will give it another chance. Having joined the reconstruction you cannot escape the calls. Laurie Knowe.—1. They are not members of the local Exchange. 2 and 3. Also outsiders, and I never recommend dealings with such firms. Do your business through a member of the Stock Exchange.

Midland.—1. Worth keeping. 2. No recent information about this concern. Wait for results before buying more. Morven.—I can only suggest that you advertise.

Northland.—So far as I know, they have no address in England.

Putnam.—No. 2 is a fair holding. I would not buy 1. As regards 3, the market is likely to remain unsettled while the fight with the Standard Oil Company goes on, and you had better delay a purchase.

Rupert.—Gambles to be avoided. Riesco.—Have nothing to do with the William Harrold and Co. bucket-shop. It is discreditable to any newspaper to publish such an advertisement. Resolve.—Have no special information, but will make inquiries. It appears probable, however, that the shares would not be easily marketable here.

Stand Fast.—I have no information respecting this concern. Selem.—I do not care much for either. No. 2 might be sold, and No. 1 might also be realised on a moderate rise. Sream.—The market generally looks like recovering further, and I should be inclined to keep the shares. S. G. R.—1. It means that a seller would have to give away the shares to avoid further liability. 2. I do not regard the shares as attractive. 3. As to why the shares are not officially quoted it is really impossible to say. The matter is one that rests with the Stock Exchange Committee. Speculator (Preston).—Lever Bros. first preference would suit. Scottie.—I have not enough information to go upon at present, but the points you mention are significant. Should be glad to receive any of the firm's literature you may have. Suction.—Impossible to say. Sambo.—Lyons 6 per cent. preferred ordinary yields £4 11s. 6d., and should suit.

Verax.—1. Of a speculative character. 2. They thought it worth while buying; it is early days to talk about selling. 3. No official quotation. Veto.—You might consult a solicitor, but I expect he will advise you that it would be futile to sue for the recovery of your money. Regret I have no definite information as to the parties, though I think your suspicion as to the journal is well founded.

Woods.—Not an investment I care to recommend. Winter.—I do not recommend the concern or any outside brokers.

VIGILANT.

INSURANCE.

Tontine Bonuses—Disappointed Policyholders—Estimates and Results—Confusion between Limited Payment Life Policies and Endowment Assurance.

NUMEROUS complaints reach me about the results of tontine bonus policies effected in some of the colonial and American life offices. Sometimes the complaints are well justified and sometimes not, but it is seldom that the position is rightly apprehended by the complaining policy-holders. The matter is one which cannot be satisfactorily disposed of in a reply to correspondents, but I believe it to be one of extensive interest, and will, therefore, deal with it.

The particular policies about which I hear most in this way were issued on the tontine bonus plan, the sum assured being payable at death whenever it happened, and the number of annual premiums payable being limited to twenty. Frequent misunderstandings have arisen in regard both to the nature of the policy and the amount and character of the bonus.

The tontine bonus system provides that if the assured dies within the tontine bonus period of ten, fifteen, or more usually twenty, years the policy receives no bonus at all. By giving no bonuses on those policies which become claims at an early date the survivors of the tontine period receive larger bonuses than they otherwise would. There is no occasion for me to explain why this tontine bonus system is a thoroughly bad and unsatisfactory one, because it is now almost entirely defunct, having been killed by the demonstration of its inherent badness. Still, the tontine periods of many of these policies are still running, and tontine bonuses in large numbers are being declared every year. When the policies were issued it was the common practice for agents, in order to obtain proposals, to give estimates of what the bonuses would amount to at the end of the tontine period. At first these estimates were given in extremely reckless fashion, and it was not made by any means clear that the amount of them depended upon future profits. Later on the companies became more cautious about the form in which these estimates were issued. Most of these estimates have proved greatly excessive, and the bonuses declared have sometimes been but a small fraction of the amount which the policy-holder was led to expect. In the case of at least some assurance companies the actuaries always refused to make any calculations at all as to what the tontine bonuses would amount to, or to have such estimates prepared in their departments; consequently they were compiled by the men whose chief concern was to get business. Consciously, or unconsciously, they made their estimates extremely attractive and thereby got the business, quite regardless of the unpleasant consequences that would take place when the chickens came home to roost.

Why Pay Rent? Take an Immediate Mortgage, free in event of death, from the Scottish Temperance Life Office. Repayments usually less than rent. Mortgage expenses paid by the Company. Prospectus from London Office, 3, Cheapside, E.C.

Careful policyholders kept these estimates with their policy and premium receipts. At the end of the twenty years they receive a notification of the actual bonus to which they are entitled, and then come disappointment and disillusionment. Almost invariably an examination of the original estimate shows some statement to the effect that the bonuses were only estimates and could not be guaranteed. Policyholders not unnaturally grumble at the discrepancy, and sometimes persuade themselves that they have a legal claim against the life office for the difference between the actual and the estimated bonus. It may save both the policyholders and the companies a good deal of trouble if I tell these disappointed people that they have no such claim, and have not the smallest chance of obtaining a larger bonus than is allotted to them. A little reflection should make this clear. Their policies contain statements guaranteeing a fixed amount, say £1,000, and giving them the right to participate in the profits or surplus of the company. They, of course, have a legal claim against the company for the guaranteed amount, which sum the offices are always perfectly ready to pay. The surplus or profit, from which alone the bonuses come, has to be distributed equitably among the policyholders, and it is quite wrong and legally impossible to give an unfairly large share to one policyholder and an unfairly small share to others. In the matter of bonuses, therefore, the owners of these policies must console themselves as best they can with the reflection that their hopes were raised too high by the original estimates which were issued in pursuance of an entirely unsatisfactory and unjustifiable system.

The next question that arises in connection with these bonuses is whether they are intrinsically good or bad. Frequently a tontine bonus which falls short of the original estimate is yet an extremely good result to have obtained. After making all proper allowance for the fact that a tontine bonus at the end of twenty years ought to amount to more than the total annual or quinquennial bonuses received in the same length of time, some of these tontine bonuses compare quite favourably with the bonuses of the best English and Scottish offices. In some instances, however, the tontine bonuses are not only a mere fraction of the estimate, but are themselves exceedingly poor. The policy-holder has no remedy: it is too late for him to change his policy, and he must put up with the consequences of having made a bad selection.

Another prolific source of disappointment comes from the nature of the policy having been misunderstood. A man may have taken a policy at a premium of £35 a year, payable for twenty years only, which guarantees the payment of £1,000 at death whenever it happens, together with a tontine bonus payable at the end of twenty years. He is told that at the end of twenty years he will be able to surrender the £1,000 policy for a guaranteed sum of cash, and will be able at the same time to draw his bonus in cash Innumerable people have supposed that their policies of this kind are endowment assurances under which £1,000 in cash is guaranteed at the end of twenty years, or at death if previous, with a tontine bonus in addition if the assured survives to the end of the twenty years. A twenty-year endowment assurance policy of this sort would cost about £50 a year. This confusion between twenty-payment life policies and twenty-year endowment assurance policies, especially when associated with tontine bonuses, has been extremely common, and has undoubtedly led to a great deal of dissatisfaction. There are people who assert that agents have deliberately encouraged people to think that a limited-payment life policy is really endowment assurance. I happen to know that a good many agents have themselves been very muddled in their ideas upon this subject, but I have not personally come across any conclusive evidence that an agent who really knew the distinction deliberately misled any policy-holder.

If a man has a limited payment life policy with a twenty-year tontine bonus, and then at the end of the twenty years draws the bonus in cash, and surrenders the policy itself for cash, it is quite absurd for him to suppose that the cash surrender value for a policy for £1,000, which is payable only at death, can be so much as £1,000 in cash. At the end of the twenty years, without making any further payment of premiums, the policyholder obtains the guarantee of the assurance company to pay £1,000 when he dies; if the policy was taken out at age thirty the man is aged fifty by the time the end of the tontine period is reached; at that age he could go to a life office, and for a cash payment of about £520, used as a single premium, obtain a guarantee that £1,000 would be paid at his death whenever it happens. Speaking roughly, therefore, since a great deal depends upon age, the cash surrender value of a policy for £1,000 payable at death is in the neighbourhood of £500.

If people were led by an agent to suppose that the face value of the policy, with a bonus in addition, would be paid at the end of twenty years, and if they find that only the bonus falls due in cash, and that the face value of the policy is not due until they die, it is quite natural that they should be disappointed. At the same time a very small amount of thought or investigation should suffice to show them that they cannot expect to have, for £35 a year, a policy of which the commercial cost is £50 a year.

In dealing with this matter I am largely concerned with a state of things that cannot now be remedied. The policies were taken in the past, and my purpose is to explain to people what their position is, or will be, at the end of twenty years from the time the policy was taken. The American offices, which were the principal exponents of this tontine bonus system, have discontinued it for some years, and now declare bonuses annually. A few colonial offices retain the tontine bonus system, which I think is bad, but most of them—I am afraid I cannot say all—are no longer issuing estimates of future results that are likely to prove so excessive, and consequently disappointing, as those to which I have referred, which were unfortunately so prevalent in the past.

For Insurance Announcements, see page 751.

Answers to Correspondents.

[Inquiries on the subject of insurance are answered in this column every week. Every letter containing an inquiry must be accompanied by a coupon cut from the third page of the coloured cover of Truth.]

Pierre the Second.—Information is required, but no medical examination. Perhaps Prudential or Eagle, but not very likely. Chester.—1. The surrender value is rather small. If it would suit you to take a paid-up policy it might be better for you. 2. Apply to Foster and Cranfield, Poultry, E.C. C. D. Kirkby.—The company is fairly sound, but I entirely disapprove of its system of working. Rhod.—I have every reason to believe that the company is sound and good, and likely to do well in the future. Slack.—The company is safe for the purpose you mention, and the terms quoted are very good. Jesmond.—You should apply for particulars to the Confederation Life, the Economic, and the Yorkshire, and choose whichever gives the best terms. The scheme you propose seems admirable for your case. Retrospect, Huddersfield.—United Kingdom Temperance, Scottish Widows, Old Equitable Society. One Concerned.—The company is absolutely safe and sound in every possible way. M. W. I.—The practice in regard to suicide varies in different companies. Some pay without any question from the outset; some have power to decline to pay in the event of suicide within three years, after which it makes no difference; and all offices pay the policy if it has been assigned for valuable consideration. It may be that some companies still retain the right to refuse payment in the event of suicide at any time. A. N. O'Body.—Perhaps you can obtain what you want from the Century or the London and Lancashire Life. I should, however, have thought the National Pension Fund for Nurses would have been the best in this case. W. H. C.—I think your man would do best to pay no more and to decline to transfer his policy.

COMPANY MEETINGS.

GULA-KALUMPONG RUBBER ESTATES.

Output Increased—Dividend Prospects.

The statutory meeting of the Gula-Kulampong Rubber Estates, Limited, was held on the 14th inst. at the Institute of Chartered Accountants, Moorgate Place, E.C., Mr. Frederick Anderson (chairman of the company) presiding.

Mr. L. Kerr, representing the secretaries (Messrs. Ilbert, Anderson, and Co.), having read the notice calling the meeting,

The Chairman said: Ladies and Gentlemen,—This meeting is held to comply with the Companies Act of 1908, and to lay before you a statement of the financial position in regard to the issue of shares in terms of the prospectus. There is no other business before the meeting. From the report, which has been in your hands for more than a week, you will see that out of the 67,100 shares offered for subscription, 64,162 have been allotted, and that applications for the balance are in course of allotment. We had to give up to the end of August for receipt of applications in respect to shareholders of the old companies, in order that everyone might have time to apply. The fact that shareholders were scattered over a wide area made it inevitable that there would be delay in getting in all the applications. You will see from the report that we have over £50,000 cash in hand, after paying preliminary expenses, which will come to less than the estimated amount. In taking over the properties some delay arose in connection with a claim for stamp duty in Perak. The Perak Government made a claim, based on the market value of the shares. The directors resisted that claim, and were able to induce the Perak Government to accept duty on the basis of the valuation of the property, which made a considerable difference to us. I may add in connection with this matter that the scrip for the vendors' shares has not yet been issued to the shareholders in the old companies. I have nothing further to say about the report, but perhaps it may be interesting to shareholders if I say a few words about the business of the company. Production has steadily increased from about 7,000 lbs. a month at the beginning of this year to 10,000 lbs. a month at the present time, and we look for a further substantial increase as the autumn advances. The quality of our rubber is well maintained and ranks with the best brands on the market. The reports from the estate about the growth of the trees are quite satisfactory; we have had no trouble of any consequence from pests. Cocoanuts are also doing well, but the latest advices indicate that some of the fields under sugar are not giving quite as heavy a return as was expected owing to unfavourable weather. On the other hand, prices are higher than last year. Variations in the outturn of the crop, however, are a risk to which a sugar crop is always liable, and we do not anticipate that the final result of the season will be materially different from the estimate in the prospectus. Acting under the advice of the manager, we have already increased the area under rubber by 312 acres, interplanting with sugar. We have found from long experience that three crops of sugar can be taken off the land planted with young rubber without interfering with its growth, and, as we have every facility for dealing with sugar, this method of developing a rubber estate is not only economical, but even advantageous to the growth of the young trees. The land under sugar contains some of the very best land on the estate, which has been fertilised year by year, so we have no doubt as to its suitability for growing rubber. We have about 1,000 acres more available for the extension of rubber, all clean land which has been under sugar, and which can be quickly planted with rubber at a very small cost, and a large further area, the bulk of which will be more suitable for extending the cocoanut plantation. In order to go thoroughly into the question of future development, the directors have arranged that the general manager will come home immediately, so that we may have the advantage of discussing the whole position with him. With the ample resources at our command I think the shareholders may feel satisfied that further development will be taken in hand before very long. We have an ample supply of labour on the estate, but we have had to follow the market and raise wages in order to keep our hands. This rise in wages bears more heavily on the cultivation of the sugar cane than on rubber or cocoanuts, a large labour force being necessary for the cultivation and treatment of the sugar crop. This is one reason why our manager has advised us gradually to curtail the area under sugar and supplant it with rubber, and it is to discuss this aspect of the situation that we have asked him to come home and give us the benefit of his views as to further developments. We have all read articles and letters in the papers about the evils of the indentured labour system, which has lately been abolished, but shareholders may feel satisfied that the adverse criticism in question does not apply to our estate (hear, hear)—where indentured and free coolies have always lived under the same conditions. The fact that a large portion of our labour force consists of free coolies, who have remained with us after their period of indenture had expired, is conclusive evidence that they have been well treated. (Hear, hear.) As regards the price of rubber, the directors of the vendor companies made two forward contracts, as stated in the prospectus, the first of which, at 7s. 4d. for all this year, did not turn out well for the first part of the year, but is now full market value; the second contract, at 8s. 10½d. for all next year, looks favourable at present, and, if the late management had followed up their original policy and taken advantage of the opportunities offered to them in the spring, the forward sales would have looked still more favourable. It is difficult to account for the rapid advance in the spring and for the almost equally rapid decline in the summer. Perhaps when prices rose to nearly 13s. a pound, people whose shares increased in value did not give sufficient credit to the bears, who had been steadily selling "short" for forward delivery, and were obliged to cover at very heavy losses. It may be that speculative transactions are not altogether absent from the situation to-day. However that may be, it was probably not in the best interests of plantation rubber that it should be sold at 1s. per lb. over hard Para. Our interests seem to be bound up in enlarging the market for our production, in competing with wild rubber in every branch of the trade, and in stimulating demand for pure rubber by making it more profitable for consumers to use the best rubber instead of substitutes, or what may be called "shoddy." It seems to me to be more vital to our future prosperity that we should have expanding consumption than that we should have an unduly high range of prices for a limited period. As production increases it is more than probable that changes will take place in the method of selling. It would be impossible to conduct the very large trade now being conducted in hard Para at fortnightly auctions, and it will probably be equally impossible to deal effectively with plantation rubber mainly at auction sales, when the quantity increases to the dimensions of the hard Para crop. In conclusion, perhaps the old shareholders, at any rate, would like to have a few words as to the prospect of a dividend. We have decided to close the financial year on December 31 instead of August 31, as formerly. I am afraid that the profits realised prior to the date on which this company began business must go to the credit of the new company in capital account, and will, therefore, correspondingly reduce the purchase price. The directors have no power to deal with these profits as a dividend on the new shares. That question rested with the old directors before the agreement of sales was adopted. However, the accounts at the end of the year will represent a period of fully six months' working of the new company, and the directors hope that, before the end of the year, they will be in a position to declare an interim dividend, in anticipation of the closed accounts which cannot very well be ready before March next year. (Hear, hear.) Those are all the remarks that I have to make in connection with the accounts, but if any shareholder has any questions to ask I shall be glad to answer them to the best of my ability. As no one seems to have any question to ask, that concludes the business of the meeting.

The proceedings then terminated.

MEXICO MINES OF EL ORO.

Continued Prosperity.

The ordinary general meeting of the Mexico Mines of El Oro was held yesterday at Winchester House, Old Broad Street, E.C., Mr. R. T. Bayliss (chairman of the company) presiding.

The Secretary (Mr. T. Dundas Pillans) having read the notice calling the meeting,

The Chairman, in the course of his speech, said:—Gentlemen, I beg to move "That the report of the directors, with audited statement of accounts and balance-sheet for the year ending June 30, 1910, presented to this meeting be and the same are hereby received, approved, and adopted." I have once more the pleasure to submit to you a very satisfactory record of the operations of the company for the year ending June 30 last, for you will see from the statement set out on the first page of the directors' report that we have earned during that period a realised profit of £154,990 15s. 11d. Adding to this £59,400 18s. 1d., being the balance brought forward from the last account, less £800 for bonuses voted at the last meeting, gives a total sum of £214,391 14s. to be dealt with. Out of this amount dividends Nos. 4, 5, and 6 have been paid, amounting to £126,000, or equivalent to 14s. per share. We have written off the cost of plant, machinery, and buildings, by way of depreciation, a sum of £8,000. Permanent improvements put upon the property during the year have involved an expenditure of £7,893 19s. 2d. There has been reserved to meet income-tax £9,000, and we carry forward a balance of £63,497 14s. 10d. to the credit of profit and loss for the current year. The striking features of the year's work have been the increased crushing capacity of the mill and the substantial reduction in working costs per ton of ore treated. It is due to these two facts alone that, notwithstanding we have been working a grade of ore of $10.21 per ton recovered value, as compared with ore of $12.44 per ton in 1909, we have been enabled to maintain the profit realised in that year. During the past year the mill has treated 136,372 tons, an increase of 35,267 tons compared with 1909, and the total working expenses of the undertaking have been $4.75 per ton, as compared with $5.67 per ton in the year preceding. By reason of this increased efficiency in the reduction works and decrease in the cost of operations, we have been enabled to treat a lower grade of ore; and the continued success of the company depends, in my judgment, on our ability to make still further improvements in this direction. It is, in fact, to the low grade ore in the Mexico Mines that we must look for our profits, and you may rely that all the energies of the management will be directed to such improvements in mechanical and metallurgical devices, and to such economies in the general operation of the mine as will give effect to this policy. Emphasis is added to the statement I have made by a consideration of Mr. Main's estimate of ore reserves standing in the mine at June 30 last, which are given at 283,735 tons, having an average gold value of roundly $12.50 per ton. Now, in view of the fact that, as compared with Mr. Main's estimate on June 30, 1909, we have exposed at the present time roundly 92,000 tons more than we had this time last year, notwithstanding that in the meantime we have extracted 136,000 tons, I regard his estimate as very satisfactory; but I cannot refrain from offering you my personal opinion—that, for a property which is treating 136,000 tons of ore a year, 283,000 tons is not an adequate reserve to carry unless there are unmistakable indications that the future development of the mine will not only maintain that reserve, but add to it from year to year. In this respect the increased crushing capacity of the mill to which I have drawn your attention is not, at any rate from the manager's point of view, an unmixed blessing. As I pointed out to you last year, our original estimate of the crushing capacity of this 40-stamp mill was 4 tons per stamp. By a rearrangement of the mechanical operation of the mill, foreshadowed in my remarks at the last meeting, we have increased the crushing capacity to nearly 10 tons per stamp; that is to say that this mill now has a capacity of two and a-half times that originally intended, or, in other words, that we have in effect converted a 40-stamp mill into a mill of 100 stamps, and for a property of this size a mill of that capacity is a very heavy burden. I draw your attention to this in order to point out to you that, in fulfilment of our duty to get the best possible results out of the equipment at our disposal, we are being irresistibly driven to working the mine at a somewhat higher pressure than I consider desirable, and that it therefore becomes incumbent upon us to spend still larger sums upon the development of the mine, and to increase the reserves at our disposal, in order to keep pace with the increased demand thrown upon us by the greater efficiency of the 40-stamp mill. Now, in view of this necessity, it will be apparent to you that we cannot at the moment, and until our reserves are increased, look for much, if any, further reduction in the working expenses, for the increased expenditure on development I contemplate will probably offset, and may exceed, economies that may be made in other directions. Pursuing this line of thought a little further, you will have seen that Mr. Main puts the average of his 283,000 tons in reserve at roundly $12.50 per ton, and in the following paragraph states, with a frankness for which we are much indebted, that owing to the ore on the 8th level taken into his estimate of reserves being of high-grade only, we must be prepared during the coming year, and on the further development of the main vein on that level, for lower average values in the estimates which he will place before us next year. Now, if we are not justified in increasing the present rate of crushing, and, in my opinion, we certainly are not, and if we cannot look forward to any immediate and substantial reduction in the cost of operations, it necessarily follows that if next year we have to deal with a reserve of ore of lower grade, it will be difficult to maintain the present rate of profit unless in the meantime some extraordinary development should be made, which we have not at present any reasonable ground to expect. I have now to announce that the directors have this day declared an interim dividend for the quarter ending September 30 of 3s. 6d. per share, payable, free of income tax, on the first day of October. This is an increase of 6d. per share over the interim dividends paid for the concluding period of the year ending June 30 last.

Mr. R. M. Bird seconded the resolution, and it was carried unanimously.

The retiring directors and auditors were re-elected, and the special resolutions as to the increase of the board and the directors' fees were carried unanimously.

---

All Rights reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

LADY VICTORIA'S LAPSE.

LADY VICTORIA NEISH, daughter of the fifth Duke of Musselburgh and relict of Sir Malcolm Neish, the well-known millionaire and ship-builder, was one of those persons who combine with a strict devoutness in the things of God a remarkable astuteness in the things of Mammon.

As a churchwoman, she was serious Evangelicalism personified. As a woman of business, she was commercialism in its most exacting form. In the latter capacity, few of the smartest children of this world could steal a march on her. In the former, she could hold her own with the best of the children of light.

She was enormously rich. Her husband had left her the whole of his large fortune, and she had since increased it considerably. For although she gave away some thousands a year to religious objects, and kept up a large establishment in Grosvenor Square, she spent little more than half her income. Thus she was constantly adding to her pile; and the more she added to it the more she loved it. Every sovereign of the vast hoard was precious. She watched it swell with the same sort of affectionate pride as that with which fond parents watch their children grow. Five pounds gained unexpectedly was a source of exultation. Five pounds lost was a thing to be "gruelled" over for weeks to come.

You may imagine, therefore, the state of her ladyship's mind when she discovered that George Templeman, her solicitor, had made away with £9,000 of her money. I was going to say that she was almost beside herself. But that phrase would convey a wrong impression. In money matters, never—under any circumstances—did Lady Victoria lose her head. So now, though furiously angry, she maintained her self-control. Most other people would have prosecuted at once, disregarding the defaulter's abject plea for grace and time. Many would even have looked upon that step as a public duty. Lady Victoria, however, didn't take it. Not that she was restrained by compassion. Far from it. Her conduct was guided by purely financial considerations. The important point was, if possible, to recover her money. To rush into criminal proceedings was to knock all chance of that on the head. It would ruin Templeman beyond repair. Any hope of his getting on his feet again and being able to repay her would be gone for ever. Her last lever over him, moreover, would have disappeared. On the other hand, Templeman was a smart man. Given the opportunity, it was on the cards that he might pull round and right himself. Succinctly, nothing was to be made out of him by prosecuting; a good deal might be made out of him by sparing him. These considerations held her vindictive feelings in check, and restrained her, for the present at least, from placing the matter in the hands of the police.

It was while things were still in abeyance that Lady Victoria met Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne at the house of a mutual friend. At first, her ladyship took no particular notice of the little widow, beyond setting her down as a voluble, empty-headed chatterbox, whose gushing and frivolous small-talk was not worth the trouble of listening to. But a remark that Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne let fall in the course of conversation caused Lady Victoria to regard her with a suddenly awakened interest.

"I, too, am most horribly worried," said this loquacious little person, apropos of some observation by the hostess about a treasure of a cook who had just given notice—"but it's not my cook who is deserting me; worse than that; it's my solicitor—a simply invaluable man."

And she threw out her hands in a gesture of tragi-comical despair.

"What is he doing that for?" inquired the hostess.

"Oh, he's giving up business," explained Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne. "Most inconsiderate of him just now, I do think, when I'm in the middle of winding up my poor sister's estate, and a lot of money to be invested and all sorts of horrid, tiresome business to see to. I call it simply rotten of him. I told him so, yesterday."

"Well, after all, you can easily replace him," said her hostess. "There are plenty of solicitors in London."

"I know there are—of sorts," replied Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne. "But one has to be so careful in going to strange firms. I'm sure after all the dreadful things one reads in the papers about solicitors making away with their clients' money—why, my dear, it puts me in a fever even to think of it!"

"Oh, you want to know your firm, of course," was the rejoinder.

Here it was that Lady Victoria struck in.

"I think I can recommend you a good man, if you really want one," she said.

"Oh, can you? I wish you would," exclaimed Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne, turning to her gratefully.

"I was thinking of Templeman, my own solicitor. He has managed my affairs for twenty years," said Lady Victoria.

"That sounds good enough, anyway," cried Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne, naturally impressed by such a recommendation on the part of a shrewd and wealthy woman of business like Lady Victoria.

"My husband had the very highest opinion of him," pursued her ladyship, still adhering, in the letter, to the strict veracities.

"What did you say his name was? Do please give me his address," exclaimed Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne, taking out a little memo-book from her purse-bag.

"Templeman—500, Old Broad Street. He's on the first floor," answered Lady Victoria.

"Thank you a thousand times. I shall certainly go and see him to-morrow morning," said Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne.

Lady Victoria rose to take her departure. She wished to avoid having to answer any possible further inquiries on the subject of Templeman. If, for instance, Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne should chance to ask whether he were trustworthy, it would set up a difficult situation. Lady Victoria was in this respect like a good many other people. She was not in the least particular, when it suited her business interests, about conveying erroneous impressions, but nothing would induce her to tell a direct lie.

Now what, do you suppose, had been her ladyship's ulterior object in mentioning Templeman's name to Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne? Had you asked her that question point blank she would certainly have disclaimed having any ulterior object at all. Indeed, to tell the blunt truth would have involved an admission that she wouldn't make even to herself. But facts are facts, however much we may disguise them from our own consciences, and the fact in the present case was that Lady Victoria, as a shrewd and experienced woman of affairs, had not failed to discern certain possibilities in the situation. Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne had a lot of money to invest. She would hand it to Templeman for investment, and Lady Victoria had a strong suspicion that, if she herself put on the screw at the psychological moment, she would get back her £9,000. How Templeman might find the money—whether he would rob Peter to pay Paul—she didn't trouble to inquire. It was no concern of hers. That was a matter between him and his other clients. She was under no obligation to protect their interests. They must look after themselves.

It was with such arguments that Lady Victoria salved her uneasy conscience as she drove home. For her conscience was uneasy. Let that much be said to her credit. If not exactly sorry, she felt at least uncomfortable about what she had done. But the opportunity had been so providential, the temptation so strong. And, after all, looked at from another point of view, it was really rather an act of Christian forgiveness to put business in the way of the man who had wronged her. If he took advantage of it to do a dishonest thing—well, the blame must be on his own head.

But if she had done wrong, she soon had the satisfaction of knowing that she hadn't done wrong in vain. A week later, in response to a stringent ultimatum addressed by her to Templeman, the solicitor came round in person and paid her the whole of her £9,000. That was a happy moment for Lady Victoria. In her joy at getting back her lost shekels she gave herself plenary absolution for the extremely low trick she had played on Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne.

Several months elapsed without anything happening, and Lady Victoria was beginning to congratulate herself that her secret was now quite safe from discovery, when she had a rather unpleasant shock. One morning Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne called to see her in Grosvenor Square. Lady Victoria's first glance at her visitor's face showed her at once that something was wrong. But repressing all signs of uneasiness, her ladyship rose to receive Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne with her usual stately composure.

"I have come on rather unpleasant business," began Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne, pointedly ignoring the hand which Lady Victoria extended to her. "Probably you can guess for yourself what it is."

Lady Victoria shook her head, simulating complete bewilderment. "Indeed, no. I haven't the faintest conception," she declared.

"I must refresh your memory then, it seems," answered Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne, with a sarcastic, not to say nasty, little laugh. "You may remember recommending me to go to a certain solicitor, named Templeman."

"Did I? I'm sure I had quite forgotten the circumstance," rejoined Lady Victoria, with studied unconcern.

A very disagreeable light gleamed in Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne's eye. Otherwise she remained perfectly cool and collected.

"You will not, perhaps, be entirely surprised to hear that this Templeman has robbed me of a large sum of money—£9,000, to be explicit," she remarked, fixing her gaze steadily on Lady Victoria's face.

"I am sorry to hear it," said her ladyship, maintaining her calm front of cold indifference. "But really I do not see that this concerns me."

"No?" remarked Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne, with a still nastier laugh than before. "You have no idea what Templeman did with the £9,000 he stole from me, of course, Lady Victoria?"

"Not the slightest. How should I?" rejoined her ladyship, all bewildered innocence.

"He didn't happen to repay you a similar amount which he had previously embezzled from you; and the repayment didn't happen to be made shortly after I entrusted him, at your recommendation, with my sister's estate, I suppose?" demanded Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne, pointedly.

"Your suggestion—so far as I am concerned—is merely ridiculous," answered Lady Victoria, with lofty scorn.

Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne ignored this remark.

"You didn't happen, of course, to put the screw on Templeman just when you knew he would have funds of mine in his hands?" she persisted, relentlessly.

"This is too absurd. I must really decline to answer any more of your impertinent questions," said Lady Victoria, with frigid dignity.

"As you please," remarked Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne, in tones of dangerous, not to say deadly, politeness. "I am sure I have no desire to intrude myself upon your ladyship. Only I thought it would be considerate to see you first personally before placing the matter in other hands."

"Other hands? What do you mean?" demanded Lady Victoria, a little startled out of her composure by the determined manner in which Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne gave utterance to this hostile threat.

"My meaning should surely be clear enough," answered Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne, quietly. "Your ladyship has perpetrated what practically amounts to a fraud at my expense. And I have no intention of taking it lying down. That is all."

"Fraud! This is sheer nonsense," said Lady Victoria, with a fine show of contemptuous amusement.

"We shall see when the case comes into court," retorted Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne, pursing up her lips ominously. "And now I will wish your ladyship good morning."

"Insolent blackmailer," muttered Lady Victoria to herself, with a stamp of her foot, as the door closed behind her visitor.

But though she assured herself that this move was merely a bit of bluff on the part of Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne, Lady Victoria didn't feel quite easy in her mind nevertheless. If the creature should persist in taking the case into court, and if all the facts were elicited—as elicited they would be—it would be, to say the least of it, extremely unpleasant. Lady Victoria didn't believe, indeed, for one moment, that a charge of fraud could be sustained against her. Still, the case would wear a very ugly look—much too ugly to be faced with complacency by a person of her position and character. The judge would be sure to say nasty things. The newspapers, whose readers love to batten on scandals in high life, would be sure to make spicy copy out of it.

The Bagshaw-Browne woman had, no doubt, seen this and taken it into her calculations. It was not an agreeable prospect.

Next morning, moreover, brought with it unmistakable evidence that Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne was in leadly earnest. Lady Victoria received a peremptory letter from a firm of solicitors, informing her that unless the £9,000 was paid before noon to-morrow they had their client's instructions to commence proceedings without further notice.

This letter brought matters to a climax. Lady Victoria knew well enough that she dared not go into court to defend the action, and she realised that, if she were going to climb down, it would come a good deal cheaper to do so now than to run up a long solicitor's bill in futile preliminary skirmishing. So—with tears of rage in her eyes and with black venom in her heart—she paid the money. . . .

Not long afterwards Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne took a second husband. The marriage was celebrated very quietly at a City church. To this day Lady Victoria has never heard of it. Perhaps, for her peace of mind, that is as well. For if she had any inkling of how that astute little schemer had purposely contrived matters so that Templeman should get rid of his criminal liability to Lady Victoria without its costing him a penny, her ladyship would probably have an apoplectic seizure. I cannot say that I am very sorry for Lady Victoria. She certainly asked for all she got; though, of course, I do not defend the conduct of Mrs. Bagshaw-Browne—I beg her pardon, Mrs. George Templeman.

BOOKS.

BROWNING somewhere says that it needs the rough experiences of a long life to efface the impression made on the mind of a spoiled child that the universe was created with a sole view to his convenience. Who is responsible for this megalomania in the à fortiori case of a prince who has remained all his life a spoiled child, and a child whom not his family only but his whole world has combined to preserve from rough experiences, and to persuade that the universe was created with a sole view to his convenience? Kings and queens would be hardly human if they did not come to think that to do them the most menial service is to do yourself the highest honour. The beggars in Italy, says Montaigne, ask charity always with the words, "Do good to yourself;" and this, indeed, is the spirit in which naturally, and even inevitably, all service is exacted and accepted by kings and queens. How should it be otherwise when they are taught from childhood that a smile from them is a rich repayment for a life sacrificed to their service? It is not the child but those that have spoiled him who are responsible for his arrogance, insolence, selfishness, and ingratitude—which is only another way of expressing the truth that every country gets the government of the governors it deserves. But there are, as I am reminded by M. Joseph Turquan's "Madame Royale: The Last Dauphine" (1), which Lady Theodora Davidson has translated and edited, incorrigible cases where the most unsparing use of the rod by those responsible for the royal child's training has left unaffected its hereditary arrogance. Everything short of a surgical operation was tried to get it into the brain of the last Dauphine and of her husband, the Duc d'Angoulême, and of his father, Charles X., that France was not their personal property and Frenchmen their domestic servants—in vain. As for the last Dauphine herself, with whom this interesting book chiefly has to do, neither the horrors she endured during "The Terror," nor the execution of her father, mother, and aunt, nor her own imprisonment in the Temple, nor her three expulsions from France, could disabuse her of the idea that France was the personal property of her family and Frenchmen their hereditary bondsmen. She remained to the last as arrogant, insolent, exacting, and ungrateful as she was in her childhood before the Revolution had orphaned, imprisoned, and exiled her. As a child of seven her arrogance was so insufferable as to resent even a compliment as an insult! "Mme. d'Oberkirch was one day struck by the child's deportment and progress, and expressed approbation in her usual frank and friendly manner; but this was not at all to the liking of the proud little princess. She paused for a moment, and then replied, "I am charmed, Baroness, that such should be your impression, but I am surprised that you should mention it." Her face contracted with displeasure as she administered this reproof, and her habitually hard expression took on additional haughtiness." This no doubt was in the days when she was treated as already a queen. When her "establishment" was in question the Austrian Ambassador wrote: "The Queen desires to cut down undue luxury, useless prodigality of servants and such things as might produce sentiments of arrogance." Hence the young princess was stinted to a "household" of only eighty persons—"by household one must understand an establishment of fifteen or twenty distinct offices—stables, hunt, chapel, faculty, bedchamber, cellar, wardrobe, almonry, kitchen, fruit-room, cabinet, council, and many others." Her meals also must have been proportionately curtailed, since we find that at the age of two "le grand bouillon de jour et de nuit which Madame Royale partakes of cost 5,201 francs." This was at a time when the French peasants were dying by the thousand of starvation.

For my own part I am barbarous enough to think that Madame Royale's experiences as the orphan of the Temple were, or at least ought to have been, salutary. Nothing less could have chastened her insolence and arrogance, and if they failed, as they did, of this salutary effect, it was only because her hereditary megalomania was incurable. Incurable also was her especially Bourbon ingratitude. "The ingratitude of the Bourbons," says M. Turquan, truly, "was proverbial, and Madame followed the traditions of her family." Her annoyance at the discovery of her mother's will, made during the agony of the Terror, was probably due less to the cause Mme. de Boigne suggests—disapproval of Marie Antoinette's conduct—than to the recalling of memories mortifying to her own pride. No doubt, too, it was revenge for this mortification which inspired her ferocity—the ferocity, be it remembered, of the most religious of women!—in insisting on the execution of M. de la Vallette, Ney, and others when their wives and the mothers of their children appealed so pathetically to her mercy. "The Duchesse d'Angoulême's temper became daily more vindictive, while the ladies of her entourage, frenzied by the same fever, abetted her, for their talk was all of executions, hanging, throat-cutting, shooting. But for the accident of appearance and position they might have been mistaken for genuine lécheuses de guillotine." "There is nothing so foolish as a prince," said Stendhal, and surely, as this interesting book suggests, the most inveterately foolish of all princes were these Bourbons. "You would not have got the Bourbons," said an Englishman to M. de la Roserie in 1814, "if we had anything worse to give you."

Mr. Frank Hamel's "An Eighteenth Century Marquise" (2), a study of Voltaire's Emilie du Chatelet and her times, is a delightful book, transporting you vividly to days inaccessibly separated from us by the great gulf of the Revolution. When Longchamp, who was first Mme. du Chatelet's maître d'hotel and afterwards Voltaire's secretary, complained to his sister that Madame in her bath (for which he had to fetch the boiling water) took no more notice of him than if he had been the kettle he carried, he was assured that "Madame hardly regarded a manservant as a human being!" There is pre-Revolutionary France for you! Of course, Mme du Chatelet shines in this volume only with

(1) "Madame Royale: The Last Dauphine." By Joseph Turquan. Edited and Translated by the Lady Theodora Davidson. (London: T. Fisher Unwin. 15s. net.)

(2) "An Eighteenth Century Marquise." By Frank Hamel. With Frontispiece and Sixteen Illustrations. (London: Stanley Paul and Co. 16s. net.)

(3) "Charles De Bourbon: High Constable of France." By Christopher Hare. With a Photogravure Frontispiece and Sixteen other Illustrations. (London: John Lane. 12s. 6d. net.)

(4) "Harmen Pols: Peasant." By Maarten Maartens. (London: Methuen and Co. 6s.)

(5) "The Hyena of Kalfu." By Louise Gerard. (London: Methuen and Co. 6s.)

(6) "The Princess Galva." By David Whitelaw. (London: Greening and Co. 6s.)

planetary splendour in the light reflected from Voltaire, who is presented to you in characteristic undress, alternately attractive and repellent, but always fascinating. Then there are the extraordinarily speaking portraits of such divine or, if you like, dæmonic women as Mmes. de Staël, du Deffand, de Graffigny, the Duchesse de Maine, and du Chatelet herself to amuse or astonish you or both, for the tempers of these ladies were as fiery as their genius. However masculine their genius might be—and Voltaire said of Mme. du Chatelet that "she was a great man whose only fault was her being a woman"—their tempers were decidedly feminine, and their portraits of each other are etched with an acid caustically womanish. Who that has once read it can ever forget Mme. du Deffand's exquisitely spiteful and no less exquisitely witty portrait of Mme. du Chatelet? By the way, the conflicting portraits of this lady in the book—which is finely and profusely illustrated—leave you in doubt as to how much or how little truth there is in Mme. du Deffand's venomous description of the divine Emilie's personal appearance.

After reading Mr. Christopher Hare's "Charles De Bourbon: Constable of France" (3), you will be in little doubt which portrait of this, the greatest general and most striking figure of the Renaissance, is the truest likeness—that painted by the servile historians of the reign of Francis I., who did all they could to blacken the memory of their king's arch-foe, or that presented by Mr. Hare in this spirited story of the most romantic of lives, and the most dramatic of deaths. The case for the Constable as against the King could not be put more pithily or more equitably than by the Court Chronicler, Brantôme:—

> What could Monsieur de Bourbon have done other than he did? He would have been taken prisoner, tried and had his head cut off like the Constable de Saint-Pol, and have been dishonoured for ever, he and his race. Instead of this he died a glorious death if ever man did, having avenged his injuries and affronts, and taken prisoner in the open battle-field his King, who would have executed him.

In Maarten Maartens' "Harmen Pols" (4) you are carried along, as in the old mail coach days, at a great pace, but with relays upon relays of horses. When the main story begins to flag, subsidiary episodes are harnessed on to keep the pace up—and it is thoroughly well sustained to the close. Not the least interesting chapters of this fine novel are those that give you an insight into the narrow, intense, old world and Old Testament character of the hero's father, and into the hardly more broad and modern views and ways of Dutch peasants generally. Since Grant Allen drew John Creedy nearly a generation ago there have been many portraits painted of a savage with a veneer of civilisation—a slumbering volcano beneath a smiling vineyard—and here in Miss Gerard's "The Hyena of Kallu" (5) you have the most lurid picture yet presented of him. It is a gruesome story, well told and convincing, of devilish African savagery, throwing into relief the exquisite refinement of the charming heroine and of her friend and fellow victim. If in "The Hyena of Kallu" Miss Gerard convinces you that the most ferocious savagery may underlie the most polished veneer of civilisation, Mr. David Whitelaw in "The Princess Galva" (6) persuades you no less conclusively that romance may underlie the most prosaic surface of life and character. A superannuated clerk, who had all his life hitherto gone a dull and narrow commercial round like a blinkered mill-horse, finds himself suddenly plunged into the most romantic adventures as the restorer of the orphaned Princess Galva to her lost throne. The story, after running smoothly and smugly for a few chapters, takes a sudden Niagara plunge into troubled waters, and you are borne along breathless with excitement till at the close the old clerk returns to himself and looks back upon it all as upon a dream from which he has awakened.

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

---

There are many editions of Dickens, but there is always room for another, and one which Messrs. Chapman and Hall are bringing out in commemoration of the approaching centenary of his birth has merits ensuring its success. Called the "Centenary Edition," it will consist of thirty-six volumes and comprise the whole of the novelist's writings, including those of which the publishers still hold the copyright. "Sketches by Boz" (two volumes) and "The Adventures of Oliver Twist" are now ready, and the remaining volumes will appear at the rate of three a month. The prefaces, dedications, and notices in the various editions published during Dickens's lifetime are reprinted, and a special feature is the reproduction by a new process of all the original illustrations to which he gave his approval. In "Sketches by Boz" and "Oliver Twist" the familiar illustrations by George Cruikshank and "Phiz" certainly come out remarkably well. Admirably printed in a good, clear type, and nicely bound in green cloth, these volumes (price 3s. 6d. each) will make a really handsome library edition of Dickens.

The "Reminiscences of Clara Novello," which Mr. Edward Arnold will publish early in October, have been compiled by the great singer's daughter, Contessa Valeria Gigliucci, and are supplemented by an introductory memoir by Mr. Arthur Duke Coleridge, who, as an amateur tenor, had the honour of singing with Clara Novello on various occasions. The reminiscences give pictures of her early life when Charles Lamb and all manner of distinguished literary and musical people were guests at her father's house, and there are also interesting sidelights on the stirring times of the unification of the Kingdom of Italy, where she lived after her marriage with Count Gigliucci.

Messrs. Constable are about to add a third and final volume to the two already well known of "The Life and Letters of Lafcadio Hearn." With an introduction by Elizabeth Bisland, Hearn's friend and biographer, the new volume will contain a series of "Japanese Letters" written by Hearn from Japan to correspondents in Japan with whom his personal relations were of the closest. The letters contain much fresh and enlightening material concerning his final views of Japan, and throw new light upon his own peculiar temperament, his thoughts on life, and his methods of work.

A biography of the late Sir Woodbine Parish, K.C.H., F.R.S., written by his granddaughter, the Hon. Nina Kay Shuttleworth, is announced by Messrs. Smith, Elder and Co. The book gives an account of the foundation and early history of the Argentine Republic, to which Sir Woodbine was sent by Canning as Minister Plenipotentiary, seeing there in 1823 the formal recognition of the Republic.

Mrs. Thurston's new novel "Max" is being issued this week by Messrs. Hutchinson and Co. Like "John Chilcote, M.P.," it deals with a masquerade, but one planned upon different lines, for this time it is the heroine and not the hero who masquerades. Another new novel which the same firm are publishing is "The Golden Rose," by Mrs. Hugh Fraser and Mr. J. I. Stahlmann. Its scenes are laid on the Continent, a royal prince is a leading figure, and there is a morganatic marriage.

Mr. Murray's list includes a novel entitled "The Gates," which is expected to arouse curiosity as to the identity of the anonymous writer. The action of the story takes place in Paris and in Egypt, and the book is mainly a study of a young man of the world—one who has something of Quixotism in his character and the gift of dreams.

Mr. Heinemann publishes this week Heinrich Heine's Memoirs in two volumes, edited by Gustav Karpeles and translated by Mr. Gilbert Cannan. The book is compiled mainly from Heine's own writings, letters, and conversations, and it contains such of his poems as illustrate definite events in his life or clearly indicate the condition of mind in which he was.

Dr. Rappoport has written a biography of the late King of the Belgians, which Messrs. Hutchinson are publishing this week. The author's aim has been to lay before the reader, without prejudice, the true story of Leopold's remarkable life.

THE R.M.S. "DUNOTTAR CASTLE," of the Union-Castle Line (the only large steamer 100 A1 at Lloyd's entirely devoted to Pleasure Cruises), is chartered for:—£18 18s.—Naples, Montenegro, Dalmatia, Venice, Corfu, October 1-20. £23 2s.—Cruise Palestine, Egypt, Greece, leaving October 22.—Cruising Co., Ltd., 5, Endsleigh Gardens, London, N.W.

A book by Mr. E. A. Newell Arber on "Plant Life in Alpine Switzerland" will be published by Mr. Murray early in October. It is fully illustrated. Although the author has been careful to explain his subject in language generally free from technicalities, his work is authoritative, and should appeal not only to botanists and visitors to Switzerland, but to the general reading public.

In connection with the completion this month of the first volume of the "Encyclopædia of Sports and Games," now appearing in fortnightly parts, Mr. Heinemann makes an announcement of interest to the sportsmen who twelve years ago bought the original edition of this work. In exchange for their copy of the old edition which is now antiquated, they can obtain free of charge a copy of this first volume of the new issue, which has been brought thoroughly up to date. The first volume contains over five hundred illustrations.

"Service and Sport in the Sudan" is the title of a volume by Mr. D. E. C. ff. Cowyn, F.R.G.S. (late of the Black Watch), which Mr. Lane is publishing this week. It has sixteen full-page illustrations and three maps.

Amongst the first fruits of the autumn season two volumes of short stories must be welcomed. Mr. Eden Phillpotts has once again gone to the moor for his inspiration and found it. "Tales of the Tenements" (Murray, 6s.) are told in the soft Devon dialect. The tales are mostly tragic, and woven about the homesteads that lie in the sheltered and fertile regions beside the twin arms of the Dart. "The Fortune Hunters," by Violet Jacob (Murray, 6s.), is a collection of stories which make a less special appeal to the reader. Miss Jacob depends for her interest on her power of presenting pleasant ordinary people under extraordinary circumstances and with a romantic background, such as Venice or Cairo can supply. If not great, at least her stories make very pleasant reading.

ART.

MOST smoke is so often produced by least fire that the detractor of modern art might find substantial proof of his theory in the plethora of art books which continuously persuade a willing public into a semblance of art connoisseurship. Quite three-quarters of this voluminous output depends for its success on excellent photographic reproductions, which make their appeal in the same way as do the halfpenny illustrated papers; the rest bear evidence at least of considerable labour on the part of their authors; here and there appears a book which not only says, but has something to say, and which holds an even balance between the excellence of its letterpress and the beauty of its illustrations.

Of such as these is "Great Masters of Landscape Painting" (Heinemann, 30s. net), translated from the French of the well-known writer, M. Emile Michel. "It is the scarcely enviable privilege of my age," writes M. Michel, "to have come in contact with most of the landscape painters who have been the glory of our nineteenth century school." Half a century ago the writer had the privilege of studying Titian's "Death of St. Peter, Martyr," which was destroyed in 1867. In a long experience, therefore, M. Michel has observed enormous changes in art, and has acquired a point of view which yet recognises greatness under all its kaleidoscopic changes.

It was natural that landscape-painting should appear late in the history of art. The early painters painted first their gods in a conventionalised semblance of themselves, and then themselves developing from a generalised conception to the particularities of the portrait. Landscape was an entirely outside consideration, just as was scenery in the early theatre. The conventions of the Wall and the Moon in the "Midsummer Night's Dream" are indeed strongly reminiscent of the "Baptism of Christ" in the Orthodox Church at Ravenna, wherein the stream of water in which Christ stands is indicated by parallel strokes, and also by a river-god (!) resting upon his urn, the name of Jordan written above his head. The way for nature was paved by St. Francis, and at Assisi Giotto attempted greater accuracy of locality, a semblance of architecture and rocks and trees. Landscape, as M. Michel points out, is quite absent from the work of Michael Angelo, who used to speak with disdain of those who studied it. Leonardo, on the other hand, was too much interested in everything not to be interested in landscape, and particularly did he excel in drawing flowers, which he used in the foregrounds of his Bacchus and other pictures. The greater spaciousness of Venice as opposed to the narrow fortifications of the mediæval towns produced a greater school of landscape painters. In Flanders also, with its more pronounced naturalism, its more realistic religion, landscape quickly found a place, as may be seen from the great Van Eyck at Ghent, or the exquisite backgrounds of the Memling pictures at Bruges. M. Michel surveys the French, Spanish, English, and German schools, dealing, perhaps in default of workable material, most scurvily with the latter.

English interest in the book will centre largely round the writer's view of Turner. Quite evidently M. Michel would never have paid £13,000 for anything that Turner ever painted. While according him his due as an intrepid discoverer in the realm of light or colour, as you like to take it, he is not blind to the faults of what might almost be described as lower middle-classism that occasionally obscure his genius. Turner notoriously had bad taste from the decorative point of view; compared with Claude, who always incited him to envy, he not infrequently showed evidences of this same bad taste in his more ambitious compositions.

M. Michel is full of sympathy for modern painting. He has, however, little appreciation of the young man in mauve socks, who is implored by his admirers "to stop just when difficulties are beginning . . . . not to spoil by unnecessary emphasis impressions which bear the stamp of his own precious personality." A few more books of this kind would dispose of a good many mauve socks, to say nothing of the mauvais sujets, their wearers.

* * * * * *

Time was when a diagram must needs be hard of outline and crude of colour. That this was in part due to the limitations of reproduction is undoubted. At the same time, that reproduction showed all too clearly that taste and beauty had not yet allied themselves to utility. "Wild Flowers of the British Isles" (Heinemann, 30s.), of which I have just received the second volume, has been both illustrated and written by Miss Isabel Adams, F.L.S., and revised by Mr. J. Bagnall, A.L.S. It is quite the most beautiful book of its kind that I have ever seen. From the artistic point of view the many illustrations are exquisite sketches exquisitely reproduced. Miss Adams has evidently gone to the Japanese for the simplicity and delicacy of her colouring, as well as for the delightful arrangement of her letterpress and the special parts of the flowers. With two or three tones she has given her flowers and foliage that succulence and bloom so rare in the art of flower-painting. One of the most fascinating of these illustrations is the deadly nightshade and family; one of the most skilful—in the contrasting of its greens—the spurges. This is a book to get and to keep.

TRUTH will be sent weekly to any address in the British Islands for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or £1 9s. 1d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). The subscription to Canada (Thin Edition) is: 7s. 7d. for 3 months; 15s. 2d. for 6 months; £1 11s. 6d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). To the Colonies and Foreign Countries (Thick Edition): 3 months, 8s. 8d.; 6 months, 17s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 15s. 10d. (including Christmas Number). All cheques and P.O.O.s should be made payable to THE MANAGER OF TRUTH, and addressed to Truth Buildings, Carteret Street, London, S.W.

MUSIC.

THE QUESTION OF KEY CHARACTERISTICS.

SOMEONE has been raising once again, I notice, in one of the musical papers the question of the characteristics of keys. It is a fascinating subject which has been the theme of endless discussion, though musicians would seem to be as far off as ever from arriving at agreement in regard to it. Have keys individual characteristics or have they not? Does a work played in G sound different if played in E or C? Probably most composers and professional musicians will be found to adopt the view that different keys do possess different characteristics, even though in many cases they may confess that they can give no reasons for the faith that is in them. Their attitude will, indeed, in many instances be rather similar to that adopted by Dr Johnson in regard to the existence of ghosts—"All reason is against it, but all belief is for it."

Some, however, are very positive on the subject, and have even drawn up elaborate tables setting forth the specific qualities of each key. Thus A major has been said to be golden, warm, and sunny; E major serene and bright; A flat major unassuming; F minor religious; G minor meek and pensive; C minor tragic, and so on. And famous composers have spoken to like effect. Beethoven, it will be remembered, spoke of B minor as a "black" key, and wrote of Klopstock as "always maestoso! D flat major!" Further, in a letter to Thomson, the Edinburgh publisher, speaking of two national songs sent him to arrange, he wrote, "You have written them in four flats, but as that key seemed to me unnatural and so little consistent with the direction Amoroso that on the contrary it would change it into Barbaresco, I have set the song in a suitable key." Yet Beethoven's own compositions in the key in question do not suggest the quality denoted by Barbaresco at all. But Beethoven is always enigmatic in matters of this sort. What is undeniable, however, is that most composers are persuaded that such key differences do exist, and act accordingly, even though, as Schumann once observed, the process whereby a composer chooses one key rather than another for a given work is purely instinctive, and quite incapable of explanation.

Is there any real justification for this belief? Consider, for instance, how the matter is affected by the question of pitch. On this account alone the actual as distinguished from the nominal keys in which works are performed undergo constant variation. Some, no doubt, possessing the sense of absolute pitch, might notice whether the key happens to be higher or lower, but does the music itself undergo any sort of alteration? Joachim, I have heard, used to say in the days when the high pitch prevailed in England that it always seemed strange to him to hear such a work as the C minor symphony half a tone higher than usual, but I have never heard that he professed to find that the music itself had been sensibly affected. Indeed, is it not obvious that the whole theory of varying key characteristics is vitiated by the fact that pitch itself is not a fixed quantity, so that C in one country may be C sharp in another?

It is tolerably certain, in fact, that these supposed key differences are really an affair of the mind, not of the ear. When it is alleged that sharp keys are "brighter" than flat keys, it merely means that musicians have come to regard them as such, possibly through mere analogy based on the terms sharp and flat, and that imagination does the rest. So far as the hearer is concerned there is nothing in the distinction whatever. How can there be, seeing that enharmonically the self-same notes may constitute both a sharp key and a flat one? It has been suggested that important works written in given keys may cause those keys to be associated in the first instance with particular qualities, but this is obviously diametrically at variance with the belief that each key has an inherent individuality of its own. Neither does it agree with the undoubted fact that within certain limits most trained musicians will probably be found to agree as to the characteristics, real or fancied, of certain keys at least. Thus, to take a single instance, most musicians are agreed probably in regarding the key of E major (four sharps) as a particularly "bright" one. In actual fact, and so far as the ear goes, it is probably no brighter than any other key in the major mode. Yet there is curious unanimity on the point.

How is this to be accounted for? Some have supposed that in the case of piano music the disposition of the sharps and flats as affecting ease of execution and the quality of tone produced (since it is held by some that the tone of the black notes differs slightly from that of the white ones) may have something to do with the matter. Parry again has argued that in the case of instruments of fixed intonation a difference between one key and another may result from the tuner not distributing the tempering of the fifths with absolute equality. Yet again it has been suggested that the differing degrees of acuteness of pitch resulting from the varying position of the keynote may influence the matter. In short, all sorts of theories have been advanced. What seems self-evident, however, is that, so far as the ear goes, there can be no possible difference between a work played in, say, the key of C sharp and the same work played in D flat, seeing that in such a case the notes sounded would be actually identical; and so much being admitted, it would seem to follow that the whole notion of any essential inherent differences distinguishing one key from another is the outcome of pure imagination and self-deception.

---

Many concerts are promised for the coming season. I hear of over forty having been arranged for one week between now and Christmas, and generally concert-goers would seem to have determined with one accord to make up for a poor summer season by exceptional activity in the coming one. In addition, there will be Mr. Beecham's important opera season at Covent Garden extending from October 1 to close on Christmas, so that the earnest amateur will have no reason to complain that his needs are not fully supplied. I only hope indeed that he himself will live up to his privileges by according due support to all of the good people who are now laying their plans for his entertainment and delight.

The Classical Concert Society is to be congratulated on the fact that it has seen its way to enlarge the scope of its operations, thanks to the amount of support which it has received, and also to extend its musical purview by including more modern works than hitherto, but its intention is evidently to proceed with extreme caution in this latter regard. Thus the only works breaking fresh ground which it announces for the coming season are a piano quartet by Fauré and Reger's string quartet in D minor. Otherwise Beethoven, Schubert, Brahms, etc., etc., fill up the bill, as heretofore. A little more enterprise in this respect would not have been amiss.

The most interesting work heard at Gloucester during the recent festival, if private advices may be trusted, was not one mentioned in any of the published reports, but Sir Edward Elgar's new violin concerto, which was played in private for the benefit of a few privileged hearers by Herr Kreisler, with the composer at the piano, and it is pleasant to know that the opinion of one and all who heard the work was in the highest degree favourable. The slow movement is referred to especially as containing some supremely beautiful music, while mention is made also of some wonderful bravura passages. In its general character the work is described as a good deal more simple and straightforward than the symphony. Herr Kreisler himself is said to be enchanted with the work. The concerto is to be produced at the first Philharmonic concert of the coming season.

Apropos of the Gloucester Festival, the falling-off in the receipts is not encouraging, and, taken in conjunction with the results at other festivals during recent years, must be regarded as yet another indication of the fact that the provincial festival is to be regarded nowadays as something of a threatened industry. I recently discussed the whole question at some length, and suggested various causes which conduced to this state of things, so need not go into the matter further now. This week Cardiff is engaging attention in the same way, and it may be hoped that a more favourable showing may result in this case.

THE THEATRES.

"A Woman's Way," at the Comedy.

IF you are a young and charming married woman, and it is brought home to you that your husband is running after strange gods or goddesses, what are you to do? That is the question with which Miss Alexandra Carlisle is confronted in Mr. Thompson Buchanan's play "A Woman's Way," and her way of answering it is interesting. She does not, like Maggie in Mr. Barrie's play, send the faithless one away to stay in the country with his new affinity in order that he may find out her failings, but she invites the rival to dinner and shows her up. Some women would be too proud to put up a fight for a husband's love when he went a-straying, but Miss Carlisle is not one of these. She loves her wavering lord and master and means to keep him. She will show him that she is the better woman of the two in fair competition, but whether Alan Waldron is worth fighting for is another question. He is a poor thing, but still, I suppose, Mrs. Waldron would say "mine own." The trouble comes through a motor accident. Mr. Waldron takes the beautiful Mrs. Verney, for that is the rival's name, out for a spin, and they both get pitched into a bed of stinging nettles. Rumour has it that the lady has broken her leg, while Mr. Waldron goes about with his arm in a sling. There is a desperate attempt to keep the lady's name out of the papers, but a horde of reporters besiege the Waldrons' house in Green Street, Grosvenor Square, and the cat is let out of the bag. The cat, by the way, bears the nickname of "Puss," and she is a very naughty puss. When she comes to dinner at Mrs. Waldron's invitation there is not much trouble in showing her up, because the whole of her hostess's male acquaintances seem to have dallied with the lady in her vivacious past. Mrs. Waldron's brother knew her well at one time, and then, marrying, passed Pussy on to the Waldrons' family lawyer! Clive Hatton, another friend of the family, and Mrs. Waldron's devoted admirer, had presumably found that Puss helped him to forget a hopeless passion for a married woman; while though old Sir Harry Dundas had not met her before, he becomes hopelessly imbecile over her now.

Accordingly, there is a great game of what Mrs. Waldron calls "Puss in the Corner," and the young husband has it sharply brought home to him that he is not, as he had thought, the only man in the world who has been privileged to call the lady by this endearing name. She has been everybody's Puss in turns, and no one's long! So Puss is cornered and eventually turned out of the house, and if she cuts rather a curious figure—well, none of the men in this Mayfair house cut a much better one, and I felt a little sorry for Miss Carlisle, and could have wished that she had not such a sorry circle of male acquaintances. I felt this, perhaps, all the more because Miss Alexandra Carlisle is so charming. In Mrs. Waldron she has the best part she has had since she played in "The Morals of Marcus," and she is showing herself an actress of much greater ability than I had previously thought. Mr. Charles Quartermaine is very good as the erring husband, though he is somewhat too restless. Perhaps he feels less at home playing Don Juan than Don Quixote, as in "Don." All the smaller parts are well played, but I wonder whether our army really contains officers who are as blatantly fatuous or imbecile as the General Sir Harry Dundas, K.C.B., of that clever actor Mr. Edmund Maurice? I know the type well on the stage, but I am happy to say I have never met it elsewhere. Again, why is it that when reporters are put on the stage they are always made absurd? I can only suppose that the ridiculous conduct of the press representatives who, we are given to understand, blockade the Waldrons' house in their thirst for news about the motor-car accident and the woman in the case is a survival of the play's American origin. Such a thing might happen in New York. In London it is absurd. In other respects the play has been Englished uncommonly well, and the dialogue is excellent, in spite of one or two lapses of taste, as, for instance, when Mrs. Waldron asks one of her male friends if he means that he is "hot stuff." Do ladies use such expressions?

"The Grotesques," at The Savoy.

The success of The Follies has brought into being The Grotesques, another clever company of Pierrots. Now we shall see whether Londoners will support two of these variety entertainments. Certainly The Grotesques have made a good start at the Savoy, for though there are many items on their programme which are just not sufficiently good, the latter part, with its burlesque of a village concert presided over by a foolish vicar, is delightful. There are several very clever artists among The Grotesques, and Mr. Cecil Cook, who is the leader, is exceedingly amusing. If I were to make any comparisons, though, I should say that they have not established that feeling of intimacy which is one of the charms of The Follies. From Mr. Pélissier downwards you feel that every Folly is an old and tried friend. I daresay this will come when the newcomers have been longer with us. Any way, I wish them every success.

"The Sins of London," at The Lyceum.

There are certain Sunday papers which when you open them give you the impression that the events of the week entirely consist of varied forms of vice and villainy. These papers exist to meet a want. Certain people must like to read about crime, and somewhat in a similar way Mr. Walter Melville's lurid melodramas meet a demand for sensation. The difference is that whereas a reading of the paper leaves you with a disagreeable impression, because there is no happy ending, plays like "The Sins of London" show you high principles and homely humours coming in winners at the finish. Vice in melodrama always defeats herself, and however harrowing the trials of hero and heroine may be they fight on as though strong in the belief that being hero and heroine they must pull through. I won't attempt to describe the plot of "The Sins of London," but will only say that it is full of thrills. It touches on the white slave traffic, it contains a shipwreck and some excellent villains, thus affording Mr. Eric Mayne a chance of giving another of his cleverly sinister studies. Mr. Frederick Ross plays the soul of integrity with admirable earnestness, and Miss Auriol Lee made quite a hit as the warm-hearted cast-off mistress of the younger villain.

* * * * * *

"The Whip" is still cracking merrily at Drury Lane, and has just celebrated its first anniversary. I imagine that it is the sporting note in Messrs. Henry Hamilton and Cecil Raleigh's drama which has made it so successful, but apart from this it is an excellent play of its class, and the great railway scene is finely managed. It is worth while going to Drury Lane, though quite apart from the play, to see the acting of those two brilliant comedians Fanny Brough and George Barrett.

* * * * * *

I see that Mr. Hall Caine is maintaining that the prices of seats in theatres should be reduced, the present scale being "utterly out of harmony with the general commercial tendency of the times." Well, we have certain low-price theatres in London and I dare say there is room for another, but very few West End houses could keep open with less than half-guinea stalls, and as to the discomforts of the pit and gallery patrons you cannot expect for a shilling and half a crown the same accommodation you get for ten and six and seven and six, and I had thought that nowadays the patrons of the cheaper parts of the house were very well looked after. Certainly they are vastly better off than they used to be.

PALLANZA.—Eden Hotel. The Pearl of Lake Maggiore, Simplon line. Unrivalled climatic station in autumn and winter. English church and society. Terms from 8 lire.

SPORT.

RACING NOTES.

THE ridiculously lenient treatment of Bronzino in the Cesarewitch is another of the many mistakes of the handicappers, and by no means the least reprehensible. Mr. J. de Rothschild's horse should, of course, have been weighted on his Grand Prix form, instead of the handicappers being gulled by the trash about the running in that race having been all wrong. Even if Bronzino had never started for the Grand Prix he would not have been overweighted with 7 st. 7 lb., as he is known to be one of the very few horses in the Cesarewitch which is sure to stay the course. The handicappers appear to have dismissed the Longchamps running altogether from their calculations, and there was no justification whatever for their taking this feather-brained course. If they accepted as correct the rubbish which appeared in some of the papers on the subject of the Grand Prix running, they must be so credulous as to be quite unfit to fill the position of handicappers. It would be very much better if running were accepted to be correct as it appears in the records, instead of handicappers being misled by mendacious tales of horses finishing in the first three only because others whose form was superior had been stopped when it was found they could not win. This happens often enough in handicaps, but in the great weight-for-age races horses are nearly always ridden out, and if an animal is beaten out of place it may be assumed, in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred, that it has been defeated on its merits. It is not likely that horses would have been eased in such a race as the Grand Prix, where there is £1,200 for second horse and £600 for the third.

The handicappers themselves, however, might well complain that the difficulties of their task when framing the weights for the Cesarewitch and Cambridgeshire are enormously increased by the idiotic custom of publishing these weights before Doncaster week. The Newmarket authorities have usually been among the most determined enemies of every species of salutary reform, however obviously desirable, and they are thoroughly saturated with what was once known as the Eldonian spirit. The Cesarewitch is now practically a post-betting race, and there is no genuine speculation on the Cambridgeshire until after the Newmarket Second October Meeting. What, therefore, is the object of bringing out the weights on the Thursday before Doncaster, instead of keeping them back until a fortnight later, when the handicappers would be able to review the running in the Great Yorkshire Handicap, the St. Leger, and the Doncaster Cup. It has always been the custom to publish the weights before Doncaster, and therefore it must be continued, although the whole run of these affairs has been changed root and branch during the last thirty years. At one time horses could be backed at Doncaster at very long odds to win enormous stakes for both the Newmarket handicaps, and there was always very heavy betting on the Wednesday and Thursday nights. Over twenty horses would be well supported for both races. This kind of thing is absolutely extinguished, and it will never be revived. "Protection is dead," observed a Minister to Mr. Disraeli in the autumn of 1852. "Not only dead, but d——d," was the reply. The same position exists as to early betting on handicaps, and it may be hoped that next year there will be an end to the infatuated folly (from the sporting point of view) of publishing weights many weeks (in some cases months) before the races are run.

Cyllene still heads the list of winning sires, but unless Lemberg wins the Jockey Club Stakes he is likely to lose the first place before long, as he is only £3,000 in front of St. Frusquin, who has been unfortunate in the collapse of Greenback and the defeat of Rosedrop at Doncaster. William the Third is principally indebted to Winkipop for his high place, and Marco comes fourth. John O'Gaunt was raised from a low position to the fifth place by Swynford's St. Leger success, and Desmond comes sixth. These are the sires whose stock have won over £10,000. Marco's autumn prospects looked bad when Neil Gow was struck out of the St. Leger, but Bronzino has rendered seasonable aid to his sire. Pietri may be expected to win at least one of the richest of the autumn stakes, and Wrinkler ought to contribute considerably to William the Third's total.

A sporting writer states that the victory of Swynford compensated Lord Derby for the defeat of Keystone II. four years ago. People are certainly forgotten very quickly in these days when they pass from the scene. Of course, it was the late Lord Derby who owned Keystone II. throughout his racing career, and to him belongs the credit of having bred Swynford. An excellent judge of horses and racing is of the opinion that Swynford will not be at his best until next year, and that he will develop into a Cup horse of the highest class. Lord Derby and Mr. Lambton have managed Swynford most judiciously ever since he was put into training.

An immense amount of money was lost by the defeat of Lemberg, as many people plunged on the Derby winner when Swynford was so persistently opposed by some of the bookmakers. Four thousand five hundred to one thousand could have been had about Swynford after the numbers were up. A well-known owner who had backed Neil Gow heavily went for Lemberg to get back his money, and increased his losses by £3,000. A book-

THE
NORTH BRITISH & MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO.
Incorporated by Royal Charter in the year 1809.
ONE HUNDRED YEARS' RECORD
During the past one hundred years the North British and Mercantile Insurance Company has built up and maintained a world-wide reputation for promptitude and liberality in dealing with all claims made under its policies. Since its establishment in 1809 the total claims paid by the Company have
EXCEEDED 60 MILLION POUNDS
FIRE, LIFE, ANNUITIES, MARINE, BURGLARY, ACCIDENTS.
Funds Nearly £20,000,000. Annual Income, £4,500,000.
Claims Paid Exceed £60,000,000.
CHIEF OFFICES:
LONDON: 61, Threadneedle St. EDINBURGH: 64, Princes St.

maker who laid steadily against Lemberg and Swynford "went for" Bronzino, and would have won a great stake over Mr. J. de Rothschild's horse. I have no sympathy with the vituperative criticism of Maher in which Lemberg's backers have indulged so freely, for there is reason to believe that the horse was about done with when his jockey called upon him.

The Perth Hunt Meeting, which is a most important affair from the social point of view, is to take place to-morrow and on Friday. These races were formerly held over the North Inch at Perth, but they have been removed to Lord Mansfield's park at Scone Palace. During the last six months a grand stand has been erected on the course, and other necessary buildings, including a handsome pavilion.

A couple of two-year-olds which were beaten at Doncaster in the first races for which they had started will be worth remembering when next they run. Mr. Buchanan's Tullibardine, by St. Frusquin out of Floors, cost 2,100 guineas as a yearling, and he commenced this season with over seventy engagements. Tullibardine was beaten by the Dame d'Or colt for the Tattersall Sale Stakes, having run very green. There was a good excuse for the defeat of Lord Falmouth's Mary the Second in the Rous Plate, as she had knocked herself about before the race, and she was evidently very nervous. Both these animals ought certainly to win races in the course of the autumn.

I see it is confidently asserted that Pietri "will win next year's Derby." It seems to me that it would be only in accordance with the most elementary common sense to wait until after the race for the Dewhurst Plate before expressing any decided opinion as to the prospect of next year's Derby. In any case, I am quite sure that it will take a really good horse to beat Lord Burgoyne if M. E. Blanc sends his colt to Epsom. Seaforth is not engaged in the Derby, but he is entered for both the Two Thousand and the Newmarket Stakes.

I hear that Captain Forester intends to sell Placidus, who has been one of the great failures of the year. This colt was highly tried in the spring, and he ran well for the Two Thousand when backward, but in his subsequent races he has declined to do his best. Placidus missed some good engagements in order that he might be kept fresh for the Eclipse Stakes, as it was quite hoped that he would beat Neil Gow and Lemberg. Some day Placidus will win a race when everyone has forgotten his existence, and he will have a great advantage in the weights with Lemberg in the Jockey Club Stakes, as the Derby winner has to give him 19 lb.

Lord Derby's mare Queen's Journal, who broke down at Doncaster, has terminated her racing career, and next season she will be relegated to the stud. I gave a plumper for Queen's Journal for the Goodwood Plate, as she appeared a good thing after her excellent form at Newmarket, but generous odds were nevertheless laid against her. She was a fine stayer. Queen's Journal is by Florizel II. out of Glasalt, and she will be a valuable addition to her owner's stud.

Lord Derby has a colt foal by John of Gaunt out of Canterbury Pilgrim, which is, of course, own brother to Swynford. The mare was engaged last year in several of the most important Produce Stakes for 1912. Canterbury Pilgrim was sent this season to Bachelor's Button.

There are forty-seven entries for the Liverpool Autumn Cup, of £1,500, and the weights will be published on the day after the Cambridgeshire. I am glad to see Phaleron in the list, and Duke Michael, Electra, Dean Swift, The Story, Bachelor's Double, Buckwheat, Mustapha, and Glacis are notable names among the older horses. There are not many three-year-olds, the best being Decision, Yellow Slave, and Willonyx.

Writing a fortnight ago about the Autumn Breeders' Foal Plate at Manchester, I predicted that either Meleager or Oliver Goldsmith would win. There were seventy-three acceptances for this race, but only five starters. Meleager won easily from Cyllius, a colt from Manton, about whom there had been a deal of talk. Oliver Goldsmith, who was backed against the field, began very slowly, and he lost so much ground at the start that he was never really in the race.

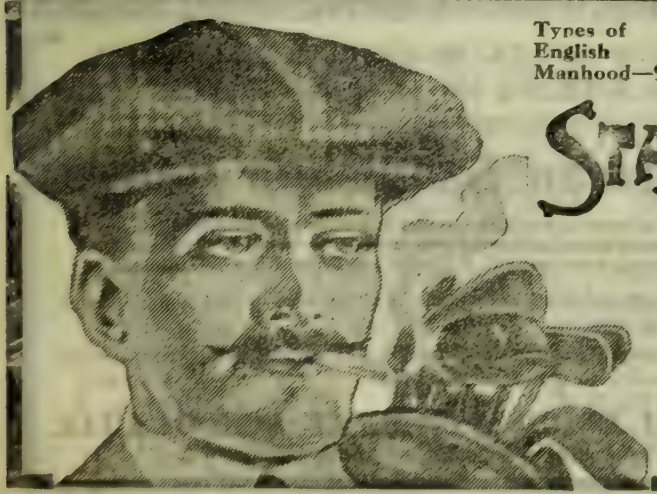
Electra was a great tip from Newmarket for the Prince Edward Handicap, but she was very cleverly beaten by Buckwheat, while Wolfe Land finished third. The defeat of Electra must be a relief to her numerous backers for the Cambridgeshire, as the penalty for winning at Manchester would have entirely destroyed her chance.

Seaforth was brought out for the Michaelmas Plate on Saturday, and he won by a head from Phryxus, to whom he was giving 15 lb., and it was a good performance, as the Manton colt was much fancied. Dutch China was the favourite for this race, and starting-price backers of Seaforth must have been both astonished and delighted by receiving 5 to 1.

There ought to be some excellent racing at Newmarket next week, and many people consider the First October Meeting to be the most attractive of the three autumn fixtures.

There were sixty-three acceptances for the Great Foal Stakes on Tuesday, but many of the horses in the list are now out of training. Neil Gow is not likely to start, and there was no great merit in Yellow Slave's defeat of Rosedrop at Doncaster. The race ought to be won by Cardinal Beaufort or Rochester. There were thirty-two acceptances for the three-year-old heat of the Triennial on Wednesday, including Lemberg, who certainly will not run, nor is Winkipop likely to start. Cosway should be able to win if it is worth while to keep him in training. There were forty entries for the Newmarket St. Leger, and Marajax might win.

The two-year-old racing should be very interesting. There are seven subscribers to the Buckenham Post Stakes of £300 each, half forfeit, and the Duke of Portland may win with the best of his lot. There are forty-seven entries for the Hopeful Stakes, including Meleager, and the filly by Hamburg out of Lady Frivoles. This easy course (last five furlongs of Ab.M.)



Types of English Manhood—9.

THE GOLFER says that if his form varies his taste for distinctive cigarettes doesn't. Always and everywhere he will have "State Express."

STATE EXPRESS CIGARETTES

Out of 1,000 lbs. weight of the finest tobacco, only some 120 lbs. is good enough for the manufacture of "State Express" Cigarettes.

No. 555. 100 4/9 50 1/3 10 6d.

Manufacturers: ARDATH TOBACCO CO., London.

will suit Persephone, and Mary the Second may be the most dangerous opponent of Lord Derby's filly. There are fifty-three entries for the two-year-old heat of the Triennial, including Meleager. Tullibardine may win this race. The Boscawen Post Stakes of £100 each looks well for Wrinkler, who can certainly beat Lord Derby's pair. The Rous Memorial Stakes may be left to Pietri, and if Mr. L. de Rothschild's colt does not start then Night Rider may win.

The great race of the week is the Jockey Club Stakes of £10,000 on Thursday, in which there are thirty-five acceptances out of an original entry of 211. King Edward had eight entries for this race. Bayardo would have been a good thing, as he had a breeding allowance of 6 lbs., but he was struck out in March, 1908. I shall be able to refer again to this race next week, but my present idea is that if there is a strong pace Lemberg will be unable to give the weight to Duke Michael over this course, and if Placidus would give his best running he would no doubt win. Charlemont is in reserve for this race, and he is sure to stay the course. Lord Durham's colt will have much the best of the weights with Lemberg. Neil Gow certainly will not start, as he has done no work for several weeks.

Cyllius, or his stable companion the filly by Isinglass out of Sceptre, will probably win the Autumn Produce Stakes of £2,000 at Newbury on Saturday. Mr. Houldsworth's Langton (10 lb. allowance) is a Newmarket tip for this race. There are fifty-three acceptances out of an original entry of 179. The Kingsclere Stakes of £1,000 on Saturday looks well for Lonawand, who has a breeding allowance of 10 lb. Whisk Broom will be the best from Newmarket. I fancy Declare or Elizabetta for the Newbury Cup.

---

A BISHOP ON BETTING.

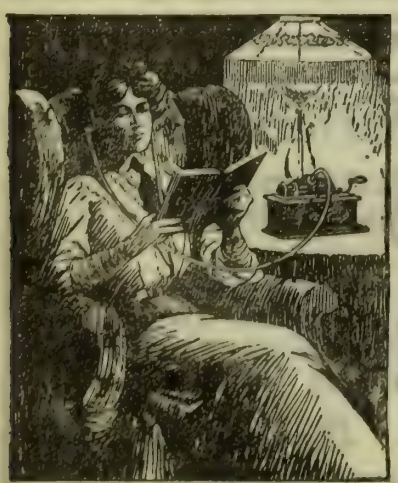
The Bishop of Liverpool (Dr. Chavasse) has delivered an address on professional football. It is a business. Those who go to see it should play. It creates betting, and men think more of it than of their work, and waste their wages and their time on seeing matches. In other words, they give more time and thought to the game than they can afford to do. Their wives complain and their children suffer. Well, I hope Lord Kinnaird, the President of the Y.M.C.A., read what the bishop said. He is President of the Football Association. That association is in the hands of men who run professional teams. The whole policy of the association has been devoted to the development of the professional game, and the genuine amateurs have been treated as blacklegs and boycotted. But while the association fosters professional football, with all the evils in its train to which the Bishop has referred, it strenuously opposes Sunday football. Now a year or two ago I dealt with this question of betting on the game, and, thanks to the courtesy of the Referee, one was able to show the extent to which it was carried on. Even the factory girls betted and used to get bookmakers' slips. Be it said at once that the Football Association does forbid betting on the football grounds, and there is absolutely no professional betting on the grounds where these big professional matches take place. Then in the football press and in the numerous notes and articles on the game which appear in the daily papers there are never any odds quoted. There is never a suggestion of betting in these papers, and the public interested in the game contains hundreds and thousands of people who never have anything to do with the class of professional football bookmakers that have arisen. And yet these bookmakers find that it pays them to issue and circulate cards containing the odds they are prepared to lay against a man picking the winners and giving the goal results of matches in the big league games. That the consequences are evil, especially in the big industrial centres in the North and Midlands no one can doubt. The Bishop has not overdrawn the picture at all. And yet I venture to say that if these men did not bet on football they would on horse racing, and probably during the summer they do so to very nearly the same extent. But it does not become a matter of notoriety for the simple reason that they have no chance of throwing up their work and breaking time to see horse races as they do for football.

The trouble and the evil being admitted, what is the remedy? It is useless to say that those who go to see the matches should play instead. Not only could they still bet, but they have not, as a fact, the opportunity for playing, nor are the huge majority of a playing age. As a matter of fact, one result of the interest in Association football has been a huge development of the game amongst a class who had no recreations before. The Football Association is not all black. If a tithe of the spectators would play they cannot, for the simple reason that there is no ground for them to play on. If the open spaces around towns and villages were increased tenfold the supply would not be equal to the demand. In the towns the footballer is pushed further and further afield. Even in villages the difficulty of getting a ground for cricket and football is oft-times insuperable. What is needed in every village is a public ground large enough for the game, with a bit over for the youngsters to play about on. There would be less loafing about public-houses, there would be less betting, and, above all, these grounds must be available on Sunday. On Sunday the people are thrown together idly and aimlessly. They have the public-house bar and the corners of the streets. Make opportunities for open-air recreations on the day which is now spent in loafing and idleness, and a big step forward will be made. But what earthly chance is there of any such thing being done? Squirearchy is eminently powerful in the parish. In town squire and dame will never attend a church. But in the country they set the example, and he probably reads the lessons. Sunday is to be observed; he has no tennis or other games, and to let the villagers do such things, heavens! what would Old England be coming to, and he will probably burst forth into an invective against Radicalism, Atheism, and Socialism, compared with



The New, Easy, Sure, At-home Way.

Foreign Accent and Idiom are Spontaneously Mastered

by the enlightened system of I.C.S. Phonograph Instruction.

Don't spend years in learning how not to speak—don't subject the youngsters to the old, monotonous, useless, parrot-like learning of

French, German, Spanish or Italian.

"Your I.C.S. System of teaching foreign languages in conjunction with the phonograph has been used in my house and proved very satisfactory—far ahead of the old system with imitated pronunciation."—W. Waller, 17 and 19, Bradshawgate, Bolton.

Have the I.C.S. Phonograph and Postal Guidance by Professors in your home. Quick, enjoyable, inexpensive, and sure.

Write for full explanatory book free, also free aid to employment for those desiring to apply their linguistic ability to monetary advantage.

INTERNATIONAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOLS, Ltd.

Dept. 313-B17, International Buildings, Kingsway, LONDON, W.C.

which the purple hues of early dawn pale into paltry insignificance. Then what can the clergy do? I know some who are large-minded enough to welcome healthy play provided divine service is attended. But on the big house where the money is they depend for subscriptions, and they dare not move. The bishops, too, denounce the Continental Sabbath.

And yet in Germany on a Sunday afternoon shall you see the German working man having a sports fête, and the working girls, too, on a piece of public open ground scarcely larger than Lincoln's Inn Fields. On the sandy soil there is no grass. In one corner there is putting the weight and long jump. Solemnly are the teams of men and lads marched up alongside to the words of military command; they line up, and one by one they take their turns to jump and put the weight. For these are team contests and there is no pothunting. The weight is a metal ingot or brick, and the man standing delivers straight from the shoulder. The longest long jump is perhaps 15 ft. from a jumping board, but there are men of over thirty taking this exercise in their gymnastic costumes, cotton trousers, and a vest. At the same time between the same associations are a series of matches at Schlagspiel, a sort of cross between rounders and prisoner's base, the ball being a little larger than a tennis ball, and sewn and made like an Association football. A really good game, and for those who do not play this there is another game. Over a tape 9 ft. high and 35 yds. long teams punch with the arm a ball bigger than an Association football. From three to eight was this competition going on, and nothing like it is to be seen at Primrose Hill or in the Royal Parks in London. The girls, too, had their teams. Under the beneficent system of the German Government the workers have longer hours and less pay than ours do. They have no Saturday holiday. And yet Germany prospers with her Continental Sunday. And the Frenchman is thrifty with his Continental Sunday. Why then, O my Lords Bishops, should we go to the dogs or the devil if we encouraged open air sports and games on a Sunday afternoon? I ask with all reverence, does La Manche affect the intentions of the Almighty?

I am firmly convinced that if the people are given these chances of playing a healthier tone will prevail. They have broken loose in East London, and Sunday football is played. But every one who plays is boycotted by the Football Association. This is a huge mistake. You cannot repress betting, but you can control it. You will never control or limit it unless you give something in exchange. Then the Football Association might very well consider whether or not professional football matches should not be forbidden on every day in the week except Saturday. If this were the rule employers would be in a better position to deal with the men. The mid-week games are the chief trouble. They upset work, and the F.A. may well consider whether, having created an organisation that, despite the good it has done, has become an impediment to commerce, it ought not to keep the game within bounds. Of course, a full season's notice would be necessary. The Leagues might break away. But I fancy they would find it in their own interest to accept this policy. Of course, there is one remedy at which I have hinted. Reproduce in this country the fiscal conditions of Germany, and then the English workman will not have time to play on Saturday. That afternoon will be as others. He will be driven to Sunday football, and as long-distance Sunday travelling is impossible League matches will slowly peter out. The clubs will not have the financial support necessary from gate money, and then there will be nothing to bet on. The same thoughts apply to horse-racing. If you only race on a Sunday the chances of betting are diminished. German Sundays and German tariffs mean no betting.

* * * * * *

The cricket shown by Kent in their match with the Rest of England was not the cricket that put them at the top of the County Championship list. The wicket throughout was too slow for Carr, the googly genius, but, apart from that, the Kent bowling was never impressive. The batting, judged by the standard the Kent side have themselves set up, was, with one exception, beneath contempt. K. L. Hutchings played a great first innings of 81 and a dashing second one of 48. Kent are a great team, but on several occasions when a big task has had to be faced, and things have not gone quite right to begin with, it has been obvious that with all the wealth of talent available their strength would be enormously increased by the presence of one batsman of the type and class of C. J. Burnup. But whatever the result may have been, no eleven could have been paid a greater compliment than that offered by the presence of 12,000 people in mid-September to see them bat.

* * * * * *

A very crowded and strenuous lawn tennis tournament came to a conclusion at Eastbourne on Saturday. This annual event, as far as the attendance of the cracks went, got nearer than ever to rivalling Wimbledon this year. The final of the Men's Open Singles was a disappointment, A. H. Lowe scratching to F. S. of the same name. The final of the Ladies' Singles was in many ways the tit-bit of the tournament. The draw and the form had both worked out admirably in bringing Mrs. Lambert Chambers and Mrs. Larcombe together in the final. The former concluded a triumphant season by winning in two straight sets. I believe it is correct to say that up to last week, when Miss Freiburg broke the record, Mrs. Chambers had not had a set taken of her this year in ladies' singles. She was also successful in the Mixed Open Doubles with S. N. Doust. In the Veterans' Singles Final E. R. Allen proved victorious over A. W. Gore.

MOTORS AND MOTORING.

OLYMPIA is looming ahead once again, and gossip is already current as to what it may bring in the shape of novelties, though information is still scanty under this head, for makers are naturally chary of giving away their secrets prematurely. What, however, seems

A PROFITABLE ASSURANCE

SPECIAL COMBINATION securing, in return for a Limited Number of Premiums, a Fixed Sum at Death, whenever it may happen, and a

LARGE GUARANTEED BONUS DURING LIFETIME,

together with valuable options and additional benefits.

EXAMPLE.—Age 25. Sum Assured, £500. Annual Premium (payable for 20 years only), £23 16s. 8d.

GUARANTEED RESULTS:

(a) In case of death during the term, PROFIT varying from £182 to £484.

(b) In case of survival, ULTIMATE PROFIT of £273, in addition to 20 years' accumulated Bonuses.

Gresham Life Assurance Society, Ltd.,

Chief Office, ST. MILDRED'S HOUSE, POULTRY, LONDON, E.C.

Assets Exceed £10,300,000. JAMES H. SCOTT, General Manager.

quite certain is that the show will be an uncommonly good one. Never before has the demand for space been so great, and every available inch has now been allotted. An innovation this year will be a five-shilling day, which will doubtless be appreciated by many who visit the show for practical purposes with the object of really seeing the exhibits. The list of exhibitors shows that there will be 138 in the car section, 116 in the component and accessory section, 32 in the tyre and wheel section, and 6 in the press section, or 292 in all. Although the majority of cars will be of British manufacture, most of the leading foreign firms will also be represented, for Continental makers have long since recognised that Olympia stands for a market which they can ill afford to neglect. Last year, it will be remembered, no show was held in Paris. This year the French manufacturers are organising an exhibition once more at the Salon, which will doubtless be a fine display. It does not seem likely, however, that it will prejudice in any way the success of Olympia, which precedes it in point of time.

The report that terms have been practically agreed upon for the amalgamation of the Motor Union and the Automobile Association will be received with satisfaction by all motorists who recognise the truth of the axiom that union is strength. When Mr. Rees Jeffreys was taken over by the Road Board the suggestion was made that the two organisations should compose their differences and join forces for the good of the movement as a whole, and it speaks well for the statesmanship and good sense of those at the head of both that this happy consummation has now been reached. The single body resulting, which will, it is understood, continue to bear the name of the Automobile Association, will be a very powerful organisation indeed, and it will not be surprising if it dispossesses eventually even the R.A.C. from its pride of place and becomes the leading representative body of the whole movement. However this may be, it will certainly speak with vastly greater authority than either of the individual organisations of which it formerly consisted.

The appointment of the Dunlop Tyre Company as tyre manufacturers to the King is an event of some little note. More than once I have referred in these notes to the somewhat restricted policy which was favoured in this matter by the motoring advisers of the late King, and many will have been glad to note that the new order of things has brought with it for the first time Royal recognition of a leading British firm, which also happens to be one of the pioneer firms of the whole industry. There are so many first-class tyres on the market to-day that he would be a bold man who ventured to assert with any positiveness which, if any, was actually the best. What, however, can be said without any hesitation is that if any single company has to be appointed as sole recipient of the Royal patronage the Dunlop Company, in virtue of their standing as the premier British firm engaged in the trade, have claims to the appointment second to none.

The conflict of opinion between the expert and the amateur is occasionally very curious, the latter often finding it to his advantage to do precisely what the former tells him he never should do. In the matter of tyres, for instance, the question of inflation pressure is a source of constant controversy. The experts—otherwise the makers—one and all insist on the supreme importance of inflating to this and that prescribed pressure, usually one considerably higher than that favoured by the amateur who dislikes the labour of pumping. So to justify himself the latter joins issue boldly with the makers and declares that their advice is all wrong, and that there is no necessity to inflate to anything like the extent that they allege, and strangely enough they do not one and all come, in Miltonic phrase, "to hideous ruin and combustion," as might be expected. On the contrary, there are many "low pressure" owners who assert that their tyres serve them just as well with low pressure as with high.

So, too, in regard to the use of worn-out covers to reinforce those in use. The tyre companies usually ridicule the suggestion. You could not set the one cover over the other, they say, or if you could it would infallibly creep and do more harm than good; strapping it on would not help matters, and generally they scout the notion as altogether impracticable. Yet correspondent after correspondent writing to the Autocar say that they have done this very thing and found the results most satisfactory. Mechanically, it would certainly seem a difficult job to get one cover over another of the same size, even by removing the beads, but this is what many declare they have done, with the best results. Further, it appears that the idea has recently been taken up commercially. In one case the method adopted is to stitch the outer cover firmly to the inner, and it is claimed that from a thousand to two thousand miles of tyre life can thus be added to a pair of old covers. In another case we are told that a German firm has patented a method of getting one cover over another without even removing the beading, and again, it is declared, with highly successful results. If, therefore, one may believe all one reads, the expert has in this case once again been confounded.

I like the spirit of the cyclist correspondent of one of the motoring papers who has been censuring his fellow wheelmen for their scurvy attitude towards the motor car. Cyclists should remember, he says, that they were once the pariahs of the road, and show themselves now more generous than their own enemies of former days. Who shall say, indeed, that the writer is not magnanimous when he can express himself as follows?—

> When I, for instance, hear the pleasant boom of a distant horn I lean a little to one side and watch some beautiful machine filled with happy people sweep swiftly and silently by. It varies the long weary miles to see these splendid productions of man's genius on the once dismal and deserted roads. Occasionally a clumsy chauffeur may come too close, but how seldom does any accident happen from this cause! Surely it is not such a terrible thing to dismount quickly two or three times a month.

Such an utterance as this really stimulates one's faith in the perfectibility of human nature.

THE EXPERIENCES OF COUNTLESS MOTORISTS prove that tyre bills can be kept at the irreducible minimum by employing A COMPLETE SET OF GROOVED
DUNLOPS
THE DUNLOP TYRE CO., LTD., ASTON, BIRMINGHAM; and 14, REGENT ST., LONDON, S.W.
Decrease in tyre bills, not strokes, by using a Dunlop "Orange Spot" golf ball.

WOMAN.

BEAUTY THE UNBEAUTIFUL.

IT is one of the paradoxes characteristic of civilised humanity which leads it, while spending a vast amount of time and trouble in quest of beauty, to achieve, for the most part, unrelieved ugliness. Equally paradoxical is the theory which attributes beauty to that half of creation which is least likely to possess it. Such polite hypocrisies as the "fair-sex" and "lovely-woman" belong to the same order of convention as that which makes all heroes six-foot-two in their stockings and all heroines of such beauty as never yet existed.

The truth is that it is very difficult for a woman to be beautiful. Looked at without the prejudice attaching to the dental picture postcard seen from the front row of the stalls, she has little more than her colour and the texture of her skin to recommend her. The trousered man does his best to disguise such natural advantages as he may be fortunate to possess, and just as you may suspect the masked busker on the beach of being a nobleman in disguise instead of the down-at-heel actor he really is, so your imagination can play round visions of what man might be were he clothed in peach-coloured satin, or swathed in the majestic folds of a Roman toga. Incidentally, I may remark that fancy dress balls or even pictures of mere man "before and after" any particular treatment do not lend much support to these imaginings. From an every-day point of view, however, we delight to give him the benefit of the doubt.

The woman's case is harder. She has not the advantage of concealing, but all the disadvantages of revealing her person. Her neck and arms may be scraggy, or merely a thick white expanse without meaning or character; in either case convention bids her expose them. Does she possess a ridiculously undersized foot? It immediately attracts attention. The absurdities of her clothes are designed, not, as is the case with men, to prevent conspicuousness, but actually to attract attention. Women ought to be more than grateful for the convention which provided them with petticoats, thereby dissimulating a particularly ungainly form. Boat-shaped and bulging, it is almost impossible for a woman to look well on land. The conception of the mermaid was an inspiration, and to it is no doubt due the present kangaroo fashion which makes women look like a badly folded umbrella.

It is her mutability, both natural and fashionable, which more than all the rest prevents a woman from being beautiful. Naturally, she alters so much from time to time that it is difficult to fit her to a standard. Still more readily does she respond to the changing decrees of fashion. Are large hips—les hanches larges of the French novel—in vogue, she takes enthusiastically to tight stays and crinolines; an eighteen-inch waist becomes dearer to her than life itself. Is slimness demanded, and with the same disinterested regard of consequences, she damps her petticoats to make them cling. To-day she takes delight in tying her feet together in such manner as to make going upstairs something in the nature of an obstacle race. Are square shoulders demanded? She might have been a dragoon all her life. Champagne-bottle shoulders? In five minutes she might have been born with them. Her hair becomes black, white, or red, according to desire; its quantity varies equally. Her complexion adopts any hue, her face any shape from the Rossetti to the Gaiety girl. Even her gait adapts itself to the Gibson, hockey, or Boston girl of the moment.

Man, on his side, preserves a consistent ugliness. He will vary his moustache from the "tooth-brush" to the "Kaiser." If his chin be well marked he is not above noticing the advantages of being clean-shaven. On the whole, however, he spends the time devoted by woman to the search of beauty in an equally zealous search for uniformity. And just as the cloud, however beautiful, is less satisfactory as a standard of beauty than the mountain which will still be there to-morrow, so man's success in being ugly is less painful than woman's failure in being beautiful.

THE

Goldsmiths & Silversmiths Company, Ltd.

By Royal Warrants.

The Public supplied direct at Manufacturers' Cash Prices.

QUALITY.

Household Furnishings in REGENT PLATE, the Finest Substitute in the World for Solid Silver.

Breakfast Dishes
Candelabra
Candlesticks
Cruet Frames
Dish Covers
Entrée Dishes
Sauce Boats
Spoons and Forks
Tea and Coffee Services
Trays

Suitable for WEDDING PRESENTS.

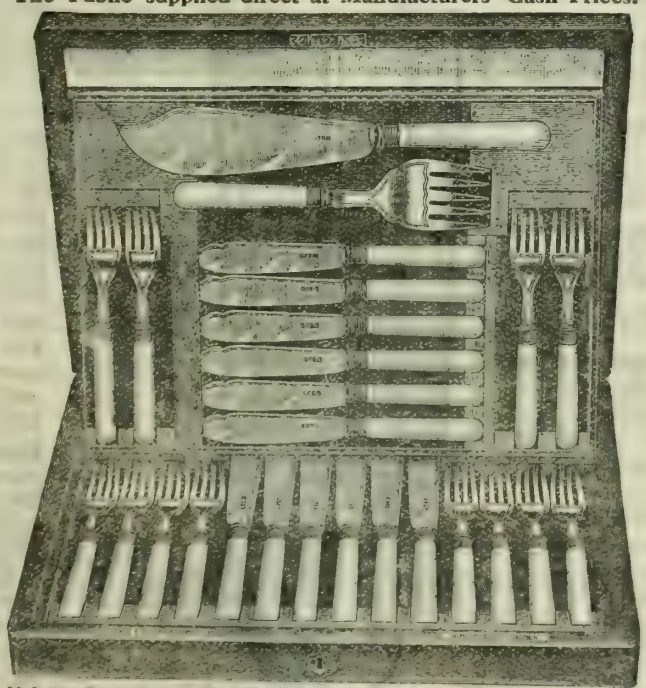
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE POST FREE.



12 Pairs Solid Silver Fish Knives and Forks, One Pair Fish Carvers, Best African Ivory Handles In Polished Oak Case.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. £12 0 0

12 Pairs Regent Plate Fish Knives and Forks, One Pair Fish Carvers, Best African Ivory Handles. In Polished Oak Case.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. £5 0 0

112, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

VALUE.

Table Requisites in SOLID SILVER. The Finest Stocks in Europe to select from.

Biscuit Boxes
Café au Lait Sets
Cake Baskets
Candlesticks
Cream Ewers
Dessert Knives and Forks
Fruit Baskets
Menu Holders
Tea and Coffee Services
Waiters

Suitable for WEDDING PRESENTS.

SELECTIONS SENT ON APPROVAL.

MRS. A.'S DIARY.

Thursday.—Wales was a hopeless proposition, and I refused to accept it for longer than two days. I drove for miles seeing everything through a mist dimly, and the persistent rain washed away all glamour from the birthland of the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

I came to town late last night, and had just finished yawning over the morning papers and wishing that the Land Tax would cease to muddle and Crippen were at rest, when Florence arrived from the wilds of Buckinghamshire and dashed into the room exclaiming: "I have caught the earliest train, and want you for a long day's shopping." "Why catch the earliest train to seek the latest styles?" I murmured fretfully, and watched my rural sister in limp astonishment whilst she spread a two-inch depth of marmalade upon some toasted remnants of my frugal breakfast, grumbled because the coffee was cold and the fire was hot, and altogether made herself so completely at home that I decided to accept her suggestion and take her out.

Like all folks who dwell in the country with the local draper's illustrated catalogues for their favourite literary food, she was impressed with the notion that she could buy the finest kind of clothes for some few shillings, that hats bearing the stamp of the best artists were procurable for something and elevenpence, and that furs grown on the backs of the most distinguished beasts were to be hailed at summer prices when they uttered the last word in winter fashions. I had to travel with her from Bond Street to Regent Street, from Regent Street to Knightsbridge, and from Knightsbridge to Westbourne Grove before I could persuade her that fine gowns incur fine expenditure. We found a few shop assistants still showing some little resentment when asked for cloth costumes, protesting hopefully that they had, like other heroes, great expectations next week. However, most things come to an end, and even so our search for the inexpensive coat and skirt which should not dare proclaim their virtues. We commanded a success in a black cloth with the three-quarter coat bearing seams on the hips and deep pockets liberally braided, the collar of black velvet, also braided and the skirt displaying the latest novelty of kilted flounce some nine inches deep and decked with braid, the narrow back having one box-pleat from waist to hem.

Florence's ambitions towards economical millinery were realised at the Parisian Hat Company, 67, Knightsbridge, where I went to scoff and remained to pay 30s., the price of every model, and their style is manifold. She bought an admirable specimen—I cannot conceive how they achieved it for the money—with a tight black satin crown and a broad brim lined with black velvet, a wreath of satin roses and satin leaves decorating the base of the crown, the centres of the roses boasting jet inner leaves. Another good hat had a full crown of black satin and a small pleated brim lined with a frill of white lace, a shaded heckle feather being at the side of this. "Amazing!" I uttered, and uttered it again, and amazing it was, and so, too, was a model of the mob-cap description with a satin crown and Paisley band and bow and a lace frill. Noteworthy, also, was a high-crowned black velvet hat with an ostrich fountain feather at one side, and I modestly admitted that there are more things in the world of dress than are dreamt of in my extravagant philosophy.

Florence had to be refreshed after hearing this unwonted confession of my ignorance, and we lunched together at the Carlton grill, where we met Diana, in a sporting kit of tweed and suède, just home from Somerset, and full of technical talk of stag hunting and how it is done. She hinted that she had been somewhat impressed with the prowess of a certain polo player, who had been staying in the neighbourhood. It seems he brought her a bunch of roses at the psychological moment. Unfortunately, Diana does not suffer from that popular feminine complaint "confessionitis," and as a human document was rather blank. Romance makes the many garrulous, and turns the few to "inexpressive shes." Diana was very silent and only alertly interested when a beauteous damsel entered wearing one of the newest boas.

"What beast is that?" she asked, critically gazing at the skin, which showed thickly silver, red and black, and tawny brown hairs.

"Cross-fox," I explained, proud of my knowledge.

"I never saw a pleased fox," she muttered meditatively, and fell to dullness again.

Florence was disappointed that our sympathy and generous hospitality alike brought forth such meagre response, and she suddenly found herself tired, and decided to catch the early train, and I decided to let her. Those who shop and go away may come and shop another day—but I hope they won't for a long time.

Friday.—Robert arrived home from yachting, hungry for the theatre, and declaring there were two plays he must see—"Nobody's Daughter" and "Everybody's Husband"—and so we went to see "Henry VIII." My love for him must be little short of adoration, I decided, when I agreed to this. Great is my appetite for Shakespeare, yet I am no glutton, and to enjoy him twice in one month must prove an excess of zeal for my companion's good. Bourchier's beard grows nicely, and he need no longer be placed in Fox's—or Clarkson's—book of martyrs, for he really looks well under its influence. The house was full and everybody impressed. Robert was fractious and reminiscent, and only enthusiastic in his admiration of Laura Cowie's pink and white brocade frock and the delicate dance of her.

Somewhat tactlessly he raved over a near neighbour with dark eyes and hair, an obtrusive expression, and many weird beads wound round her throat, and combs to match stuck in her untidy hair. He gazed at her, and muttered:

"Beautiful barbarian! She might have danced before Herod."

"She might," I chuckled,

The revival of Joan's old evening gown.

"but she looks more likely to walk before Harrod."

However, we remained friends, and agreed in our appreciation of the hot chicken sandwiches we ate afterwards at the Cleveland Club, where, as usual, we found Joan laying down the law of bridge with a dogmatism worthy of better information. She was airing a most effective renovation of an apricot satin evening dress of last year's birth. I recognised it at sight, and promised to keep its secret. It was supplied with a new tunic of apricot chiffon lightly worked in wool, with a few opalescent beads in the petals of the flowers, and it had a band of skunk at the neck and on the hem, somewhat previous, but nevertheless delectable. I found it the most successful revival I have ever seen except "The Case of Rebellious Susan," who is now again pursuing her deceitful career at the Criterion, with Mary Moore as the mutinous matron and Sir Charles Wyndham beating his own record of perennial youth and grace.

Saturday.—Virginia has discovered that nature is a decorative circumstance in the early autumn, and she has settled herself for a couple of weeks in a cottage near the river, where she proposes to watch out loud the polychromatic glories of the trees. "I cannot play alone," she pathetically wrote, "and you must come to me." And so I came, bringing with great generosity two large boxes of sweets for her inner woman and much information of frocks and fashions, and "Martin Eden," "The Devourers," and "Playhanger," for her intellectual refreshment.

I found myself superfluous as companion-in-chief, for Nita was already in residence; but between them, in contemplation of the view, they have exhausted every laudatory adjective in their dictionaries. I shall supply a few fresh ones, not entirely complimentary unless Virginia shuts some of the windows and adorns the grates with a glowing coal, or two or three. The blazing log is a fraud; it is a grey ash before I have time to appreciate it, and amongst the few excuses I can find for the German is his most wise saying, "He must be a fool who is cold in the summer."

I am now established as critic on the hearth, and I shall try not to under-act the part.

Mrs. A.'s Letter-Box.

I have been persuaded to counsel through these columns all wise women who send me their dress difficulties to solve. But their inquiries must be clearly addressed to Mrs. A., "Truth" Office, Carteret Street, S.W.

Senda.—I have your second letter and am quite able to reply now. Charmeuse is the best material; the velvets are dearer and cannot be depended upon not to plush; indeed, I have not yet met one of any quality which did not require steaming and attention after each wear. For the coat and skirt have one of the new moirés; these are thick and soft, and in a very dark shade of blue or in black I specially commend them. Have a narrow skirt, but not caught in above the ankles. I repeat this advice weekly. The coat might be of three-quarter length if you like it; but keep the sleeves narrow and the collar long. The most popular blouse is of ivory lace covered with dark ninon; this cover now extending up to the neck and also making a transparent collar-band. If you have a cream lace blouse you could buy ready-made an over-blouse in ninon or chiffon in any colour trimmed with soutache. These over-blouses are cut round at the neck back and front. Satin, petersham, and suède are all used for belts, but most of the skirts are made with a very limited corselet extending about two inches above the waist.

Gaythorne.—The blouse beneath should be tight-fitting and made of black lace, and over this the fine ninon to be laid plainly—transparent collar-band to correspond. There is no need for belt if the skirt possess a limited corselet and the top is bound with braid like the hem.

Penseroso.—Make the scarf of Indian patterned chiffon and border each side and the hem with skunk. A muff to match should be striped all over with skunk, a couple of inches of the chiffon between each stripe.

Mrs. Q.—Cloth and velvet are in vogue for autumn costumes, and there are some shaded stripes in velveteen available, and also some ribbed velvets and velveteens. Have the crown of black lace, and a frill of black lace over the velvet brim; a dull gold rose, with a few leaves and a pink centre, is rather pretty, and would serve as the trimming.

Venl.—The white chiffon might have a deep hem of pink chiffon overlaid with ivory lace, if that must be the scheme; but I am afraid I do not like it much.

Sykes-Josephine's "Haute Nouveauté" Corsets are ideal; being built on anatomical principles an elegant and graceful contour is created. Mesdames are specialists for Fashionable, Surgical, Gestation, Restoring, Obesity, and Hunting Corsets. Only address, 280, Regent Street, London. 'Phone: 6346 Gerrard.

Work and Play.

Dr. Emil Reich has been writing about the possibility of a female Civil Service. He says it is only logical and right that women should be allowed to do half of the national duty by serving in the Civil Service, "by allowing men to devote their greater muscular resources on lines of imperial growth, and by saving other men of a more intellectual complexion the mortal boredom of passing their lives in dull offices." His reason for wishing an indefinite number of young women to pass their time in the "mortal boredom of dull offices" is that after ten years they would have easily saved up "a sum substantial enough to help them in the establishment of a household with the man of their hearts." Dr. Reich reckons that this saving up is to be done on salaries much cut down from the not very glorious incomes of the present male Civil Servants. The bank is to save £20,000 to £30,000 a year by appointing young girls as clerks; the young girls in ten years are to have saved up enough to be able to start housekeeping; and then, although there will still be a million superfluous women for whom there are no husbands, the million who at present do not marry from lack of funds are all to be immediately mated. This is odd, because in the meanwhile the chief glory of the scheme is that immense numbers of Englishmen are to emigrate to build up the Empire in the colonies! Apparently Dr. Reich knows more of love than of logic.

* * * * * *

On October 24 an interesting dinner will be held at the Lyceum Club. It is being organised by Mrs. Watt Smyth, the secretary of the Women's Aerial League, and will be followed by a cinematograph exhibition of recent aeroplane flights. A number of distinguished guests connected with aviation will be present, and it is expected that the evening will be both interesting and instructive. The dinner organised last year by the same lady at the club was a notable success, for all are interested in flying, even if they belong to the

SUPERIOR FURS
are obtainable at
The International Fur Store
AT MODERATE PRICES.

New Designs in
EVENING WRAPS and OPERA CLOAKS,
VISITING COATS,
CARRIAGE and TRAVELLING COATS,
made in various Furs.

A Large Stock of
STOLES, PELERINES, SCARFS, TIES, and MUFFS,
In Russian Sable, Sable-coloured Marten, all kinds of Foxes, Skunk, Fisher, Chinchilla, Musquash, Ermine, and the New Russian Silver Musquash, ready for immediate wear.

ONLY ADDRESS—
163 & 165, Regent Street, W.

large number of people who would rather sign away half their incomes than trust themselves on an aeroplane.

* * * * * *

Archdeacon Vesey, speaking in favour of co-education, based a good deal of his support of that principle on the difference between the present-day school girl and her predecessor. With the healthy hockey girl of to-day there is an almost complete absence of the sentimental, giggling boarding-school miss of former times, and with this change vanishes one of the chief objections to co-education. On the other hand, if, as the Archdeacon says, "slackness is engrained in the average English boy," it seems probable that being in a class with girls would, in his own phraseology, "buck him up," for how could any English schoolboy worth the name ever tolerate defeat at the hands of a girl? On these lines, indeed, one might look forward to an era of mentally prodigious scholars, boys and girls alike increasing the pace in mutual fear of defeat, while the panting masters are left far behind.

* * * * * *

Yvette Guilbert is one of those people of whom one never thinks as ever having been any age but her own. The fact that she had a childhood at all occurred to most people for the first time when they heard that her autobiography was to be published. But that her childhood should have been spent in something no better than slavery seems irreconcilable with the impression she now gives. Nevertheless, just as there were warriors before Agamemnon, there were years before the long black gloves and the naughty little songs carried this girl, undowered with money, beauty, or a voice, to the crest of the wave of fortune. The black gloves themselves, which everyone has been taking as a symbol of her wicked, extraordinary, fascinating genius were simply due to the fact that they were more economical than white. Even so are our illusions shattered!

* * * * * *

Of the various suggestions for memorials to the late Miss Florence Nightingale, one of the most sensible is that of Miss Gill, secretary of the Women's Imperial Health Association of Great Britain. Miss Gill proposes a hospital for the middle classes who are unable to pay the ordinary fees charged at private nursing institutions. This would seem to be in accordance with Miss Nightingale's own work and ideas, for it will be remembered that she founded the Hospital for Invalid Gentlewomen as long ago as 1850 in Harley Street, now removed to new buildings in Lisson Grove. One of her last appeals to the Press was for this hospital, for this "good work—work after my own heart." There are, of course, certain hospitals for ladies and gentlemen, but these are not numerous, and are mostly restricted to certain professions or to one sex, and a big central institution would fill a very real want.

* * * * * *

The recent swimming achievement of Lady Marjorie Dalrymple should encourage girls to devote themselves to swimming—the best of exercises, as well as an amusing pastime. Although the water was decidedly choppy, Lady Marjorie Dalrymple, accompanied by her brother, swam across the mouth of Loch Ryan, the distance of three miles being accomplished in two hours. Lady Marjorie is an all-round good sportswoman—an excellent golfer and enthusiastic horsewoman, as well as a first-rate swimmer.

LETTER FROM MADGE.

Dearest Amy,—The Autumn Rose Show at the Horticultural Hall, Vincent Square, on Thursday would have astonished and delighted you, as it did me. All these splendid roses in September! Some years ago it would have been regarded as a miracle. Our gardeners grow more skilled and clever, as well as enterprising, with every year. You cannot imagine the variety and beauty of the blooms that filled the great hall. Loveliest of all was the unapproachable Frau Karl Druschki in its exquisite white purity. One of the blooms was quite five inches across, and the size of the petals seemed almost phenomenal. Contrasted with this St. Agnes among roses in flamboyant colour was the splendid Comtesse de Cayla, a wonder of apricot, orange, and golden-yellow tones. Even the foliage was warm of tint.

As usual, Irish growers took the best of the prizes, and I was delighted to see the many women's names among the winners. In the seedling class there came from Ireland a gold-medal tea-rose, Mrs. Herbert Stevens, a creamy white with long petals and deliciously fragrant, in this latter particular excelling Frau Karl Druschki, which only faintly smells of the tea variety. Another gold medal was awarded to a white tea-rose tinged with pink, also from Ireland, and named Mrs. Foley Hobbs. Do you know the "Betty," a radiance of pink and apricot? If not you ought to get one. And you would have smiled with pleasure at the smallest rose in the show, a pale pink polyantha called Mrs. W. M. Cutbush. It is impossible to describe the gorgeous colouring of the Lyon rose, a tea, tinted from sulphur through yellow to apricot and salmon.

The dinner-table decorations lacked novelty and distinction, but there were some very beautiful roses among them. The large single varieties, Irish Glory and Irish Elegance, were much admired, their brown foliage showing to so much advantage the glowing apricot and orange of the large petals. A new feature, I fancy, was that in which the hips of roses were shown, in nine distinct species. The deep scarlet, russet, crimson, purple of the various kinds made them look like some wonderful tropical fruit, hanging in rich clusters from their mass of leaves.

What do you think of this incident? A woman of gentle birth had a stroke of paralysis some time ago, and lost her means of livelihood in consequence. She now sings in the streets, having a clear, sweet, very pleasing voice. The other day the owner of a well-appointed house opened his front door and beckoned

SCHOOLS In ENGLAND or ABROAD For BOYS and GIRLS.

Messrs. J. & J. PATON, having an intimate knowledge of the BEST SCHOOLS and TUTORS in this Country and on the Continent, will be pleased to aid parents in their selection by sending (free of charge) prospectuses and full particulars of reliable and highly recommended establishments. When writing, please state the age of pupil, the district preferred, and give some idea of the fees to be paid.

J. & J. PATON, *Educational Agents,
143, CANNON STREET, LONDON, E.C.
Telephone 5053 Central.

PATON'S LIST OF SCHOOLS AND TUTORS. Tenth Edition, 1,124 pages. Red cloth. Post free, 2s. 6d. Contains abridged Prospectuses, Fees, &c., of over 750 good Schools. Also a Map of England, and Articles on How to Enter the Army, Navy, Civil Service, Medical and Engineering Professions.

PATON'S GUIDE TO CONTINENTAL SCHOOLS. 240 pages. Blue cloth. Post free, 1s. 4d.

to her. When she came near, jerking herself along in the painful way of the paralytic, he said: "Go away! You are giving us all the stomach-ache!" Had a navvy behaved in this fashion there might be some excuse (though I don't think any navvy would!), but for a man occupying the position of a gentleman to insult a poor afflicted woman in this way is too abominable.

I saw some sights in Bond Street yesterday. What are we coming to in the grotesqueness of our fashionable garb? I saw two girls with hats so immense that they had to walk a yard apart for fear of knocking each other's headgear. I saw a very fat woman in a check foulard gown drawn tight across her person and sewn at the knees into a still tighter band of purple silk. Her waddling gait was accentuated by the wobbling of her unsteadily pinned-on hat. It was atrociously funny, but while one laughs one feels it annoying that members of our sex can consent to make themselves so absurd.

Have you heard of the Women's Exhibition to be held in the Royal Institute of Fine Arts, Glasgow, in the first and second weeks of November? Arts, crafts, and industries in connection with women are to be shown, but there will be a complete absence of the bazaar element and tawdry articles of any kind. A crèche will be arranged in connection with the Glasgow Day Nurseries Association. The Kensington College has presented to this exhibition four scholarships, each of which will entitle the holder to a year's secretarial training at the institution and to the guarantee of a satisfactory appointment when qualified, which is such a distinctive feature of this college.

Do you know anything about Sanitas as a disinfectant? I have just been reading, in a little pamphlet issued by the company, an interesting description of the way in which the restorative properties of the pine forests of the world are made available in concentrated form as antiseptics and disinfectants, so that we have the purifying agency of the pine and the eucalyptus brought to our hand in the preparations known as Sanitas Fluid and Sanitas Oil. It is a scientific discovery, and the process is the result of a long series of investigations. In cases of consumption, in so many instances caused by breathing impure air, the use of the Sanitas Disinfecting Fluid restores oxygen to stale air, and gives it freshness, and the Oil is equally valuable in diseases of the throat, such as diphtheria.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

Dearest Madge,—The weather was deliciously restful last week in Connemara—just suited for poetic developments. Nevertheless, at the end of it Grania burst out tragically. "The 'Celtic dream' is a fraud; that's what it is. Not that anyone cannot dream 'easy' in such a lovely country. But the dreams are pretending, artificial ones. Our minds are twentieth century minds and work accordingly. Our hearts are, in the first place, human, and our humanity is modern. We have not Homeric nor Ossianic ideals. Blood and slaughter, hacking and hewing are just disgusting to think of. And there are elemental passions enough to read about any day in the chronicles of the police and other courts, without rooting up the long ago ones. I don't want to be a 'past' Irishwoman either in mind, dress, or language. I belong to the present and look to the future." "'So does others,' as the immortal Dooley would say," remarked Fred. "There's a grand future in the past; salaries and the like out iv thim ould hairoes. And it's all givin' to the new."

One does not wonder if an organised "pushing" of the past sends emigrants in increasing numbers from the country. Imagine if you were all being made compulsory Ancient Britons. You, too, would cross the ocean to an unthreatened land of progress.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen left Ireland last week for a fortnight's or so holiday in Scotland. It is not easy to think of Lady Aberdeen taking a holiday; over here she is ceaselessly busy, amongst other things, in making other people busy, too. It is not very difficult to make us join new "societies," especially those started by the "Lady Lieutenant," but it is extremely difficult to bring perseverance into line with enthusiasm, or to prevent the old suffering from the new. And then "Lady Lieutenants" change and Viceroyalty rarely takes on the views of its predecessors, as Royalty does.

The Irish military manœuvres made the south-western counties lively last week, and as much hospitality as was possible was extended to those taking part in them by the "big houses," where many parties were assembled. Near Dublin the excitement was afforded of Lorraine's "flight" across the Irish Channel. It was a pity that he should have fallen a few hundred yards short of landing on the historic Hill of Howth, where the Danes of old made many landings, and in whose harbour George IV. not only landed, but left to this day the imprint, in the soft mud of the pier, of his royal foot. Howth has suffered great loss within two years in the death of the great Irishman, Lord Justice FitzGibbon, in whose villa so much modern history was made, and in that of Lord Howth, the last of the St. Lawrence race, who were Lords of Howth for so many centuries. Mr. Gaisford St. Lawrence—he has assumed the last name (his mother's)—is now the possessor of Howth Castle, and the old castle has at last been brought up to date, "hot and cold laid on," electric light, and all modern comforts. After all, it is better to have the atmosphere of a house suit one's self than to hold it sacred to uncomfortable traditions, legends, and family ghosts.

Lord and Lady Kilmorey have been entertaining a party at Mourne Park, on Carlingford Lough, including Prince Francis of Teck, who is a frequent visitor there. Lord Newry has been busy with the launch of a motor-boat, which is to help the fishermen in the bad weather which is liable to prevail on the coast. Lord and Lady Leitrim at Mulroy, furtner north, are having a series of shooting parties during the month. Lady Liverpool has been visiting her parents, Lord and Lady Monck, at Charleville, near Enniskerry, the picturesque demesne of which adjoins that of Powerscourt. The well-known lovely Dargle glen is jointly owned by Lords Powerscourt and Monck, who respectively own the woods on either side of the river.—Yours ever, Clare.

Here are some more September recipes for you:—

Partridge à la Russe.—Cut into quarters some young partridges which have been ready dressed as for roasting. Put them into a stewpan with slices of bacon and one or two glasses of white wine, and set them over a brisk fire. Turn them two or three times, then add a small wineglassful of brandy. Set them over a slow fire to simmer slowly. When they are nearly done, throw in some trimmed and sliced mushrooms and some good gravy. Let all simmer briskly, and skim off all fat. Stir

It's Simply Great!

Choose Watson's No. 10 Whisky for its full, rich Flavour—for its guaranteed Purity—for its unvarying Quality; choose it because it occasions no after-depression. Be sure to specify

WATSON'S No. 10 WHISKY

At its price Watson's No. 10 is the most enjoyable and beneficial Whisky it is possible to obtain. Matured by age alone.

Your Wine Merchant or Store can supply Watson's No. 10.
Why not place a trial order to-day?

ed

DEBT.
LLICK.

into this a lump of butter rolled in flour and the juice of a lemon. Stir all until the flour is cooked.

Clear Hare Soup.—Having cleansed a hare, reserve the blood and cut the fillets out, which latter make into quenelle. Take the remainder of the flesh, which place aside with that of a rabbit, chop the bones with those of the rabbit, and stew them with stock or water, vegetables, a bacon bone, a bouquet of herbs, and a clove or two, after which strain and remove the fat. Pass the meat through a mincing machine and mix it thoroughly in a stewpan with two eggs, a small pot of red currant jelly, and a little cold water; add the stock from the hare bones, which must be absolutely free from grease, mix all together, and stir it until it boils; add vegetables, spices, and a bouquet of herbs. Simmer the soup for two hours and strain it through a cloth. Re-heat the soup, adding a glass of sherry, a pinch of cayenne and salt to taste; garnish the soup with small quenelles, made with fillets and juliennes of boiled celery, and at the moment of serving stir in the blood of the hare.

Potted Hare.—Cut the flesh of a hare and that of two rabbits into pieces, removing all the bones, which boil separately for essence. Put the meat in a covered stewpan with ½ lb. of lard, ½ lb. of bacon cut in dice, a dessertspoonful of freshly ground black pepper, and a teaspoonful of salt. Simmer the meat for three-quarters of an hour and leave it until next day to cool. Then mix it with half a tumbler of white wine (Graves'), two chopped shalots, a chopped onion, and the merest soupçon of garlic. Add also a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, a sprig of chopped thyme, and additional salt and pepper. Pound the mass in a mortar with ½ lb. of butter and the reduced essence of the bones, added gradually. When it is reduced to a compact mass, simmer it again for half an hour in a stewpan and put it into a game pie dish, or mould it, and when it is quite cold pour liquid butter over it and garnish it with aspic jelly.

Apricot Marmalade.—Remove the stones and skin as many apricots as you wish, and cut them into pieces. Allow 4½ lbs. of fine lump sugar to every 6 lbs. of fruit. Put the fruit and sugar into a preserving-pan, moistening the sugar with a little water. Stir it the whole time with a silver spoon or a wooden spatula. On no account allow it to boil. The preserve will be done when the sugar can leave the spoon in threads. Try it by putting a little on the thumb and finger; if it will draw in threads it is enough. Pour it into glass jars or into pots. Cover them as usual.

Ever your loving cousin, MADGE.

P.S.—I am sending you the rules of a new kind of Patience. It is for a single player. So many thousands of lonely persons find in this game a resource for occupying leisure hours that it is rather nice to come upon a fresh variety. By the way, do you know Demon Patience? It is for four or more players, and the competition in getting a card on is severe and almost too spirited in some players. Miriam and Joseph prefer Poker Patience. They play it almost every evening that they pass at home. Let me know what you think of the one I send you. I am lost in admiration of the clearness with which the rules are expressed.

CHESS-BOARD PATIENCE.

(Which might also be Called "Square" Patience.)

1. This is played with two packs of cards with backs of distinctive pattern or colour.

2. After each pack has been well shuffled, and separately, the whole of one of them is to be laid out in rows of eight, and twelve cards are to be laid out from the other pack, to make eight rows of eight cards, or a "tableau" of sixty-four cards in all.

3. The forty remaining cards form the "stock," which is to lie unseen.

4. The aim of the player is to build up two piles, from ace to king, of each suit—that is, eight complete piles or sequences altogether.

5. Aces, and cards to follow, may be taken from the bottom only of the eight columns as laid out.

6. Any "2" may be placed below any "3" at the bottom of the "tableau," any "3" below any "4," and so on, and a sequence, if composed of one suit entirely, may be removed en bloc and placed below any bottom card which has a denomination one higher than the highest card of the sequence.

7. When aces (if any) have been removed from the bottom of the "tableau," and shifts made (according to 6) with the object of clearing a column (or more than one column), and so getting at the hidden cards which are wanted for building up the piles, one card after another is to be taken from the "stock" and its destination considered.

8. If the card taken from the "stock" is an ace, or will follow what is already on one of the piles, it may (at the option of the player) be at once used to form part of a pile, or it may be placed at the bottom of a column ending with a card which has a denomination one above it.

9. Or the card taken from the "stock" may be placed below the bottom card of the first column (that is, the left-hand one), irrespective of what is already at the bottom of this column. And it must be placed there if there is no other way of disposing of it.

10. The first column, though a kind of "waste" column, is to be treated exactly like the other columns after a card has been placed upon it.

11. When a column has been cleared any card—from the "stock" or from the bottom of another column, or any sequence, entirely of one suit, from the bottom of another column—may be placed in it, and whatever is placed in it is to be treated as if it were a part of the original "tableau."

12. To avoid impossible combinations, the player has the option of moving any four cards at the outset (not afterwards); that is, he may exchange the positions of any two cards, and then, having done this, exchange the positions of any other two cards.

BOLLINGER'S

CHAMPAGNE.

STAMMERERS and all interested in the subject should read a book by one who cured himself after suffering forty years. "Stammering, its Treatment; and Reminiscences of a Stammerer." Post Free.
B. BEASLEY, Dept. H., Tarrangower, Willesden Lane, Brondesbury, N.W.

REST ASSURED
COPLAND & LYE'S
WINCEY NIGHTDRESSES
Are Safe Wear.

LADIES' NIGHTDRESSES.
MADE OF FINE CREAM SCOTCH WINCEY.
Full size, 9/11; Outsize, 11/9. If by post, 4d. extra.
Children's Cream Wincey Nightdresses.

| Sizes: | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 5/11 | 6/6 | 6/11 | 7/6 | 7/11 | 8/6 | 9/6 |

Or if by post, 3d. each extra. To fit from 3 to 14 years.
Carriage Paid in Britain on Orders of £1 and upwards. All Goods delivered free within 10 miles of Glasgow.
COPLAND & LYE, Caledonian House, Sauchiehall Street, Glasgow.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS,
SICKNESS, EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY, THIRD PARTY, BURGLARY, GLASS & FIDELITY GUARANTEE RISKS insured against by the RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURANCE CO.,
now incorporated with the
NORTH BRITISH & MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO.
Capital (fully subscribed) £1,000,000. Paid up £200,000. Claims paid £5,800,000.
64, Cornhill, London. A. VIAN, Secretary.

An Apple a day Keeps the Doctor away.
The equivalents are :—
WHITEWAY'S
CYDERS
Supplied to his late Majesty King Edward VII. and other members of the Royal Family.
Special brands for gout and rheumatism.
And :—
"CYDRAX"
The Temperance Drink. Made from the juice of apples. Leading abstainers recommend it.
Illustrated Booklet from
WHITEWAY'S ORCHARDS, Whimple, Devon, and Albert Embankment, London, S.W.

STAMMERING PERMANENTLY CURED. Adults and boys taken in residence or as daily pupils.—Booklet of particulars and testimonials from Mr. A. C. SCHNELLE, 119, Bedford Court Mansions, London, W.C.

Wolsey
PURE WOOL UNDERWEAR
REPLACED FREE IF IT SHRINKS.

Amusements.

COVENT GARDEN. FANCY DRESS BALLS.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. FRANK RENDLE.
FIRST FANCY DRESS BALL,
Friday next, September 23rd, at 11 p.m.

ROYAL OPERA HOUSE, COVENT GARDEN.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. FRANK RENDLE.
THOMAS BEECHAM GRAND OPERA SEASON.
Commences Saturday, October 1st. Box-office 10 to 6.

GAIETY THEATRE.—Manager, MR. GEORGE EDWARDES.
EVERY EVENING at 8, a Musical Play, OUR MISS GIBBS.
MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY at 2. Box-office open daily 10 till 10.

DALY'S THEATRE.—EVERY EVENING at 8.15, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES' Production, THE DOLLAR PRINCESS, a Musical Play. FIRST ANNIVERSARY PERFORMANCE (SOUVENIR NIGHT) SATURDAY NEXT. Box-office 10 to 10.

ST. JAMES'S. Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER,
Sole Lessee and Manager.
LAST 3 NIGHTS (Final Performance September 23rd).
At 9. THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST. By Oscar Wilde.
Mr. ALLAN AYNESWORTH in his original part.
Preceded at 8.30 by A MAKER OF MEN, by Alfred Sutro.
LAST MATINEE (both plays) TO-DAY (WEDNESDAY), at 2.30.
SEPTEMBER 27th, New Comedy, D'ARCY OF THE GUARDS.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE. THE ARCADIANS.
EVERY EVENING at 8. MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2.
Lessee and Manager, ROBERT COURTNEIDGE.

VAUDEVILLE, STRAND.—Under the Management of Messrs. A. and S. GATTI. TO-NIGHT, at 8.30, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES' New Musical Production, THE GIRL IN THE TRAIN.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2.30. Tel., 3815, Gerrard.

ALHAMBRA.—"FEMINA," GRAND BALLET, LEONORA, FAICO, BRITTA, CARMEN TURIA, TERRY and LAMBERT, FUJI TROUPE, ON THE SANDS, JURY'S PICTURES, etc.
Evenings at 8. Managing Director, ALFRED MOUL.

EMPIRE.—"THE DANCING MASTER," LYDIA KYASHT, FRED FARREN, PHYLLIS BEDELLS, etc. THE PEREZOFFS, GEORGE MOZART, SYBIL ARUNDALE, and Selected Varieties, etc.
Evenings at 8. Manager, Mr. H. J. HITCHINS.

PALACE.—GEO. GRAVES and CO., in "KOFFO OF BOND STREET," MARGARET COOPER, NAT M. WILLS, MARY GREY, KAUFMANN TROUPE, LES TROMBETTA, BIOSCOPE, &c.
EVENINGS at 8. MAT., SAT., at 2.

MASKELYNE AND DEVANT'S MYSTERIES, ST. GEORGE'S HALL, OXFORD CIRCUS, W. DAILY at 3 and 8.
For full programme see "Daily Telegraph."
Seats, 1s. to 5s. 'Phone, 1545 Mayfair.

Concerts.

PROMENADE CONCERTS, QUEEN'S HALL.
NIGHTLY, at eight.
THE QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA. Conductor—Mr. HENRY J. WOOD.
1s., 2s., 3s., 5s. ROBERT NEWMAN, Manager, 320, Regent Street.

QUEEN'S HALL.
KREISLER. KREISLER.
SATURDAY NEXT, at 3.
ONLY VIOLIN RECITAL THIS SEASON.
10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., 1s.
ROBERT NEWMAN, Manager, 320, Regent Street, W.

QUEEN'S HALL.
SUNDAY AFTERNOON CONCERTS
WILL BE RESUMED NEXT SUNDAY, at 3.30.
THE QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.
Conductor—Mr. HENRY J. WOOD.
Full programmes for the entire season of the Sunday Concert Society, 320, Regent Street, W.
ROBERT NEWMAN, Manager.

Exhibition.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION. — Lifelike Portrait Models of the World's Most Famous Men and Women. Tableaux, Scenes, and other attractions. Cinematograph Performances throughout the day. Open 9 a.m. till 10 p.m.

A PRIVATE INDUSTRIAL COMPANY with Head Office in Cape Colony, and Branches in other South African centres, doing sound profitable business (15 per cent. net profit last year), and excellent prospects of expansion, OFFERS at par limited number of its £1 ORDINARY SHARES, also 7 PER CENT. £1 CUMULATIVE PREFERENCE. The new Capital will be used to increase the stock and manufacturing facilities at the Company's depôts. Managing Director now in London.—Full particulars will be given to bonâ fide investors (only Principals need apply) on application, by CHARLES COMINS & CO., Chartered Accountants, 50, Cannon Street, London, E.C.

MILLS & BOON have ready a striking novel of London Life, by the author of "Sparrows," entitled THE SINS OF THE CHILDREN. By HORACE W. C. NEWTE. This story should be read by every father, mother, son and daughter, for, like all Mr. Newte's novels, it is a story with a moral. MILLS & BOON have also just published one of the most thrilling novels of the last ten years, this being an entirely new "Arsène Lupin" adventure, entitled "813." By MAURICE LEBLANC. No person who suffers from nerves should read this story.

Crown 8vo. 6/- each.

| | |
|---|---|
| THE SINS OF THE CHILDREN | H. W. C. Newte |
| 813 | Maurice Leblanc |
| THE RAJAH'S PEOPLE | I. A. R. Wylie |
| TWO MEN AND GWENDA | Mabel Barnes-Grundy |
| THE GIRL FROM HIS TOWN | Marie van Vorst |
| REBECCA DREW | Edith Dart |
| THE ENEMY OF WOMAN | Winifred Graham |
| THE GLEN | Mary Stuart Boyd |
| JEHANNE OF THE GOLDEN LIPS | Frances G. Knowles-Foster |
| BLUE GREY MAGIC | Sophie Cole |
| WRITTEN IN THE RAIN | John Trevena |
| THE PILGRIMAGE OF A FOOL | J. E. Buckrose |
| THE VALLEY OF ACHOR | Mrs. Ch. de Crespigny |
| THE VANISHING SMUGGLER | Stephen Chalmers |
| SPORT OF GODS | H. Vaughan-Sawyer |
| THE ISLAND OF SOULS | M. Urquhart |
| WITH POISON AND SWORD | W. M. O'Kane |

MILLS & BOON have for serious readers four striking volumes which they can heartily recommend. There is for sportsmen a fine volume entitled FORTY YEARS OF A SPORTSMAN'S LIFE, by Sir CLAUDE CH. DE CRESPIGNY, Demy 8vo, 10/6 net. For lovers of the scholarly essay there is THE PARSON'S PLEASANCE, by the Rev. P. H. DITCHFIELD, Demy 8vo, 10/6 net. For all readers who are interested in German Life there is I. A. R. WYLIE'S MY GERMAN YEAR, Demy 8vo, 10/6 net, and for that great public who are ever ready to read the story of a brilliant triumph of a woman of genius, who from the lowest rung of the ladder climbed to the highest pinnacle of art, there is that striking human document, YVETTE GUILBERT: STRUGGLES AND VICTORIES, by YVETTE GUILBERT and HAROLD SIMPSON, Demy 8vo, 10/6 net.

MILLS & BOON'S Shilling Novels have within a short period become the most popular. Undoubtedly the best selling Shilling Novel of the day is HORACE W. C. NEWTE'S "SPARROWS," which with E. S. STEVENS "THE VEIL," and many other masterpieces, is contained in this library.

MILLS & BOON, Ltd., 49, Rupert St., London, W.

3/9 The WHS Self-filling 3/9

FOUNTAIN AND STYLO PENS

So simple a child can fill them

A thoroughly reliable writing instrument at a popular price. No complicated mechanism. Manufactured of the best materials, the Pens are fitted with iridium tipped 14-carat gold nibs, and in 3 styles of barrel, thin, thick & stub, and each style of barrel can be supplied with either fine, medium, or broad pointed nibs.

The Stylo is fitted with adjustable spring needle and is non-leakable.

To be obtained from all the leading Stationers, or post free, on receipt of P. O. for 3/10, from
W. H. SMITH & SON, 186 Strand, London, W.C.

3/9 FULLY GUARANTEED BRITISH MANUFACTURE 3/9

FOUNDED 1757

Royal Maternity Charity of London,

PATRON—H.M. THE QUEEN. PRESIDENT—H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN OF SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN. VICE-PRESIDENT—H.S.H. THE DUCHESS OF TECK. TREASURER—RIGHT HON. LORD AVEBURY.
For providing Midwives, Doctors and Medicine (Gratis) to Poor Married Women in their Own Homes. (ABOUT 2,500 PER ANNUM.)
Income under £3 0. Debt to the Bank, £2,500. Expenditure over £2,000.
PLEASE HELP THE COMMITTEE to FREE the CHARITY from DEBT.
Offices—31, FINSBURY SQUARE, E.C. Secretary—Major G. L. B. KILLICK.

Mrs. Penny's New Anglo-Indian Novel.

SACRIFICE 6s.

By F. E. PENNY Author of "The Unlucky Mark," &c.

FIRST REVIEW.

"Mrs. Penny has shown fine imaginative power in depicting the Khonds' inhumanity without making them inhuman. . . . It is characteristic of Mrs. Penny's broad-minded attitude that she introduces a cultured native who is in sympathy with the faith of the Khonds without palliating the grossness of the expression they give to it. . . . Mrs. Penny is to be most heartily congratulated."—The Times.

THE YOUNG IDEA 6s.

By FRANK A. SWINNERTON Author of "The Merry Heart."

"Mr. Swinnerton shows with absolute fidelity the ways, the speech, the manner of life of small clerks and their like. He is at his best when dealing with the comedy side of it all. . . . NO ONE SHOULD MISS the conversational efforts of the very inferior musical, literary, and commercial stars who form the Vermin circle of acquaintances."—OBSERVER.

"Mr. Swinnerton writes freshly and with an honest humour."—THE TIMES.

SENTENCED TO DEATH 6s.

By ROBERT MACHRAY Author of "The Mystery of Lincoln's Inn," &c.

"An exciting and well-written romance. The hero, Halliday Browne, has been the chief instrument in crushing the conspiracy in Bengal, and is therefore marked down to death by a band of Indian conspirators. . . . The story is one which may be confidently recommended as exciting and ingenious from first to last."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

THE NOISE OF LIFE 6s.

By CHRISTOPHER STONE Author of "They also Serve," &c.

This story deals with the events leading up to and resulting from the return of a Verlainesque poet, Owen Craven, a confirmed opium-eater, to his wife. His story, as well as that of Mary, his beautiful wife, Jock, his musical son, "Bumble" Hill, and all the other characters, is full of the life and vigour which have made Mr. Stone's novels so popular.

On Sept. 22nd.

MEZZOGIORNO 6s.

By J. AYSCOUGH Author of "Outsiders—and In," &c.

This novel is named, like a Papal Encyclical, from its first word. It is the study of a life up to the striking of its midday, and it begins far in the South; but by far the greater part of the book deals with English people in England. The heroine is English, though foreign born, and she is English by love and adoption as well as descent. Whether her husband is the hero, or another character, the reader will determine for himself.

CHATTO & WINDUS,

111, St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C.

The French Revolution.

"This great work details the whole history of the Revolution in excellent perspective."—THE GLOBE.

"It will become a standard work of reference."—LIVERPOOL POST.

THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. A Political History. By A. Aulard. Translated from the French of the Third Edition, with a Preface, Notes, and Historical Summaries, by Bernard Miall. In three volumes. Demy 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d. net each. (Inland Postage, 5d.)

Madame Royale.

"Few Royal Princesses have endured a life of such stormy vicissitudes as the luckless daughter of Marie Antoinette. Her life is well told in this volume"—DAILY GRAPHIC.

MADAME ROYALE, THE LAST DAUPHINE. By Joseph Turquan. Edited and Translated by Lady Theodora Davidson. With a Photogravure Frontispiece and 25 other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 15s. net. (Inland Postage, 5d.)

The Newer Spiritualism.

"It is only by a thoroughly sane coherent statement of the problem, such as Mr. Podmore has made, that we can hope to get at those facts which are the basis of belief."—DAILY NEWS.

THE NEWER SPIRITUALISM. By Frank Podmore. Demy 8vo 8s. 6d. net. (Inland Postage, 5d.)

Chats on Autographs.

A practical handbook for collectors by a recognised expert. A new volume in Unwin's "Chats" Series.

CHATS ON AUTOGRAPHS. By A. M. Broadley. With 64 full-page Plates and Illustrations in the text. Lg. Cr. 8vo, 5s. net. (Inland Postage, 4d.)

Spain from Within.

"Anybody who would come to a right comprehension of the crisis in Spain must read this book."—EVENING STANDARD.

SPAIN FROM WITHIN. By Rafael Shaw. With 16 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net. (Inland Postage, 5d.)

The Cornwall Coast.

"It is just the book for the tourist who wants to see everything and to be told everything about what he sees."—TRUTH.

THE CORNWALL COAST. By Arthur L. Salmon. With a Coloured Frontispiece, Maps, and 32 other full-page Illustrations. 6s. net. (Inland Postage, 5d.)

ON SALE AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

T. FISHER UNWIN, 1, Adelphi Terrace, London.

Third Edition. NOW READY.

The 16th Series of

QUEER STORIES —FROM— "TRUTH"

Containing 30 Specially Selected Stories:—

"THE KAISER'S WIRE," "THE LAST TEST MATCH,"
"A PIMLICO MYSTERY," "A VICTIM OF BRIDGE,"

Etc., Etc.

Price One Shilling. By Post 1s. 3d.

"TRUTH" Office, Carteret Street, London, S.W., and at all Railway Bookstalls, Newsagents, etc.
Publishing Office: 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

A Notable List of Fiction.

LADY MOLLY of Scotland Yard
By THE BARONESS ORCZY . . . 6s.

THE LAME ENGLISHMAN
By WARWICK DEEPING . . . . 6s.

OPAL FIRE: A BUSH LOVE STORY.
By MRS. CAMPBELL PRAED. 6s.

THE LOVELY MRS. BLAKE
By RICHARD MARSH . . . . 6s.

THE BROWN MASK . . .
By PERCY JAMES BREBNER . . 6s.

LOVE'S BARRIER . . . . . .
By ANNIE S. SWAN . . . . . 6s.

John Foster Fraser's much discussed work.

AUSTRALIA: THE MAKING OF A NATION.
By JOHN FOSTER FRASER. 6s.
3rd Edition.

"Mr. Fraser has admired honestly and criticised freely."—The Evening Standard.

CASSELL & CO., LTD., LONDON, E.C.

NEW GREENING BOOKS.

Pall Mall Gazette says: "THAT MOST CAPTIVATING BOOK 'PRINCESS GALVA.'"

Mr. DAVID WHITELAW'S New Romance,

PRINCESS GALVA,

has made a palpable hit, and is being spoken of as the most charming romance of the year.

Second Edition Now Ready.
Third Edition in Preparation.

PRINCESS GALVA,

By DAVID WHITELAW, author of "Moon of Valleys," "The Gang," etc. THE WORLD says: "Mr. David Whitelaw must be congratulated on the excellence of this romance from an artistic point of view. It is admirably planned, the sense of inevitableness, so to speak, is complete and makes the illusion perfect. The literary style is full of ease and lightness."

ANOTHER SUCCESS IS

COLIN COLLINS' Surprisingly Sensational Story,

THE BLINDING LIGHT.

ORDER FROM YOUR LIBRARY AT ONCE.

OTHER RECENT FICTION.

| | |
|---|---|
| FOR NO MAN KNOWETH | Vere Campbell |
| THE FALL OF A SAINT | Eric Clement Scott |
| A FOOL'S ERRAND | Anthony Hamilton |
| JOHNNY | Herbert George |
| ALLAH THE AVENGER | Cowley Whitehouse |
| THE GAY LORD WARING | Houghton Townley |
| RAGNA | Anna Costantini |
| MISTRESS CYNTHIA | May Wynne |
| FOR PRINCE OR POPE | Jas. Gissingham |
| THE DUKE'S VENGEANCE | Michael W. Kaye |

SIX SHILLINGS EACH. At all Libraries.

The new volume in GREENING'S SHILLING SERIES is MOON OF VALLEYS, by DAVID WHITELAW. Red Cloth, with Frontispiece by H. R. Millar. One Shilling net.

GREENING & CO., Ltd., 91, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

Messrs. STANLEY PAUL'S LIST.

BLACK AND WHITE says: "The novels of Stanley Paul and Co. have a decided reliability as to interest. It seems to be the rule of this house that what I call readability should come first; literary merit is not absent by any means, but it is never allowed to dominate that primary quality of all novels—the power to interest and inform at the same time. The Stanley Paul novels seem to have made this quality a habit, and the two latest

A WEEK AT THE SEA By HAROLD AVERY
AND
IN EXTENUATION OF SYBELLA
By URSULA A'BECKETT

Both at 6/-, have it in very gratifying quantities."

Other New Six Shilling Novels now ready include:

ANGELA St. JOHN TREVOR

This novel, by a new writer, deals with midnight swoonings, baccarat party, Alpine soldiers, idyllic marriage, misunderstanding, attempted blackmail and sisterly self-sacrifice, and according to the "Manchester Courier" is written quite effectively.

The BIRMINGHAM POST says: "'Angela' is distinctly readable, with plenty of comic relief."

THE DEAN'S DAUGHTER CECIL ADAIR

A story of life and love in and around a Cathedral city.

FEAR E. NESBIT

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE says: "Miss Nesbit tells a story charmingly. She has powers of characterisation and a fluent style."

PALL MALL GAZETTE: ". . . Full of tender grace and worthy of this gifted and versatile writer."

MORNING POST: "Miss Nesbit has considerable talent; they keep alive our curiosity and engage our sympathy."

THE FEET OF THE YEARS JOHN DALISON HYDE

The ACADEMY says: "In Mr. Hyde we get a writer quite as powerful as Zola."

The EVENING STANDARD says: "Not only interesting but original. . . . Penelope lives passionately, vividly, and her individuality is perhaps strong enough to make the book in some respects a remarkable one."

THE AMAZING MUTES WARD MUIR

A very amusing satirical novel of Lovely Lucerne. First review, LIVERPOOL COURIER:—"Will be read with much interest. The book deals in a gently ironical vein with the cheap tripper problem, and contains some glimpses into the inner mysteries of popular feminine journalism."

THE BUNGALOW UNDER THE LAKE CHARLES E. PEARCE

The immediate and pronounced success of this author's first novel, "Love Besieged," has encouraged Mr. Pearce—long known as the prince of serial writers—to venture on a further effort. This novel, full of mystery and love, is sure to be in great demand, so place your order at once. Ready to-morrow.

An Important Volume, now ready at all Libraries and Booksellers'.

An Eighteenth Century Marquise: Emile Du Chatelet and her Times
By FRANK HAMEL

Author of "The Dauphines of France," &c. Fully illustrated.

The SCOTSMAN: "Mr. Hamel furnishes some vivid and striking details of the famous men and women of the time, and his descriptions of the cafés and the salons are lively and entertaining."

DAILY MAIL: "A remarkable book."

EVENING STANDARD: "An entertaining book . . . not a mere bundle of scandal, but a conscientious account of a remarkable woman and a society abounding in strange contrasts. Mr. Hamel draws a sober, detailed picture of this world. He shows sympathy and understanding. The book is one to be read by those who would understand Voltaire's life in a noble phase."

 Many excellent reviews appearing daily.

Two Important New Shilling Novels.

THE MYSTERY OF ROGER BULLOCK, TOM GALLON.

The SCOTSMAN says: "Is an entirely new story, quite as good as the average six shilling novel, yet it is issued at one shilling. For this small sum Mr. Gallon's readers are regaled with an exciting story of mystery and crime . . . the kind of fiction in which Wilkie Collins was supreme . . . it is admirable."

LEWIS WALLER AND RAFAEL SABATINI.

"Bardelys the Magnificent" is founded on Rafael Sabatini's dazzling story of the Great Rebellion.

Sold everywhere at 1/- net with coloured design on cover representing the actual costume adopted by the great actor in the title-rôle. Read the novel before the play reaches London.

Stanley Paul's New "Clear Type" SIXPENNY Novels.

TRAFFIC E. TEMPLE THURSTON

JOHN BULL says: "It left me morose, pessimistic, exhilarated as though by a dangerous drug. There is no denying the intrinsic cleverness, the profound introspection, the craft and subtlety of the workmanship. It is something when a book compels you to live with it, to cling to it, to forsake food and sleep for the pleasure of its company. Such a book is 'Traffic.'"

CORNELIUS Mrs. HENRY DE LA PASTURE

This novel contains 254 pages of "clear type" for 6d.

DAILY TELEGRAPH: "In this novel Mrs. Henry De La Pasture has given us the best work she has yet produced. A capital novel, which will give unalloyed pleasure to many new readers."

THE A.B.C. ABOUT COLLECTING SIR JAMES H. YOXALL, M.P.

Profusely illustrated with numerous line and 32 half-tone illustrations. In large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5/- net.

 Catalogue post free on application to—

STANLEY PAUL & CO., CLIFFORD'S INN, LONDON.

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS.

BARKER'S.

E. H. LACON WATSON'S NEW NOVEL. 6/-

"A real pleasure for novel readers . . . quite a delightful book."—Daily Telegraph.

"A Novel of the season, and not of a season only, for it is a book that may be read more than once. The characters, one and all have the breath of life . . . you close the book with the feeling that you have met every one of them in real life."—The Referee.

More Dartmoor Stories by EDEN PHILLPOTTS. 6/-

TALES OF THE TENEMENTS

"We do not remember any of Mr. Phillpotts' works which gave us more pleasure."—Liverpool Post.

"In these storiettes we find Mr. Phillpotts at his best."—Sunday Times.

"Every one of these tales, simple, dramatic, racy, reflect the light from many a facet of a richly-endowed mind. Their humour is part and parcel of humanity, not the mere knack of raising a laugh. They are pathetic, without sentimentality, romantic, without being unreal."—The Times.

THE FORTUNE HUNTERS.

SHORT STORIES. By VIOLET JACOB.

Author of "Irresolute Catherine," "The Sheepstealers," &c. 6/-

The book is a collection of stories. The scenes are laid in many different places. Four of these stories touch on the supernatural, but the first, from which the book takes its title, is a love-story with Venice for the background.

SEPARATE STARS.

A Novel. By Miss VIOLET A. PEARN. 6/-.

The story of a woman of genius.

ROOSEVELT'S AFRICAN GAME TRAILS.

Written by himself. The only account in book form of Mr. Roosevelt's famous expedition.

With numerous Illustrations. 18/- net.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

Smith, Elder, & Co.'s List.

MR. A. C. BENSON'S NEW WORK.

Now Ready. Large Post 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.

THE SILENT ISLE.

By ARTHUR C. BENSON, Fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge, Author of "The Upton Letters," "From a College Window," "The Altar Fire," etc.

Morning Post.—"No more fascinating volume of essays has ever appeared in our language . . . the humour is of a peculiarly delicate kind—the humour of the Quietist. It must be purchased, or you must borrow it permanently, or forget to return it to the library."

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "DODO."

On September 27th. Crown 8vo. 6s.

THE OSBORNES.

By E. F. BENSON.

Author of "Dodo," "The Challoners," "Sheaves," etc.

 The story of a well-born girl who marries into a family of nouveaux riches: and at first repelled by the artless vulgarity of her new connections, is at last won over by discovering their underlying simplicity and greatness of heart.

Ready September 27th. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

From a Little Town Garden; and Other Sketches.

By the Hon. Mrs. CUST.

 A collection of sketches at home and abroad some of which have appeared in the Guardian.

NEW "3s. 6d. NET" EDITION OF WORKS BY ARTHUR C. BENSON.

Ready September 27th. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

THE UPTON LETTERS.

By ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER BENSON.

Guardian.—"A triumph of literary skill."

Nineteenth Century.—"If it comes to quoting one would end by quoting the whole book, it is a possession for always."

 OTHER VOLUMES TO FOLLOW.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

Everett & Co.'s New Novels.

THE RED HERRING.

By RONALD MACDONALD.

"A comedy full of light and witty dialogue. . . . This charming book should ingratiate itself alike with the critical and the ingenuous."—Globe.

"To describe all the plots across which the red herring is trailed would be to mar the reader's pleasure—a pleasure which never lessens at any point of the book, and which is only partly due to the ingenious plots, for Mr. Macdonald's manner of telling his tale is attractive and clever enough to make even a dull story entertaining, while this one, even apart from the author's style, is excellent."—Westminster Gazette.

"The ingenuity of this story is deserving of the highest praise. . . . The whole is a delicate piece of work, a good story racily told, and the characterisation is in the very first flight."—Sunday Times.

UNDER THE KNIFE.

By A. G. GREENWOOD.

"A novel not to be missed."—Morning Leader.

"Far beyond the common stamp of mediocrity, being at once fresh, clever, and thrilling from the opening to the closing sentence."—Dundee Courier.

THE IDYLL OF AN IDLER.

Some Adventures of a Caravan in Cornwall.

By Mrs. FRED REYNOLDS.

"It does not come one moment too soon, this pretty guileless, realistic and romantic tale of a party of vagabonds who spent their five weeks' summer outing idling about Cornwall. . . . Mrs. Fred Reynolds' book is a delightful addition to holiday literature."—Westminster Gazette.

ON DESPERATE SEAS.

By F. W. A. FISHER.

"Finely told."—Sunday Times.

London: EVERETT & CO., 42, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

STERILE MARRIAGE: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By a late Senior Physician to a Hospital for Women. Post free, 3s. 9d. Shelley & Co., Limited, 38, Gracechurch Street, London.

"TRUTH"

can be obtained in IRELAND from EASON & SON, Ltd., Middle Abbey Street, Dublin; 17, Donegall Street, Belfast, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

The Right Paper to Write on. That's

HIERATICA.

It reduces the tedium of letter-writing, the surface is so even, the pen grips the paper with ease, and Correspondence becomes a pleasure.

Of all Stationers at 1/- a Box.

Free Samples and interesting Booklet on application to HIERATICA Works, Hill Street, Finsbury, London.

TYPEWRITERS

BOUGHT, SOLD, REPAIRED, OR EXCHANGED.

Hire 10/- Month, or 27/6 per Quarter.

MSS. Copied.

TAYLOR'S TYPEWRITER CO., Ltd.,

Dept. T, 74, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

Goddard's Plate Powder.

For Cleaning Silver, Electro-Plate, &c.

Sold everywhere 1/- 2/6 4/6

FURNITURE

IMPORTANT PRIVATE SALE,

WITHOUT LEAST RESERVE, OF

High-class Modern, Antique, and Oriental Second-hand Furniture, Carpets, Draperies, and Complete Effects.

THE FURNITURE AND FINE ART DEPOSITORIES, Ltd., will SELL PRIVATELY, on their Premises, at 48 to 50, Park Street, Upper Street, Islington, London, N., EVERY DAY, from 9 till 9, Thursdays till 5.

Any item, however small, can be selected now, and if not required for immediate delivery will be stored free till wanted. Payment when goods are required or delivered at once, town or country, or shipped for abroad.

These goods comprise one of the finest collections of genuine high-class modern, antique, and Oriental Furniture and Household Effects possible to be seen, and in most cases are being offered at less than one-fourth their original value.

Including amongst numerous other items the following:—

Persian, Aubusson, Axminster, Brussels Carpets and Rugs, several real Turkey carpets of finest quality, being offered as low as 65s. each, with rugs to match, 15s.; Aubusson tapestry silks and lace curtains and table covers, from 15s. up to 35 gs.; genuine antique pierced front brass fenders with standards and implements complete, from 27s. 6d.; two very fine antique design carved oak Welsh dressers, fitted shelves, cupboards, etc., in perfect preservation, 5 ft. wide, at 75s., with the fine majestic old armchairs, table, and dowry chest of the same period, some delightful pieces of extremely fine Royal Dresden figure groups, etc., Old Staffordshire, Worcester, and other china, choice carved ivories, quantities of very fine silver, quantity of plate by Collis, Regent Street, and others, table linen, three magnificent polished oak canteens containing cutlery by Mappin & Webb, Elkington, and Rogers; some choice oil and water paintings by the late William Powell Frith, C.V.O., R.A., and others, beautifully-executed engravings and coloured sporting and other prints.

The Bedrooms comprise several very fine antique bow-front and other chests of drawers at extremely low prices from 35s., and handsome gent's wardrobes of Queen Anne, Sheraton, and other designs, fitted with deep drawers and sliding trays, from 3 gs.; also several very beautiful complete bedroom suites with bedsteads to match, including Queen Anne, Heppelwhite, Sheraton, and Chippendale designs, white enamelled and solid English oak suites from £3 15s., and ditto, with large double glass door wardrobes, from £7 15s.; two very magnificent large Sheraton design inlaid mahogany bedroom suites, 12 gs. and 18 gs., a very choice Queen Anne design bedroom suite with 5ft. 6in. wide wardrobe, superbly designed and manufactured by Plesner et Fils, being offered at the ridiculously low price of 18 gs., the other larger suites in satinwood, silver ash, and other choice woods being offered equally low in price; one Sheraton design exhibition suite being most superbly inlaid with real mother-o'-pearl flowers, etc., comprising a 7ft. 6in. wide wardrobe priced at £72 10s., is honestly worth over treble. Several very fine square pillar all brass and enamelled French, Italian, and other bedsteads with nearly new horsehair bedding complete, from 35s. set.

The contents of Reception, Dining, Smoking Rooms, and Libraries comprise some very fine old carved oak furniture, also some exquisite examples of Adams, Queen Anne, Chippendale, Heppelwhite, and Sheraton furniture, a choice dining-room complete set of Queen Anne design, comprising 5 ft. wide Queen Anne sideboard, fitted drawers, cupboards, etc., oval extending dining table to match, choice overmantel, six covered dining chairs with cabriole-shaped legs, and two fine carving chairs to match, the entire lot being offered for 20gs.

Also handsome set in solid oak, comprising massive sideboard, extending dining-table, overmantel fitment, two carving chairs, and six small chairs to match. The whole set complete, £17 10s.

And a very choice set of Sheraton design dining-room furniture, complete for 25gs.; two luxuriously spring upholstered Chesterfield settees, very fine make, 65s.; four very fine luxuriously spring easy chairs to match, at 45s.; carving wagons, bronzes, dinner services, and two valuable sets of English cut table glass.

The Drawing Rooms comprise a rare collection of fine old Dutch, French gilt, satinwood, and Indian carved furniture, including very fine rare old Dutch weight clock over 250 years old, very unique set of Dutch inlaid chairs, with large display cabinet, centre table, side tables, and other pieces.

Very unique set of most magnificently-carved Indian chairs and settees, upholstered in very choice silk, tables, pedestals, etc., to match.

Two delightfully gilt and carved settees, pair of Louis XV. carved and gilt fauteuils to match, carved and gilt occasional chairs to match, with footstools, gilt table with Scagliola top, formerly belonging to George IV.; carved and gilt screens, pedestals, etc., with the Vernis-Martin, Boule, and other writing bureaux and escritoires, superb.

Pocket grand piano, rosewood case, 45gs. (worth over treble), magnificent upright grand in Sheraton design, £28, and a nice-toned instrument by Erard, in good condition, 8gs.

Boudoir comprises well-made Chesterfield suite in silk, complete, manufactured by Wood and Co., £9 17s. 6d.; elegant French design cabinet to match, 4ft. 6in. wide, £6 15s.; overmantel to match, 35s.; and dainty centre table, 22s. 6d.

Two large, comfortable Chesterfield settees at 45s.; etc.

Some very fine natural history specimens, lions, tigers, and bears mounted as rugs, quantity of curios, books, electric light fittings, cigars and wines, fine bed and table linen, iron safe by Milner and Co. and one by John Tann, landau, motor brougham, garden furniture, and numerous other items impossible to enumerate here, but full catalogues may be had upon application.

The Whole is NOW ON VIEW, and any items may be selected at once, and can remain stored free till required, or will be delivered free in town, or packed for country or shipment.

THE FURNITURE AND FINE ART DEPOSITORIES, Ltd.,

48 to 50, PARK STREET,

UPPER STREET, ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

(A FEW MINUTES FROM HIGHBURY STATION, NORTH LONDON RAILWAY.)

CAB FARES REFUNDED TO ALL PURCHASERS.

Hours 9 till 9. Thursdays 9 till 5.

CATALOGUES (S) NOW READY, AND FULL PARTICULARS FREE ON APPLICATION.

"Truth" Foreign Hotel List and Business Guide.

BADEN-BADEN.—HOTEL MINERVA. Fst.-cl. fmly. hotel. Lichenthal-Alee. Btfl. lge. pk. Open-air restau. Rooms with bath.

BASLE.—THREE KINGS HOTEL. The unique, beautiful quiet pos. on the Rhine. Universal rep. L. A. BOSSI, late Gd. H., Territe.

BLANKENBERGH (Belgium).—KURSAAL HOTEL. 1st-class, leading pos. on beach. Large restaurant, ex. cooking. Mod. comf.

COLOGNE.—EXCELSIOR HOTEL ERNST. The nwst. and most up-to-date hotel in town. The same prop. as Baur au Lac, Zurich.

COLOGNE.—HOTEL DISCH. First-class leading hotel. Patronised by Eng. and Amer. New bath suites. Mod. charges.

COPENHAGEN.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class. Leading hotel. Up to date. Connected with Carlton and Ritz hotels.

DRESDEN.—HOTEL BELLEVUE. The leading Hotel, pat. by Eng. & Amer. soc. All latest improve. R. RONNEFELD, Gen. Man.

DRESDEN.—GRAND UNION HOTEL. Nearest first-class Hotel to Cen. Stn., open location, Grdn. on front & back, mod. terms.

DRESDEN.—SENDIG HOTEL. Europaischer Hof. First-class. Sendig Hotels Schandau, Nurn., Wies., are all of best reputation.

DUSSELDORF.—HOTEL ROYAL. Thoroughly first-class. Aprts. & single rms. with baths.—H. Hengst, Dr., prev. H. Europe, Hamburg

FLORENCE.—HOTEL MINERVA. Quiet and central. Patronised by English and Americans.—G. CANDRION, Proprietor.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL REGINA ET VICTORIA. First-class. Every modern comfort. Lately improved and redecorated.

CHEMISTS.—H. ROBERTS & CO. English and American chemists. Via Tornabuoni, 17.

HAMBURG.—LLOYD-HOTEL. The nearest first-cl. hotel, facing Cen. Stn. (Townside). Every mod. comft. Lge. Restnt. Terms. mod.

TAILOR.—HERMANN JAHN. 8-10, Schmiedestrasse. First-class Eng. and Amer. Tailor. Perfect fit. Finest English Goods in Stock.

HEIDELBERG. — SCHLOSS HOTEL, HOTEL BELLEVUE. Leading hotels near Castle ruins. Unique position, splendid views. All latest improvements.

INNSBRUCK.—JACOB ZINK, Karl Strasse 13, First-class Gent's Tailor, also Sporting Outfits.

INTERLAKEN.—HOTEL BEAU-SITE. English family hotel, near central station and steamboat landing. Quiet position. Splendid views. Large garden. Modern comforts. Terms moderate.—J. WURTH, Proprietor.

LAUSANNE.—ALEXANDRA GRAND HOTEL. First class. Most up-to-date. Splendid view on the Lake and Mountains.

LAUSANNE.—CARLTON HOTEL. Splendid sit. Close to English church. Mod. comfort, moderate charges.—H. MULLER, Pr.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL VICTORIA. The nearest first-class family hotel to the Rly. Station. Newly built, up-to-date every respect.

TAILORS.—KOCH & RIEBEL. High-class English Tailors, 17, Boulevard de Grancy, Lausanne.

LOCARNO (Lake Maggiore).—THE GRAND HOTEL. Open the whole year. Best resort on the Italian lakes. Also winter season.

LOCARNO.—HOTEL DU PARC. The most modern family hotel. The favourite residence for English families.

LUCERNE.—GRAND HOTEL NATIONAL. Hotel de Luxe.

LUGANO.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. Fst.-clss. Unrvld. pstn., with ltst. imprvmnts. Htl. faces Eng. ch.—Pr., P. BROCCA.

LUGANO.—SEEGER'S HOTEL & Boarding House. First-class, large shdy. grdn., chrmng. view, lake, mountains & town. Mod. terms.

MAINZ.—HOTEL DE HOLLAND. The leading family Hotel, facing landing of steamers, overlooking the Rhine and Mountains.

MERAN (S. Tyrol).—HOTEL FRAU EMMA. New, first-cl., finst. vw., comf.; same owner Hl. Wildsee Prags, Pustertaler Dolomiten.

MILAN.—HOTEL DE LA VILLE. Fst.-cl., nr. Cathedral. Post, Telegraph, & Rly. Office in hotel. Centl. Heating suites with baths.

MONTREUX (Territet), Switz.—GD HOTEL & ALPES Well known rendezvous of Eng. and Amer. clientèle.—A. AHLBURG, Dr.

MONTREUX.—GRAND HOTEL EDEN. First-class. Built 1905. Unrvd. pos. overlooking lake & Alps. Close to Kursaal. Patrnsd. by English & Americans. Garage. Own park.—FALLEGGER-WYRSCH, Prop.

MONTREUX (Territet).—GRAND HOTEL EXCELSIOR AND BON-PORT. Fav. Eng. house. Apmts. with baths. Most sheltd. pos.—L. BARONI, Mgr.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL NATIONAL. First-class Ideal English Winter Hotel Newly renovated. R. TURNER, new Manager.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL DE L'EUROPE. First-class Eng. fmly. htl. Rently. enlgd. Mod. tms.—Madam BETTSCHEN, Prtress.

MUNICH.—HOTEL ENGLISCHER HOF. First-class. Finest pos. Opp. P.O., Roy. T., Roy. P. H. & c. water running each room.

NAPLES.—PARKER'S HOTEL. The English and most comfortable; splendid view of bay; enlarged and redecorated.

NAPLES.—EXCELSIOR HOTEL. Hotel de Luxe.

CHEMISTS.—H. ROBERTS & CO. English and American chemists. Via Vittoria, 21-22.

NICE.—TERMINUS HOTEL. Only first-cl. htl., opp. stn. Branch houses: HOTEL SUEDE & HOTEL BERNE. Vacuum cleaner.

TAILOR.—F. MacGOWAN. English and American Tailor for Ladies and Gentlemen. Established 1879 19, Avenue de la Gare, NICE.

OSTEND.—HOTEL DU LITTORAL. First-class family hotel, facing the sea. The most select in every respect.

OSTEND.—CONTINENTAL & SPLENDID HOTELS Leading on beach. 400 beds ea. Hotel de Plage is htl. & restau. de luxe.

OUCHY-LAUSANNE.—HOTEL DU CHATEAU. The only first-class hotel close to landing of steamers. Beautiful view. Most comfortable.

PARIS.—HOTEL DE L'ATHENEE, Rue Scribe. One of the leading hotels.—E. AMBRUSTER, Manager-Proprietor.

PARIS.—HOTEL MEURICE. Rue de Rivoli (opposite Tuileries Gardens). "The Hotel de Famille de Grand Luxe."

PARIS.—HOTEL St. JAMES & ALBANY, opposite Tuileries. Favourite rdvous. of Eng. & Amrns.—Pr.-Mgr., A. LERCHE.

PARIS.—HOTEL MONTANA. (Avenue De L'Opera). Up to date, with all latest and modern improvements.

ROME.—EXCELSIOR HOTEL. Hotel de Luxe.

ROME.—HOTEL QUIRINAL. First-class. Sit. on famous Via Nazionale. Up to date in every respect.—BUCHER-DURRER, Prop.

CHEMISTS.—H. ROBERTS & CO. English and American chemists. Corso Umberto 417-418.

ST. MORITZ.—THE BELVEDERE. English Family House, residential quarter, numerous suites of rooms with baths.

ST. MORITZ.—PALACE HOTEL. The most fashionable. Baths with suites of rooms.—Prop., CASPAR BADRUTT'S ERBEN.

TRIBERG (Black Forest). — SCHWARZWALD HOTEL and KURHAUS WALDLUST. First-class leading hotels. Near the waterfall, and the great forest.

VIENNA.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Kärntnerring next to the Opera. The most leading hotel in the town. Own fishing and shooting

VIENNA.—MATSCHAKERHOF. I., Seilergasse 6. Pat. by the Austro-Hun. Nobility. Spity. Vienna gd. cookg. Best wines. Shoot & fish

TAILOR.—JOHANN MANNINGER. I. Krugerstrasse 5. High-class Tailor. Latest fashion, perfect fit.

WIESBADEN. — FOUR SEASONS HOTEL and BATHS.—Finest pstn., opp. Kurhaus and Opera. Own mineral spring.

WIESBADEN.—HOTEL NASSAU. The English home, with magnificent bathing & medical estabmt. Situated at the Curplace.

WIESBADEN.—PALACE HOTEL and BATHS. Up-to-date family hotel. Every room with tel. and running h. and c. water.

TAILOR.—JEAN MARTIN. Langgasse 41, Gents' Tailor. First class and perfect fit guaranteed.

ZURICH.—HOTEL BAUR AU LAC. Latest improvements. The same proprietor as Excelsior Hotel Ernst, Cologne.

ZURICH.—DOLDER, THE GD. HOTEL, May 15 to October 15. The WALDHAUS open all year, quietest position, finest view.

ZURICH.—GRAND HOTEL VICTORIA. First-class family hotel, facing station, open all the year. Pat. by English & Americans

ZURICH.—HOTEL & PENSION EDEN AU LAC. New comf. family hotel facing the Lake. Up-to-date in every respect.

Foreign Pensions.

BRUSSELS.—Miss POOLE, PENSION des ANGLAIS, 83, Rue Lesbroussart (Avenue Louise). Fst. cl. Every comf. Excel. cooking.

DRESDEN.—PEN. WILLKOMMEN, Sedanstrasse 6. Fst.-cl. Best & healthst. pos. Only pen. entirely for ladies. H. HARNISCH Pr.

DRESDEN.—PENSION KEMPF. Sedanstrasse 3. Eng. & Amer. visitors will find here a comfortable home & excellent cooking.

DRESDEN.—PENSION DONATH, Lüttichau Strasse, corner Struve-Strasse, near Central Station, Theatres, and Gallery. Comfortable, up to date. H. COLLIN, Prop.

FREIBURG (Black Forest).—PENSION UTZ INTERNATIONALE.—First-class fam. pen. Fine position. Excellent cuisine. Modern comfort. Moderate terms. Reduction for families.—Frau L. UTZ.

GRIES (nr. Bozen, Tyrol).—HTL. & PEN., AUSTRIA. —The leading first-class fam. hotel, finest sheltered pos. & modern comf.

HAMBURG.—PENSION ALSTERUFER. Alsterufer 7. Fst-cl., fine pos., fcg. Alster, new. fur. Every mod. com. Best ckg. Nice gdn.

HAMBURG.—PENSION GUTMANN. Alte Raben. strasse 10. Harvestehude. Fst. cl. Most select position. Modern comfor.

HAMBURG.—KLOPSTOCK PEN. Klopstockstrasse 2. 2 min. from Dammtor Ry. Stn. Rooms with or without pen. Excel. cookg.

LAUSANNE.—PENSION SEILER. First-class, finest part, nr. Eng. Church. Most up to date & comf.—H. SEILER-WINTON, Pr.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL PENSION EDEN. First-class family house, fine pos. Every modern comfort. Very moderate terms.

LUCERNE.—PENSION VILLA MARIA. First-cl. fmly. hse., select, charm. pos. overl. lake & mntns. Every mod. comf. Terms mod.

MUNICH.—PENSION PFANNER, 2 Finkenstrasse. Fst.-cl. fam. pen., cent. pstn., ex. cuisine, cent. heatg. FRAU PFANNER, Pr.

NAPLES.—PENSION BAKER, 10, Via Caracciolo. The leadg. English pension, fine sit., facg. bay, magnificent view of Vesuvius.

ROME.—PENSION CARGILL, Via Collino 23.—Select, com. fam. pens., quiet sit.; lofty, sunny rooms.—Eng. Prs., Miss CARGILL.

VIENNA.—PENSION HIGH LIFE. I. Rosenbursenstrasse 4. Cen. pos., close G.P.O., Prater, & Exhibition. Newly fur. Every mod. com.

VIENNA.—PENSION TRIS. I. Laurenzberg 1. Opposite G.P.O. Newly furnished Rooms, with or without Pension; good cooking.

WIESBADEN.—PENSION ANGLAISE, Sonnenbergerstrasse, 37. Est. 1880. First-class, near Kochbrunnen, Kurhouse, and opposite Park. All modern comfort.

PLEASURE CRUISE.

SELECT CRUISE
BY OCEAN STEAMER,
Leaving Marseilles Oct. 13th,
visiting
SICILY, ASIA MINOR, TURKEY, GREECE, ITALY.
24 Days - 20 Guineas.

Illustrated Programmes free.
THOS. COOK & SON,
LUDGATE CIRCUS, LONDON,
and Branch Offices.

Channel Crossing, Sea-Sickness.
Mr. Labouchere, in Truth, writes:—"The only remedy is my trusty 'YANATAS.' It absolutely prevents sea-sickness." On sale at all Chemists', 2/9; by post (3d. extra) from STARKIE, Chemist, Trafalgar Square, W.C.
The only Proved Remedy. Established 15 years.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.
Crowns, Bridge-work, Inlays, and all Latest Methods at lowest Fees.
FIVE YEARS' WARRANTY.
MR. LABOUCHERE in Truth writes:—"One of the largest practices in the world Can do everything science and experience suggest to satisfy every customer."
WRITE FOR PAMPHLET.
GOODMAN'S, Ltd., 2, LUDGATE HILL (Facing St. Paul's).
BRIGHTON: 10, Castle Square.

"TRUTH"
Can be obtained at THE GALIGNANI LIBRARY,
224, RUE DE RIVOLI, PARIS.

"Truth" Hotel List.

BELFAST.—GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL.—The Finest Hotel in Ireland. 200 rooms. Electric light throughout. Passenger lifts to all floors. Magnificent public rooms and suites of private apartments. Most central position. Very moderate tariff. Omnibuses from Hotel attend all steamers and trains. Telegrams, "Grand Central, Belfast."

BEN RHYDDING HYDRO HOTEL, Wharfedale, Yorkshire. 500 ft. alt. On the edge of the Moor. Home farm. Bracing air, lovely scenery. 9-Hole Golf Course, adjoining grounds, free to visitors. Fine new Lounge. JOS. I KIRBY, Managing Director.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old established. Unequalled in situation, opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors. GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

DUBLIN. — HOTEL METROPOLE, SACKVILLE STREET (next General Post Office). Convenient for Railways, Steamers, and Amusements. Modern and luxurious. Electric Light and Passenger Lift. Sanitation officially certified. High-class Restaurant attached. Moderate Tariff. Descriptive matter on application to the Manager.

GLASGOW.—WINDSOR HOTEL.—A First-class Family Hotel. PATRONISED BY ROYALTY. Excellent cuisine. Every Modern Comfort and Luxury. Electric Light. Passenger Lift. CENTRAL POSITION, WITHOUT NOISE OR TRAFFIC. MODERATE TERMS. A. M. THIEM, Proprietor, also at Hydro., Peebles.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position. Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER, & CO., Colonial House, Water Street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

LIVERPOOL.—EXCHANGE STATION HOTEL.
Owned and Managed by the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co.
NEAREST FIRST-CLASS HOTEL TO THE LANDING STAGE.
Telegraphic Address: "Station Hotel, Liverpool."

LONDON.—WELLINGTON HOUSE, BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W.—The Ideal RESIDENTIAL HOTEL. Delightful combination of hotel life and private flats. Self-contained suites. Récherché Restaurant; magnificent public rooms. Valeting, attendance, light, baths, inclusive. No extra charges. 2341 Vict. W. M. NEFZGER, Gen. Man.

MALVERN has more landscape beauties and the most invigorating air in the Kingdom. Only 2½ hours from Paddington. THE IMPERIAL HOTEL faces due South and the famous hills. Every comfort at moderate charges. Cheerful lounge, electric light, garage and pit. Brine baths as at Droitwich. Vichy massage, douches, and hydrobaths. For tariff apply to the Resident Prop., F. MOERSCHELL.

MARGATE.—NAYLAND ROCK HOTEL.
Old established for families and gentlemen. Premier position. 20 yards from and facing sea. Nearest hotel to golf links. Noted cuisine. Vintage wines. En pension and à la carte. Wedding receptions. Special dinners. Illustrated tariff. T. E. FORMAN, Proprietor.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely new Management. New Sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate. W. WORSTER, Manager.

THE FIRST NATURE-CURE IN ENGLAND.
BROADLANDS, MEDSTEAD, HANTS.
One Hour and Forty Minutes from Waterloo. Altitude 500 feet. Pure Bracing Air
An Ideal Holiday for Tired People. With or Without Treatment.
Sun, Air, and Water Baths in one of the most beautiful spots in England, with absolute privacy. Sleeping in Air Huts. Non-Flesh Diet. Golf. Tennis. Croquet.
For Prospectus, apply MANAGER.

DUNBLANE HYDROPATHIC
(PHILP'S), PERTHSHIRE.
A Noted Health Resort, sheltered from East Winds. Most Comfortable Modern House and Lovely Grounds. First-class Catering. Electric Light and Elevator. Excellent Entertainments. Golf Free.
Terms, including Turkish and other Baths, from £2 19s. 6d.
Electrical Treatment by Resident Physician.
For Illustrated Prospectuses apply to Manager.

GLENBURN HYDROPATHIC,
ROTHESAY.
Climate mild and equable. Marine Scenery unsurpassed. Modern House, most Comfortably Furnished, and Beautiful Grounds. First-class Catering. Electric Light. Elevator. Sea Water, Turkish, and other Baths. 18-Hole Golf Course.
Terms, including Turkish and other Baths, from £2 16s.
For Illustrated Prospectuses apply to Manager.

MATLOCK BATH "The Switzerland of England"
ROYAL HOTEL AND BATHS
High-Class Residential Spa.
ORCHESTRA. Telegraphic Address: "ROYAL." Telephone: 193.

PEEBLES HOTEL HYDROPATHIC.
SUMPTUOUSLY APPOINTED. Magnificent Situation. Charming Scenery. GOLF, 18-Hole Course near. MOTORS. Outdoor Games. Complete HYDRO and ELECTRIC BATHS. Resident Physician. Send for Illustrated Tariff.
A. M. THIEM, Resident Director.

TORQUAY.—GRAND HOTEL.
MOST MODERN, BEST EQUIPPED. UNIQUE POSITION, FACING BAY AND CHANNEL. UNRIVALLED VIEWS. SOUTH ASPECT. NEAREST STATION AND SEA. ELECTRIC LIGHT & LIFT. GARAGE.

A MASTER KEY
of this size.

BRAMAH LOCKS

FOR ALL PURPOSES can be made to a Master Key in suites, with subordinate keys for BUTLER, MAID or VALET, GARDENER, &c., &c., each suite independent of the other, but all opening to the MASTER KEY.

A choice selection of Despatch and Jewel Boxes, Travelling Requisites, strong and light, with real Bramah Locks, Steel Jewel Safes, &c., &c.

Illustrated Catalogues post free.

BRAMAH & CO.,

By Appointment to H.M. the King. Sole Makers of the Genuine BRAMAH LOCKS,

100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.

The HACKNEY FURNISHING Co. Ltd.

Parties Furnishing should visit their West-End Premises, situated in the finest position in London,

103 & 103a, OXFORD STREET, W.

Next door to Henry Heath's and facing Newman Street.

View our Model Flats.

Three Minutes from Tottenham Court Road and Regent Street.

Their New Galleries are acknowledged to be the most Artistic combined with Elegance in London.

Parties can Furnish on their Deferred Payment System as follows:—

GENERAL TERMS.

| Worth | Per Month | Worth | Month | Worth | Month | Worth | Month |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| £10 .. | £0 6 0 | £30 .. | £0 17 0 | £50 .. | £1 8 0 | £200 .. | £4 10 0 |
| £20 .. | £0 1 0 | £40 .. | £1 5 0 | £100 .. | 2 5 0 | £500 .. | £11 5 0 |

Free Life Insurance. Free Fire Insurance. No Security. No Deposit.

Head Offices and Showrooms | 1, 2, 3, 4, Town Hall Buildings. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, The Grove, adjoining Mare St., London, N.

Catalogues and full particulars post free.

A. M. Stewart, Managing Director.

The Ideal Smoking Mixture.

Skilfully blended from the choicest tobaccos grown. It has a subtle, delicate flavour, which appeals immediately to the discriminating tobacco lover.

Luntin Mixture

In three Strengths, Mild—Medium —Full.

1 oz. Packets, 6½d.
2 oz. „ 1/1.
¼ lb. Tins - 2/2.

From all good tobacconists, or send stamps for desired amount to Sole Manufacturers:

THOMSON & PORTEOUS, EDINBURGH.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER LTD

By Royal Warrant.

IRISH LINEN

World Renowned for Quality & Value

Linen produced in our own Looms at Banbridge, Co. Down, is excellent in quality and reasonable in price.

Irish Household Linen.

Dinner Napkins, ¾ × ¾ yard, 5/6 doz. Table Cloths, 2½ × 3 yards, 5/11 each. Linen Sheets, 2 × 3 yards, 13/6: Hemstitched, 15/11 per pair. Linen Pillow Cases, frilled, 1/4½ each.

Irish Handkerchiefs.

Ladies' Linen Hemstitched Handkerchiefs, 2/11 doz. Gentlemen's Linen Hemstitched Handkerchiefs, 5/5 doz.

Irish Collars and Shirts.

Four-fold Collars from 4/11 doz. Dress Shirts, "Matchless Quality," 5/11 each. Old Shirts re-fitted with new bands, fronts, and cuffs, 14/- half doz.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

40 W. Donegall Place BELFAST

Also London and Liverpool.

A Process for Cheapening the Cost of Rubber Manufactures

This Prospectus has been filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies.

The Subscription List will be OPENED on WEDNESDAY, 21st September, 1910, and will be CLOSED at or before 1 p.m. on SATURDAY, 24th September, 1910.

THE REINFORCED RUBBER CO., LTD.

Incorporated under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

CAPITAL - - £100,000.

Divided into 100,000 Shares of £1 each.

PRESENT ISSUE OF 60,000 SHARES OF £1 EACH,

Of which the Vendors take 20,000 (the maximum allowed by the Stock Exchange) in part payment of the purchase money.

50,000 Shares are now offered for subscription at Par.

Payable as follows:—On Application, 2s. 6d. per Share; on Allotment, 7s. 6d. per Share; on 25th October, 1910, 5s. per Share; on 25th November, 1910, 5s. per Share.

DIRECTORS.

J. LEWIS MAJOR (Chairman, Major and Company, Limited, Sculcoates, Hull), Welton Garth, Brough, E. Yorks, Chairman.
AUGUSTUS W. ADDINSELL, M.B., 10, Curzon Street, Mayfair, London, W.
T. P. W. FORRESTER (late a Managing Director of Houlder Bros. and Co., Limited, Shipowners), 86, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.
B. OVEREND PEARSON (Chairman, Airedale Mill Company), Far Field, Farsley, near Leeds.
J. J. SMITH (Director, Myers, Rose and Company, Limited), St. George's House, Eastcheap, London, E.C.

BANKERS.

NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK OF ENGLAND, LIMITED, 96-7, Strand, W.C., 112, Bishopsgate Street Within, London, E.C., and all Branches.

SOLICITORS TO THE COMPANY.

GODDEN, SON AND HOLME, 34, Old Jewry, London, E.C.

BROKERS.

ROBERT ESCOMBE AND CO., 23, Austin Friars and Stock Exchange, London, E.C.
JOHN REDMAYNE AND CO., 30, Albion Place and Stock Exchange, Leeds; and Harrogate.

AUDITORS.

W. ARTHUR ADDINSELL AND CO., Chartered Accountants, 4, Corbet Court, London, E.C

SECRETARY AND REGISTERED OFFICES (pro tem.).

R. DAND, 4, Corbet Court, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The Company has been formed with the objects, inter alia, of acquiring and developing with the necessary working capital the valuable Patent Rights for the process of manufacturing a Rubber Material called Reinforced Rubber from (1) all qualities of new rubber, (2) rubber substitute, and (3) Old and Waste Rubber.

The British patents to be acquired by the Company are Nos. 24,661, 21,663, both of 1908, and No. 23,308, of 1909.

The eminent Counsel on Patent Law, Mr. Arthur J. Walter, K.C., in his Opinion at the time of settling the Specification for No. 23,308 states emphatically and without reservation that the "claims will be good and valid."

As compared with other manufactures of rubber, among the merits claimed for articles of Reinforced Rubber are:—

1. Considerable saving in the cost of manufacture;
2. Freedom from the disadvantages of absorption of moisture and of capillary attraction;
3. Greater tensile strength and frictional resistance.

The Vendors consider that the Foreign and Colonial patent rights will be a highly valuable asset. A contract has already been entered into for the sale of the German and Russian patents, which is mentioned below.

The uses to which it is believed Reinforced Rubber can be applied more advantageously than any other material are numerous, new applications and inquiries having followed one another with rapidity; a very large and continually increasing market appears to be available for Reinforced Rubber.

Considerable attention has been given to the Boot and Shoe Trade, which presents a large field. Boots and shoes soled with Reinforced Rubber, at a lower cost than with sole leather, wear longer, and have the additional advantage of being quite waterproof, considerably more comfortable for walking, and practically silent.

The demand from the Engineering, Electrical Engineering, and industries using heavy machinery should be great. Orders have been received and are in hand for special Reinforced Rubber for the Pistonless Hydraulic Press Company, Limited, in which Messrs. Estler Bros. and other well-known firms of engineers are largely interested; the Pistonless Hydraulic Press Company writes that "this is the best material of those we have tried for the collapsible cylinders of our press."

References to additional uses of various kinds could be amplified. There are orders in hand for Motor-car tyres; negotiations are in progress for contracts with the Railway Companies for rubber folding connections between corridor carriages; there is a large field for the use of the material for Stair Treads, Floor Coverings, Mats, Belting, Sheetings, Garden and Fire Hose, etc.

On the basis of these estimated figures as to profits and reducing the estimated amounts of sales the gross profits per annum, when the works are established and running, should amount to:—

| | |
|---|---|
| On the sale of 1 ton per week at 4½d. per lb. .... | £2,184 |
| On the sale of 2½ tons per week at 1s. per lb. ..... | 14,560 |
| | £16,744 |
| From which may be deducted as a liberal estimate for Office and General Expenses, Directors' Fees, Reserve Fund, etc. ..... | 4,000 |
| Showing a net profit of ..... | £12,744 |

Which should be sufficient to pay a dividend of twenty per cent. upon the capital at present issued.

After payment of the cash portion of the purchase price and the expenses incidental to the formation of the Company, the present issue, if fully subscribed, will provide a sum of about £20,000 for working capital.

The Vendors are the All Rubber Pneumatic Tyre Co., Limited, of No. 42, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C., and the purchase price payable to the Vendors by the Company under Contract ("A") is £36,500, payable as to £20,000 in 20,000 fully paid shares of £1 each, as to £3,500 in cash, and as to the balance in cash or fully paid shares or part cash and part fully paid shares, at the option of the Directors. The Company will take over all existing trade Contracts, but the Vendors will discharge all their debts and liabilities.

Copies of the Reports and letters on which the statements herein contained are based, together with the Memorandum and Articles of Association and of the above-mentioned Agreements, can be seen at the offices of the Solicitors to the Company at any time during business hours while the subscription list is open.

Application will be made to the Committee of the London Stock Exchange for a settlement in the shares of the Company.

Application for shares should be made on the form accompanying the full Prospectus, which can be obtained from the Company's Bankers and Brokers and at the Offices of the Company.

"TRUTH" DOLL AND TOY SHOW.

PRELIMINARY NOTICE.

It seems early days yet to be reminding my readers of an event which is still some months ahead. But the fact that some 4,000 of dolls have already arrived from the manufacturers, and are crying aloud for clothes, impels me to direct the attention of TRUTH'S lady friends to their condition, and to the fact that they will be required for exhibition at the Albert Hall in the middle of December, prior to distribution among the London Poor Law Schools and Hospitals.

I hope that many ladies will take pity on the poor dolls, and forward their applications as soon as possible. The usual prizes for the dressing of the dolls will, of course, be awarded after the Show.

HOME-MADE TOYS.

The exhibits in this class last year did not come up to expectations. This year special efforts will be made to stimulate amateur toy-makers to take part in the Competition. With that object in view the Editor of TRUTH has decided (assuming the entries warrant it) to give a Special Prize for

HOME-MADE DOLLS' HOUSES,

in addition to the usual Prizes offered in the Home-Made Toys Class.

He desires me now to direct particular notice to this, as he is of opinion that the making of Dolls' Houses is an art in which amateur talent is likely to find congenial scope for its exercise. Moreover, a Dolls' House is a peculiarly serviceable sort of plaything for children, both because it is one in the delights of which several can share simultaneously, and also because it is better able to withstand the wear and tear of daily use than smaller and more fragile toys.

A further and more detailed announcement of the Show will appear in due course. Meanwhile, let readers of TRUTH make a careful note of the date, which is Wednesday and Thursday, December 14 and 15, 1910.

"TRUTH" PUZZLES.

RULES.

1. The sum of £2 2s. will be given every week for the best EPIGRAM, CONUNDRUM, LIPOGRAM, BOUTS-RIMÉS, or whatever the announced subject of the competition for the week may be.

2. The Puzzle Editor reserves the right, however, of dividing the above sum between two or more competitors, or of withholding the prize, should exceptional circumstances render such a course desirable.

3. The decision and award of the Puzzle Editor must be considered final and irrevocable, and for obvious reasons no appeal from his critical judgments can be entertained.

4. In every instance the prize will be given in money, subject to no condition whatever, except the publication of the winner's real name and address in this Journal.

5. Competitors will be allowed eleven days for the composition and despatch of their efforts; but all such communications must, at the latest, be received at the TRUTH Office by the first post on the morning of the second Monday succeeding the publication of the subject for competition.

6. Not more than one Prize will be given a quarter to the same competitor.

7. ALL NEW CONTRIBUTORS ARE REQUIRED TO FORWARD WITH THEIR FIRST ANSWERS THEIR REAL NAMES AND ADDRESSES FOR REGISTRATION; such names and addresses will not be published except in the case of Prize-winners.

8. The nom-de-plume chosen by competitors should not exceed twelve, and must under no circumstances consist of more than fourteen, letters.

9. COMPETITORS MUST ON NO ACCOUNT CHANGE THE NOMS-DE-PLUME THEY HAVE ONCE ASSUMED.

10. On the announcement of the Prize-winner's nom-de-plume, the successful competitor must write and make formal application for the Prize, stating the address to which the cheque must be sent. Any competitor failing to do so within three months of winning the Prize will forfeit all claim to the same.

11. No communications can be received on post-cards, by telegraph, or by hand. They must all be sent by the time named above. All post letters addressed:—

PUZZLE EDITOR OF "TRUTH," CARTERET STREET, QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, S.W.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,649.

A correspondent who is interested in the "sport of kings" writes to suggest that I should give my racing competitors a run for their money before the close of the season.

I have decided to act upon his suggestion, and to offer the usual Prize of Two Guineas to that competitor who shall prove most successful in PLACING THE FIRST THREE HORSES IN THE FORTHCOMING CESAREWITCH, RUN AT NEWMARKET ON OCTOBER 12 NEXT.

Marks will be awarded on the following basis:—

| | |
|---|---|
| For placing the first horse correctly | 4 marks |
| For placing the second horse correctly | 2 marks |
| For placing the third horse correctly | 1 mark |

Further half a mark will be awarded for any horse correctly placed among the first three, but placed in wrong order.

I have only to add that no competitor may submit more than one forecast, and that all forecasts must reach TRUTH office by the first post on Monday, October 3.

"TRUTH" PRIZE No. 1,643.

TO FORECAST THE RESPECTIVE POSITIONS OF THE FIRST-CLASS COUNTIES AT THE END OF THE CRICKET SEASON OF 1910, STATING THE PERCENTAGE OF POINTS WHICH EACH HAS SECURED.

No competitor has succeeded in submitting a correct, or even very approximately correct, forecast. But the forecast sent in by CHRIS—taking into account both the positions of the counties and the points credited to them—is slightly nearer the mark than any other. CHRIS, therefore, will receive the Prize of Two Guineas.

CHRIS's forecast was printed in TRUTH of August 31 last.

"TRUTH" PRIZE No. 1,644.

NAMING, IN ORDER OF MERIT, THE THREE PRETTIEST PARKS IN LONDON.

I have now completed the task of collating all lists of Parks sent in for the above competion.

The result works out as follows:—

1. Hyde Park,
2. Regent's Park,
3. St. James's Park,

with Battersea Park a good fourth.

Only one competitor, BEN EZRA, has succeeded in giving these three parks in the right order. BEN EZRA therefore receives the prize of Two Guineas.

N.B.—BEN EZRA'S forecast was printed in TRUTH of September 7 last, his nom de plume being there incorrectly given as BEN EYRE.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name, with the address, of CHERUB, winner of one-sixth of TRUTH prize, No. 1,638, is Miss Sybil Page, 35, Redland Court, London.

 The real name, with the address, of HYPATIA, winner of one-half of TRUTH prize, No. 1,641, is Edward Ward, Esq., 112, Chichester Road, South Shields.

 The real name, with the address, of J. PEN, also winner of one-half of above, is E. Buckler, Esq., 28, Canterbury Road, Brixton, S.W.

ALPHA BETA.—You will see that I have adopted your suggestion.

BEN EZRA.—I much regret the misprinting of your nom-de-plume.

DABSTAR.—I have made the emendation in accordance with your request.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1646.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

SUGGESTIONS FOR A SUITABLE LONDON MEMORIAL TO OUR LATE KING, EDWARD VII.

1. A statue representing "Peace," surrounded by emblems of the various industries of the world. 2. A statue representing "Charity holding out a money-box on which is written "King Edward's Hospital Fund."—Dabster.

In a central position a column to be erected of finest polished granite, and having seven, or more, sides; on each side to be engraved a fitting tribute of King Edward dealing with a different phase of his character or period of his life, for instance, as King, man, sportsman, child and youth, prince, family man, peacemaker, etc. The column could be surmounted with a handsome effigy of the late monarch, and it would, of course, be named after him, and perpetuate his memory. The wording upon the column to be left to a committee of approved scholars, and due provision made for the thorough maintenance of the column in its original beauty. As an alternative, a column on similar general lines, except as to shape; each stone of this column to record a different incident in the life of King Edward.—John, M.P.

1. The adoption of Lord Plymouth's suggestions with reference to the acquisition of the Crystal Palace and grounds, but the building itself should be demolished. It is now of considerable age, and being only a temporary glass and iron structure, is in a far worse condition than is generally known. That would give the Committee a free hand, and the new buildings need not necessarily be all under one roof. 2. The funds raised to be devoted to paying off the debts of the various London hospitals, but only those incurred in the ordinary course of management, not for additional buildings or wards. 3. The complete external cleaning of St. Paul's Cathedral, and the other principal public buildings in London, not forgetting the statues.—Leaf Rule.

1. Transform the Crystal Palace into an Imperial coliseum in memory of Edward VII. 2. Build a national granary for the storage of grain—a year's supply for Great Britain. 3. Form a Royal Volunteer Edward VII. Corps for home defence.—Attie.

1. A substantial augmentation of the King Edward's Hospital Fund. 2. A home for poor gentlewomen. 3. A monument after the style of the Albert Memorial.—Optimist.

1. A palace of peace in honour of Edward the Peacemaker, for meetings, for the organisation of arbitration, and for an international law library. 2. A palace of music, i.e., an Albert Hall in the East End of London, in memory of one who loved music and worked for musical education. 3. An Edward Park for a crowded population, e.g., in South-East London.—Nemo.

1. The interest of the fund collected to be given each year, according to the discretion of a duly constituted committee, partly to further scientific research and partly in prizes for the discoveries or inventions, medical, surgical, or scientific, most likely to benefit humanity. 2. A new Buckingham Palace, worthier of the capital of the Empire. 3. A Royal residence in Ireland, which, if used annually, would do a good deal towards improving the "present discontent" there.—Sapper.

1. A small marble church, absolutely white within and without, to be called the Church of Peace. Have the symbols of Peace over the door and the interior full of "peace" decorations. 2. An exact copy in miniature of the Temple of Peace at the Hague, built by Andrew Carnegie. 3. A beautifully modelled marble lighthouse, sculptored all about with emblems of peace, and crowned with symbols (olive leaves) of victory and reward.—Northlander.

1. Hostel or hostels to be erected (with suitable inscriptions) for maintaining deserving members of the theatrical profession when "resting," i.e., out of work. Also, if funds permit, assistance to be given during long rehearsals to those receiving no remuneration at these times. A strong committee to be formed. 2. A second hospital for "incurables" to be erected with every possible appliance.—Veni.

A grand memorial on the lines of the Albert Memorial in Hyde Park or other suitable position, surmounting a figure of Britannia, with lion at side, a statue of Edward VII. in royal robes beneath, appropriate inscriptions on the four sides of a column, at the four corners of the base figures of India, Canada, Africa, and Australia, with tiger, beaver, zebra, and kangaroo at their sides respectively.—A. E. L.

In view of the late King Edward's interest in hospitals, it is suggested that a suitable memorial would be a permanently endowed ward in each of the large London hospitals, to be known as the "King Edward the Seventh Ward." Any surplus funds to be utilised in paying off the existing debts of these hospitals.—Riam.

The erection by public subscription of a night refuge for outcasts. Such an institution, supported by voluntary contributions, would put an end to the scenes nightly witnessed on the Thames Embankment, which are a disgrace to civilisation.—Blencathra.

1. Entirely rebuild frontage of Buckingham Palace. 2. Establish penny postage between England and France. 3. Save the Crystal Palace for the nation by public subscription.—Navalis.

1. Equestrian statue in one of the parks (Edward VII). 2. Recreation grounds for London, East. 3. Home for visitors to London for shopping, recreation, etc., to be known as "King Edward VII. Home."—Alma.

1. A bridge over the Thames between Southwark and Blackfriars Bridges. 2. The conversion of Euston Road into a handsome boulevard. 3. Widening of Borough High Street, so as to have a southern approach to London Bridge at least equal in width to Newington Causeway.—Outsider.

1. The rebuilding or refronting of Buckingham Palace. 2. The acquisition of the Crystal Palace for the nation. 3. The proposed St Paul's Bridge between Southwark and Blackfriars Bridges to be hastened, and named Edward VII. Bridge instead.—Alpha Beta.

1. The transformation of Buckingham Palace into a residence of regal appearance suitable for the Kings of England, yet in keeping as the background of Queen Victoria's Memorial. 2. A statue of Edward the Peacemaker good enough to take away the reproach against British statuary, to stand at the other end of the Mall.—Issor.

1. The purchase of the Palace and grounds at Sydenham—the Palace to be converted into a free museum for the exhibition of examples of British and Colonial industries; the grounds to be opened as a public park, with gymnasium, etc. 2. The purchase of the Star and Garter, Richmond, to be converted into a convalescent home for the poor. 3. The erection of a college, adequately endowed, for the purpose of medical research, cancer and consumption especially, in which the late King took such an interest.—Verbum Sat.

1. The Crystal Palace as a public park. 2. Rebuild Buckingham Palace. 3. Further endow the London hospitals.—Dorset.

1. National theatre and school for dramatic art. Site to be easy of access, but not in the midst of noise. Building to be adapted for production of such music-drama as Wagner's "Ring," etc., and to be surrounded by grounds suitable for open-air plays. 2. Fund for endowment of scientific research, with laboratories for (e.g.), the investigation of radium and radio-activity, bacteriological improvement of soil, etc., etc. (No experiments on living animals to be included.) 3. Institute for animals, especially horses, donkeys, dogs, and cats. This institute to be on a larger scale than any existing, and to include hospital, home of rest, lethal chamber; also ambulance for animals injured in street traffic. Lectures on the proper treatment of animals to be given in connection with the institute.—Grania.

It has often been quoted that the late King Edward always took a deep interest in the welfare of his poorer subjects, and his sympathies on many occasions took a very practical and useful turn. Therefore, it seems to me that the best way in which the memory of the late King could be honoured would be by the institution of some fund from which the victims of those distressing cases of calamity—so many of which we have heard lately—could be helped to regain to some extent the footing they have lost either by the death of the breadwinner of a family in struggling circumstances, or loss of employment otherwise than by their own wilful misconduct. The fund could be administered by one of the many publicly constituted bodies. A sum of money—such as is generally subscribed for such memorials—judiciously invested would bring in a considerable interest, and I can conceive of no method which would be more in accord with the late King's wishes, if he were alive to express them, than would some memorial by which his suffering subjects were materially benefited.—Scriba.

As a memorial to King Edward VII. clocks might be erected in various parts of London, and also in country towns, etc, as our late King was always so punctual, and made such good use of his time, faithfully fulfilling all the public duties he had to perform. The clocks might be set on the top of a column of marble or granite, surmounted by a sort of small spire, in the style of "Derry's Clock" at Plymouth. If desired a motto might surround the clock, such as "Time and tide wait for no man," or

"We take no note of time but by its loss,
To give it then a tongue is wise of man."
—Harebell.

No monument of marble or brass is needed to perpetuate the memory of Edward the kingly Peacemaker and sincere lover of those over whom he ruled. Let his name be handed down to posterity associated with the endowment of a fund, out-payments from which may be devoted to the cause of endeavouring to heal the wounds inflicted on deserving subjects by "the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune," such as some of those enumerated by Hamlet—viz., "The oppressor's wrong," "The law's delay," "The spurns that patient merit must of the unworthy take," and "The insolence of office." It was in strenuous endeavour to remedy the aforementioned evils that his kingly life was spent, and, too probably, curtailed. Let the good work be continued in his name, which needs neither precious stone nor precious metal to perpetuate. One might almost say, "Si monumentum vis, circumspice." If anything in the nature of boasting had not been abhorrent to his royal soul Edward the Peacemaker might have quoted the lines by which Horace predicted the immortality of his name:

"Exegi monumentum aere perennius, Regalique situ pyramidum altius."
—Orang.

1. The creation of an institution in which the inventive and constructive genius of the working classes all over the Empire should be on exhibition. 2. A noble statue of the monarch surrounded by groupings of the achievements of the arts of peace erected in some suitable spot. 3. A memorial in Parliament Square, enshrining all that's good and beautiful in modern progress, surmounted by a statue of his late Majesty.—Sophia.

1. A national palace of peace, with international views and aspirations. 2. A great central hospital, in which all the branches of medicine and surgery should be combined under one roof. 3. A replica of Westminster Abbey in expansion of the old building or apart from it.—Crank.

1. A statue or some suitable memorial incorporating the arts of peace, erected inside St. James's Park and adjoining the Mall. 2. A memorial on the Victoria Embankment, combining the statues of peace and liberty, with some noble dedication in statuary to the late monarch. 3. A memorial inside Hyde Park in harmony with the peaceful disposition of his late Majesty.—Mary.

1. An agricultural and mineralogical college, to which should be admitted only the sons of the working people suitable by qualifications, with a worthy dedication to the late King. 2. A memorial at the Charing Cross end of the Mall, with idealistic embodiments in statuary of the blessings of peace, the late King being in some guise a kind of mentor.—3. A series of pedestrian statues to be raised in all the London parks, somewhat equal in design to that in Kensington Gardens, named "Energy," but ingeniously modified to become characteristic of peace.—Milliner.

I should suggest an endowment fund to throw open in perpetuity, free of charge, more especially on Sundays, all public places of beauty or historical and educational value in London, our capital. This fact to be distinctly stated upon some conspicuous place in the entrance of each institution. The inscription to be repeated in as many languages as possible, so that not only hundreds of thousands of Britishers, but people of all races may learn that they owe their pleasure to him. For instance, to go all over Westminster Abbey is a luxury for the rich, while the ten minutes in the National Gallery cannot be dreamed of on a sixpenny day (I never find "the time and the place together" on a free day). Any surplus from this endowment fund could do the same work in provincial cities.—Pat-a-cake.

1. The addition of a wing to New Brompton Hospital, to be called King Edward's. 2. The addition of a wing to some hospital, say in East London, or addition of cots, to be called King Edward's, perhaps in the Children's Hospital. 3. A statue conspicuously placed, in piam memoriam Edouardi VII., qui pacis cultor rite vocatus sit.—Simplex.

1. I had put down the utilisation of the Crystal Palace at Sydenham as a depository for works of art, museum, etc., if only money enough could be raised to support and resuscitate its low financial state, somewhat on the lines suggested by the Daily Mail. 2. Wing (King Edward's) for consumptives at Brompton. 3. Statue in conspicuous site for Edward the Peacemaker.—Blessed are the Peacemakers. With regard to statue to the late King in a conspicuous site, I would rather suggest the simple inscription, Edward the Peacemaker, and there might be perhaps the addition, "Blessed are the peacemakers." This would be better than Latin, and he who may could read.—Simplex.

1. An endowed college for scientific and medical research. 2. A grand opera house with subsidy. 3. A national pantheon for memorials of the illustrious dead.—Ben Ezra.

To thoroughly clean, repair, and restore to its original colour the exterior of St. Paul's Cathedral, and to gild the dome.—Moung Pho.

1. Hospital. 2. Park. 3. Statue.—Kofuku.

MEN OF SPECIAL ABILITY

are the kind of men we want—men whose Special Knowledge or Special Aptitude fits them to occupy Responsible Positions in Technical, Clerical, Organising, or Travelling capacities. We have upon our lists hundreds of positions carrying salaries of from £150 to £1,000 a year—but positions which can only be filled by really High-Grade Men. If you are such a man, write us to-day—or call.

HAPGOODS, Ltd., 167-168, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. Barton Arcade, 55, Deansgate, Manchester.

EFFERVESCENCE PURELY NATURAL
MATTONI'S
GIESSHÜBLER
NATURAL
MINERAL TABLE WATER.
at all Chemists, Wine Merchants, Stores, Hotels, &c.
Sole Agents: INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd., LONDON, LIVERPOOL, BRISTOL.

THE IDEAL POLICY

Enables Policy Holders to reap the benefits of their investments during their own lifetime, and in the event of premature death to leave their legal representatives in possession of a comfortable home free from mortgage debt or encumbrance. Write for Free Prospectus.
GOOD PROSPECTS FOR ACTIVE AGENTS.

CITY LIFE ASSURANCE CO., Ltd.,
6, Paul St., Finsbury. London, E.C. M. GREGORY, Managing Director.

A "CAPITAL & INCOME" POLICY

is a SOUND INVESTMENT. Capital created, then Income paid until Capital required. No medical examination.
Full particulars forwarded by post.

THE NATIONAL BENEFIT TRUST, Limited,
10, FINSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.
Vacancies for first-class representatives.

The better the Office the easier it is for the Agent to get business.

Energetic Agents with Good Records should apply to the . .

STAR Life Assurance Society,
32, Moorgate St., London, E.C.
Every encouragement and assistance given to the Society's Agents.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

Members of the Stock Exchange are not allowed to advertise for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than their own principals.
Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, nor in any way under the control of the Committee.
Members issuing Contract Notes are required to use such a form as will provide that the words "Member of the Stock Exchange, London," shall immediately follow the signature.
A List of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

Banking Announcements.

THE MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

Head Office: 40, Threadneedle St., LONDON, E.C.

Capital Authorised, £1,500,000; Paid Up, £562,500; Reserve Fund, £285,000.

Bankers: BANK OF ENGLAND; LONDON JOINT STOCK BANK (Limited).
Branches & Agencies in India, Ceylon, Straits Settlements, China, and Japan.

The Bank buys and sells Bills of Exchange, issues Letters of Credit and Circular Notes, and transacts Banking and Agency Business in connection with the East, on terms to be had on application. Deposits received for one, two, or three years at 3½ per cent.; and on Current Accounts interest is allowed at 2 p.c. per annum on the minimum monthly balances, provided they do not fall below £200; other rates on application.

THE UNION BANK OF AUSTRALIA, Ltd.

Established 1837. Incorporated 1880.

| | |
|---|---|
| Paid-up Capital .. .. .. .. .. .. | £1,500,000 |
| Reserve Fund .. .. .. .. .. .. | £1,310,000 |
| Reserve Liability of Proprietors .. .. .. | £3,000,000 |

HEAD OFFICE—71, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.
Drafts are granted on the Bank's branches throughout the Australian States and Dominion of New Zealand. Telegraphic remittances are also made. Bills are purchased or sent for collection. Deposits are received for fixed periods on terms which may be ascertained on application.

BIRKBECK BANK. ESTABLISHED 1851.

Southampton Buildings, High Holborn, W.C.
ALMANACK, with full particulars, POST FREE.
C. F. RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

FREE FOR A POSTCARD!

A postcard will bring to you H. Samuel's large Catalogue, every page of which describes many opportunities for saving on your Watch and Jewellery purchases. Write now for this splendid Free Book of

3,000 SPECIAL BARGAINS!

These are typical instances of H. SAMUEL'S REMARKABLE VALUES.

GENTS' GOLD ALBERTS AND LADIES' GOLD GUARDS, 25/-. HANDSOME DRESS WATCHES from 17/6, &c.

Handsome 18-ct. GOLD CLAW RING, set with Diamonds and Rubies or Sapphires 37/6

Handsome Oxydised WRISTLET WATCHES, 10/6
Silver Lever WRISTLET WATCH, 21/-
Magnificent GOLD WATCH BRACELET, £5 5 0

WRITE NOW!

Every purchase carries the value-guarantee of a full month's trial. Write to-day!

H. SAMUEL,
Market Street, MANCHESTER.
Chief London Branch, 17 Strand, W.C.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY
(LIMITED),
HOLBORN BARS, LONDON, E.C.

INVESTED FUNDS - - £75,000,000

ALLIANCE
ASSURANCE CO., Ltd.

Head Office: Bartholomew Lane, LONDON, E.C.

Accumulated Funds exceed £17,000,000.

Chairman:
Rt. Hon. LORD ROTHSCHILD, G.C.V.O.

THE OPERATIONS OF THE COMPANY EMBRACE ALL BRANCHES OF INSURANCE.

DEATH DUTIES.—Special forms of Policies have been prepared by the Company providing for the payment of Death Duties, thus avoiding the necessity of disturbing investments at a time when it may be difficult to realise without loss.

INCOME TAX.—Under the provisions of the Act, Income Tax is not payable on that portion of the Assured's income which is devoted to the payment of annual premiums on an assurance on his life. Having regard to the amount of the Tax, this abatement (which is limited to one-sixth of the Assured's income) is an important advantage to Life Policyholders.

Full particulars of all classes of Insurance, together with Proposal Forms and Statement of Accounts, may be had on application to any of the Company's Offices or Agents.

Applications for Agencies invited.

ROBERT LEWIS, General Manager.

FOUNDED 1871. EMPOWERED BY SPECIAL ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

THE OCEAN ACCIDENT & GUARANTEE CORPORATION LTD.

CHAIRMAN: SIR THOMAS HEWITT, K.C.
GENERAL MANAGER & SECRETARY: RICHARD J. PAULL.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
POLICIES AGAINST LIABILITY FOR ACCIDENTS TO THE PUBLIC.
Horse Driving, Motor Car & General.
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.
EXCESS BAD DEBT.
MOTOR CAR.
BOILER & LIFT INSPECTION AND INSURANCE.

FIRE BURGLARY.
ASSETS EXCEED £2,000,000.
CLAIMS PAID OVER £8,000,000.
LICENCE & MORTGAGE INSURANCES.
GUARANTEES OF FIDELITY.

HEAD OFFICE.
MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

EVERY MAN

Whose Estate will be liable for Duty

SHOULD READ "A POPULAR FALLACY."

Sent post free on application to the

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION

For Mutual LIFE Assurance.

48 GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Refuge Assurance Company Limited.

Chief Office: OXFORD STREET, MANCHESTER.

London Office: Refuge Assurance Buildings, 133, Strand, W.C.

Premium Income exceeds £2,601,000
Total Claims paid, £13,330,000 Funds exceed £6,838,600

THE OLD FOLKS AT HOME

may not be abreast of the times in every respect but they are certainly up-to-date in this, that they are fully alive to the supreme merits of Beecham's Pills as an unrivalled medicine for disordered states of the stomach, liver, and bowels. Lifelong experience has taught them that they cannot do better than

TAKE

the World's Family Medicine when suffering from, or when threatened by, any kind of digestive trouble, biliousness, sick headache, and general want of tone. You should follow their example. Whenever you are out of sorts, or are attacked by ailments like those mentioned just do as the "Old Folks at Home" would—take

BEECHAM'S PILLS.

Prepared only by Thomas Beecham, St. Helens, Lancashire.
Sold everywhere in boxes, price 1/1½ (56 pills) & 2/9 (168 pills).

THERMOS

SIMPLEX THERMOS FLASK 6s. 6d.

DRINKS KEPT HOT OR COLD.

THERMOS FLASKS Always Useful.

THERMOS FLASKS are unequalled.

APPRECIATED BY BOTH MEN AND WOMEN

INVALUABLE FOR INVALIDS AND BABIES

Thermos Flasks keep hot Liquids steaming hot for hours.

FOR COMFORT AND PLEASURE YOU MUST HAVE A

THERMOS FLASK.

IT WILL ALSO KEEP COLD LIQUIDS COLD FOR DAYS.

Use a THERMOS when Motoring, Fishing, Travelling, and at Home. Once used—always used.

Prices from 6/6 to 10 Guineas.

BEWARE OF WORTHLESS IMITATIONS. NONE GENUINE WITHOUT THERMOS ON THEM.

Of all Chemists, Ironmongers, Jewellers, Fancy Dealers, and Stores. Wholesale from A. E. Gutmann & Co., 8, Long Lane, E.C.

The Best Nightcap.

Before retiring take a cup of the "Allenburys" Diet which induces restful sleep and nourishes the system. Affords an excellent light repast and is preferable to all alcoholic stimulants. Prepared from rich milk and whole wheat in a partially predigested form. Made in a minute—add boiling water only.

Send 3d. stamps for large sample. Of all Chemists. 1/ & 3/- per tin.

The 'Allenburys' DIET

ALLEN & HANBURYS Ltd., Lombard Street, London.

SEQUARINE

THE SERUM TREATMENT.

Prepared according to the principles of its discoverer, the late Dr. Brown-Sequard, F.R.S., F.R.C.P. (Lond.), LL.D. (Cambridge).

A reliable remedy for all states of Nervous Exhaustion, Neurasthenia, Anæmia, Rheumatism, Gout, Sciatica, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, General Weakness, and Kidney or Bladder Disorders.

A booklet describing the composition, properties, and qualities of this preparation, and the ailments for which it is recommended, may be had gratis on application to the sole proprietors,

C. RICHTER & CO.,
Manufacturing Chemists,
59-61, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

Telegrams: "Sanguinal, London." Telephone: City 590.

To H.M. THE KING.

CARPET CLEANERS

— THE —

Compressed Air Carpet Cleaning and Beating Company, Ltd.

GLENTHORNE ROAD, HAMMERSMITH, W.,
. . . AND . . .
135, VICTORIA STREET, S.W.

Telegrams: "PURIFYING, LONDON." Telephones: 611 HAMMERSMITH. 288 WESTMINSTER.

Printed for the Proprietor by St. Clements Press, Ltd., Portugal Street, Kingsway, W.C., and Published weekly by H. Labouchere at 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to Reginald E. Booker, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret Street, Queen Anne's Gate, S.W. Entered as Second-Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1761. Vol. LXVIII. Wednesday, September 28, 1910. Price Sixpence.

Contents.

| | PAGE |
|---|---|
| Entre Nous | 753 |
| Scrutator:— | |
| Misdirected Manœuvres | 766 |
| The Law and the Bucket Shops | 766 |
| The Barnum Brigade | 767 |
| Why do we Wash? | 768 |
| Notes from Paris | 769 |
| Letter from the Linkman | 771 |
| Correspondence: | |
| Indians in the Transvaal | 771 |
| Votes and Wages | 772 |
| Mammon:— | |
| Round the Markets: Havana Railway Dividend—Some Big Rubber Yields at Current Prices—Junior Shares for Capital Appreciation—The Relapse in Mexico El Oros—The Broken Hill Outlook—A Mining Investment. Industrials: Rise and Reaction in Breweries—A Promising Californian Oil Share—Investments for Women—The British Coalite Bubble—"Vigilant's" Letter-Box | 772-781 |
| Insurance | 781 |
| Company Meetings | 782 |
| Queer Story:— | |
| The Happiest Man on Airth | 784 |
| Books | 786 |
| Art | 788 |
| Music | 789 |
| The Theatres | 790 |
| Sport | 791 |
| Motors and Motoring | 793 |
| Woman:— | |
| The Bliss of Ignorance | 794 |
| Some New Novels | 795 |
| Mrs. A.'s Diary | 796 |
| A Seasonable Dinner Menu | 798 |
| Letter from Madge | 799 |

| | |
|---|---|
| "Truth" Puzzles | 809, 810 |
| Amusements | 801 |
| Banking Announcements | 811 |
| Publishers' Announcements | 801, 802, 803, 804 |
| Selected Foreign Hotels | 806 |
| Foreign Pensions | 807 |
| The Truth English Hotel List | 807 |
| Insurance Announcements | 811 |

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Inquiries to which an answer is desired by post must in all cases be accompanied by the Coupon printed on the third page of the cover of Truth and by a stamped envelope.

Replies cannot be given by post or by telegram to inquiries relating to Investments, Insurance, or other matters within the department of the City Editor. Such inquiries can only be answered in the paper, and they must comply with the rules printed under the heading "Vigilant's Letter Box" in the section of Truth entitled "Mammon."

ENTRE NOUS.

THE King and Queen will leave Balmoral next week for the season, but the day of the departure of the Court from Deeside has not yet been definitely fixed. A daily paper announced last week that their Majesties will not move to Buckingham Palace "much before the end of the year." The King and Queen have no intention of taking up their residence at the Palace until they come to town for the season early in February. Their Majesties are to reside at Windsor Castle for nearly four months, except during the time which they may spend at Sandringham during the winter, but their visits to Norfolk will not exceed three weeks altogether. I understand that the shooting at Sandringham has passed entirely into the hands of the King, whose battues will extend over twelve or fourteen days during the winter—the first of them (for partridge driving) in November and the second and third (for pheasant and wild-fowl shooting) in December and early in January.

---

The King drove from Balmoral to Mar Lodge on Wednesday morning, and proceeded thence into Mar Forest for a day's deer-stalking. His Majesty killed four stags on the Glen Derry and Glen Quoich beats. There is a heavy stock of red deer in Mar Forest, the shooting having been very "light" of late years. Mar, which comprises about 110,000 acres, is one of the oldest and best deer forests in Scotland, and it has always been very carefully managed since the Duke of Fife succeeded to the estates.

---

Queen Alexandra embarked at Dundee on the afternoon of Monday, the 19th, for Copenhagen, but when the Royal yacht had passed the Abertay Lightship there was such a heavy sea, with a gale from the north-east, that it was deemed advisable to put back into the Tay. The Victoria and Albert passed the night off Buddon Ness Lighthouse, and the sea was so turbulent on Tuesday that she was not able to leave the Tay until five o'clock in the afternoon. The yacht arrived at Copenhagen on Thursday afternoon after a very rough and cold passage. Queen Alexandra and Princess Victoria landed at once, and proceeded to the Villa Hvidöre at Klampenborg, where the Empress Marie has been staying for some time.

---

Queen Alexandra's plans for the late autumn are rather uncertain, but she is not now expected to return to England until about the middle of November. Queen Alexandra will probably reside at York House, St. James's Palace, when she is staying in town for a short time after her return from the Continent, and it is not expected that she will occupy Marlborough House until the spring. If Queen Alexandra goes from Copenhagen to Gmunden, to visit the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland, she will afterwards be the guest of her sister-in-law, the Duchess Dowager of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha (Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna) at Coburg for a few days, and of her cousin, the Grand Duchess Dowager of Luxemburg, at Königstein, near Wiesbaden. In this case Queen Alexandra will travel back to England direct from Germany, without returning to Denmark.

---

The Duke of Connaught is to pay a visit to St. Helena either on his way to South Africa or on his return voyage. H.R.H. has been commissioned by the Government to make an inquiry into the present circumstances of the island and its inhabitants. The withdrawal of the garrison from St. Helena has caused much distress among the people.

---

A weekly contemporary announces a revival of the "rumour" of an intended marriage between the King of Portugal and Princess Alexandra of Fife, elder daughter of the Princess Royal and the Duke of Fife. There was never a particle of foundation for the nonsensical "rumour," which was the stupid invention of some egregious gobe-mouches. It is tolerably well known that the proposed bride of the King of Portugal is either an Austrian Archduchess, who has a very large fortune, or Princess Margaret of Denmark, only daughter of Prince Waldemar, whose mother was a daughter of the Duc and Duchesse de Chartres, and therefore a first cousin of Queen Amelie of Portugal.

---

Prince Christian has been paying visits in Silesia, Lower Austria, and Hungary since he left Kissingen. Prince Christian will visit the Duchess Dowager of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha at Tegernsee, near Munich, and the German Emperor and Empress at the Neue Palais, Potsdam, before he returns to England.

---

Prince Henry of Prussia made a hurried tour of country houses after his visit to their Majesties at Balmoral Castle. He was successively the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Johnstone-Douglas at Comlongan Castle, Dumfriesshire; of Mrs. Pocklington-Senhouse at Netherhall, Cumberland; of the Dowager Lady Derby at Witherslack Hall, her place in Lancashire, near Grange-over-Sands; and of Lord and Lady Powis at Powis Castle, Montgomeryshire. Prince Henry travelled throughout by motor, and he was accompanied by Prince Münster, Admiral Rampbold, Captain von Usedom, and Mr. Julian Orde. The party at Powis Castle included Lord and Lady Harewood, Lady Yarborough, and Lord and Lady Newton. Prince Henry spent one day while staying there in visiting Ludlow and Wenlock Abbey. He arrived in town on Friday, and returned to Germany on Monday.

---

The Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Denmark proceeded to Karlsruhe for the celebration of the silver wedding of the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Baden on the termination of their visit to the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin at Ludwigslust. The Grand Duchess of Baden is the only daughter of the late Grand Duke of Luxemburg (until 1866 Grand Duke of Nassau), and her mother was Princess Adelaide of Anhalt-Dessau, who was a niece of the late Queen of Denmark. The Grand Duchess has a very large fortune, which will revert to her brother's daughters, as she has no children of her own.

---

Prince Louis of Battenberg, who has been spending a month in Germany on leave, returned to England last Wednesday, and re-hoisted his flag as Commander-in-Chief of the Atlantic Fleet on board the battleship Prince of Wales at Portsmouth. Prince Louis left Spithead to rejoin the Atlantic Fleet off the coast of Ireland. A weekly journal states that Prince Louis has been staying "at his recently purchased château on the Taunus Hills." Prince Louis spent his leave at Heiligenberg, his place on the Bergstrasse, between Darmstadt and Heidelberg, which has no more connection with the Taunus Hills than with the Apennines. He has never purchased any château. The estate of Heiligenberg was purchased in 1855 by the Empress Marie (wife of the Tsar Alexander II.), and when she died, in 1880, she left it to her brother, Prince Alexander of Hesse, from whom it passed to his eldest son, Prince Louis of Battenberg. The Empress Marie rebuilt the house and expended large sums on improvements.

---

The Duc d'Albe has been staying at Farnborough Hill, Hants, on a visit to the Empress Eugénie, who is his great-aunt. The Empress has been entertaining a number of her French relatives and friends since her return to Farnborough Hill, and Prince Victor Napoleon is visiting her this week.

---

Field-Marshal Sir Evelyn Wood, Colonel of the Royal Horse Guards, is to be the Gold Stick-in-Waiting on the King during October, replacing Lieutenant-General the Earl of Dundonald, Colonel of the Second Life Guards.

---

When Sir Francis Hopwood returns from South Africa in December he will take up the duties of Vice-Chairman of the Development Commission, vacating the post of Permanent Under-Secretary at the Colonial Office for that purpose. The latter appointment will probably be offered to the Senior Assistant-Secretary, Sir Charles Lucas, who for health and other reasons may not care to accept a more onerous position than that which he now occupies. Failing Sir Charles Lucas it is likely that Sir Frank Swettenham will be asked to fill the post. Though sixty-one years of age, Sir Frank is as fresh in mind and body as he was throughout his strenuous career in the Straits Settlements. He has lately returned from a special mission to Mauritius.

---

Sir Vincent Corbett has been appointed Minister Resident at the Courts of Munich and Stuttgart. This post is usually the stepping stone to an Embassy. Sir Vincent is one of the ablest members of the Diplomatic Service, and he has been particularly successful in dealing with financial affairs. Between 1884 and 1903 he was employed at Berlin, Rome, Constantinople, and Athens, and he was financial adviser to the Egyptian Government from 1903 until 1907, when he was appointed Minister to Venezuela.

---

Sir Alan Johnstone, who has been staying for several weeks in England en congé, returned to the Legation at Copenhagen in time to receive Queen Alexandra on her arrival in the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert. Sir Alan resumed his diplomatic functions at Copenhagen last week.

---

Sir Edward Grey, who has been staying for some time at Falloden, his place in Northumberland, has replaced Mr. Haldane as Minister in Attendance on the King at Balmoral. Mr. McKenna goes to Balmoral next Monday, and he will be the last Minister in attendance at Court during the present autumn.

---

Lady de Rothschild, who died on Thursday at the age of ninety, was a very clever woman, rich in intellectual gifts, with an agreeable voice, and a great talent of expressing herself. She had read largely in every department of literature, and had lived much in the society of able men. She was endowed with originality and finesse d'esprit, with a fond of serious convictions and strong common sense. She had high ideals of duty, and a resolute aversion to the tittle-tattle and ill-natured gossip which form the principal conversation of too many people in these days. She had the family talent for "les affaires," and she was all her life a firm and uncompromising Liberal and Free Trader, and a zealous and generous supporter of all deserving social reforms. Her charities were splendidly munificent, and she took an active personal interest in the numerous schemes and institutions which she supported. Lady de Rothschild had a pedigree which would have satisfied Sidonia. She was a Montefiore by birth, and in 1840 she married Sir Anthony de Rothschild, who died in 1876. During her married life Aston Clinton and her house in Grosvenor Place were the scenes of a constant, varied, and brilliant hospitality. Lady de Rothschild's salon rivalled that of Harriet Lady Ashburton.

---

The early death of Lady Sybil Lascelles is deeply regretted by a very large circle of friends, as she was exceedingly popular in society. Lady Sybil was the second daughter of the late Duke of St. Albans by his first marriage with the eldest daughter of General Grey, who was for many years private secretary to Queen Victoria, and she was a niece of the Governor-General of Canada. She was married about eleven years ago to Major Lascelles, Scots Guards, son of Sir Frank Lascelles.

---

Mr. Frank Fowler, the well-known American portrait painter, who died the other day, had lived at New York since he returned from Europe thirty years ago, after completing his artistic education at Paris and at Florence. He wrote several works, including an excellent book on "Portrait and Figure Painting." Many of the best known men in the United States had sat to him. He devoted himself entirely to portrait and figure painting.

---

Mr. Cove Jones, of Loxley Hall, near Stratford-on-Avon, was known throughout Warwickshire for many years as being one of the most highly esteemed and most practically useful landowners in the county. He took a most active part in all county business, and he held many important public offices with complete efficiency. Mr. Cove Jones had resided at Loxley Hall for nearly sixty years.

---

The Duke and Duchess of Westminster are expected to arrive at Grosvenor House at the end of this week or early next week from Reay Forest, Sutherland. The Duke is leaving England at the beginning of October on a visit to his estate in South Africa, and he hopes to return by the middle of December, intending to spend the remainder of the hunting season at Eaton Hall.

---

The Duke and Duchess of Devonshire have been staying at Hardwick Hall, the old family place near Chesterfield, since they left Bolton Abbey at the close of the grouse-shooting season in Upper Wharfedale. The Duke and Duchess of Devonshire intend to spend the autumn and winter at Chatsworth, where they will entertain several shooting parties during November and December. There will be a large party at Chatsworth for Derby races on November 16 and two following days.

Most travellers on the Continent to-day register their luggage under the belief that its safe arrival at its destination is assured, or in the event of its loss compensation will be forthcoming. The following account of a correspondent's experience on the Italian State Railways shows that too much reliance must not be placed on the registration check. Luggage on Italian railways is, however, notoriously unsafe, and it would be manifestly unfair to condemn a system which in other countries is an undoubted boon to travellers:—

> This year our summer holiday has been marred by the loss of our luggage between Zermatt and Stresa (on Lake Maggiore). I had seen the trunk safely through the Customs at the frontier, the examination being held in the train whilst passing through the Simplon tunnel. But on reaching Stresa the trunk was reported as missing. After telegraphing to the stations up and down the line, and holding various consultations with the stationmaster at Stresa, I was informed it might take a fortnight or more to find the trunk.
>
> After spending close on a five pound note on necessary articles of clothing for my wife and self, we left Italy in disgust, and leisurely returned to England, giving instructions for the trunk to follow. It has arrived after its absence of nearly five weeks, although it has been sent to me by "Grande Vitesse," which has cost me 30s.
>
> It is reported to have been found in the luggage room at the next station, Baveno. I have a shrewd suspicion it was stolen by some confederate of the railway officials and placed there when close inquiries were being made.
>
> As the contents are intact, the British Consul at Milan informs me I have no redress, although our holiday has been spoilt, and I have been put to considerable expense. I have sent in a claim for compensation to the Italian State Railways, but have got no reply.

---

The Public Speaking Club of Great Britain, inaugurated last week, offers, according to its prospectus, "an exceptional opportunity to all classes of men to acquire proficiency in speaking on all occasions." I hope many will not avail themselves of the opportunity, or it will have to be described as a Training College for Garrulous Bores. There is nothing so trying as the orator who beats the air with empty phrases. It is true to-day that oratory is one of the decadent arts. But it is not the manner so much as the matter which is lacking. As laid down at the opening meeting of the club by the founder of a similar institution in New York, the elements of public speaking were self-possession, sympathy, courtesy, concentration, nobility, and unselfishness. From these the chief essential seems to have been omitted. It is brains. Without that the budding Demosthenes might be much more usefully devoted to cultivating the still rarer art of silence.

---

A surprising new departure was made at the Croquet Tournament held on the ground of the South Saxons' Club at St. Leonards-on-Sea last week. With the sanction of the committee a large booth was erected near the pavilion and fitted up for the playing of bridge. One shilling was charged for admission to the booth, and, though play was supposed to be confined to members of the club and competitors in the tournament, it is doubted whether this rule was enforced. In any case a gaming booth was a most undesirable—if not, indeed, an illegal—addition to the croquet lawns, and it provoked very strong comments by a number of visitors. I am told that in consequence of protests the committee eventually announced that no more bridge was to be openly played for money, but at the same time said they could not, of course, prevent the players arranging to settle with one another when off the ground! This was a ridiculously feeble decision. However, although the committee declined to close the bridge booth last week, it is to be hoped that they will not at future tournaments repeat the mistake they made in permitting its introduction.

I have no sympathy with Sir Ernest Cassel's mission to Paris to get better terms for the proposed Turkish loan. If there was any fault with the French terms it was that they were not stringent enough to prevent the Turks misusing French money in order to disturb the peace of Europe. If, as I hope, France stands firm the loan negotiations will fall through, for if Sir Ernest Cassel is boycotted by the Paris Bourse I don't think he will get much help from the English Stock Exchange.

---

Sir Ernest's Constantinople Bank has hitherto done no business with the Turks, and I hope it will continue to do none. When Sir Edward Grey supported the venture it was on the understanding that the Turks wanted money for "purposes of peaceful development." As a matter of fact, after providing for customary bakshish, every piastre which the Turks have borrowed since the downfall of Abdul Hamid has been spent on naval and military armaments, in violation of the assurances given to our Ambassador when the establishment of the English Bank was under consideration.

---

Britishers in Japan—indeed, practically all foreigners in that country—have been amazed by the attempts of our Tariff Reformers to make party capital out of the new Japanese tariff. In particular the attitude of the Times has excited general derision, mingled with not a little indignation. That journal virtually justified and encouraged the imposition of heavy duties on British goods, putting forward the proposition that "we have no advantage to offer to Japan, and consequently Japan has none to offer us." This point is dealt with very neatly in an article in the Japan Chronicle, which has been reprinted and circulated by the British Association of Japan:—

> How could it be any "advantage" to Japan for England to place a duty on Japanese goods and then take off a part of it in return for a partial lowering of duties on British imports into Japan? The thesis that Japan will gain some advantage by duties being imposed on her goods where they now pay none is surely one of the most preposterous ever put forward in the name of economics.

---

Of course, it might be argued (though the Times was careful not to do so) that a British tariff could be used for the purpose of retaliation against our ally; but as to that it is pointed out that the disparity between Japanese trade with England and British trade with Japan would make any attempt at retaliation on our part practically futile. The Times, which appears to represent the Japanese official view of that country's progress and prosperity, indulged in some sarcasms about the Japanese groaning under the burden of a tariff "which must be regarded as crushing by every faithful Cobdenite." Strange to say, the faithful Cobdenite's opinion is held by many people in Japan, where, in the words of the Japan Chronicle, "higher prices, heavier taxation, a lifeless trade, and an increase in the struggle for living" are not deemed evidences of increasing prosperity and the blessings of a protectionist policy.

---

In another column I publish a letter respecting the treatment of British Indians in the Transvaal. Considering that the writer is an officer of an Indian regiment, the most remarkable thing about the letter is the omission of any allusion whatever to the bitter feeling this question has aroused throughout India. I hope his apparent indifference to opinion in India is not really typical of the attitude of English officers in that country, because in view of the problems with which we are faced that would be anything but a comforting reflection. In one of his able articles on "Indian Unrest," the special correspondent of the Times lately showed how deeply the wrongs of their countrymen in South Africa have "stirred the resentment of every single community in the Indian Empire." The failure to save the Indian settlers from oppression has, he testified, had most disastrous consequences for the prestige of British rule in India.

---

It is idle to talk—as my correspondent does—of the results that would follow if the free immigration of Indians to South Africa were permitted. Nobody seriously questions the right of the colonists to impose reasonable restrictions upon Asiatic immigration. In some of the colonies, indeed, restrictions are placed upon European immigration, and Britishers find themselves turned back. What is now particularly complained of in the Transvaal is the injustice and harshness of the measures which are adopted to expel Indians long settled in the country. Many are men of education and position who have lived there for twenty or thirty years, and orders of deportation have actually been made against a number who are Transvaalers by birth. The treatment meted out to these men is disgraceful to any British colony, and it unfortunately produces in India an impression most damaging to the British raj.

---

Miss Emily Davison has persuaded me to publish another letter on the subject of votes and wages, but it must be the last. It really is not a bit more convincing than the previous letters. For instance, in regard to the Edinburgh printers' dispute, the success of the men's union is again ascribed to their having had "the backing up of Parliamentary influence." There is not a vestige of proof of this. In my view it is, on the contrary, a complete delusion to suppose that it was the men's possession of the franchise which caused the employers to accept their terms.

---

Fresh from organising the English Labour Exchanges, Mr. W. H. Beveridge held the field at the meeting of the International Conference on Unemployment which took place last week at Paris. As he explained in his address, the reason why French and German Exchanges have only been partial successes is because they are run on municipal instead of national lines. The experience of the English Distress Committees shows that unemployment cannot be dealt with locally, and for this reason the Labour Exchanges Act has taken the matter out of municipal hands and placed it under Government control. Though only six months old, and not yet completely organised, the English Exchanges are filling vacancies at the rate of 400,000 or more a year, while the more numerous German Exchanges after twenty years' work only find places for twice that number of workpeople. Applicants for domestic service, moreover, are provided for by the German Exchanges, while they are excluded from those set up in England.

---

Why don't the Labour Exchanges, by the way, register applicants for domestic service? Private registry offices run for profit are admittedly unsatisfactory for both servants and employers. If their work was absorbed in the Labour Exchanges more clerks would have to be taken on, and the best of those employed in the private offices could be given places so as to prevent them losing their jobs. Half-and-half measures are a mistake in setting up a new organisation. Once admit the principle of bureaucracy, and we may as well go the "whole hog."

---

At Paris Mr. Beveridge threw cold water—and rightly so—on the proposal to set up International Labour Exchanges. Each country must look after its own burden of unemployment without troubling about its neighbours. National internal migration will do a great deal to adjust the conditions of unemployment without resorting to expatriation. Migration from the home country to British colonies is another matter, and much might be done in this direction with our "blind alley" boys and girls; but I should view with disfavour any attempt to divert English labour to Continental markets, no matter how tempting the bait offered.

---

Mr. J. N. Clark, of Trinity College, has resigned the office of Registrar of Cambridge University, in which he succeeded Dr. Luard in 1891. The office is in the gift of members of the Senate, and the practice has been for the Council to nominate two persons, one of whom must be elected. The work of this office has greatly increased during the last fifteen years. Mr. Clark, who has a wide reputation as a learned antiquary, has rendered most valuable services to the University in many ways, and particularly in connection with the re-endowment of the University library. The various ceremonials of the University have always been admirably arranged by him in all their various and difficult details. Mr. Clark has been suffering from ill-health during the last year, and the duties of the office have been discharged by Mr. Benham, King's College, who was appointed Deputy-Registrar in January.

---

Archbishop Maclagan was a younger son of Dr. Maclagan, of Edinburgh, a brother of the late Sir Douglas Maclagan, and a great-grandson of Dr. Dalrymple, of Ayr, the Presbyterian minister who figures in Burns's poem "The Kirk's Alarm." His father, who was Physician to the Force during the Peninsular War, was a staunch Presbyterian, and an elder of the Kirk, of which his three brothers were all prominent "office bearers." William Maclagan entered the Indian Army, but retired through ill health after a few years' service. He then went to Cambridge, and in 1856 (at the age of thirty) he was ordained. He worked in London, and his organising abilities soon attracted the sympathetic notice of Bishop Tait, who appointed him secretary of the London Diocesan Church Building Society in 1860. Five years later the Bishop appointed Maclagan to be curate-in-charge at Enfield, and in 1869 he was presented by Lord Chancellor Hatherley to the important living of Newington, where he did excellent work for six years. In 1875 Bishop Jackson presented him to the Vicarage of Kensington, and there he profited by the labours of Archdeacon Sinclair, who had left behind him one of the most thoroughly organised parishes in England.

Lord Beaconsfield promoted Dr. Maclagan to the See of Lichfield in 1878 on the death of Bishop Selwyn, and the new prelate entered upon a diocese in perfect order, thus repeating his good luck at Kensington on a larger scale. Originally he was an Evangelical with broad sympathies, but a process of what Lord Beaconsfield defined as "sacerdotal evolution" developed him into a most decided High Churchman, and at Lichfield he often showed himself to be hostile to Dissenters, and in many respects most intolerant. However, he became known as an excellent man of business, and he did much to stimulate every branch of pastoral work in the diocese. In 1891 he was translated to York, but as Archbishop his views became wider, and he got rid of the High Church bigotry which he had displayed at Lichfield. He had no pretensions to the learning, eloquence, or intellectual powers of his predecessors at Bishopthorpe—Magee, Thomson, and Longley, but he was an excellent "working" prelate, and he insisted on being obeyed by his clergy. As writer of some popular hymns he will be long remembered. He was an earnest preacher, and his advice from the pulpit was always clear and sound. He was a most accomplished artist, and in society he was exceedingly agreeable.

---

Archbishop Maclagan was the last survivor of Lord Beaconsfield's prelates. Upon resigning the Archbishopric of York he was granted a pension of £3,000 a year, which will now be an acceptable addition to Archbishop Lang's stipend. When the Episcopal revenues were resettled in 1840, the Archbishopric of York was given £10,000 a year, but this is now reduced to £9,000, as £1,000 a year is taken for the proposed Sheffield bishopric. Archbishop Harcourt was the last prelate who lived at Bishopthorpe en prince. His Episcopal income averaged about £20,000 a year, but he sometimes received huge sums as fines when leases fell in. There was one very rich year when the Archbishop's official receipts amounted to over £100,000.

---

Archdeacon Sinclair is to be the canon in residence and Sunday afternoon preacher at St. Paul's Cathedral during October, replacing Canon Holland. Dean Gregory will also be again in residence. He has been staying at Chichester with his nephew, Dean Hannah, having proceeded thither from Rottingdean, where he spent several weeks. Nearly forty-two years have passed since Lord Beaconsfield appointed Mr. Gregory to a canonry of St. Paul's, and in December, 1890, he succeeded Dean Church in the deanery, on the nomination of Lord Salisbury.

---

Archdeacon Bathurst, who died on Thursday at the age of eighty-three, was the son of Sir James and Lady Catherine Bathurst. He was beneficed in the diocese of Ely for nearly half a century, and was held in high esteem by both clergy and laity. He was appointed Archdeacon of Bedford in 1873 by Bishop Harold Browne after the death of Archdeacon Rose, the well-known rector of Houghton Conquest, and he resigned this office a few months ago. Archdeacon Bathurst was elected Proctor in Convocation for the clergy of the diocese of Ely in 1868, and he was a member of the Lower House for forty-two years. He was a very useful member, and exercised much influence in a quiet way.

The Rev. Alan Brodrick will to-morrow vacate the rectory of Broughton Gifford, Wiltshire, to which he was presented by Lord Chancellor Cairns in 1876. He has worked in the diocese of Sarum for fifty-five years, and between 1853 and 1876 he received preferment from Bishop Denison, the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury, Mr. Gladstone, and Lord Chancellor Selborne. He has exercised a considerable and excellent influence in the diocese, and has done much good work. The living of Broughton Gifford, which is worth about £300 a year, with house, is in the gift of the Lord Chancellor, who has presented the Rev. J. R. Davis, vicar of Claverton, near Bath.

---

Lord Ellesmere has presented the Rev. C. B. Hulton, rector of Turvey, Bedfordshire, to the vicarage of Worsley, near Manchester. This living was held for many years by Lord Normanby, who is Lady Ellesmere's brother. The beautiful church at Worsley was built by the first Earl of Ellesmere (Lord Francis Egerton), at a cost of over £20,000, from designs by Sir Gilbert Scott.

---

The Lord Chancellor has appointed the Rev. J. R. Denham, rector of St. Clement with St. Edmund, Norwich, to the residentiary stall in Rochester Cathedral which was vacated by the death of Canon Pollock. The new prebend worked in Scotland for twenty years, and since 1897 he has held his present benefice, and has also acted as diocesan missioner. Mr. Denham is to take up his residence at Rochester, and it is understood that he will carry on Canon Pollock's very successful mission work in the diocese.

---

The Lord Chancellor has also presented the Rev. Charles A. Mayall, vicar of Hinckley, to the important living of Swindon, vacant by the preferment of Canon Estcourt. The net stipend is about £320 a year, with house. Mr. Mayall is well known in the diocese of Bristol, as he was for some time curate at Bedminster under Canon Griffith, whose daughter he married.

---

I do not know whether Irish Catholic lotteries of the ordinary kind are getting played out, but at any rate an ingenious variation on these gambles is being worked for the benefit of the Kingstown Catholic Institute. A watch is offered as a prize on what is quaintly described as "the competitive system of one penny per second." This means that the winner will be the person who guesses most nearly the time at which the watch will stop after it has been set at random and wound by the Very Rev. Canon Murphy, who will keep it in a sealed box until the result is declared. No doubt the penny entrance fee has been fixed to bring the so-called "competition" within the reach of the poorest people (though every one is urged to pay for not less than five shillingsworth of seconds), and presumably Canon Murphy considers it a laudable proceeding to extract money from their pockets in this way. I do not myself take the view that gambling is a sin, but I certainly do not regard it as a virtue to be fostered. Judging from what goes on in Ireland, however, that is the idea of the Catholic clergy.

---

I have to acknowledge £3 "In Memoriam of G. A. M." towards the Toy Fund.

Lord Methuen was to have returned to England from South Africa in December, but he has consented to retain his post as Commander-in-Chief until April, 1912, in compliance with the earnest request of General Botha and the Minister of Defence.

---

I am glad to hear that Sir Alfred Keogh had nothing to do with the "Babtie job," and that, far from recommending Colonel Babtie for the appointment of Deputy-Director-General, he sent in the name of Surgeon-General A. T. Sloggett, C.B., C.M.G., as the most suitable officer to fill the post. Sir Alfred's nomination was ignored owing to the successful intrigue which was carried on by Colonel Babtie's backers. I hope this matter will be taken up by one of the Service members when the House meets in November, for nothing can exceed the indignation of Army medical officers at the insult offered to their corps by the supersession of so many qualified senior officers by a comparatively junior colonel.

---

"I shall never advise a son of mine to go into the Army." So writes a military correspondent in India, after recapitulating the pecuniary grievances of British officers sent to serve in that country. During the past twenty years much has been done for officers of the Indian Army, but nothing for those of the Home Army, their pay and allowances remaining the same as when they were fixed seventy years ago. Since then silver has gone down in value, and prices have gone up. Cheap money means dear markets. House accommodation, servants' wages, food-stuffs—all have risen in price. With the unofficial community ways and means adjust themselves automatically, but not so with officials when their salaries remain stationary.

---

There are various ways of helping officers to meet the increased expense of living in India. More bungalows are wanted in the big cantonments where troops are now concentrated. House property is almost wholly in the hands of native traders, who form rings to keep up rents by preventing building. If the Government of India would build quarters and charge reasonable rents officers would not be fleeced in the present exorbitant fashion. In thirty years house rent in India has risen 100 per cent.

---

This is where the Army Council should come in if only its members were in touch with officers' wants. It is of no use to say "This is an Indian matter." To take care of the King's officers wherever they are, and particularly when they are abroad, is as much a matter for the Army Council as it was for the Commander-in-Chief when he existed. On Friday afternoons the Duke of Cambridge was always unapproachable, except to his military secretary, until his weekly letter to the Indian Commander-in-Chief was ready for the mail-bag. The Duke belonged to a "bygone era" of soldiers, but he cared for the officers whom he commanded, whereas Army Councillors have never given any indication of caring for anybody but themselves.

---

Another way of helping officers, as I suggested in Truth of July 27 last, would be to give them the privilege of travelling by rail at reduced fares when going on leave of absence. Several of the English railways grant this indulgence. Naval and military officers, for instance, stationed at Plymouth can go up and down to London for single fare. Such a boon would be of material assistance to subalterns going up country from the plains for their annual shoot in Kashmir, especially as the fares on Indian Government railways have just been increased 25 per cent.

---

The extraordinary conduct of a Territorial officer at the village of Winterbourne Stoke during the recent manœuvres seems to have been due to misplaced zeal. He closed the village inn, dragged the innkeeper along the street with a whip throng round his neck, laid out a couple of men unconscious who did not bow to his authority, cut the tyres of the cycles of a number of civilians, and wound up by arresting a Salisbury Town Councillor and sending him back to his native town in handcuffs. Either he must have realised so strongly the ineffectiveness of the manœuvres from a military point of view that he thought he would do his best to introduce an element of reality into the farce, or he imagined that a public demonstration of what England would be like under the heel of the invader might give Winterbourne a useful lesson in patriotism.

---

Colonel Gädke's sly hit at the English landowners, who shut out the manœuvring troops from their woods lest their pheasants should be temporarily disturbed, is well deserved. The practice of reserving game preserves in the manœuvres area causes immense inconvenience both to the Staff who plan the manœuvres and to the troops who execute them, and if landowners are not patriotic enough to "play up" of their own accord, the only thing left will be to compel them to do so by law. The worst offenders in this matter are the game preservers in the Eastern Counties.

---

A short time ago I called attention to a promotion grievance among R.G.A. non-commissioned officers at Gibraltar. To-day it is the turn of Malta. Some two years back a circular letter was issued from the R.G.A. office urging non-commissioned officers to obtain their first-class certificates of education, and, as an inducement to do so, promising that every third vacancy should be filled from among those recommended for accelerated promotion, the possession of a first-class certificate being a sine quâ non for such recommendation. The spirit of the circular was all right, but, though many promotions have been made since its publication, the promise has only been kept in one case.

---

I am informed that this breach of official faith is due to the fact that unless a non-commissioned officer belongs to the Royal Army Temperance Association he has no chance of promotion at Malta; while, if he does belong to the association, his promotion is assured, whatever his other qualifications may be. In consequence of this unwritten understanding, non-commissioned officers without certificates invariably enrol themselves as members to qualify for advancement. I am all for temperance, but this is not the way to promote it, and bogus membership of the kind mentioned weakens instead of strengthening the cause which the commanding officer has at heart.

Captain William Edmund Goodenough, who recently quitted the command of the flagship Duncan in the Mediterranean, is appointed to the President for a senior officer's gunnery course. This officer, who held the first command of the palatial Naval College at Dartmouth, was specially promoted for merit when Admiral of the Fleet Lord Walter Kerr retired.

---

The Admiralty have placed an order with Messrs. Beardmore for a number of 9.2 inch guns of 50 calibre. This little item of intelligence foreshadows another great impending change in battleship design. The weapons are obviously not intended to replace any of the existent 9.2 inch guns, because these are of 45 calibre, and new mountings would have to be provided. Therefore they are meant to go into new ships. This confirms the rumour that the future battleships will carry a powerful secondary battery. There must needs be occasions in sea warfare when to employ the new 13.5 inch gun would merely be to illustrate the breaking of the butterfly upon the wheel.

---

The battleship Neptune, the biggest completed warship in the world, has been ranging the Channel betwixt Plymouth and Portsmouth during the past week, carrying out her acceptance power trials. She has acquitted herself well, but proved herself a voracious "coal-eater," her consumption averaging 2 lbs. per unit of horse power per hour. In other words, this means about 550 tons per twenty-four hours to sustain twenty-one knots. The Neptune could maintain this rate of travel for six days, when her bunkers and oil-fuel tanks would be spent out. But this is a wide enough strategic scope for something to happen in war time.

---

When the battleships Howe and Edinburgh come under the auctioneer's hammer on the 11th prox. the last of the old "Admirals" will have passed away. The most venerable battleship remaining on the active list will then be the Nile, laid down in 1886. The "Admiral" class were sturdy, ponderous warships, in which the culmination of weight was reached alike in guns and armour. The 110-ton weapons of the Benbow, and the 18-inch compound belting of the entire group, imposed upon an average displacement of 10,000 tons, rendered these low-freeboard craft just about as lively as a half-tide rock in a seaway. The "Majestics" marked the beginning of the return to reason. And now the scaremongers are threatening us with bigger guns from Germany, probably unconscious of the fact that the youngest Navy is but going over the ground which the oldest Navy covered a generation ago.

---

The Vindictive is being withdrawn from the Nore Division of the Third Home Fleet, and the quartet of "Fleet Rams" will thus have passed from the active list. The Furious, it is true, is dragging out a pacific existence as a tender to the Vernon at Portsmouth, but the Arrogant is lying in the Rotten Row at Devonport, and the Gladiator came to a tragic end in the Solent on April 25, 1908. These cruisers, built under the Navy Estimates of 1895-6, materialise a tactical idea now quite defunct. They were designed to demonstrate the potentialities of the ram, being built with heavily armoured bows to 40 ft. aft, and double rudders to ensure greater mobility. Needless to say, they pass away without having attained their theoretical object.

---

Squadron firing is to become a regular feature of battle practice in the fleet. Amongst gunnery officers there is a tendency to question the wisdom of this decision. A line of warships blazing away simultaneously at a target will soon demolish it. This is merely a demonstration of the effect of fire concentration. It is no criterion of the merits of individual shooting. The cost of gunnery practice is such a heavy item in the Navy Estimates that it behoves the Admiralty to ensure the best value in results for the ammunition fired away. This is not necessarily to be attained by impressive spectacular displays.

---

Officialdom has been expressing regret at the growth of cigarette-smoking on the lower-deck, and delivering a little homily on the evil results of this practice. Officialdom apparently overlooked that a special cigarette tobacco is nowadays purveyed by the Admiralty as an alternative to "ship's hard." Possibly the sooty clay is more in the picture for a bluejacket than the cigarette, but I should think that there is about as much or as little harm in the one as in the other. It is all a question of degree. A man—seaman or landsman—may injure himself by smoking too many pipes as well as by smoking too many cigarettes.

---

My impression is that the reason why cigarettes have a bad name is that there are a certain number of men whom tobacco in any shape disagrees with, and that these find cigarettes the easiest way of consuming it. They thus get into a habit of continually taking small doses of what is to them poison. Cigars or pipes would do them just as much harm, but they cannot swallow the big dose.

---

In common with my contemporaries I have received a letter from Mr. F. G. Foster, chairman of the Portsmouth Naval Disasters Fund, in reply to that of Sir James Gildea protesting against the multiplication of funds for the benefit of those deprived of their bread-winners by naval disasters. As Mr. Foster chiefly confines himself to dealing with the administration of the Naval Disasters Fund there is no need to discuss his letter at any length. The point at issue was not whether the money subscribed to the Portsmouth fund was properly administered, but whether the multiplication of such funds does or does not lead to overlapping and its attendant evils. I am of opinion that appeals calculated to multiply such funds are mischievous. Mr. Foster objects to my classing the recent appeal of the Mayor of Portsmouth on behalf of those dependent upon the men lost in the Bedford disaster in this category, but that fact is not in itself sufficient to induce me to alter my opinion. The one point in his letter which would tend to justify the Portsmouth appeal is that referring to the fact that the Soldiers' and Sailors' Families Association undertakes only the temporary relief of sufferers in such cases. But this point can only be deemed effective by ignoring the existence both of the Admiralty and the Royal Naval Fund.

---

While vigorously rebutting certain charges against the Indian police a few weeks ago, the Under-Secretary of State said he would gladly receive suggestions for the improvement of that much-abused body of men. Although it may not be the sort of suggestion he was thinking about, Mr. Montagu might usefully consider whether any force can be expected to work satisfactorily when discontent is rife among its chief executive officers. That is the position in the Indian police, and a letter just to hand deals with one of the causes of the discontent so far as the Bombay Presidency is concerned. Last November Mr. S. M. Edwardes, of the Indian Civil Service, was appointed to the Commissionership of Police, Bombay. This post is in point of value the second highest open to police officers on the Bombay side, and police officers had held it in unbroken succession for many years. Mr. Edwardes was a second assistant collector of only fourteen years' service. To make room for him the then Commissioner, a police officer of twenty-eight years' standing, was turned out of his job and compelled to become a Deputy-Inspector General.

---

This was not all. By what the police naturally regarded as the addition of injury to insult, Mr. Edwardes was seconded from his own service and placed on the police establishment. The result was a number of promotions in the I.C.S., vice Mr. Edwardes seconded, and a number of reductions of police officers in consequence of this new excess appointment high up on the police list. Not only were these officers, including two deputy-inspectors-general, reduced a grade each, but some at least suffered an actual loss of pay. Of course, they petitioned against this treatment, but though many months have elapsed no sign of a reply has yet been vouchsafed. Meanwhile three vacancies in the service have been allowed to remain open, one of them since January last. In the usual way a series of grade promotions would have been gazetted immediately these vacancies occurred, and the extraordinary delay has given rise to a disquieting suspicion that in two cases at any rate the Bombay Government is seeking the sanction of the Secretary of State to the appointment of outsiders. It is to be hoped, however, that Lord Morley will not permit the infliction of any such further injustice.

---

A report made to the Tendring Guardians upon the aged inmates of the workhouse who will become qualified for pensions will give those who are demanding the abolition of the present Poor Law system something to think about. Seventy-five inmates will become qualified but only eight of them have expressed any desire to avail themselves of the pension. The remaining sixty-seven have come to the conclusion that they will be much more comfortable where they are. It is a pleasing tribute to the treatment of the aged poor, and makes one realise that the day may come when the name of Bumble will become a term of affection and respect.

SCRUBB & Co., Ltd., caution the public against the many injurious imitations of SCRUBB'S AMMONIA that are being offered, and draw attention to their having affixed the signature of SCRUBB & CO. to each bottle, without which none is genuine.

THOS. GOODE & CO.—Exhibition of old and modern WEDGWOOD, including many specimens never previously exhibited.—South Audley Street, London.

---

There is no monotony in America. A millionaire aged ninety-two has just married his nurse, aged thirty, and drove his bride straight back to present her to his heirs. They are described as having "learnt with astonishment of the wedding." One quite believes it. On the same day two ladies of old Georgian families were driving in their carriages, and at sight of each other they rose up and renewed at the top of their voices, in a manner worthy of costers' ladies, a long-smouldering quarrel. These tactics ended in their husbands springing to the ground and, producing the revolvers which are apparently part of the Georgian gentleman's attire, shooting each other dead. When the neighbours arrived on the scene they found two dead gentlemen and two weeping ladies. Life is very difficult, but at least it is not so grotesque everywhere as among the stately aristocrats of Georgia.

---

Newlyn, near Penzance, is a beautiful spot, much favoured by artists, but, judging from a letter which I have received from a lady visitor, it is much less pleasing to the nose than to the eye. The lady gives a graphic description of its terrible odours—in particular, a species of nasty, clinging smell that means cesspools, and a still worse one that arises when they are being emptied. "Elemental and barbaric" is her summing-up of the so-called sanitary arrangements of the place, "an odoriferous hotbed ready for any disease that comes along." Perhaps her own suffering from a bad sore throat contracted during a stay at Newlyn has caused the lady to exaggerate this drawback to the attractions of the town; but, still, there appears to be need for action by the public health authorities.

---

STREPTOCOCCITIS.

When a streaming eye and a nose not dry
  Assailed them in days of old,
Our forebears spoke of the thing—fond folk!—
  As a common or garden cold.

But now, when our nose wants frequent blows,
  And our sneezes won't be controlled,
We're far too 'cute to describe the brute
  As a common or garden cold.

For the doctors tell, and we know full well,
  That we're victims of microbes bold;
That our body squirms with pestilent germs,
  Who've nothing to do with cold.

Catarrhococci and Pneumococci
  And Streptococci hold
In our frames, they say, a big field-day—
  Disguised as a common cold.

Yet Latin terms of imposing germs
  Still leave me unconsoled,
While I sneeze and weep and feel as cheap
  As if I'd a common cold.

TRUTH will be sent weekly to any address in the British Islands for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or £1 9s. 1d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). The subscription to Canada (Thin Edition) is: 7s. 7d. for 3 months; 15s. 2d. for 6 months; £1 11s. 6d. for 12 months (including Christmas Number). To the Colonies and Foreign Countries (Thick Edition): 3 months, 8s. 8d.; 6 months, 17s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 15s. 10d. (including Christmas Number). All cheques and P.O.O.s should be made payable to THE MANAGER OF TRUTH, and addressed to Truth Buildings, Carteret Street, London, S.W.

Mr. Bankes is one of those men who are marked out for judgeships by common consent as soon as they have got into the front rank at the Bar. The successful advocate is not always the best judge. Forensic geniuses who can twist a jury round their fingers, or turn a witness inside out by a sort of surgical operation, have been before now objects of derision—at any rate to their professional brethren—when they have ascended to the Bench. Mr. Bankes has won his success at the Bar by somewhat different qualities—chiefly unfailing soundness of judgment and a thorough knowledge of his business, combined with an irresistible manner, which could be stern enough on occasion, but could never be anything but irreproachably courteous. There is something about Mr. Bankes which has always inspired confidence equally in clients, jurymen, and judges; indeed, I have always felt that if I were a juryman I could not possibly give a verdict against him. Such a man is bound to make a good judge. He will not only administer justice, but make people feel that he is administering it.

---

An interesting point which I had expected would have been mentioned in the course of the hearing of the Crippen case at Bow Street was the name of the proprietor of the Aural Remedies Company, of Craven House, Kingsway, for which the accused man acted as physician, but either the necessity to mention it did not arise, or it escaped the attention of the reporters. The Aural Remedies Company is, in fact, the latest enterprise of Edward Marr, who, as "Professor" Keith-Harvey, succeeded the Drouet Institute in the position of chief advertiser in this country amongst the deaf quacks. Both as quack and as a keeper of a bucket-shop, carried on under the name of Arnold and Butler, Marr has been the subject of continual warnings in TRUTH, and he has also figured in two or three issues of TRUTH Cautionary List. His connection with the business ought by itself to be quite sufficient to prevent any deaf person applying to it with the expectation of being relieved of anything but his spare cash.

---

The story of a little drudge of eleven years, who, deserted by her mother, was called upon to do the house work for her father and a lodger until every spark of childishness had been crushed out of her, may awaken the sympathies of the readers of fiction, but in real life it does not seem to produce the same effect. At least that is the impression produced by the report of a case heard by the Sheffield justices last week, when the father of Edna North was prosecuted for cruelty to his daughter. She was emaciated, dirty, and verminous; she had been kept up until late at night, and she had been beaten. The magistrates bound the man over in the sum of £10, and ordered him to pay the costs. Edna goes back to her father to a renewal of drudgery, and the attempt of the N.S.P.C.C. to rescue her has proved nugatory. Yet, I suppose, some of those Sheffield wiseacres are fathers themselves.

---

A somewhat similar case occurred at Ilfracombe, where a lodging-house keeper, named Sarah Selway, was charged last week with ill-treating an adopted child aged nine years. The girl apparently had been adopted in order to provide cheap labour, for it was proved in evidence that she had been kept at work from seven o'clock in the morning until midnight and had been frequently beaten, the cruelty culminating in a severe thrashing with a banister brush, after which the girl ran away and sought protection with a neighbour. It was urged in defence that the defendant had been in the employ of Princess Christian, the late Lord Salisbury, and the Bishop of Wakefield, and that the child was stubborn. The magistrates, however, were not influenced by these facts, and fined Selway £10 and costs.

---

One point in regard to the case which seems to have excited some unfavourable comment locally is that the child had been obtained from the Waifs and Strays Society. I do not see, however, that the Society is greatly to blame. The testimonials which Selway was able to produce would naturally entitle her to consideration, and it also appears that her application for a child for adoption had been made through the late Archdeacon of Ilfracombe. But at the same time the case shows clearly how necessary it is that charitable societies should not only exercise extreme caution in placing out children but keep them under constant supervision. Such an instance as this must be very exceptional in the experience of a well-managed society like that of the Waifs and Strays, and I have no doubt that the lesson it teaches will be fully appreciated.

---

One of the victims of Farkasch's cheap and nasty dentists sued the Hull Hygienic Co., Limited, last week in the Grimsby County Court for damages. She had agreed to purchase an upper and lower set of false teeth for £6 from the Hygienic Institute of Hull, which undertook to extract her own teeth free. The consequence of the operation was that she had to undergo medical treatment in order to recover from its effects, and when the teeth arrived she was unable to wear them as they did not fit. She was nonsuited in her action on the ground that at the date of her contract the Hull Hygienic Institute had been a branch of Farkasch's Scottish business, but had since been turned into a separate company, and this company was not responsible for the liabilities of its predecessor. The only reason for the flotation of these local limited liability companies all over the country seemed to me at the time to be the evasion of liability for damages, and the defence in this action shows that the surmise was not far wrong.

---

The Yankee trickster Shoemaker, whose headquarters are at Rochester, New York, U.S.A., has just broken fresh ground as the New York State Publishing Company. This Shoemaker sticks to his last, however, for a course of instruction in hypnotism is still the bait for the dollars of his dupes, even as in the days when he figured as the New York Institute of Science. But the new company demands a new pattern of goods. "Hypnotism and Love" is the latest article which his "huge printing presses have been busy turning out for several months past." No doubt it is the same old twaddle which has served him before, and it is the same old price—five dollars. £1 is a high price even for an up-to-date Yankee love philtre.

Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.—6,550 convictions last year. Complaints marked "Private" absolutely confidential.—Secretary, 105, Jermyn Street, London.

Do you know how it is you become bald? In ninety cases out of a hundred, say the proprietors of Crystolis, it is "caused by a living parasite that actually gnaws its way back and forth and in and around the hair roots until the whole of the scalp becomes affected." Marvellous indeed is the scientific knowledge of the advertisement writer, about as marvellous as the "lucky accident" which enabled the proprietors of Crystolis to discover that this preparation is the very thing to spoil the parasites' appetite for human hair. Send 10s. to the Creslo laboratories at 6 and 8, Bouverie Street, say the proprietors, and if in ten days' time you have not started a new growth of hair you may have your money back. They enclose a guarantee, but the guarantee is more cautiously worded than the circular. It gives six weeks as the period for the new growth and ten days to stop falling hair. It is as well to be cautious in the wording of a guarantee.

---

The latest circular of those assiduous touts, the International Who's Who Publishing Company announces that the current edition of the "International Who's Who" is now in all the leading libraries, universities, reading-rooms, newspaper offices, and hotels throughout the world. I presume it is merely owing to the insignificance of Truth that a copy has not found its way to this office. Yet I confess I should have liked to see a copy. The biographies of people who have paid a sovereign to get them published could not prove otherwise than entertaining. Taken all round, recognition as an International somebody cannot be said to be dear at a pound, particularly when your portrait and coat of arms are reproduced for the benefit of hotel visitors all over the world. The International Company seems, by the way, to have again changed its address. If you want your portrait to adorn the next edition you have to send your pound to Mr. C. J. Eustache, 12, Rue des Taillandiers, Paris.

---

Some of the free-portrait tricksters wander far afield. A representative of the "Enamotype Art Company," of 75, Fetter Lane, London, E.C., turned up in a Dartmoor village the other day and announced that his company was making a free gift of 500 beautiful enlarged portraits in Devonshire. If West-countrymen look this gift-horse in the mouth they will find it to be a very aged and sorry hack, and certainly not worth stable room.

---

The proper animal for a pet would seem to be a lamb.—Daily Chronicle.

Let him whose homely mind is set
On taking to himself a pet
  As facile as a fairy,
Go get a little lamb, with wool
Like that small beast who went to school
  Each day with Little Mary.

For me I like a little fun,
And read my Lamb when day is done;
  And, just to make it vary,
I take another kind with peas,
Because I find the meat agrees
  With my own Little Mary.

---

I have more than once drawn attention to the activity of the "Provident" Legal Accident Society, of 108, Marylebone Road, W., in touting for business, and a fresh example has been brought under my notice. In this instance a representative of the Society has been engaged in touting in Kent for members. He has for disposal "Family Tickets," price 6d., which entitle the holders together with their wives and families to free legal advice for one year. The subjects on which advice is given free would seem to be somewhat limited, for the paragraph which announces that advice is given free on all matters is qualified by a subsequent one which states that in matters such as disputes between landlord and tenant, divorce, conveyances, leases, mortgages, business transfers, fire assessments, bankruptcy, arrangements with creditors, wills, criminal charges, and debt-collecting advice and assistance will be given on reasonable terms. Another paragraph announces that in regard to compensation claims 10 per cent. of the amount recovered is retained by the society. On this basis members merely pay 6d. for an introduction to some solicitor, who cannot be much of an ornament to his profession, or he would not lend himself to indiscriminate touting for clients.

---

One of the football betting agents who are now flooding the country with circulars calls himself "A. W. Gamage," of Flushing. There is little doubt that this is an alias impudently assumed by some rascal desirous of trading on the name of Mr. A. W. Gamage, the head of the well-known firm of sporting outfitters, who, it is needless to say, has no connection with any such nefarious business as that of this Flushing tout. In a letter to the Press on the subject Mr. Gamage expresses the opinion that it is nothing short of scandalous that circulars are allowed to be sent through the post encouraging the youth of the nation in football betting with all its attendant temptations and ultimate disgrace.

---

To this protest one of the papers has feebly replied that it would be almost impossible for the Post Office to detect such circulars and prevent their transmission. But there is, of course, a more effectual method of putting an end to the business. Let the Post Office follow the example of the authorities in the United States and in various British colonies, and obtain power to refuse delivery of all letters addressed to parties engaged in fraudulent or illegal businesses. These ready-money betting businesses are absolutely illegal, and it would not be a difficult matter for the P.O. sorters to stop letters containing remittances for such harpies as "A. W. Gamage," or, at any rate, to stop a sufficiently large proportion of their correspondence to make the business unremunerative.

---

A choice specimen of the clap-trap with which touting tipsters extract money from the pockets of credulous fools is furnished by one of the fraternity calling himself "Ortyx," 76, Farringdon Road, E.C. He is "in the know" of two starting-price jobs, both "absolute moral certainties." The information "is dirt-cheap at £10 per message." But does "Ortyx" ask you to pay at that rate? No. "I am determined," he says, "to win you some money," and so he will send you the first wire for 5s., while, if that moral certainty does not come off ("don't worry in the least about defeat," though), you are to have his second "fearless commission" for nothing. One of "Ortyx's" patrons has passed on to me the telegrams which he received. Both horses were beaten, failing even to get a place.

By means of newspaper advertisements, "a public school and Cambridge University man, who has had great experience of moneylenders, through whom he has lost a fortune," announces that he "is now willing to give advice to those contemplating borrowing." He adds that he can arrange loans for persons coming into money under wills or other documents or with fixed life incomes, also for widows restrained from borrowing. Inquirers are requested to write to "Box 760," at an office in Fleet Street. I wonder whether any reader can enlighten me as to the identity of this public school and Cambridge University man? It would not surprise me to hear that he is the same usurer's tout who has from time to time mendaciously claimed that he was at Eton, Harrow, Rugby, Oxford, and Cambridge; but, in any case, "those contemplating borrowing" will do well to beware of advertisements of this character.

---

The Leicester circularising moneylender who hides his real name of Solomon Margolies under what he apparently regards as the more attractive alias of "S. Maggs" is now distributing a reprint of some "letters of appreciation from clients." In each instance the address given at the head of the letter is simply a county—"Sussex," "Norfolk," "Leicestershire," etc.—and the signature of the writer is concealed thus:—"." Of course, it is not impossible that Maggs has really received these curious epistles, but the form in which he presents them is, to say the least, decidedly unconvincing. He evidently does not rate the intelligence of his prospective customers very highly or he would not expect them to be favourably impressed by the statement that "," of "Hampshire," found his courtesy "a revelation."

---

An insignificant charity of which I have lost sight for some little time is the Convalescent Cottage Home, Cumbernauld, Glasgow. Shortly after its name appeared in Truth Cautionary List the home disappeared from Cumbernauld. Recently, however, a lady collector has made her appearance in Glasgow soliciting subscriptions to the Sick Children's Cottage Home, Dullatur. The "hon. treasurer" of the Dullatur Home is given as Miss Millar, and as a Miss Millar occupied the same position in the Cumbernauld institution it looks as if they were one and the same. Perhaps some one in the neighbourhood can enlighten me on the point.

---

Can any of my readers also enlarge my knowledge of the firm of Ruyter, Van Eijk, Mowbray, and Co., Oost Indische Bank, Donkere Gaard, 2, Utrecht, Holland? It appears from a document before me that this firm is ready to receive English lads from fourteen to eighteen years of age for training "to serve in their banking and agency branches in Holland and the British and Dutch East Indies." The period of training is two years, and a premium of £100 has to be paid. In a recent case in which part of the premium had been paid inquiry elicited the fact that the office at Utrecht consisted of an empty shop taken by Mr. G. St. L. Mowbray, and that the firm of Messrs. Ruyter and Co. is apparently unknown in business circles there. Mr. Mowbray has given Oaklea, Tonbridge Road, Maidstone, as his English address for letters, and a letter from Messrs. Ruyter and Co., though dated from Utrecht, bore the Maidstone postmark. All this suggests that the firm's business in Holland, where the pupils are to be trained, is at present very much in nubibus, but perhaps Mr. Mowbray himself can throw a different light on the matter.

---

The latest device of J. Samuda, Limited, the tobacconists, puts into the shade all the trading schemes of the given-away-with-a-pound-of-tea kind that I have ever come across. In a circular marked "private and confidential," but sent out broadcast, the directors offer a "free bonus" of ten fully-paid £1 ordinary shares to each customer paying £5 down for a "cash coupon book," the said coupons entitling him to £5 worth of the company's cigars, cigarettes, or tobacco! This distribution is being made "before inaugurating" a new policy which, according to the circular, will enable the company to earn an annual net profit of 100 per cent. on its ordinary share capital of £45,000. The directors have an idea that this offer "may appear too generous." Not a bit of it. There is nowadays a big public which will greedily swallow the proposal, never doubting that it is a perfectly natural and business-like arrangement for shares value £10, and likely to receive 100 per cent. dividends, to be given away to anybody spending £5 on the purchase of the company's wares

---

This is the season of the year when the second-hand-goods tricksters find furs their best paying line, and accordingly in the Morning Post appear the usual advertisements of Lady B.'s extremely elegant sealskin jacket, worth £25, to be sacrificed for £7 7s., and Mrs. H. E.'s real black fox stole and muff, worth £20, to be given away for £6 6s. A lady who sent for the latter article on approval informs me that the furs are of the most inferior quality, probably not fox at all, and certainly not worth £6 6s., while in regard to "Lady B.'s" bargain, an intimation that if the jacket were really what it was represented to be it might be sent on approval elicited no response. This is only what might be expected. "Lady B." resides at 29, Holland Street, Brixton, and H. E. at 43A, Clapham Road, S.W., and the advertisements are, in all probability, connected with one or other of the businesses in that neighbourhood mentioned in Paragraph 710 of Truth Cautionary List.

---

With reference to the trick advertisement of the Lancashire Warehouse Company, to which attention was drawn in Truth last week, I have received a communication from the company informing me that a "cracked pot of an Irishman has misled" me, and giving me an explanation, in order that when I have carefully perused the same I may inform my "numerious readers" that I have done the firm an injustice. To enable my readers to judge for themselves I give the explanation verbatim et literatim:—

The circumstances are as follows, We have had the advertisment which yourefer to in your paper going for severeal years in many prominient papers and have had some thoushands of orders from all over the united kingdom and never had one complaint before, the case in question which we think it is, it seems some women of waterford wrote and asked us the full meaning of our advertisment (a copy of our answer we enclose) we answerd and gave the said explanation, in due course we received an order from the said women with a 1/- to secure the bargain which we at once acknowledged (a copy of which we all so enclose) and then we waited to receive the balance before we dispatched the goods as we have been robbed most shamefully by persons receivingour goods and promising to pay for them afterwards which payments we never received we thefore have made a hard and fast rule to have all payments before the goods are dispatched and because we would not trust this women we received a threatening letter from some man demanding the 1/- back and because we refuse to refund merely on princpal its seems he got round you to air his grievences in your honourable paper we sencerely trust you will see the way you have been oaxed to write an article to do us am injury.

---

This explanation is a trifle too thin. The advertisement stated that a parcel of goods could be secured on sending 1s. to the Lancashire Warehouse Company. The company sends me two of its printed forms acknowledging receipt of the shilling and informing purchasers that on receipt of a balance the goods will be despatched. One of these forms is altered in ink in order to make it apply to an answer to an advertisement unaccompanied by a shilling. If the advertisement were framed to obtain answers without the shilling, how is it that the company has only one printed form of acknowledgment, and that the form which is a practical acknowledgment of the justice of my criticisms? In any case a firm which retains shillings "on principle" without giving anything in return cannot complain if its actions are misconstrued.

---

A most plausible and elaborate circular, telling of the advantages of appointments as stewards and stewardesses aboard steamships is sent out by A. Wilson, 11, Liverpool Street, King's Cross, London, to people who get into communication with him through his advertisements. It concludes with the usual offer to give information how to obtain one of these lucrative berths in return for a fee of 2s. Both the name and address of Wilson are new to me in this line of the fee-snatching business, though as likely as not he is an old acquaintance under a new alias.

---

There are few offences against the law which receive such differential treatment as that of fortune telling. In Bond Street the business is carried on quite openly and advertised by sandwichmen under the very noses of the police. At Northwich the police employ detectives to prove the offence and magistrates impose a fine of £1. At Preston the police also take similar action, and in a recent case the magistrates fined the fortune teller £25 and costs. Of course the fortune tellers have only themselves to blame if they are so ill-acquainted with their art as to select Preston or Northwich for its practice. But all the same I cannot understand why Bond Street is allowed to remain a fortune tellers' sanctuary.

---

Some particulars of the recent doings of Mr. Ashley Larkins, whose activities on behalf of the unemployed have already formed the subject of warnings in Truth, have been supplied me. Possibly finding the writing of plays and the promotion of balls to be works of vanity, Mr. Larkins has written a book entitled "England's Government of Her Dependencies." It is to be obtained, as per advertisements, from A. L. Hants, 11, Cathedral Mansions, S.W. Simultaneously with the announcement of the publication of this epoch-making volume Mr. Hants advertised for an editor. A gentleman who applied for the position was informed that he would be employed principally at reviewing, and by way of exhibiting his capacity he was invited to send in a notice of Mr. Ashley Larkin's book. Upon his replying that he did not usually purchase the books that he reviewed, Mr. Hants advised him to ask for the book at the British Museum or at the library of his club, as it would be "a very heavy item of expense to send the book free to the numerous persons desiring it."

His curiosity having been aroused by this curious method of obtaining purchasers of "England's Government of Her Dependencies," the gentleman in question thought he would like to see Mr. Hants, and he accordingly paid a visit to 11, Cathedral Mansions. The Mansions turned out to be a block of flats in the Vauxhall Bridge Road, and he found that No. 11 was occupied by Mr. Ashley Larkins, who was supposed to have a secretary named Hants, but that Hants had never been seen. Whether Mr. Hants has or has not an existence apart from Mr. Larkins is immaterial, however. The facts as they stand show that Larkins is still a person against whom the public should be on their guard.

---

A remarkable circular headed "International Exhibition of Arts and Manufactures," Alexandra Palace, has been issued to the tobacco trade by a gentleman who signs his name Chas. Lefrançois. It has occurred to M. Lefrançois that it would be interesting to organise a "Concurrence-exhibition of Cigarettes," and he proposes to do so on the following lines:—Tobacconists are to send him, in two parcels, eight ounces of "Virgenia tobacco cigarettes the cheapest you make" and eight ounces of "Egytian cigarettes the most expensive you make." They are also to send him £2 entrance fee. The cigarettes are to be "submitted to a Jury specialy composed for this effect," who will award the "following merites":—"Deplome a grand prize, Deplome ot honnour or Deplome of a gold medal." The two former will be accompanied by "an exemplary of the jewel cross," of which an illustration is given. An illustration is also given of the gold medal, but the "Deplome of the gold medal" only carries with it the free gift of "a gilt bronze medal." "All adhesions," says M. Lefrançois, must enter on October 5 at the latest, the cigarettes are to be sent on October 6, and the honours distributed on October 16 to 18.

---

But the gem of the circular lies in the last paragraph, which reads as follows:—

> You will find on the other side a ballot of admission that you must send us filled up, sign all the ballot of admission. Unless accompanyed with the amount it will be considered as nothing, before we close we wish to draw your serious attention to the result, the advantage there will be for you in sharing in our exhibition, you may put your Deplome on show, mention of your reward on your products, also on your letter, paper, cards, etc.

Really M. Lefrançois must have a very poor opinion of the intelligence of English cigarette manufacturers if he thinks they are going to give £2 in cash and 1lb of cigarettes in return for his gilt bronze medals, even with the permission to draw public attention to their folly by "putting the Deplome on show" or mentioning it on their notepaper.

---

Mr. Howgrave Graham, the secretary of the Chartered Institute of Patent Agents, desires me to point out that in the title of the article in Truth last week dealing with the conviction of Crozier it was erroneous to describe Crozier as a "patent agent," since he was never registered as such, and that any unregistered person so describing himself is liable to prosecution. I am pleased to do so, though I do not think that I have done either the Chartered Institute or bonâ fide patent agents any substantial injustice, since it was clear from the article itself not only that Crozier was not a patent agent, but that the Institute had been actively engaged in bringing him to justice.

A good deal has been heard of the unhappy lot of the pariah dogs of Constantinople transported to the island of Oxia and condemned to starve there through the Moslem objection to take animal life. The R.S.P.C.A. has made repeated attempts to get the poor beasts mercifully destroyed, and at last success has attended its efforts. The British Ambassador has just informed the secretary of the Society that the animals are being poisoned, and an observer passing close to the island a few days ago could not see a single dog upon it. The result is a tribute to the widespread influence as well as activity of the Society.

---

Every dog has his day, and why not equally every cat? This, I presume, is the reason why the editor of the Animal's Friend informs me that October 1 has been set apart as a cat-day, on which all cat-lovers are asked to make a "special effort to lighten the lot of that neglected and ill-treated race." With this end in view, he encloses a list of cats' homes and shelters, and suggests that donations shall be sent to them. At the head of the list is Mrs. Morgan's lethal chamber, "The London Institution for Lost Cats," at Camden Town. Mrs. Morgan "lightens the lot" of cats by sending them by the speediest possible route to the paradise for cats—wherever that may be—and selling their pelts to a furrier. No objection can be taken to this method of disposing of strays, though it is a work which ought really to be undertaken by the municipality; but she does the work so extravagantly and has shown herself in the past so unsuitable an almoner of charitable funds that I am surprised the editor of the Animal's Friend should recommend her institution for support. He ought to consult Truth Cautionary List.

---

THE FALL OF THE LEAF.

(A Seasonable Idyll.)

Oh, list to an amateur gardener's lay.
I live in the subu'bs,
Removed from Town's hubbubs,
And work in my little back garden all day.

In the spring and the summer 'twas easy enough.
Of the weeds I was master.
They grew; I hoed faster.
But in autumn the nut I've to crack is more tough.

Yes; now are the days of my sorrow and grief:
The era of troubles
Recurs and redoubles;
I'm referring, of course, to the fall of the leaf.

Leaves, leaves! Nothing but leaves!
No cessations! No reprieves!
From early morns to dewy eves,
Leaves, leaves! Nothing but leaves!

Oh, the pangs I endure as they litter the earth!
Yet vainly, to ease 'em,
I snatch up my besom
And sweep, like a nigger, for all I am worth.

The scene of my strenuous labours I scan
With hysterical laughter,
Some three minutes after;
It's quite as untidy as when I began.

Aye, autumn's the time of my sorrow and pain.
Of the leaves I'm not master.
I sweep; they fall faster;
What's swept the next minute wants sweeping again.

Leaves, leaves! Nothing but leaves!
No cessations! No reprieves!
From early morns to dewy eves,
Leaves, leaves! Nothing but leaves!

SCRUTATOR.

MISDIRECTED MANŒUVRES.

IN regard to numbers and organisation the Army Manœuvres which came to an end on Friday were on much the same lines as those of last year. Some 50,000 officers and men collected from the three South of England commands (Eastern, Aldershot, and Southern) were jumbled together in heterogeneous array, two opposing forces being formed—a Blue or invading Army, with headquarters at Sherborne, and, seventy miles east, a Red or defending Army, with headquarters at Aldershot. As in 1909, so in 1910, the improvisation of these two armies was only accomplished by the wholesale dislocation of existing peace organisations, divisions being broken up, brigades redistributed, and commanders and staff put here, there, and anywhere along with troops whom they met for the first time on the manœuvre ground. As I look over the composition of the two forces it seems to me that the names of units, commanders, and staff officers must have been thrown into a bag and their places cast by lot. The Regular troops were first drawn upon, and when these were used up Special Reserve men and Territorials were dug out by hook and crook wherever they could be found to fill up the gaps. With tongue in cheek Sir William Nicholson, the able Chief of the General Staff, has to go through the same Chinese puzzle every year, getting more expert as he goes along in playing the game and in hoodwinking the public into the belief that the country has a military organisation ready for war.

This year a new side-show has been introduced in the shape of a "mobilised division." It sounds realistic enough, and has made good "copy" for the uninstructed pressman; but I find, on examination, that the realism is a sham from beginning to end, and that the so-called mobilisation is only a base counterfeit of the genuine article. The Second Division at Aldershot was chosen for the mobilisation experiment, and in order to bring it up to war strength the First Division was robbed of the Third Infantry Brigade and one of its artillery brigades. Robbing Peter to pay Paul is all very well for peace manœuvres, but it won't do for war when the whole six divisions of the expeditionary force would have to be mobilised at the same time. Then, again, the peace establishments of the battalions of the Second Division were not brought up to war strength with their appointed reservists, but with special service (alias Militia) recruits, thus making a farce of the experiment as a test of effective mobilisation under war conditions. The tail-end of the division came off no better, for the "divisional troops" required to keep up the division's communications were composed of four battalions of the South Midland Territorial Infantry Brigade, which, oddly enough, has its headquarters at Chelsea. This brigade was, of course, in a false position as forming part of a division of the expeditionary force, for, even if it wished to take the field, it could not do so for want of the necessary equipment and training. Taken as a whole, the division presented a mongrel appearance as it marched out of Aldershot with its miscellaneous lot of combatants, its scratch staff, and long train of hired horses and wagons. Colonel Gädke, who has been acting as correspondent for the Daily Telegraph, criticised the slow marching of the division, but, considering its composition, it is hardly surprising that the infantry brigades only averaged twelve miles a day, and that, even with this slow rate, many men fell out by the way.

The manœuvres themselves call for no special comment. They were humdrum and unilluminating throughout, teaching no fresh lessons, and affording no new experience. The selected commanders of the two forces, Sir Charles Douglas and Sir Herbert Plumer, both ex-Army Council men, are not "flyers" as strategists or "thrusters" as tacticians, and even if they were, they were given no chance of showing their prowess, as their hands were tied by the "special ideas" which the Directing Staff drew up for their guidance. As I remarked in commenting on last year's manœuvres, the English practice of limiting the Commander's initiative by specific instructions is in contradistinction to the German system, which gives him a free hand and requires him to use his freedom with fearless regard to consequences. With English manœuvres there is too much playing to the gallery, the General Staff thinking it necessary to arrange their "special ideas" so as to ensure the opposing forces meeting for a final sham fight for the amusement of Cabinet Ministers, newspaper correspondents, and the female relatives of the combatants. In German manœuvres tactical collision is confined to detached cavalry reconnaissance fights and outpost affairs, and when there is any risk of collision between masses the troops are drawn off and the operations brought to a close. The German view is that sham fights at close quarters have no instructional value in the absence of bullets, which are the deciding factors as between victory and defeat. Umpires' decisions based on blank-cartridge fights are mere guesswork, and take no account of the moral causes which influence battle tactics. Such ridiculous encounters as took place last year round Faringdon Hill and this year on Compton Downs are unknown in Continental manœuvres, and must have been the cause of much merriment to the foreign attachés who had been invited to look on.

If the Directing Staff wished for realistic results they should have placed the two forces in position, and then left them alone. We should then have seen whether General Douglas with his two handy well-trained divisions of regular troops could have pushed aside General Plumer's unwieldy division, and gained the road to London. As it was, the manœuvres were wholly uninstructive in regard to lessons which they ought to have taught. The two Generals had no more power than two pawns, the command being taken out of their hands and transferred to the Director. This is not as it should be, and not what the country ought to get in return for the £250,000 which these manœuvres cost. It is bad enough to waste money, but it is worse to spend it wrongly; yet this is what was done during the whole of last week by those who conducted the manœuvres, and who deliberately and knowingly set themselves to teach officers and men how to do what they ought not to do in war, and what if they did do could only end in disaster.

THE LAW AND THE BUCKET SHOPS.

Among the papers handed to my City Editor in connection with a recent bucket-shop swindle were some letters which throw an instructive light on the notorious failure of the authorities to enforce the criminal law in cases of this description. In this particular case the victim was advised by a solicitor that it was essentially a matter for a criminal prosecution, not a civil action. He accordingly wrote to Scotland Yard, whence he was referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions. The latter replied that as the bucket shop was conducted within the limits of the City of London the application should be made to the City Solicitor. From the City Solicitor the following answer was received:—

Without seeing the documents I am unable to express an opinion as to whether a criminal offence has been committed, but, assuming that to be the case, criminal proceedings would not assist you to recover the money which you claim from the above-named firm.

I notice you have consulted your solicitors on the subject. I suggest that you should take their advice as to commencing civil proceedings against the firm.

I have no power to institute criminal proceedings, and I only act on the instructions of the sitting alderman after the case has been launched by the person complaining.

It was practically certain that civil proceedings would prove abortive—such slippery rogues as these bucket-shop keepers can always contrive to dodge any judgments that are obtained against them—and the gentleman to whom the above letter was addressed did not see why he should throw good money after bad by embarking upon a criminal prosecution in the public interest. He considered, as most people do, that a prosecution in the public interest should be undertaken at the public expense. Our present system of administering criminal justice is, however, apparently based upon the theory that the suppression of financial frauds is not a matter of sufficient importance to justify official expenditure. The police are freely employed to bring to justice all sorts of small offenders. No pains are spared in securing the capture and conviction of the pickpocket or the shoplifter, but the thief who does his thieving under the mendacious pretence that he is a stock and share dealer is left unmolested, unless, perchance, he happens to include among his victims somebody unselfish enough to incur the trouble and cost of sending him to prison. Bucket-shop swindling is nowadays practised to an extent which is but dimly realised by the mass of the public. One may leave out of the reckoning those of the firms, "exchanges," "corporations" and so forth which lure innocents into idiotic, one-sided gambles on the "cover" system, but are nevertheless careful not to overstep the line dividing trickery from fraud. The downright swindling is done in various different ways. There are, for example, the bucket-shops which habitually play the welsher's game of "heads I win, tails you lose," and plead the Gaming Act if anybody is so misguided as to waste money in suing them. Up to a point that kind of swindling may be beyond the reach of the criminal law, but there are cases in which it is systematically carried out under circumstances which would make a conviction quite possible. Then there are the harpies who recklessly fill their circulars with gross, open, palpable lies which, if the law were efficiently administered, would at once be made the basis of a prosecution for obtaining or attempting to obtain money by false pretences.

A particularly flagrant and barefaced form of fraud is that in which the bucket-shop keeper "guarantees" his customers against the loss of their capital, or even goes to the length of "guaranteeing" more or less handsome profits from the imaginary speculations in which the capital is supposed to be employed. Anybody fit to be at large might be expected to perceive that the man who does that writes himself down as a rogue. As a matter of fact, however, plenty of people are ready to hand over their cash on the strength of such "guarantees," and until they discover that they have been duped it never strikes them as in any way extraordinary that any individual or firm should undertake to carry out speculative transactions at their own risk for the enrichment of strangers whose acquaintance they make through advertisements or circulars. Sometimes the victim is induced to part with more money by a preliminary payment of an alleged "profit," thrown out as a sprat to catch a mackerel. Occasionally the bucket-shop sharp even makes a series of such payments to a few selected customers whom he uses as decoy ducks. Only a few weeks ago I came across a case in which a clergyman had quite innocently acted in that capacity. Believing that the remittances which reached him were really the proceeds of successful "deals" in American railroad shares, he had allowed himself to be used as a reference by a swindler. Bucket-shops run on these lines are constantly being opened—and closed. As a rule nothing happens to the proprietors. They may be perfectly well known to the police, but there is never or hardly ever a prosecution. They remove to a fresh office, and under a new alias play the old game over again. Nor is it solely in connection with speculative "operations" that bucket-shop frauds are perpetrated. Another fairly common swindle is the issue of circulars whereby investors are deluded into sending cash for the purchase of shares which are never delivered to them, or into selling and transferring shares for which they are never paid.

It is an unpleasant reflection that London, which prides itself upon being the financial centre of the world, is likewise the headquarters of a horde of unprincipled swindlers of the bucket-shop species. Nowhere else are frauds of this sort committed with such impunity. The futility of looking to the law for a remedy is so well recognised that not infrequently solicitors who have been consulted suggest an exposure in Truth as the only penalty that can be inflicted upon rogues whose doings should ensure their appearance at the Old Bailey. As my readers are aware, such exposures are continually published in my "Mammon" columns, but, though they serve as warnings to the public, it cannot be expected that they will put an end to these easy and lucrative methods of fraud. That result can only be achieved by a thoroughly vigilant and vigorous administration of the criminal law. Proceedings ought not to be left to the initiative of one of the dupes of the swindler, and if the police or other authorities really have no power to institute a prosecution, then powers should be given them to do so. The present state of things is a scandal and disgrace to the City.

THE BARNUM BRIGADE.

Pat upon my request for further information concerning the Naval and Military Tournament of Empire came an invitation from the Press Director offering to give me information concerning it. The invitation definitely stated that the enterprise "had been undertaken with the full approval of and much valuable assistance from the War Office." The picture of the War Office making use of a huge travelling spectacle—it would, perhaps, be unfair to call it a circus—as a recruiting agency afforded me the liveliest curiosity. Such a departure from precedent opened up illimitable prospects for the rivalry of other Government departments. One foresaw a Treasury spectacle to bring home to the minds of the people the blessings attendant upon taxation of land with a prologue illustrative of the ease with which Form 4 can be filled up; or a Local Government Board show illustrating how Bumble may become a real guardian of the poor and pauperism be abolished from the land. I accordingly hastened to take advantage of the offer. But my anticipations were not realised. I found that the War Office approval was of a perfunctory nature, and its precise limits can be gathered from the guarded official disclaimer sent out by the Secretary of the War Office to the press generally, that the enterprise "has not been undertaken with the authority of the Army Council, who have had before them no particulars which could warrant their official approval of the scheme." The promoters appear to have assumed that a benevolent interest in their idea on the part of individuals could be translated into official approval. They have been disillusioned. The War Office will lend them guns and arrange for recruiting officers to follow the show from town to town, but further than that it will not go. It may be, of course, that the Army Council has found it impossible to go further in the way of approval owing to the same difficulty which confronts myself. To my mind the most important consideration in the whole scheme is the financial one. The preliminary expenditure in organising a regiment of over 1,000 men, with its horses, baggage, and paraphernalia, must amount to a considerable sum. The weekly cost of running the Tournament is estimated at £2,500. I have been promised the names of the financiers who are responsible for providing the funds, but at the time of going to press they have not reached me. If the War Office is equally in the dark it is easy to understand its refusal of its official approval. Such official approval would, it is suggested, make the War Office responsible for the salaries of the men engaged for the three years of their engagement in the event of their employers' default.

But the absence of official sanction by no means implies that the show will not be a good one or that it will prove a financial failure. People like military shows, and if the promoters of this one have found four capitalists to guarantee them an outlay of £2,500 weekly for three years after putting up the capital for initial expenses they are to be congratulated. The idea originated with a Mr. Sylvester, whose long experience with Messrs. Barnum and Bailey is both a guarantee for the management of the enterprise and its drawing possibilities. He informs me that he has put money of his own into it, and that he has found the other capitalists. I suppose that as their names have not been supplied to me they prefer to remain in the background. This is a pity, for they are by way of being philanthropists. They are going to be content with the return of their capital, plus 10 per cent. interest per annum, any balance of profit going to charity. The combination of business and charity is not a much happier union than that of business and patriotism. Neither pair run well in double harness, and a team of three of them would need a particularly accomplished whip. If the promoters like to give any of their profits to charity by all means let them do so, but let it be clearly understood that business and not charity is the main consideration. But I really think that if Mr. Sylvester will take counsel with his common sense, he will drop the recruiting plea and depend upon the merits of his show for attracting audiences. Of course, he is justified in beating the patriotic big drum to attract attention, but nevertheless the show is not likely to increase recruiting to any appreciable extent, nor to bring home to any one who does not already recognise it the duty of defending the Empire if attacked. With the object lesson of "An Englishman's Home" before them, people might be induced to think that the patriotic plea was merely advanced to advertise a show which would not be worth consideration on its merits. If it is a good show people will go to see it. They will very likely be amused. But to suppose that it will conduce to a patriotic spirit or fill the depleted ranks of the British Army is the veriest nonsense.

WHY DO WE WASH?

The sage who evolved the dictum that cleanliness is next to godliness was probably the advertising manager of an enterprising soap firm. In no other way can one account for a catch-phrase at once so misleading and so detrimental to the human race generally. It is responsible for half the snobbery and hypocrisy of the so-called civilised world; it shows an utter disregard for the natural instincts; it is very probably at variance with our higher moral nature. Has not personal uncleanliness been associated in the East with the higher religious life from time immemorial, and is it not so still, to a great extent, in the South of Europe?

Frankly speaking, who wants to wash? Of course, the answer will be, "We all do." But that merely proves how absolute is the human enslavement to the fetish of cleanliness. I have now and again met people who were dirty; but never have I met a man who said he was dirty and liked it. As a rule, man spoils the glorious independence of being dirty by servile professions of being clean, in spite of appearances to the contrary, and a brave spirit who should venture to protest against the fetish of cleanliness would have to prepare for social ostracism, the more deadly from the fact that the ostracisers would thereby expect to raise their own doubtful reputations. For to be clean represents orthodoxy. Your neighbour may have all the vices under the sun provided he change his collar often enough. The first adjective on a servant's character is "clean." Even your workhouse tramp is compelled to make a declaration of faith by total immersion in a fluid into which he may go first or fourteenth on the list—proving once again how the letter overcometh the spirit.

Yet, considered without prejudice, cleanliness is really one of those unnatural conditions against which it is time somebody raised a protest. Natural man hates soap; it is one of his earliest plaints that the soap has got into his eyes. A large section of mankind grow perceptibly dirtier as they grow older, which shows that experience does not testify in favour of cleanliness. I well remember at the time of one of the great Thames floods that an old almshouse woman, while being rescued, was dropped from the narrow plank into the water. Thanks to an unusually sound constitution—the reason of which may be seen at a glance—she recovered sufficiently from the shock to remark that it was the first bath she had ever taken, and she prayed the Lord it might be the last. The small boy's natural dislike of the tooth-brush is notorious, yet such is the competition for a reputation for cleanliness that I remember hearing of a juvenile camping-out party where the camp tooth-brush was actually chained to the tent-pole. I only mention this to show to what lengths hypocrisy may be carried.

Nor should the question of expense be disregarded. It is very expensive to be clean—in the artificially accentuated sense of the term. People encourage thrift in the poor at one moment, and with the same breath coerce them into spending on yellow soap money that might well have gone into the much-vaunted Savings-bank. Consider the time, labour, and expense which would be saved did we dispense with the outward show of scrubbing-brushes, mops, dusters, and all the elaborate mechanical contrivances for cleanliness which steal away the people's bread. Why consecrate a chamber in every house to the idol of cleanliness? Why the ostentation of elaborate arrangements of "hot and cold," when if you wash one moment you have only to do it again in an hour or two?

It is time some one protested against the unfairness of the system. A has no right to feel superior to B because he wears fourteen clean shirts to B's seven. There are still millions of people in the world who are living happily and comfortably dirty. If we never washed there is no doubt we should add considerably to the picturesqueness of our appearance, substituting for our present pallidness deep rich colours beloved of the poet or painter. It is useless to talk of the Simple Life when an artificial standard of cleanliness demands all our best energies. As long as we insist on the artificial dissolution of the nice warm covering provided by a beneficent nature, so long shall we be forced to spend unnecessary money in providing extra clothing. It was no mere climatic influence which enabled the Britons to be comfortable in woad. The consistently dirty are relieved of half the worries of a complex civilisation; a rub against a tree, a roll in the grass, and Nature does her own cleaning.

The fetish of cleanliness is not to be overcome in a moment. But men have died for smaller causes than this, and in an age which refuses to be bound by tradition and convention any of us may live to see the long-overdue revolt against washing.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

WHILE trees everywhere are swept down to be turned into rag newspapers, Belgium busies itself with planting. Its townships have instituted tree festivals, and I have just come from one of them in the Black Country round Mons. What do you think of a public park, already a beautiful and refreshing one, on the district of terrils of heaps of colliery rubbish and smelters' scoria, resembling Cannock Chase? A landscape gardener has turned the rough inequalities, similar to the chopping waves of the Straits of Dover, into hills and dells and charming "points of view." M. Alphand did no better in transforming Les Carrières d'Amérique into the Butte de Chaumont as we now see it. The air of the terrils thus transformed is now wholesome. It used to be poisoned with carbonic acid, which we know gives health and strength to trees. They suck what is good air for them, but deadly air to us, from long distances and overhead, an effect noted by aviators in the great Circuit de l'Est.

The next generation will see in the dales and along the drives on the erst-blackened flats Japanese trees of the gigantic species planted in Japan along the avenues to the temples. Matsus and cedars yet saplings will brave storms on headlands created on purpose to be decorated by them. When one climbs a sugarloaf hill one already sees a vast continuity of sylvan verdure. The trees of rapid growth will in time make way for those that come up slowly, such as the ash, the oak, the beech. That lady of the forest, the elegant birch, rises in tall beauty. To interest every one in the work of sylvan transformation, places are marked out for the greater and the lesser towns, for villages and town lands, and lists of the trees they can plant with festa' gladness are sent to them. Each town, etc., has its day, or Sunday. The burgomaster and inhabitants come out in their finest clothes, a band preceding them and playing popular airs. The church and musical societies furnish singers, who reserve their vocal effects for the tree-planting scene and the banquet that follows. The Belgians like to eat and drink together at a common table, and sometimes, perhaps, their healthy appetites might seem to the squeamish foreigner to draw them into guzzling. They are extremely hospitable, and all commercial sharpness disappears when, as you say in England, their legs are under the mahogany. The territorial aristocracy are glad to sell the blighted lands of the Black Country to corporations.

Every one knows that the best burgundy is to be found in Belgium. So, it seems to me, is now the best champagne and bordeaux. To drink copiously is the rule at all feasts. The gaiety is a little loud, but never riotous, and good-nature prevails. The feast is prolonged from an early hour in the forenoon or afternoon until sundown, but nobody leaves with an uncertain step or a stammering tongue. The Flemish head keeps level, and the quantum of wine that might set a weak head topsy-turvy has no bad effect on those tree planters. The showplace of the Mons district is Beloil, the seat of the Prince de Ligne, a lordly place indeed. The house is square, massive, depending for its effect on size, solid dignity, an air of wealth, and the four resolute towers at the corners. It resembles the old part of the Château of Rambouillet, but is more imposing, and gives an idea of home comfort and care that is absent from that official residence. As to the orangery, it surpasses that of Versailles. Nothing can be more stately than the avenue, which ends in a forecourt set round with stables and other offices that have their doors the other side. The cour d'honneur is in the French style, and though imposing has a stimulating effect on the visitor. It would take me too long to lead you through the State and ordinary sitting-rooms. The name of the place is derived from the wide pond or lake from which the façade looking on the park proudly rises. The books, engravings, miniatures, and some manuscripts of the eighteenth-century Prince de Ligne the memoirist, were destroyed with much of the furniture he brought from Paris in the fire of two or three years ago.

Señor Moret, who took office as a Liberal on the morrow of Ferrer's execution, is in Paris for a few days. He comes from the Swiss Upper Alps, among which he has been staying for an air cure. They answered as a nerve tonic. His daughter, who is his private secretary whether he be in or out of office, also found benefit from the bracing cold of icy peaks. She is also his remembrancer, as she has a singularly retentive memory, is well read, and, what is rare in a bookish person, is very observant. The ex-Premier looks grave, depressed, and fagged. He has been so ever since his great bereavement. His Spanish sensitiveness has been tried by the circumstances under which he retired from power, and the wound it then received is not healed. He had, before this happened, been under the impression of having won the full confidence of the King, and that a vote of the Cortes alone would oblige him to quit office. Just the contrary took place. The dismissal was likened by the papers to that of a valet who had, unknown to himself, incurred the displeasure of a capricious master. They also spoke of the King not having given him time to act like the well-bred dog. If Castelejas had not been asked to replace him he might have believed he had fallen into disfavour because the persons who had the King's ear accused him of coquetting with the Republicans.

Castelejas has also not alone merely to coquet with them but govern with their help. But he has found a diversion in his dealings with the foreign monks and nuns who have been pouring into Spain, and, by their adroit competition, taking the bread out of the mouths of the Spanish religious orders. The Vatican, in siding with the former, has almost made his policy popular in places where it would not otherwise be tolerated. This enables him to keep Moroccan affairs in the background. And then the heads of the Morocco party have been, since Easter, at the seaside. As the King is all for retrieving in the Rif the glory they lost in Cuba, they can do with him as they please. Republicans are modern; they know what modern ironclads and artillery and the transport of troops must cost. How, then, could the King have pardoned the alleged coquetries of Señor Moret with them?

I hear from Spain that the King, on his return journey from Madrid, did not show himself at those stations where the train slowed or halted that were supposed to be Catholic in politics. He went through Zumarraga, where, at other times, he came to the window to receive and return salutes, and often shake hands with acquaintances on the platform. But he did not appear. He was going to preside at a council, and await in his capital events that do not come to pass. The two Queens and the Infantidos remained behind. The Infantida Beatrice becomes the chief personage of the Royal group. She is a most determined little body, and not to be turned by nursery-maids' tricks from her purpose. The Infantidos now appear on the beach in combinations that, were they red and white instead of blue and white, would be blazers. As M. de Lesseps once remarked, "Tout va aux enfants," and so the young Princes do not look the worse for the zebra pattern of their woollen clothing. The youngest boy has every grace that a child of his age can be gifted with. His laughter is light-hearted and joyous, and his face beams with cordial impulse and affability. The Prince of the Asturias has not the same hold on the heart-strings of those around, and his laughter is rather dry, as they walk along the spring-board to take their plunge bath, but there may be a good deal latent in him.

As they walk along the spring-board the Port Captain goes beside it, holding the hand of the foremost. A bathing man takes his place at the water's edge, and when he advances some distance stands out from it and tells one or the other boy to jump towards him. Each obeys with hearty spirit, and the man picks him up and teaches him how to swim and float. The other Infantido looks on until it is his turn. As yet, neither has been trusted by himself in deep water. The grey-bearded Port Captain is a retired naval officer, and a typical hidalgo, but not loquacious, for he is remarkably silent—nor emphatic, for his simplicity is striking. He looks very much the quiet gentleman. The sign of his office is a flat navy cap with some badge over the peak. His figure is tall, lithe, elastic, the carriage graceful, the eye watchful, and one sees that he is used to command. He stays aloof from the young princes except when they are going down the plank. But his eye is always on them, and his naval whistle ready for use. They are, therefore, safe.

It is true that the Queen Mother intends to cease residence at the royal palace in Madrid. She is to live in a house she is having built for herself. This arrangement is not due to any discord between her and the Queen, but to a desire to remain mistress in an establishment of her own. She was mistress from an early age to her marriage as Abbess of an Order of Highborn Ladies in Austria, and as Regent she shut herself in a cloister, directing State affairs on Conservative lines, and reducing the Law for Public Instruction to a dead letter. She knew nothing of Spain, or of its needs beyond what she saw of squalor in her drive to and from a Lady Shrine in a slum neighbourhood in Madrid, and in the Marinas to the West of Fuentarabia and San Sebastian. Had she known anything of the wealth and power of the United States she would not have forced the Sagasta Cabinet to declare war against them, for her judgment is good on facts submitted to it. Her education made her an excellent administrator of her private fortune and her very considerable savings, and so far as her Abbatial training in early life admitted, she was a judicious and certainly a devoted mother. She now wants also to be able to receive visits from the Nuncio and her brothers without affording an excuse to certain journals for saying she is a link between the Vatican and the King on the one side, and between him and the triplice on the other side.

---

A left-hand queen (widowed) is now an object of curiosity at Versailles. She stays at a hotel overlooking the park in a handsome suite of rooms, and a lady accompanies her in her melancholy walks in the retired avenues. Her appearance is familiar to habitués of Biarritz in its spring season when so many Russian Grand Dukes and Grand Duchesses go there. Her air is imposing rather than dignified, and not without a something suggestive of self-defensive or assertive militancy that might become a Clorinda. There are persons who know what fine society of the cosmopolitan order is who think this aristocratic and speak of it as such. In stature she is tall, and what might be called a fine woman. Her age might figure on a descriptive passport as being entre deux ages. The long thick crape veil is so arranged as to come a little over the forehead and to fall on both sides. This keeps the hair hidden, and leaves full visual scope to rather fine eyes. The gown and coat are of coarse black cloth, such as a Dowager-Empress of Russia might wear. The dame pour accompagner, as Versaillists call her, is in court mourning. She is believed to be a lady of quality who has had monetary losses. Both are polyglot. Waiters, buttons, and hotel manager refuse to satisfy curiosity on the subject of this lady. A financial magnate who has been a good deal spoken of quite lately has been to pay respects and renew condolences, in his case bien senties. Other visitors muffled up and in motors have called to leave cards.

---

The most distinguished reception that M. Clemenceau has received from the Senates and Governments of Argentine and Brazil, and his success as a lecturer, place him on a high pinnacle. The Temps regularly records the great honours heaped on him. The finest feather in his cap is his success in placing the literary works of Frenchmen of talent or genius beyond the reach of pirates. In consequence of this victory the Société de Gens de Lettres prepare to give him a triumphal banquet on his return. He had not time to embrace the whole great South American A.B.C., as Argentine, Brazil, and Chili are now familiarly named over there. The three, it appears, want ironclads, submersibles, acros, and modern artillery to defend themselves against either or both of those rival virtuosos of public speaking—Theodore and William. William is supposed to intend, when his big navy is ready, to drop down on Brazil. He has there a German people in a rather flaccid nation—a jumble of black skins, brick-coloured skins, maroons, half-castes, and quadroons. The Sao Paolo white population is homogeneous, lives in a tonic climate, is well educated, and is distinctly German. "William's big navy," to quote Marshal Fonséca, who is now here, "must have coaling harbours." Ergo, we are to reason, he will try to secure one in South Brazil through the help there of German colonists.

It does not occur to the marshal that all those colonists would have to lose in slipping from under the flag of easy-going Brazil to place themselves under the mastery of a Kaiser by Divine right. One learns self-respect in working a plantation of one's own in a new country in a fine climate.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

ALMOST every village in the British Isles, dear Lady Betty, has founded a city in the Colonies!

Private England and Public England are opposing forces. The narrow strips of road and path are the divided portion of the latter; almost all land besides is securely enclosed for the former with walls, railings, palings, fences, or hedges. Were the Alps in England they would be private property, and a paling would surround their base.

As the facilities for emigrating increase, Dreadnoughts will be less needed to keep the enemy out than to keep the would-be exiles in.

The Public is a regrettable evil here still, as it was to the successive conquerors of England, who entertained the utmost contempt for the vanquished and dreaded the latter might regain ascendency and recover the lands of which they had been despoiled. The attitude prevails almost unchanged to the present amongst those who constitute the "governing class" in this country.

"We are all Public now" is the cry which will indicate the final removal of the conquerors' conditions in our midst.

. . . . .

The foreigners who emigrate to England never undertake agricultural labour; they know how unprofitable and unfavourable an employment it is in this country. They will labour as navvies, mechanics, servants or in any other capacity but this. Is it surprising that the English desert the land here for the town and the Colonies?

* * * * * *

The members of the Peerage may be divided into three classes; the Lords of chivalry, the Lords of the Court, and the Lords of the counter.

Of the first class there are few representatives left; of the second, the origin of most of the titles is discreditable; and of the third, the majority of the Peerages have been bought for cash.

. . . . .

When the figure-head affects to be the rudder the ship is in danger. At the best the Peers in England to-day are but figure-heads; they propose to steer the community!

* * * * * *

There are the New Incompetents, and they are not to be compared with the old. The incompetents of the past squandered their wealth on riotous living; their successors ruin themselves through speculation. The former had the good qualities of their improvidence; the latter have mainly the faults of their rapacity. The heroes of the plays of the past were frequently spendthrifts beneath whose failings the intelligent heroine, and the more honourable characters of the piece, perceived solid virtues. Does any author now represent a speculating scapegrace as a hero in disguise?

It appears to have escaped observation that every West End bankrupt now ascribes his failure to unsuccessful speculation. The newspapers of thirty years ago would be searched in vain to discover such an explanation for bankruptcy amongst the members of the "upper class." "Society" is undoubtedly becoming more designing than it was; the indifference to money which was an engaging characteristic of the well-bred is vanishing fast.

* * * * * *

One of the treasures of Buckinghamshire is the church at Stewkley. The church is a magnificent example of Norman architecture, and is in remarkable preservation. It is said to have no equal but the celebrated church at Iffley, close to Oxford. The latter, however, is of a purer style.

The local authorities, it appears, are building on to the church at Stewkley. It is assumed the addition is to be a vestry. Though the work is still incomplete, many strongly disapprove of the alteration, insisting that any "improvement" of the kind will cause disfigurement. The complaints would be more effectively dealt with by Mr. Clement Shorter—the author of the valuable and attractive volume, "The Highways and Byways in Buckinghamshire"—than by the present writer, who will content himself with directing public attention to the matter.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

INDIANS IN THE TRANSVAAL.

Sir,—In your issue of August 3 you have a few remarks about the situation in South Africa as regards the question of Indian immigration. As I see them, the fundamental points of the question are these:—

A hundred years ago South Africa was a waste country, inhabited by immense tribes of ferocious savages. Eventually the two nations concerned—Boers and British—subdued the country and civilised it. Now the country is held by force of arms. There is a constant menace from the immense black population, and this population is only kept in check by the armed strength of the white population.

Recently there has been an Asiatic invasion, which threatens the prosperity of the whites. There has been much nonsense talked about this being due to the superior thriftiness of the Asiatic. This thrift, of which so much is made, consists in the following: The Asiatic is prepared to live with his family in a mud-hut of about two rooms with no sanitary arrangements. His clothing will not fill a Gladstone bag. He requires no furniture other than a few string beds, some cooking pots of metal, and a few blankets—total cost of these for a family being two or three pounds. His food is of the plainest—probably nothing but flour for "chapattis," odds and ends of vegetables, a little butter, salt, and meat perhaps once a week or so as a treat. He requires no recreation beyond perhaps a short walk in the evening. Now, it is open to you to argue that this standard of living is a desirable one, but a statement that does not admit of argument is that the whites cannot conform to it.

Now as to how this affects the situation. For an instance I imagine a district served by a "store" which has a turnover of £5,000. Reckoning his profits at Prosperous and Progressive—The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada, 93, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.

5 per cent., a European storekeeper will clear, say, £250 a year—enough, perhaps, to keep him and his family in moderate comfort. To this place comes an Indian whose income in India was, perhaps, £25 a year. To this man £100 a year is a princely sum, and he can attain this by setting up a store and aiming at a profit of about 2 per cent. (with the turnover of £5,000). The inevitable result is that the white man is "crowded out."

So much for "store-keeping," but surely the same arguments apply to practically all walks of life. The Asiatic is not much less efficient in all than the white man, but his standard of living throughout is infinitely lower.

This sums up the general situation as I see it, and the conclusion to be drawn from the above is that, broadly speaking, the whites are justified in excluding Asiatics.

Now two other points:—First as to the methods adopted to get rid of the Asiatics. As to this I am not qualified to speak, all information on the subject being so confused; but it must be remembered that the Asiatics have used every resource known to them to resist exclusion, whether these resources are legal or otherwise. It has been a stern battle fought out round by round, with no controlling rules on the Asiatic side, and is it surprising that some of the methods adopted by their adversaries should be questionable? The second point is this: Supposing we admit the Asiatic point of view in its entirety—admit free immigration with no restriction. My idea is that there would be at once a great flood of immigration. The inevitable result would be an immense decrease in the white population. Now, can the Indian immigrants fill the gap so caused in the defences against the black menace? I say most emphatically No.—Yours truly,

X.

Nowshera.

---

VOTES AND WAGES.

Sir,—Will you once more allow me a little space to explain that wages would not rise automatically as a direct result of votes, simply because when the vote was given other intermediary steps would be necessary to gain the standardisation of wages? Thus, for example, a soldier may have a weapon in his hand, but unless he voluntarily brings certain muscles into play he will certainly not kill the foe. So it was with the working man. His enfranchisement in 1867 put a powerful weapon into his hand, which he used to force from his enemies advantage after advantage, beginning with the legalisation of trade unions by the Acts of 1871 and 1876, till at last, as a result of many actions, he has obtained the proud position which he now occupies to-day.

With regard to women's trade unions, Sir John Gorst, in his address to women workers said, that until they had the vote, women's unions were only in the first stage of trade union activity in which they could only draw attention to the evil, and point out a remedy. Of the second stage, that of enforcing legislation, they are not yet capable, and this is the most effective of all.

Your remarks on my instance given from the present position of the women compositors in Edinburgh are scathing, but not quite what I should have anticipated from you.

I should be glad to offer one or two criticisms on them. The masters themselves said that the women were as efficient as the men, and indeed for some of the typesetting work, demanding taste, delicacy of touch, dexterity, and neatness, women were better qualified. As to your criticism on the squeezing-out process, the result of the men's strike is an answer in itself. The men's trade union has the backing up of Parliamentary influence, which has compelled the employers to pay the men a minimum wage. They could also have compelled the employer to pay the women the same minimum wage, and so stop the undercutting process in a more far-sighted way than they are doing now, and then "let the best man win." Instead, the employers dared not risk losing all their men workers, who number 3,000 to the women's 800, and dared not risk the action of the effective men's trade union, so they have caved in.

It is known that about 8 per cent. of the women workers leave the trade annually to marry, which means that more and more men can get into the trade before 1916. But all the success of the men may be traced back to the omnipotent leverage which they possess of the vote, which means that they can start the lever, which in the end produces the desired result. It is in short a case in which the vote-supported trade union drives the politically powerless trade union to the wall.—Yours, etc.,

Emily Wilding Davison (B.A. London).

22, Titchborne Street, Hyde Park, W.,
September 22, 1910.

---

Truth Cautionary List for 1910, 128 pages bound in cloth, price 1s. net, by post 1s. 2d., is now ready, and may be obtained from all booksellers and railway bookstalls.

MAMMON.

ROUND THE MARKETS.

Business Still Narrow—Investors Sated with New Stocks—The Better Labour Outlook—Havana Railway Dividend.

THE record of the Stock Markets last week was disappointing to those who have been predicting a speculative outburst as soon as the holidays were over. The volume of business was thin, and for the most part it was found difficult to keep values even steady. Various excuses were put forward to explain this state of affairs, such as sales of option stock at the end of the September quarter and forced selling by people who had bought too many rubber shares. Both these influences undoubtedly count, but the underlying cause of the present inertia and heaviness of markets is probably to be found in the enormous output of new securities made earlier in the year. It is necessary to remind those who are surprised because the public's appetite for shares seems jaded that the new securities which investors were asked to absorb in the first six months of this year alone amounted to considerably more than the aggregate for the whole of the year 1909. Investors and underwriters have had a gorgeous banquet, and while the process of digestion is going on markets cannot be expected to move at a gallop. The fact that this banquet has given indigestion to so many may mean additional delay in the celebration of the next.

Apart from rubber shares the declines in prices where such have occurred are not extensive. Foreign bonds as usual have been stoutly maintained. The market was inclined to react a little at one time on the various rumours about an Anglo-German Syndicate stealing a march upon the French houses which were negotiating for the new Turkish loan, but it was soon satisfactorily explained that the British authorities had no intention of doing anything that would prejudice the position of Paris, and that Sir Ernest Cassel, whose name had been mentioned in connection with the rumour referred to, had advised the Ottoman authorities to accept the French terms. This information produced a distinctly good effect upon the Paris Bourse. The Home Railway market has shown a firm tendency, though buyers will have to be more numerous if the market is to blossom out into real activity. During the week the labour position has cleared considerably. The points at issue in the cotton trade and amongst the Great Northern employees have been referred to arbitration, which may be taken as assuring a continuance of peace. No tangible result was reached at the Edinburgh conference between the Shipbuilders Employers' Federation and the Boilermakers' Executive, but the way appears to have been paved for an early settlement of the trouble, the only points not yet finally agreed upon being minor points of detail.

Americans continue to see-saw in a manner which does not very seriously try the nerves of either "bulls" or "bears." It is still evident that the market is being upheld by forces in a position to control it, and the "bears" since the surprise given by the effect of the Maine elections have been indisposed to take liberties. An interesting event last week was the legal decision given against the attempt of the State of Minnesota to enforce upon the railroads a 2 cent per mile maximum passenger fare and lower freights. This decision was, perhaps, to be expected in view of the fact that the State, and others which have passed similar laws, were usurping the rights of the Federal authorities as vested in the Inter-State Commerce Commission. At the same time, it must be borne in mind that the broad question of higher freight rates raised by the recent application of the Railroads has still to be settled by the Inter-State Commission. Mexican Rails have been inclined to waver, on profit taking before the dividend which is due to be declared to-morrow. Argentine Rails have kept steady, not much effect being produced by the issue of another £1,000,000 4½ per cent. debenture stock by the B.A. and Pacific. The United of Havana Railway has declared a dividend of 4 per cent. for 1909-10, against 2 per cent. for the previous year. The results are in accordance with the estimate published in Truth of May 25 last. The need of strengthening reserves has not been forgotten, in fact the total appropriations are £25,000 more than a year ago. Havanas give a yield at present price of not quite 5 per cent., so that the course of the market must depend entirely upon prospects for the new sugar crop. Fortunately conditions up to the present are favourable, though it will be another three months before the size of the harvest can be determined with anything like precision.

RUBBER.

Signs of Revival—Some Big Yields at Current Prices—Inch Kenneth—Junior Shares for Capital Appreciation.

If in a gloomy week any sign of encouragement can be said to have appeared it is the announcement of the impending issue of the balance of the capital of the Rubber Plantations Investment Trust. During the slump the market magnates have stood aside, preferring not to give any support to the market until the continuous sagging had reduced prices to a more than ordinary tempting level. No one, of course, will attempt to say whether actual bottom has yet been reached, but the new issue is generally interpreted by the market as a signal that powerful interests are at last preparing to take in cheap stock. The leading brokers, too, are showing signs of greater activity, and are issuing circulars to their clients calling attention to the high yields which are now obtainable by the purchase of rubber shares. Resting upon a basis sounder than that which has formed the groundwork of most other booms, rubber has its solid present dividends to fall back upon, and it is the convincing reality of these dividends which promises to save the market from the long winter of apathy which usually follows a period of abnormal activity. Last week I called the attention of my readers to some dividend estimates for the current year ranging up to as high as 450 per cent., and below I give a list showing the actual return on the money which is now afforded by current purchases of some of the leading issues:—

| | Estimated earnings for current year. | Share Quotation. | Approximate Yield at present price. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Anglo-Malay | 140% | 23/- | 12% |
| Batu Caves | 168% | 15½ | 10¾% |
| Bukit Rajah | 162% | 15½ | 10½% |
| Consolidated Malay | 174% | 24/- | 14% |
| Inch Kenneth | 210% | 13 | 16% |
| Kuala Lumpur | 113% | 7¾ | 14¾% |
| Ledbury | 36% | 3½ | 10% |
| Linggi | 283% | 50/6 | 11% |
| Pataling | 306% | 2¾ | 10¾% |
| Selangor | 450% | 60/- | 15% |
| Shelford | 41% | 3½ | 11½% |
| Vallambrosa | 250% | 40/6 | 12¼% |

Deductions for reserve funds and other purposes may, of course, in individual cases reduce the amount of the actual distribution, but the list serves to show in a general way the inducements which are now offered to purchasers. Encouraging as the dividends shown above no doubt are, readers would do well to remember that even so generous a yield as 15 per cent. does not necessarily justify the payment of a premium of 2,900 per cent. for a 2s. share, unless for some years to come high dividends are to be maintained. But fortunately not one of the estates can be said to have reached the limit of its development. Most of them have reserves of young rubber which have not yet been tapped, and share quotations represent on an average barely seven years' purchase. Inch Kenneth in particular promises an exceptionally attractive return, and the dividend estimate is based upon the official estimate of 210,000 lbs. for 1910-11. Last year's output of 127,577 lbs. was obtained from about one-third of the trees on the estate, and the yield of 1½ lbs. per tree points to moderate tapping with the probability of larger future dividends. Cautious holders might well guard themselves against a fall from the present substantial premium by acquiring shares in the recently floated Kajang company. The estate adjoins Inch Kenneth, and is being developed by the same directors and under the same local management. It is not too much to hope that with the aid of their past experience as to the best methods of opening, weeding, tapping, and checking disease, the directors may make Kajang as fine an estate as Inch Kenneth. Kajang £1 shares are now quoted in Edinburgh at ¼ premium, and if Inch Kenneths are always to be worth 13 it seems fairly certain that Kajangs must with reasonable good fortune one day approach that figure. Whatever view may be held as to the future of Inch Kenneth, investors need not, if they are prepared to wait for dividends, hesitate to buy Kajangs while they are obtainable at a little above par, and the period of waiting should be rewarded by a steady appreciation.

It may be taken for granted that the proceeds of the Rubber Trust new issue will not be used to any very large extent in making purchases of shares which already stand at 2,000 or 3,000 per cent. premium. These are sound dividend payers which will give the investor a good yield, but so far as capital appreciation is concerned much better results may be expected from the junior companies, particularly those whose properties are being soundly developed by the men who brought the big producers to their present position of prosperity. Capital appreciation is in fact becoming a market watchword, and below I give a carefully-prepared table of some promising junior companies for the guidance of my readers. The future possibilities of these companies are indicated by showing the dividends which should be earned when the estates are yielding 500 lbs. per acre (say from eight-year-old rubber) with the commodity selling at a net profit of 2s. per lb.

Prices of Shares to Yield a Future 10 per Cent.

| Company. | Capital. | Rubber Acreage (including proposed extensions). | Ultimate Annual Dividend. | Price to Yield a Future 10%. | Present Quotation. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | £ | | | | |
| Alor Pongsu | 40,000 | 458 | 57% | 5⅞ | ⅜ prem. |
| Anglo-Sumatra | 80,000 | 2,039 | 127% | 12⅞ | 3⅜ |
| Bandar Sumatra | 100,000 | 3,000 | 150% | 15 | ⅝ prem. |
| Bandjarsarie | 50,000 | 940 | 94% | 9½ | 2 |
| Banteng | 50,000 | 971 | 97% | 9¾ | 3 |
| Brieh | 50,000 | 706 | 70% | 7 | ⅜ prem. |
| Bukit Mertajam (2/-) | 175,000 | 3,500 | 100% | 20/- | 2/9 |
| Castlefield | 35,000 | 1,200 | 170% | 17 | 5½ |
| Gedong | 60,000 | 900 | 75% | 7½ | ⅜ prem. |
| Glen Bervie | 35,000 | 1,680 | 240% | 24 | 1¼ prem. |
| Jeram | 45,000 | 1,000 | 111% | 11 | 1⅛ prem. |
| Kajang | 60,000 | 1,315 | 109% | 11 | ¼ prem. |
| Langkat Sumatra | 75 000 | 2,000 | 133% | 13 | 2¾ prem. |
| Merliman (2/-) | 210,000 | 5,600 | 133% | 26/6 | 5/6 |
| Sempah | 72.000 | 792 | 55% | 5½ | 1/16 prem. |
| Serdang Central | 51.000 | 1,000 | 98% | 10 | 1¼ prem. |
| Strathmore | 40,000 | 500 | 62% | 6 | ¼ prem. |
| Tebrau | 100,000 | 4,000 | 200% | 20 | 2⅝ prem. |
| United Serdang | 200,000 | 7,250 | 181% | 18 | 5 |

Several companies included in this list have already reached the dividend-paying stage—Glen Bervie, Langkat Sumatra, and United Serdang. Banteng carries a guaranteed dividend. Bukit Mertajam is a very cheap floriner whose estate, valued on a five years' purchase basis at £112,739, was acquired by the company for £98,500. The production was estimated by Mr. Thomas Boyd as follows:—

The Most Complete List of Rubber and Oil Share Quotations will be found in every Saturday's issue of "The Financial Times." 1d. daily. On sale everywhere.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1911..... | 17,015 lbs. |
| 1912..... | 77,823 lbs. |
| 1913..... | 164,558 lbs. |
| 1914..... | 278,515 lbs. |
| 1915..... | 352,845 lbs. |

and a dividend may, therefore, be expected for 1912. The shares, which are now quoted at 2s. 9d., touched 12s. in April, and at the present level are a very attractive purchase.

Perhaps the best-secured investment in the rubber market at the present moment is Malacca debentures, which carry 6 per cent. interest, are secured by a first charge upon an estate valued by the market at over £2,000,000, may give considerable profits by the right to convert into shares of the company, and, failing conversion, are repayable in 1914 at 110. The investor, therefore, takes little risk of depreciation, and has a sound security which yields over 5 per cent. on the present purchase price.

Progress continues in the vine rubber group, and as the companies are well managed and operate in large tracts of forest the shares possess considerable speculative attractions when markets are active. Holders of Jequié and West Jequié may expect to hear of favourable developments when tapping recommences next month. The Madagascar shipments to date amount to 64,657 lbs., consisting mostly of rubber treated by the Guiguet cleaning machine, and some samples quite recently to hand of Guiguet-extracted rubber have, I hear, been reported upon as first-class rubber, and valued at 6s. 6d. to 7s. per lb. In strong contrast to the ill-informed criticism which recently appeared in a certain section of the financial Press, the current number of the trade organ, the India Rubber Journal, contains a most eulogistic, and I have no doubt well-merited, notice of the Crude Rubber Washing Company; and in referring to the company's skilful organisation and the benefit of the many years' careful experiment which it inherited from its predecessors, the Journal points in no uncertain language to the success of the company's operations and development. Selling agencies have been arranged at the centres of the rubber industry throughout the world, including Hamburg, Antwerp, Paris, and Manaos. The flotation of a subsidiary of the allied Murac Company is now pending, and this is to be followed at an early date by flotation of the Crude subsidiaries for France, Belgium, and America.

MINES.

The Stagnation in South Africans—Tanganyika Rumours—A Surprise Statement—Bantjes' Slump—The Drop in Mexico El Oros.

If business in the Mining Market last week had been as good as the weather, dealers would have been in the unhappy condition of having "nothing whatever to grumble at." Perhaps we may see a reversion to more natural conditions in both respects during the last quarter of the year. The third quarter, so far as mines are concerned, may be said to have finished last Saturday on the eve of the carry-over, and it cannot be said that it went out in brilliant fashion. During the week South Africans, where they did not actually give way in price, did not as a rule manage to do more than maintain previous quotations. West Africans were in a lackadaisical condition, even the Nigerian Tin group becoming less active. Copper shares were rather depressed with the metal, but Broken Hill descriptions continued in pretty good demand.

Market men spend a good deal of their time just now in discussing why the hoped-for autumn revival in mines—particularly South Africans—has not so far materialised. The whole discussion is rather unprofitable. The net fact remains that mines are out of favour for the time being so far as attracting any volume of new buyers is concerned. There is, of course, always the large body of shareholders who by reason of their holdings are induced to keep a constant watch on the markets, and by the frequent chopping and changing of their interests suffice to enable brokers and jobbers to make a living. But it is the fashion to despise this regular type of operator. As in ordinary parlance London is "empty" when the season is over, so on the Stock Exchange there is "nothing doing" when neither a boom nor a slump is going on. And in their despair dealers exhibit a pathetic dependence on the big houses by declaiming that markets will never wake up again until the magnates give a strong and sustained lead.

Apparently the big houses are disposed to give sufficient support to markets to prevent them crumbling away altogether, for after the spasm of nervousness which came over South Africans at the middle of last week, to the accompaniment of innumerable bear rumours, there were distinct signs of inside buying. The semi-failure of the Cam and Motor issue did not come altogether as a surprise to the Rhodesian market. There does not seem to have been much in the stories of financial troubles in all quarters, although there certainly appears to have been a failure in Brussels which adversely affected Tanganyikas. The story that the Tanganyika was about to raise further funds, either by the issue of shares or debentures, is, however, officially denied. I am told, moreover, that arrangements have been made for the building of another section of the company's Lobito railway, and that there is no truth in the rumoured hitch with the Belgian Government, or anybody else, in connection with that railway.

The directors of the Surprise have met my last week's criticism as to their latest delay in publishing information from the mine by issuing a semi-official statement through a daily contemporary. It is stated that shaft-sinking is still absorbing the chief energies of the staff, and until the depth is attained where it is anticipated the reef will be found nothing of importance is likely to transpire. Work is, it is added, still being pursued in the northern winze; but the broken character of the formation renders progress slow and unsatisfactory. This is all very well, but surely shareholders are entitled to something more explicit and directed immediately to them after practically two months' interval since the date of the last information regarding developments. I have not forgotten the directors' report and annual meeting meanwhile, but neither of these threw any fresh light on the position.

Apart from the political uncertainty in South Africa, which seems to have had a certain adverse sentimental effect on Kaffirs, the market had a definite bear development at the end of last week, which is likely to do it more harm among the outside public than insiders, perhaps, realise. I refer to the slump in Bantjes due to the disappointing results since the start of crushing about six weeks ago. In itself the incident would be less disturbing if it had not followed so closely on the even poorer figures recently issued by the Roodepoort United—whose mine is in the same section of the Rand—with regard to the initial run of its new mill. In both cases the troubles are, it is to be hoped, mainly temporary, but they come at an unfortunate time, and tend to revive the doubts always felt as to the outlook for the north-western Rand, where the reefs are as a rule much broken up.

The drop in Mexico El Oros during a few weeks from nearly £10 to under £8 justifies the conservative tone I have always taken up as to the bull campaign which was inaugurated some time ago in these shares. The chairman at last week's meeting drew attention to the inadequacy of the ore reserves—a point I have laid stress upon on several occasions—and added that he considered it his duty to bring prominently to shareholders' notice the possibility of some reduction in profits for the current year.

"Queer Stories" from Truth. Now ready. Series XVI. Price 1s., at all booksellers, and from the Publisher, 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street. "They are one of the wonders of the world, these stories, and people are never tired of asking who writes them."—Bystander.

A Mining Investment.

When I included East Rands last April in an 8 per cent. mining trust there was not much hope of an early increase in dividends, but, if rumour prove correct, that prospect is now within measurable distance. If any mine shares can properly lay claim to the title of an investment East Rands would be one of the few. Even from the point of view of stability of capital it is noteworthy that, despite the recent depression of markets, the shares still stand at round about the price of 5⅞, at which I took them into my "trust." If to this stability be added a chance of bigger dividends and a consequent moderate rise in the price, the attractions of East Rands are intensified for the investor who likes to put a little money into mining shares to sweeten up the yield from his gilt-edged securities.

It may be remembered that at the last meeting the chairman of the East Rand Proprietary Mines—to give the concern its full title—stated that the question of making a debenture issue instead of raising overdrafts to the extent of £900,000 with the National Bank of South Africa had been under consideration. It was decided, however, to finance capital expenditure by such overdrafts for the time being, but it is now understood that the idea of a debenture issue is again being officially discussed. This is in agreement with the chairman's statement: "The financial position will therefore be carefully reviewed at the end of the current year, when we shall decide whether to continue the arrangement with the National Bank, maintaining the dividend at 40 per cent. per annum and appropriating the surplus profits towards the extinction of the debt, or whether it be advisable to consider the question of a debenture issue, which it is within our power to make, and raise the rate of dividend." Shareholders will no doubt pray for the latter alternative, which in any case should involve a saving to the company, since it is considered that the debentures could be issued on at least 1 per cent. better terms than the 5 and 5½ per cent. respectively being paid on the fixed and floating overdrafts.

It cannot be said that the East Rand has not been making good use of the £1,000,000 or so capital expenditure which the suggested debenture issue is required to cover. By the end of this year the extensive programme of development work in progress is expected to have raised the payable ore reserves from eight to three-quarter million tons twelve months ago to a round twelve million tons. During the past six months the East Rand's profits in a period of labour scarcity have ranged from 11s. 3d. to 12s. 6d. per ton, but, taking it that the net yield of the whole 12,000,000 tons of ore reserves worked out at only 10s. per ton, the aggregate "profit in sight" would be equal to £2 10s. per share on the company's issued capital of £2,400,000. While four or five years' ore supply has been opened up underground, the work of improving the plant overground has proceeded apace. Indeed, the company's consulting metallurgist recently held out the hope that the new batteries on the Angelo and Cason sections would ultimately be able to deal with the record average of thirty tons per day. On that basis it would seem not difficult to raise the East Rand's crushing rate to 3,000,000 tons yearly, against just over 2,000,000 tons at present. Taking the profits per ton at 10s., as already suggested, the aggregate earnings would presumably be ample to maintain dividends at the rate of 50 per cent. per annum, which is the increased yield predicted by the market if the debenture issue goes through. In that event East Rands could go to £6 and still return more than the 8 per cent. yield on which I recommended them for my "trust." Moreover, the life of this immense property is put at over twenty years, so that capital redemption is not a serious item. In fact, it should be compensated for automatically as years go on by decreasing costs and increasing profits, provided, of course, no unforeseen adverse developments occur.

The Broken Hill Outlook.

Broken Hill or—as they are known in Australia—Barrier stocks have been one of the few firm spots in the Mining market of late. These shares are pre-eminently the happy hunting-ground of colonial and Scotch operators, who have a way of quietly absorbing them in times when lead and zinc are low and shares consequently depressed. Then when the metals in the usual commercial cycle come to the top of the curve once more these prescient operators are ready to feed the more uninstructed members of the English and foreign public with shares at high prices which they are subsequently able to repurchase at the bottom, and play the same old game once more. But it is a game in which the outsider who keeps an alert watch on the signs of the times may almost as easily make money as people who are more closely associated with Broken Hill mining and the metal markets. When one sees the insiders "coming for" the shares as they have been doing just lately one instinctively looks into the position to see whether there is any justification for a sustained improvement. If so, the obvious policy is to try to get in somewhere near the ground floor instead of waiting for an actual "boom," and being left in, perhaps, at top prices.

As I pointed out last week, the tangible reason for the recent signs of revival in the Broken Hill group is the advance in zinc, which now stands at over £23 per ton, against a low level of £18 per ton no further back than 1908. Moreover, the renewal for a period of several years of the Zinc Syndicate controlling the European market has either been concluded or is about to be. While it is not likely, nor perhaps desirable, that the syndicate will force the price of the metal up to the high level of £29 10s. per ton touched in 1906, it is considered that somewhere near the present price may be maintained. According to an expert correspondent of the Financial Times, "Broken Hill is the biggest producer of zinc in the world, and a rise in the price of spelter of 20s. per ton means an increase in profits of the big companies of £100,000 to £150,000 per annum." It will be realised, therefore, what the advance from £18 to £23 has meant. The Broken Hill South alone is receiving £70,000 to £80,000 per annum from the sale of its zinciferous tailings. As the company with metals at present prices should earn in addition over £100,000 yearly from its production of lead and silver, and the issued capital is only £164,000, the prospect of the quarterly dividend being raised to 4s. or 5s. per share seems good. At the time of writing Broken Hill Souths can be obtained at under 5½, whereas in 1906, when 15s. per share was paid in dividends, they touched nearly £9. Sulphide Corporation ordinary and preference have also been in demand on the prospect of increased dividends. It is said in the market that the distributions at the end of next month may be raised to 2s. 6d. on the preference and 2s. on the ordinary, as against 2s. and 1s. 6d. respectively a year ago. With Zinc Corporation ordinary I dealt last week, but I may mention with regard to Amalgamated Zincs that the commencement of quarterly dividends of 1s. per share is expected immediately. This would mean a very satisfactory yield on the present price of about 32s. Altogether the outlook for the Broken Hill field seems better than for a long time past. Lead is at a low but—for most of the companies—still payable level, from which the tendency seems more likely to be upwards than downwards. The labour "bogey," it is true, is always liable to be trotted out, since the Australian miner is a particularly independent sort of "critter," but the water trouble seems to be heard less of as years go on.

INDUSTRIALS.

Rise and Reaction in Breweries—The Shell Transport Fight—A Promising Californian Oil Share.

Interest in the industrial market during the week has centred mainly in brewery stocks and oil shares. The brewery group, under the influence of the recent "Crown and Shuttle" decision, which affords licensed houses substantial relief in their assessments, had a further substantial advance, although in the last few days there has been a partial reaction due to profit-taking. The rise occurred out of all proportion to the volume of business passing, the fact being that holders having been forced to keep their stocks through the long period of depression are showing no disposition to turn them out now that the market has commenced to improve. London General Omnibus likewise had a further rise, followed by a partial set-back. The company is understood to be gradually pulling round, and as a result of various economies is expected in the early future to wipe off the arrears of interest on the 5 per cent. £10 preference shares, which have been without any return since June, 1907. These shares stand at 8½. The ordinary stock, which has risen during this year from 17 to 42, looks high enough for the present. Were I a holder I should feel inclined to accept this figure. Considerable interest has been aroused by the proposal of Lever Brothers, the well-known soap company, to increase its capital from £9,000,000 to £14,000,000 by the creation of 5,000,000 new "C" preference shares of £1 each. This is something like joint stock expansion, and one is curious to know what such a huge amount is required for. It almost suggests that a big amalgamation is on the tapis. The new issue will, it is important to notice, rank after the company's existing preferences, but ahead of the preferred ordinary shares.

There have been some very free dealings in Shell Transports, and although the price last week gradually lost ground, offerings of shares by tens of thousands readily found takers. Whether it be true as suggested that America has been selling "bears" viâ Paris and that the insiders have been absorbing all shares coming to market cannot be confirmed, but there is no doubt that a pretty fight is going on. A war between the Standard Oil Company and the Shell is not a war between pigmies, and small investors might leave Shells alone for the present. Some of the dealers think the rate-cutting campaign will last out the present year. If anything the odds seem to be in favour of the Shell. It is important to remember that the Standard Oil Company in proportion to the amount it refines is not itself a very large producer, whereas the Shell Company only refines the oil which it produces. I hear from a reliable quarter that the Shell Company in the past eight months of its current year made profits equal to the total profit of the previous twelve months, and that at present, in spite of the "cut" in the price of petrol, it is making handsome profits. This is not the first fight the Shell has waged with the Standard Oil Trust. Some four years ago a stiff battle was engaged in for the Eastern trade, and after about six months the two parties came to terms and agreed to parcel out the district into spheres of influence.

Investment buying of California Oils has been a feature of the week. Since the publication a fortnight ago of my comparison of the market capitalisations and outputs of Kerns and Californias both shares have been moving. Kerns have reacted from 17s. to 15s., while Californias have risen from 5 3-16 to 5 7-16. It will be necessary to wait and see whether the report of a coming increase in the interim dividend is well founded, but in any case Californias do not look overvalued. Many people do not care to touch the shares because of the high premium. A £1 share standing at 5 7-16 looks too heavy for them. It is, therefore, advisable to mention that though the shares are of the nominal value of £1 the average price at which they were issued works out at £2 6s. 3d., 250,000 shares having been placed at par and 150,000 at £4 10s. per share. Put this way the premium looks much less formidable.

Another Californian oil company to which it is worth drawing my readers' attention is the Coalinga British Oil Company, which has an issued capital of £225,000, consisting of £125,000 8 per cent. participating preferred shares of £1 each and 100,000 ordinary shares of £1. The preferred shares are guaranteed as to the 8 per cent. dividend for five years from July, 1910, jointly and severally by the British Consolidated Oil Corporation, Limited, and by the Petroleum Properties Syndicate, Limited. After a payment of 8 per cent. has been made on both the preferred and the ordinary shares both classes rank alike for any surplus dividend. The property consists of eighty acres of oil land on the eastern side of the Coalinga Field, California. The company took it over as a going concern as from June 1 last, and expects to increase the output from 25,000 barrels per month to 40,000 barrels per month by November 30. There are now upon the property seventeen producing wells, none of which have yet been drilled to the second and more prolific oil sand which the British Consolidated Oil Corporation have encountered on their neighbouring property. The profit made just prior to the formation of the existing company was equivalent to £19,212 per annum, enough to pay the 8 per cent. on the preferred and leave a surplus of £9,212. A production of 40,000 barrels per month would show an annual profit of £30,000, a sum sufficient to pay 10 per cent. on both classes of shares and to leave £7,500 for reserve.

Even should the production not be increased the present scale of profits would continue, as the company has old contracts running for the delivery of 1,375,000 barrels or thereabouts at the average price of 39 cents per barrel, but, as the current price of oil in California is about 60 cents per barrel, and has been at that price for some time, any increased production over 25,000 barrels a month should realise considerably more in proportion. The actual cost of production and administration during the sixteen months to April 30 last amounted to 15 cents per barrel, but this figure can probably be reduced to 10 cents per barrel. From these figures the preferred ordinary shares seem fairly well secured as to their fixed dividend of 8 per cent., and should be receiving later on something in addition.

INVESTMENTS FOR WOMEN.

Rather over a year ago I devoted some space to the question of woman and her money, in which, after tendering a little needed if elementary advice about people and things to avoid, I gave a list of sound investments yielding from 4 to 5 per cent. In view of the way this advice was appreciated by many of my fair readers, it is time I returned to the subject. The average woman left with financial responsibility and without male friends capable of giving the necessary advice and assistance should command the practical sympathy of the City journalist. Business is not woman's realm, and while I by no means deplore the fact from most points of view, there is no doubt that the lack of business training from which the great body of women suffer exposes them to especial dangers from the land sharks that infest the City. I referred some time ago to an advertisement published by a firm of printers of a list of 108,000 names and addresses of ladies known to possess means by reason of their names appearing on the registers of shareholders in joint stock companies. Such a list is to the low-grade company promoter, the "outside" peddler of worthless scrip, and the bucket-shop keeper what the skeleton key is to the burglar, and the yearly toll of plunder they exact from the credulous would probably make the average burglar feel himself hopelessly behind the times.

My advice to ladies in financial matters is to pay no attention to circulars emanating from strangers offering shares for sale or requesting them to indulge in speculative operations. You will be well advised to leave outside brokers alone altogether. The majority of circularising outside brokers are rascals, of the worst description; their guarantees of profits are not worth the paper they are written upon, and are merely traps for the unwary. There are doubtless in the City of London a few reputable outside firms, but they are almost as difficult to discover as were righteous men in Sodom and Gomorrah. Ladies sometimes ask me to state whether such and such a firm, whose circular has been sent them, or whose advertisement they have seen in the newspapers, is trustworthy, and "if they are members of the Stock Exchange?" As regards the latter question, I am reminded of the boy's answer to a stranger who wanted the former's father: "Feyther's down among the pigs; you'll know feyther, he's got his hat on." Members of the Stock Exchange are not allowed to advertise or to circularise the public other than their own clients; therefore any advertisement of a stock dealing concern, or any circular received from strangers, indelibly stamps them as "outsiders." I cannot here repeat all my reasons for advising the public to deal only through members of the Stock Exchange, but one cardinal reason is the fact that inside brokers are bound by a comprehensive set of rules and regulations, passed by the Committee of the House with the primary object of ensuring fair treatment for the public, and that no such safeguard is afforded when dealing with "outsiders."

Apart from literature emanating from the City vampires, ladies who are already on company share registers receive a fairly constant stream of prospectuses of new ventures, containing invitations to subscribe. Many of these invitations look tempting enough, but new flotations need to be scrutinised with a very keen eye, and as a pretty general rule it would be well for lady investors to shun the shares of all new enterprises without first obtaining a reliable independent opinion. I am convinced that in the last decade far more money has been lost by investors who subscribed to new companies on the issue of the prospectus than has been made. Promoters of new companies of necessity put forward in their prospectuses the most favourable side possible; the unwary public is apt to swallow what is set before it, but the business man carefully notes both the facts that appear, and those that do not, and is frequently more impressed by the omissions from a prospectus than by the information vouchsafed. In the vast majority of cases the shares of new companies are too speculative to be desirable for lady investors. Nor is there much incentive for ladies to rush after such shares, for, without confining themselves to the strict trustee area (where yields are limited to 3¼—3¾ per cent.), they can obtain upon sound and seasoned investments without difficulty returns ranging from 4 up to more than 5 per cent. In the following table I have drawn up a list of twenty stocks and shares which I think fairly answer to this description:—

| Name. | Nominal Value. | Dividends Due. | Price. | Yield. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | £ | | | £ s. d. |
| London, Chatham, & Dover Ry. 3½% Deb. | Stock | Jan., July | 87 | 4 0 6 |
| Central Argentine Ry. 3½% Deb. | Stock | Jan., July | 88 | 4 0 6 |
| Mexican Southern Ry. 4% 1st Deb. | Stock | Feb., Aug. | 96 | 4 3 0 |
| Buenos Ayres & Pacific Ry. 4½% Deb. | Stock | Jan., July | 103 | 4 7 6 |
| Cunard Steamship 4½% Deb. | Stock | June, Dec. | 102 | 4 8 0 |
| Lyons 6% Pref. Ord. | 1 | June, Dec. | 1 7/8 | 4 11 6 |
| Lever Bros. 5% A Pref. | 10 | Jan., July | 10 3/4 | 4 13 0 |
| Central Uruguay Ry. 5½% Pref. | 10 | April, Oct. | 11 1/4 | 4 13 7 |
| Wm. Whiteley 4% 1st Mort. Deb. | Stock | Mar., Sept. | 84 | 4 15 6 |
| John Barker 4½% 1907 Deb. | Stock | Jan., July | 93 | 4 17 0 |
| Jay's 5½% Pref. | 5 | Mar., Sept. | 5 5/8 | 4 17 9 |
| City of London Electric 6% Pref. | 10 | Feb., July | 12 | 5 0 0 |
| Metropolitan Elec. Tramways 5% Deb. | Stock | April, Oct. | 99 1/2 | 5 0 6 |
| Mortgage Company of Egypt 5% Pref. | 10 | Jan., July | 9 3/4 | 5 1 6 |
| Royal Mail Steamship 5% Deb. | Stock | Jan., July | 97 1/2 | 5 2 6 |
| Holborn and Frascati 5% Pref. | 10 | Mar., Sept. | 9 1/4 | 5 2 7 |
| Goldsbrough Mort. 5% B Deb. | Stock | Jan., July | 97 | 5 3 0 |
| Paquin's 6% Pref. | 5 | Jan., July | 5 1/4 | 5 4 4 |
| Anglo-Argentine Tramways 5% Deb. | Stock | June, Dec. | 95 1/2 | 5 5 0 |
| Bournemouth & Poole Elec. 6% 2nd Pref. | 10 | Feb., Aug. | 10 1/2 | 5 14 3 |

Without entering into details of the position of each individual stock, I may say that the considerations affecting selections have been: The character of the particular business undertaking, margin of security offered, marketability of stock, and the rate of interest offered at present price. Eleven out of the twenty companies are engaged in either the railway, tramway, shipping, or electric lighting industry, and are established successes. Of the other nine, eight have a more or less long record of prosperity which enables the value of the stock recommended to be pretty accurately judged. The newest company included is the Mortgage Company of Egypt, and I have put it in the list because of the influential character of the directorate, the safe character of the business undertaking, which is that of a lender to the fellaheen, or small Egyptian farmer, on first mortgages only, and also the great scope that exists for such concerns in the Delta. Eighteen out of the twenty stocks enjoy the advantage of quotation in the Stock Exchange Official List; the two at present not quoted are Anglo-Argentine Tramways 5 per cent. debenture stock and Royal Mail Steamship 5 per cent. debenture stock, but these are new securities, and in due course they will most probably be admitted to official quotation along with the older issues of the two companies. One other point about the investments enumerated above is that they are all registered securities. I am not going to discuss here the relative advantages of registered and bearer stocks—the latter I know are now much more popular in this country than they were a few years ago. The chief point I have in mind is safety, and there can be no doubt that it is safer to hold stock that has been registered by deed of transfer than bearer bonds, which if lost or stolen may land the loser in total forfeiture of principal and interest.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The British Coalite Bubble.

During the past two or three months some references have been made in this column to the present serious position of the British Coalite Co., Limited, which, after three years of heavy expenditure, has accomplished absolutely nothing to justify the rosy promises on which a capital of hundreds of thousands of pounds was obtained from the public. The Daily Chronicle has now dealt with the situation more exhaustively in a series of articles which should open the eyes of the most somnolent shareholders. Their placidity has been remarkable. They were told in the prospectus that coalite was already being manufactured "on a commercial scale," and a profit of half a million per annum from sales in London alone was confidently predicted. Not for a moment did they imagine that they were providing money for a succession of very costly experiments. Time after time, however, they have been soothed with excuses for the delay and buoyed up with hopes that the practical work of earning those huge profits was just about to begin. Quite recently they received the disquieting news that in order to continue its operations the company was obliged to raise funds on first mortgage debentures, which had been sold (at an undisclosed price) to an outside broking establishment. With characteristic optimism the directors held out the prospect of "large and permanent dividends almost forthwith" from this fresh expenditure, but past disappointments make it a difficult matter to place any faith in their prophecies. The details given in the Chronicle regarding the company's various works are decidedly discouraging. The big works at Wednesfield have gradually fallen into disuse, "and it is now generally expected that they will be closed down." The Barking works have been idle since May, except that "a few men are employed tinkering about with the plant." In regard to Barking the prospectus issued in June, 1907, stated that "it is intended to erect immediately works capable of treating about 3,000,000 tons of coal per annum for supply in the metropolitan area," and so recently as December last the chairman, Sir William H. Preece, rashly affirmed that "within a month" the company would be making at Barking 1,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day, and that this gas could be converted into electrical power, from the supply of which great profits would be derived. At Hythe and at Plymouth coalite plants have been installed at the gas works by arrangement with the gas authorities. For some months, however, operations have been suspended at Hythe, and experts will be much surprised if any profit can be made from the plant at Plymouth. In view of the egregious miscalculations which have so often been made during the past three years, prudence certainly requires that that point should be thoroughly investigated before further expenditure is incurred upon the construction and working of similar plants.

An Exceptional Offer.

Underwriters often adopt ingenious devices for disposing of shares with which they have been landed, but "an exceptional offer" which James King and Co., "investment brokers," of 249, High Holborn, are now circulating strikes me as being ingenuous rather than ingenious. It seems that a couple of months or so ago they underwrote a number of shares in a picture theatre company. Did they do this to benefit themselves? No. "Our object being to secure for our clients the commission payable hereon," they are now "prepared to pay you a bonus of 10 per cent. in fully paid shares on such shares as you may decide to take." They add that they have no doubt the shares will readily command a very handsome premium. It would seem, therefore, that these remarkably generous investment brokers not only incur underwriting liabilities for the profit of other people, but actually pay a bonus in order to get rid at par of shares on which they have no doubt they might obtain a handsome premium.

A Rubber and Oil Trust.

On May 4 I sounded a note of warning in reference to a Rubber and Oil Trust which was being promoted from the office of Financial Opinion, an obscure sheet in more or less close association with certain bucket-shop welshers. The so-called Trust was really what is known as a "blind pool"—that is to say, the promoter was left to deal at his own sweet will with capital provided by other people. One of the subscribers has consulted me regarding the disappointing result of this arrangement. He subscribed £10, and a return of £1 for the first month and 10s. for the second made him think that he was in for a good thing. Alas for his hopes! These were the first and last profits; the Trust has now been closed, and as his proportion of the assets he has been favoured with thirty oil shares which he will find it difficult to sell at 1s. 6d. each. He wants to know whether he is bound to accept this settlement. I can only tell him that, in my judgment, he has been lucky to get back as much of his subscription as he has done.

Barclay Power and Co.

After a period of quiescence Barclay Power and Co., "general bankers, stock, share, and debenture dealers," 40, Copthall House, E.C., are once more on the war-path. "If you are going to speculate," they write in their latest flat-catching circular, "you must make sure of one thing—you must be certain that you act on sound, solid, and accurate information." But unless you are a congenital idiot you will also make sure of another thing, namely, that you are not dealing with unprincipled bucket-shop tricksters. That is the character of Barclay Power and Co.—indeed, in view of the circumstances of a case which I related a few months ago, I doubt whether tricksters is a sufficiently strong word to apply to these gentry.

The Philanthropy of Thompson Brothers.

In Thompson Brothers, of whom I had never heard until a few days ago, I have discovered some philanthropists of the first water. They spend large sums in advertising in the daily papers a "Brochure on Money-making" which they are anxious to send you, gratis and post free. In the politely worded letter in which they tender you their best thanks for kindly accepting this little gift, they point out that the brochure is specially designed to fit the top waistcoat pocket, so that you can "always carry same." They will esteem it a favour if you will do this. The brochure contains their private telegraphic code, and at any moment they may be wiring to you that reliable and exclusive information which "we spend large sums in obtaining." All this expenditure is incurred—as you will, of course, perceive—for your benefit; nor is this the limit of the brothers Thompson's generosity. They do, indeed, stipulate that you shall let them have "cash remittances" with your instructions for those 1 per cent. cover deals and other "methods of operating" which the brochure recommends. But that must be a mere formality, because "our information is invariably correct," and consequently—if what they say is true—you must always get your money back with a profit. And as "we act solely as principals, charging no brokerage or commission," it follows that your profit must always mean a loss to Thompson Brothers. In other words, these philanthropists are eager to teach you not merely how to make money, but how to make it at their expense!

It is, I suppose, simply a coincidence that this flat-trap is located in an office in Trafalgar Buildings, Northumberland Avenue, S.W., next door to that in which Charles Coventry and Co. have long worked a similar business.

Messrs. A. Murray and Herbert Porter.

The end of the holidays is signalised by a fresh outburst of circularising activity on the part of Mr. A. Murray, of the London Scottish Stock Exchange, and Mr. Herbert Porter, of the United Stock and Share Corporation. Both Murray and Porter—by the way, I have heard that they are really one and the same person—repeat the old, extravagant fairy tales with which they have been bamboozling innocents for years past. There are the usual details of "our special stock combines" and "stock unions" purporting to show how profits ranging from £20 to £40 or £50 on every £10 subscribed are continually being made. People swallow this preposterous rubbish, send along their money, and hear in due course that the particular "operation" in which they were interested unfortunately resulted in a loss. But what of that? The supply of fools is inexhaustible. Messrs. Murray and Porter issue another batch of mendacious circulars, more money comes rolling in, and so the game proceeds unceasingly.

"VIGILANT'S" LETTER BOX.

1. Inquiries addressed to me, which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through my 'Letter Box." A coupon will always be found at the foot of the third page of the cover of Truth.

2. Three different stocks or shares are the limit for an inquiry covered by one coupon. If it is desired to make an inquiry respecting a larger number of stocks or shares an additional coupon or coupons (one for every three stocks or shares) must be forwarded. Inquiries in regard to Rubber shares must not be included in letters relating to other classes of securities.

3. Name and address, which must accompany all inquiries, should be written on the communication.

4. A nom-de-plume or initials (the former preferably) should be given if it is desired that the real name shall not appear in the paper.

5. Inquiries should be put as briefly as possible, plainly written and numbered.

6. Communications received after Friday may not be replied to in the following issue.

Railways.

J. E. Liverpool.—1-3. Sound investments, but market likely to remain unsettled for the present. Read weekly Notes about the general conditions. 4-6. See rule 2.

Putnam.—You do not say whether you are a holder or a prospective purchaser. No. 1 does not strike me as attractive. No. 2 I recommended at 80. It is still a good investment, but getting nearer its full value at 116. No. 3 I do not regard as very attractive at present price.

Quincey.—A sound lot, and as lock-up investments desirable.

Sabrina.—There is a fair margin behind 1, but No. 2 is not well secured, and neither can be called exactly safe.

Thor.—The prospectus was not a remarkably informing document. I should prefer to await some actual results before touching the bonds.

Vicarious.—1 and 2. Both worth keeping. 3. A high-class investment possessing prospects of a rise later on. Viresco.—1. Keep them, but in view of your present interest I would hardly advise further purchases in the group. 3. You would be paying a high price, although the shares are sound enough.

Mines.

Anglo.—I prefer No. 2. The poor return is considered only a temporary phase. Agricola.—Nos. 1 and 3 are pretty good holdings, but No. 2 are very much of a gamble. Aldborough.—1. Hold. 2. A receiver was appointed for the Akinassi Syndicate in 1908.

Blackboys.—A very speculative holding.

Cymro (Aberystwith).—Sell Nos. 6 and 7 on the first favourable opportunity, but hold the rest for the present.

Hawthornberry.—It is engaged in pushing the shares of the other company which I mentioned. Have nothing to do with them.

J. E.—The company was dissolved in 1906. Joppa.—You might try writing to one of the directors at his private address.

Kook.—As the amount is small she had better wait for something to turn up rather than incur possibly useless legal expenses.

Mulguy.—We have not a high opinion of the shares, and would not buy more.

Nosilla.—Keep No. 6, but take what you can get for the rest.

P. E. G.—1. See reference in last week's notes. 2. Your money might be employed more hopefully elsewhere. Park Road.—Keep No. 1, but sell the other two.

R. M. H.—Your money could be employed much more hopefully elsewhere.

SURBAM.—Yes. I am dealing with these shares at length either this week or as soon as space permits.

TALODI.—It is useless fixing limits while the market remains so uncertain as at present.

MIXED SECURITIES.

APOS.—1. Do not buy more. 2. Hold. 3. I am afraid there is little hope for either.

B. S. W.—1. Sell on a small rise. 2. Keep the railway stock.

CYPRUS.—You might exchange with advantage. CONSTANT READER (Folkestone).—1. The bank would undertake the purchase. 2. Better not invest so small an amount in a railway stock. £100 is the minimum which it is advisable to buy.

FIGO.—Leave the so-called bank alone. Select one of the securities recommended in this week's article headed "Investments for Women."

G. C. S.—1. An excellent investment, though I do not look for a material rise just at present. 2. Yes. 3. I should prefer the 4 per cent. prior liens.

HUZAR.—1. Grand Trunk First Preference and equal amounts of Quebec Central 3 per cent. Second Debentures and 7 per cent. Income Bonds. 2. It does not yield 4½; hence the non-inclusion. The term "guaranteed" is merely a label; its status is simply that of a senior non-cumulative preference stock.

ILEW.—1. About 15s. nominally. 2. Unlikely. 3. No price obtainable. 4. No. 5. A receiver was appointed in 1907. INFORMATION.—1. Hold them for the present. 2. Sell. 3. Exchange into something more promising.

LESS.—1. Yes. 2. A fair selection amongst high yielding industrials. 3. As regards the £200, put it into one of the securities recommended in this week's article headed "Investments for Women." Better not divide so small a sum.

MUNSEL.—a. I do not look for such a rise in the early future. There is a fair market for the shares. b. Yes, they seem a sound lock-up. MEDDLER.—1. Better not buy more Wassaus. 2. As a speculation should now prefer the ordinary.

N. O.—1. See list of investments given in this week's article. 2. Don't attempt to divide such a small sum.

ONE AND ALL.—Port of London 4 per cent. "B" stock, Agricultural Bank of Egypt 3½ per cent. Bonds, 1929-1949, and Great Central 4 per cent. Preference stock would be three safe selections. The yield would be about 4 per cent.

PYREMENT.—1. It was a good article, and I would advise you after studying the margins of security to select for yourself. 2. The bonds this year went over 111. They will always move upward in sympathy with the shares, though, of course, being classed as practically safe they would not fall in anything like the same ratio with the shares in the event of the latter slumping.

QUERT.—1. A pretty good holding for dividends, even after their recent rise. 2 and 3. No.

RED BRICK.—I should hold for an eventual recovery, disregarding movement in the immediate future. ROKEBY.—There are no dealings now in the bonds, but you might ascertain through your broker whether they possess any value.

TOM TIT.—a. Leave them alone. b. Sound enough, but I do not look for much further rise. TABLOID.—a. See rule 2 as to a separate letter for rubber inquiries. b. At any rate, I do not expect any substantial relapse in the preference. c. Fair speculation. Dividend due end of next month or beginning of November.

RUBBER.

ANGLO.—I share your regret that you did not follow my recommendations twelve months ago. The outlook has, of course, changed since selling limits were fixed, and they do not apply now; but certainly hold 1 and 2 for better times and higher prices. No. 3 is a fair holding, but will not produce much rubber for two or three years. A CORK MAN.—All should turn out well in the end. A. W. FAULKNER,—I confirm my opinion. AIR.—A sound list. Hold. ANXIOUS (Edinburgh).—1. Hold. 2. Cheap estate, but will develop slowly. 3. Sell. ASTER.—Hold for recovery and probable profit. ARGENT.—1. Hold Kinta Kellas. Now producing. 2. Beverley should tap next year, and Merlimau in 1912. 3. In good hands, and now producing. 4. Doranakande and Kinta Kellas will reach dividend stage first. 5. Dividends for 1910 on Anglo-Malay, Consolidated Malay, and Selangor should yield more than 10 per cent. on present price. A. B. C.—Hold them all. Instead of repurchasing No. 4 buy a lower-priced share, say Singapore Para or Glen Bervie. ASTRÆA.—1. Jequie is a good speculative investment at present price. 2. Merlimau for steady capital appreciation. 3. Doing well, but dividend date not yet fixed. ALBARADE.—All good. Increase your holding of United Serdang. ADAM.—1 and 2 should improve by the end of the year. 3. Nyassa will soon have its machines at work, and should make good progress next year. AD.—Postponed only. Negotiations are in active progress. A. X.—1. Say within three years. 2. Yes. A. G.—Hold for a recovery, but you would increase your chance of capital appreciation by investing in a company having a lower capitalisation.

BLACKBOYS.—See reply to "A. G." BOOM.—Hold them all. BEVERLEY.—Peak is thoroughly sound, but see reply to "A. G." You might take up the shares, and hold for a recovery. BEDFORD.—Many thanks. See Rubber Notes. BORAX.—Hold them all. BARRY.—May touch your figures, but I should sell on an improvement and reinvest in cheaper shares. BELVEDERE.—You are entitled to dividends of 2s. per share on P.P.K. and 6d. per share on London Ventures. Write to me again if your broker does not pay. Hold your shares.

CLIMAX.—1. I think so. Nyassa should develop well next year. 2. No. 3. See Rubber Notes as to Guiget extracted rubber. CLOVERDALE.—1. Rubber only. 2. No dealings quoted recently. 3. Choose a share with a freer market. 4. Glen Bervie. CRESCENT.—Yes. Average as you suggest. CYRIL ANDRADE.—A good list. Kamuning and Kinta Kellas are now earning dividends. Merlimau commences tapping 1912. CRUDES.—There is no truth in the rumour. Hold your shares, and average if you can. COEHORN.—1. Patalings are a sound investment, earning, say, 300 per cent., and returning an investor more than 10 per cent. They can stand the probable gradual fall in the price of rubber. 2. The low-priced shares can best stand a heavy fall. Hold Sungei Bahru as a sound lock-up. 3. Glen Bervie paid 5 per cent. last December. CYMRO.—Hold them all. As to No. 1, see reply to "A. G." CASTLE DOUGLAS.—1. Dividend estimates for current year:—Highlands, 48 per cent.; Kuala Lumpur, 113 per cent. 2. Yes.

DOUBTFUL (Cork).—Certainly you may safely hold Malaccas until next spring with every prospect of a substantial recovery. DISENCHANTED.—1. I think so. 2. Yes. The company's officials bought recently at your figures. DUMBAR.—1. Good speculative holding. 2. The experts disagreed as to the value of Bukit Selangor, and the shares have fallen below par. Hold for the present.

ENROH.—See reply to "A. G." EMBASSY.—1. Drought and market depression. 2-3. Good speculative holding. 4. December. 5. Yes. In good hands.

FIDELITAS.—1. Yes. 2. Dividends now small, but may gradually increase to over 100 per cent. 3. Hold. FIREFLY.—Yes; increase your holding of Malacca as you suggest. Immaterial whether ordinary or preference.

GARDA.—If sold before March 16 the Straits Bertam new shares would belong to the purchaser. You are free from liability. GALICIAN.—All in good hands; but you might sell half on an improvement and reinvest in Malayan companies. Hold No. 8. GURKHA.—1. Yes; increase your holding. A new issue is to be made. 2. Sound; but the market is very limited. 3. Yes. Bukit Mertajam. GAZETTE.—1. No. They can stand a reasonable fall. 2. Hold. 3. Say 12. 4. Yes; a steady improvement. GROUSE.—A good speculative holding, and it would be well to buy as you suggest. The outlook has improved. GASKELL. 1. As to a and b, see reply to "A.G." As to c, see second reply to "Dunbar." Hold d. 2. No. Very different.

H. M. CALDICOTT.—1. Yes. Quoted ¼ premium. 2. A shareholder has no legal right to a copy of documents issued before he was registered, but if you ask for a copy you will probably get it. 3. Foreign transfers must be stamped within thirty days of their arrival in this country. Leave the date blank if you like. HELEN.—Quite a good company. Hold for improvement. HORWICH.—1. The official output estimates for 1912, 1913, and 1914 for Merlimau are 96,250, 357,750, 559,500 lbs. 2. See Rubber Notes. 3. Merlimau or Bukit Mertajam would suit you best. H. HARRINGTON.—Linggi has already declared 100 per cent. in interim dividends, and the total for the year is estimated at 280 per cent., say equal to 10 per cent. on 56s. I look for an improvement this autumn, when you might exchange into a lower-priced share with a view to capital appreciation. H. V.—1. Buy Jequie as you suggest. 2. Hold. 3. Yes, Bukit Mertajam. H. Y.—Serangoon at par; or, at a premium, Singapore Para, Batu Tiga, or Glen Bervie. HOMAR.—Hold both for improvement. HIGHLAND.—The worst, I believe, is known. Wait for details, or buy on any further fall. HEW.—1. Yes, average. 2. Sapongs are a good purchase. 3. Yes. Merlimau. HERTS.—Sound enough.

INNOCENT.—1. Val D'Or is a reasonable proposition at par if you are prepared to wait until 1912 for dividends. 2. Output to date 16,459 lbs. Good enough at present price. IMBER.—Appreciate your remarks. Rubber is earning, and will continue to earn, big dividends. Malacca debentures, if not converted, are redeemable at 110 per cent. on December 1, 1914. INTERMEZZO.—Yes. Hold your list for dividends and appreciation. The other is more speculative. ISOBAR.—1. Hold Sumatra Paras for your figure. 2. A sound holding. I. R. G.—1. Undervalued now, but I do not care to fix selling limit until market outlook improves. 2 and 3. Hold. INVESTOR.—Malacca 6 per cent. debentures are redeemable in 1914 at 110 if not converted into shares. They are a sound 5 per cent. investment, with a good prospect of capital appreciation. Do as you suggest.

JEAN.—Strong position and a sound investment. Hold. JESSIE.—I look for a larger dividend, but it will not be paid until after the year closes. J. P.—The growth is at least one year in five behind the Malay States. 1 and 2 are good holdings. Avoid Aowin in spite of bucket-shop tips and the 25 per cent. dividend. The others are reasonable propositions. JITSON.—Malang 1s. 9d. Essequibo 5s. shares strongly criticised in these columns, and now quoted at 1s. Central Java 1s. 6d. A very poor lot. Sell them all.

KENNOX.—Both good companies, earning dividends, and likely to appreciate gradually. KINTA (Leeds).—I think so. Average as you suggest. KINTA (Whiteinch).—See previous reply.

LEDNOCK.—Three respectable companies, but sell Dangans if you can do so without loss and re-invest in Bukit Mertajam or Merlimau. Hold the others. LINGAM.—1. Singapore opinion, you see, is not always right, but the shares are sound. Hold for a profit. 2. Depends upon promotions for its principal profits, and is likely to suffer in dull times. Take your nice profit. LOSANNA.—Present development insufficient to estimate dividends over a series of years, but my calculations favour Glen Bervie as the best of the three. Legis.—1. Success of the Trusts depends partly upon promotions and market activity, but some improvement may be expected. 2. A fair holding, but I should prefer a Malayan company. 3. Anglo-Ceylon is a strong company. Hold.

Mossbank.—1. Likely to be very profitable for many years to come. 2 and 3. Hold Anglo-Malay and Linggi for better markets. Sumatra Para should be held for steady appreciation. Misled.—Wait a little, and then write again. Medico.—Tapping recommences next month. Should earn a dividend next year. May Fair.—1. Yes, average as you suggest. 2. A good company, now producing. Early dividend expected. Mott.—1. Yes. 2 and 3.—Both good purchases. Next year should be in much-improved position. Moonraker.—1. Yes; every prospect. 2. Kuala Lumpur should earn at least 100 per cent. this year. 3. Yes; I think so. But you might sell No. 2 on an improvement and reinvest in Glen Bervie. Max.—Many thanks. I will deal with it.

Novice.—Rubber is now being shipped in increasing quantities. Hold for recovery. Norton Villa.—1. Yes. They are now cheap. 2. Doubtful. Sell as you suggest. 3. Inch Kenneth or Batu Tiga. Nursemaid.—They will all repay your nursing. Nithsdale.—Brooklands tapping should commence in 1912. Worth holding for appreciation.

Old Malay.—Yes. Favourable developments are expected. Old Clock.—Average 5 and 6. Hold the others. Out.—1. Bukit Mertajam or Merlimau. 2. Avoid. See reply to "J. P."

Playgoer.—Yes. Hold them all. Paddy.—1. Hold until next year. 2. A safe lock-up. 3. Good. 4. The machines are working well. Increase your holding. Pluvius.—1 and 2. A fair proposition, but not a great favourite of mine. Hold for the present. 3. No. 4, London Wall Buildings, E.C. Perak.—1. Glen Bervie and Batu Tiga. 2. Quite a safe holding. Pate-de-foie-gras Colonel.—1 and 2. Wait. 3. Sumatra Para is a sound dividend payer, and is now producing well. 4. Better leave it alone. Planter.—1. United Serdang, 185 acres 1903-4, 2,000 acres 1906, 5,000 acres 1907-8. 2. Lumut, 640 acres 1906, 1,776 acres 1907, 811 acres 1908, 105 acres 1909. Puzzled.—Yes. Will develop early next year. Not seriously affected by the fall. Hold, certainly; but I should not average pending development. Poor Sarah.—Hold. See second reply to "Pâté-de-foie-gras Colonel." Peter.—Hold them all for substantial improvement.

Quadrant.—1. Both good. Prefer Northumberlands. 2. See reply to "Innocent."

Rubbed.—1. Within twelve months. 2. Hold for the present. 3. Should improve steadily. Robin.—A good list, all bought at reasonable prices and likely to give you a profit. Rubberite.—You reason very soundly. Of your holding Merlimau is the share most likely to appreciate, and is the least risky. 1, 2, and 3. Sound concerns with speculative possibilities. I look for improvement, but disregard selling limits at present. Roddy.—Hold for a profit, but disregard limit. Rota.—Ledbury or Jeram should suit you. Recent Reader.—Yes. Hold for recovery. Rajah.—London Asiatic owns over 4,000 acres of rubber in Malacca, Selangor, and Perak. Good prospects, but I cannot fix selling limit at present. Rosario.—1. Average now. 2 and 3. See Rubber Notes, and increase your holding. Rockside.—1. See first reply to "Astrea." 2. Hold for the present. In good hands. 3. Both good Ceylon companies. Northumberland. Roslyn.—a. Kajang adjoins Inch Kenneth, and under same management. Very sound. b. 1912. c. Hold for capital appreciation.

Slainte.—Damansara dividend estimate 80 per cent. Harpenden price 11. Glenshiel price 7; output 9,677 lbs. for July-August. Estimate for year 50,000 lbs. All well managed and in good condition. Glenshiel should suit you. Shares.—1. I will deal with it. The company is doing well, and I look for a substantial recovery, but I do not care to fix selling limits until the market improves. 2. Kinta Kellas is now producing, but I am not sure when the dividend will be paid. Spec.—1, 2, 3.—The position justifies your averaging Madagascar and West Jequie as you suggest; but I should leave the other until development is more advanced. 4. Has made good profits, but nothing yet decided as to dividend. Strathern.—1. You have a good profit, and I should take it. 2. Buy Kamuning "B" to average as you suggest, and sell when your holding shows a profit. 3. Yes. A good company. Sphinx.—1. Both factors have been at work. 2. 45s. 9d. on a very low scale. 3. The market expects 100 per cent. more than last year. 4. When Linggi yields 500 lbs. per acre 2s. per lb. profit should ensure 200 per cent. dividends. Sam.—Hold Jequie and Tenom. Sell the others at a favourable opportunity. Shemus.—Hold for recovery.

Trustful.—Sell the first three, but you need not be in any hurry. Teddy.—A very promising list. Hold them all. T. B. (Elgin).—Both have been unfavourably mentioned in these columns. Sell on an improvement. Trinity.—A good speculation for present purchase. Textile.—Thanks for interesting enclosure. 1. It will do so as production increases. 2. It varies from 6d. per lb. upwards.

Ubique.—1. Bukit Mertajam tapping commences next year. 2. Paid 12½ per cent. for 1909. 3. Merlimau tapping commences 1912. 4. Beverley was floated last April. Tapping commences 1911. 5. No dividend yet. Tapping commences 1912. The other should pay earlier dividends. 6. Sound, but tapping date not yet fixed. Not later than 1912. Ulsterville.—1. Look for steady increase, but cannot estimate. 2. Sell on a reasonable improvement and re-invest in low-priced shares for capital appreciation. 3. Good speculative holding. Say 10s. 4. May increase 2s. 5. Yes. 6. Glen Bervie.

Very Anxious.—1 and 2. Limit too high. Should recover to price paid. 3. I am afraid so, but the present outlook is good. Vallam.—A good list. All should show profits within twelve months. Vivid.—a. Price has fallen since I advised you to sell. b. Hold now for recovery. c. They should eventually exceed the price you paid. Viroperis.—1. Sound enough as a planting proposition if you are prepared for a long wait for dividends. 2. No meeting until next year. Vindex.—An excellent list. On any substantial improvement sell 1, 2, and 6. Increase your holding of 4, 5, 7, and 8. Hold the others.

Wooloomooloo.—You treat the ill-informed and ill-natured press criticism of Crudes in quite the right spirit, and I am glad to hear that you have averaged your holding. Winton.—Average a now. Await further developments in b. Buy Glen Bervie. Waiter.—Frequently recommended. See Rubber Notes. Wood End.—1. Hold Malaccas. Exchange the other as you suggest. 2. Limit too high, perhaps, but prospects excellent.

York.—Hold them all. Over-speculation was the cause of the fall.

Miscellaneous.

A. H. B.—Not an institution which I care to recommend. Anxious (Dublin).—Sound industrials and worth holding, but they seem pretty fairly valued now.

Brewer.—You have probably bought the bonds at a price which will leave you a heavy loser whenever you try to sell them. The Government and Municipal Securities Corporation (otherwise J. A. Chown) has been the subject of warnings in Truth.

C. J. C.—The circulars you send come from a bucket shop which is not, however, connected with the other concern you mention.

Dion—1. See rule 2. As regards 2 I should hold the shares. D.C.—Better sell.

Etudiante.—You will see from an article in another column that I have a most unfavourable opinion of the company's prospects. The outside broking concern is one which you would do well to avoid.

Grey Man.—Very speculative, but have lock-up chances.

Hoggar.—No. The National Share Exchange is a cover-snatching bucket shop. H. S. (Rochdale).—Duncan Forbes and Co. are bucket shop keepers, whom I have repeatedly exposed. High Interest.—Your statement that you "must get an investment to pay me 8 or 9 per cent" suggests that you would be unwise to try for so high a rate. People wanting this rate ought to obtain it with money they can afford to see shrink. I cannot recommend either of the shares you name. Homar.—Very little information at present. They are highly speculative. Havers.—I do not care for the shares, and would sell.

M. E. V.—Thanks. I referred to the Industrial Development Corporation last week. Mott.—1. No. 2. Maikop Pipe Lines. M. M.—The concern has been frequently criticised in Truth. See answer to "Roma." Once Again.—No.

N. L. P.—All that I know is that its business is one for which it should be prosecuted under the Lotteries Act. Novice (Manchester).—Have nothing to do with the Equitable Exchange, Thompson Brothers, or any such circularisers, but transact your business through a member of the Stock Exchange. The latter are not allowed to advertise or send out circulars except to their own clients, but you should have no difficulty in obtaining an introduction to one with whom you could do business. Novice (Kenilworth).—1. The National Share Exchange and Allison and Co. are bucket-shop keepers whom you should avoid. See preceding reply. 2. See reply to "Roma." 3. Many of these lottery ticket touts are unprincipled tricksters, and as it is moreover an illegal business I cannot recommend any of them.

Quadrant.—Leave them alone.

Roma.—The Investment Registry, Ltd., deal as principals, and are largely interested in selling stocks to you which they have bought at much lower figures than they ask. Go to a broker, who acts as your agent—i.e., buys for you, not sells to you. He will charge you a commission, of course, but you will know exactly what his charge is, and you will also know that he is able to act disinterestedly. People who have stocks to unload are not the people whom it is desirable to apply to for disinterested advice, and I take it that you, like myself, regard disinterestedness as a primary qualification on the part of your broker.

S. B. S.—I have no reason to doubt that the drawings are fairly conducted, but I am not sufficiently interested to take the step you suggest. It is an illegal business so far as this country is concerned, and people buying the bonds here must take the risk—if there is any—of being cheated. S. L. E.—R. A. Smith and Co. are bucket-shop keepers with a most disreputable record. Smiler.—The fact of the shares being given away is surely a sufficient indication of their value. Spearmint (Lancaster).—1. They could not plead the Gaming Act; every bargain done for you would represent a legitimate purchase from a jobber, and you could claim delivery of the stock at each ensuing Settlement if you wished. Any grave act of irregularity on the part of the firm would be followed by suspension or dismissal from the Stock Exchange. The Committee exists to see that members conform to certain rules and regulations made with a view to the public being justly dealt with. 2. I must refer you to my Notes. Scrutator.—(a.) It is a sound concern, but a holder of common shares in an enterprise of the kind must be prepared to take a business risk. (b.) It does not follow that they have, but time must be given to show the effects produced by the new issue. (c.) I see no special reason for advising a sale now.

TYRO.—They might be held for developments.

XXX.—I cannot recall having heard of these concerns. If you have any papers relating to them I should like to see them.

VIGILANT.

INSURANCE.

CONVERTING LIMITED PAYMENT LIFE POLICIES INTO ENDOWMENT ASSURANCE—SUPERIORITY OF WITH-PROFIT POLICIES—PROTECTION OR INVESTMENT—IMPORTANCE OF SURRENDER VALUES.

LAST week I had something to say about the confusion, resulting in disappointment, that has often arisen between twenty payment life and twenty year endowment assurance policies. Under a twenty payment life policy the sum assured is paid at death whenever it happens; but the maximum period during which premiums can be paid is twenty years. Twenty year endowment assurance provides that the sum assured will be paid at the end of twenty years, or at death if it occurs previously. In this case, as under the limited payment life policy, the number of annual premiums can in no case exceed twenty, and under both policies no further premiums have to be paid after the death of the person assured.

I am talking of twenty payment life and twenty year endowment assurance because these are popular policies which are frequently taken; but exactly similar considerations apply to both shorter and longer terms. Policies under which the sum assured is payable only at death can be secured by premiums payable for ten, fifteen, twenty-five, or thirty years, or by premiums payable until a selected age, such as fifty, sixty, sixty-five, or seventy. Precisely similar variations in the period are applied to endowment assurances, and it rests with the policy-holders, at the time of effecting the assurance, to select the endowment period, or, under limited payment life policies, the premium-paying period, so as to suit his circumstances best.

I am sure that a great many people take endowment assurance policies when it would be wiser for them to take limited payment life policies. In saying this I am in no way under-rating the attractions and advantages of well-selected endowment assurance. I have frequently explained how lucrative endowment assurances are from an investor's point of view, but my contention is that a great many people require protection for their families in the event of early death rather than an investment that in the majority of cases will benefit themselves in the long run. The really crucial test as to what kind of policy a man ought to take depends upon whether protection or investment is the thing most essential in his particular circumstances. A policy under which premiums have to be paid throughout the whole of life involves a low rate of premium, and consequently gives a large amount of assurance for a given outlay. A short period endowment assurance involves a high rate of premium, and consequently a small amount of assurance for a given outlay. Limited payment life policies frequently hit the happy mean between these two things, and present many advantages, which I have described from time to time.

The particular point which I wish to emphasise to-day is that when a limited payment life policy is really well chosen it can in fact be converted into endowment assurance if at the end of the premium-paying period, say twenty years, a sum of money for the policy-holder himself proves to be more necessary than a larger amount payable at his death for the benefit of his dependants.

I will illustrate the different policies for a man who effects his assurance at age forty. It is possible to obtain from a thoroughly sound company which charges high rates of premium for non-profit policies a guarantee that £1,000, neither more nor less, will be paid at the end of twenty years, or at death if previous, in return for an annual premium of £53. It is also possible to take a with-profit policy from another office, which in return for £42 15s. 10d. a year, payable for twenty years at the most, will pay £1,000 and profits in addition at death whenever it happens. Suppose the man lives for twenty years, and at the end of that time, having paid the full number of premiums under his policy, feels that he would rather have some money for himself than have a larger sum paid to his estate at his death. What can he do? He can surrender his policy and the accrued bonuses. What can he get in cash? Something like £930, a little more or a little less if the profits of the life office are larger or smaller than they were in 1909.

It will make the facts more clear if I show what a man could obtain for a well-chosen with-profit twenty-payment life policy if he paid the same premium every year as he would have to pay for a non-profit twenty-year endowment assurance of £1,000. In the latter case he would pay £53 a year, and the policy would yield exactly £1,000 at the end of twenty years, or at his death if previous. Now, at age forty, since the premium for a policy of £1,000 on the limited payment life plan is £42 15s. 10d., a premium of £53 a year would secure a policy for £1,238, payable, with bonuses in addition, at death, whenever it happened. If the man lived for twenty years a policy of this kind for £1,000, together with the policies, could be surrendered for a cash payment of £930. Consequently a policy for £1,238 could be surrendered at the end of twenty years for a cash payment of £1,152. Therefore, from every point of view, this twenty-payment with profit life policy knocks the twenty-year endowment policy without profits into a cocked hat. The precise process of knocking a policy into a cocked hat is one which I cannot clearly visualise, but the phrase appears to express in effective language the idea which I wish to convey that a twenty-payment life policy, if well chosen, may be in effect a much better endowment assurance policy than an endowment assurance policy properly so called. Under the non-profit endowment assurance, if the man dies within the twenty years, his estate receives £1,000, neither more nor less. Under the with-profit twenty-payment life policy at the same premium, if the man dies within twenty years, his estate receives anything from £1,238 up to £1,730, which is the amount to which the sum assured would be increased by bonuses by the end of twenty years, the increase taking place gradually year by year throughout the whole period. Thus for the same outlay, £53 a year, he receives a much larger measure of protection in the event of death. At the end of the twenty years, if he wants to surrender his limited payment life policy for a sum in cash, he can obtain £1,152, whereas the non-profit endowment assurance policy, effected—be it remembered—at the same cost, would yield him only £1,000.

Anybody may say if he likes that this is not a fair comparison. Very well; I agree. I made it on purpose to bring out two or three important points. One is that a well-chosen with-profit policy is in most circumstances much better than non-participating assurance. Another reason was that I wanted to emphasise the attractions of limited payment life policies, as compared with endowment assurances, even when the former are surrendered at the end of the premium-paying period, by which process they are, in effect, converted into endowment assurances. If a thoroughly good twenty-year endowment assurance policy, participating in profits, were taken at the same premium of £53 a year, a man could obtain a policy for £990, as compared with £1,238 on the limited payment life plan at the same cost, and at the end of the twenty years, if he were living, the policy, with its accrued bonuses, would yield him £1,337 in cash, as compared with £1,152 for the surrender of the limited payment life policy. Here is the gist of the matter. Pay £53 a year for twenty years and the twenty payment life policy will yield, in the event of death within twenty years, anything from about £250 up to £400 more than the endowment assurance; but at the end of the twenty years the endowment assurance produces £185 more than the limited payment life policy. Which does the man want? Presumably each individual is the best judge of his own case, but my suggestion is that more often than not it would be advisable to have the much larger protection in the event of early death, and the smaller payment at the end of the twenty years. Thus I would at least urge my readers to consider the advisability of taking limited payment life policies, even if they think that what they want is endowment assurance. If, however, they have some idea at the back of their heads that they will want to surrender their limited payment life policies at the end of the premium-paying period, they must keep a very sharp look-out as to the conditions in regard to cash surrender values. If they were to find, as they very likely might, that after paying £53 a year for twenty years they could surrender their policy for a cash payment of only £700, my argument would go by the board altogether; it depends almost entirely upon the liberality of the surrender values. The policy I have been quoting is that of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, whose terms in regard to surrender values are of a wholly exceptional character. It may be wise or it may be foolish for other offices to give smaller surrender values and seek to make a profit by so doing for the benefit of other policy-holders. This is a legitimate subject for differences of opinion, but these variations in practice are just the points which the discriminating policy-holder will take advantage of in order to obtain the best possible return for his outlay.

WHY PAY RENT? Take an Immediate Mortgage, free in event of death, from the SCOTTISH TEMPERANCE LIFE OFFICE. Repayments usually less than rent. Mortgage expenses paid by the Company. Prospectus from London Office, 3, Cheapside, E.C.

FOR INSURANCE ANNOUNCEMENTS, see page 811.

Answers to Correspondents.

[Inquiries on the subject of insurance are answered in this column every week. Every letter containing an inquiry must be accompanied by a coupon cut from the third page of the coloured cover of Truth.]

Sphinx.—The company is very far from the front rank of life offices, and I do not recommend it. Solomon.—I should certainly not advise you to do business with the company you mention. Beta.—The Scottish Widows is much the better of the two, though the other office is of course perfectly safe. Corkonian.—Firstly: Scottish Life or Clerical Medical and General. Secondly: Norwich Union or National Mutual of Australasia. Zelandia.—1. Your policy is a child's endowment, maturing at age twenty-five; it is the kind of thing I described on September 7, and you have a very good policy. The deferred assurance described in my article of the 14th provided for the sum assured to be paid at death after twenty-one; it might be at age eighty or ninety: hence the difference. 2, Scottish Widows, Old Equitable Society, United Kingdom Temperance Institution. River.—For your purpose you can do better than either. National Provident or Scottish Amicable would be good. Rostron.—You scarcely give me enough detail to form an opinion. Ask the insurance company what the surrender value is, and Messrs. Foster and Cranfield, Poultry, E.C., how much they could sell the policy for. Other replies to correspondents are unavoidably held over.

COMPANY MEETINGS.

BRITISH AND COLONIAL INVESTMENTS, LIMITED.

The first ordinary general meeting was held yesterday at Salisbury House, Mr. G. R. Bonnard presiding.

The Secretary (Mr. F. W. Webb) having read the notice calling the meeting,

The Chairman expressed the Board's disappointment at the absence of Mr. H. G. Latilla, the chairman and managing director. They were, however, looking forward to seeing their colleague back on October 1 completely restored to health. (Hear, hear.) During his stay in Africa, Mr. Latilla had not been unmindful of the company's interests, and he did not think it would be long after his return before they received practical proof of this.

The company was registered on January 7, 1909, and purchased the assets of two other companies for fully-paid shares of 10s. each in the capital of this company. In taking over these assets they had to assume the liabilities of both the vendor companies, amounting in the aggregate to some £80,000. Financial assistance was sought and obtained from Mr. Abe Bailey, who, in agreeing to render it, made it a condition that a new Board of Directors should be appointed. It was in these circumstances that the present directors came into office. The company's indebtedness to Mr. Bailey had been fully discharged, but the satisfactory state of accounts now submitted would not have been possible but for the financial support afforded in the circumstances. (Hear, hear.) The statements in the balance-sheet as to interests, investments, etc., at cost meant that the cost of the assets originally acquired was represented by the total face or par value of the shares the company had issued for them, and, with regard to other assets since acquired, the cash actually paid for them.

The profit and loss account was for a period of eighteen months, and the shareholders might take it that future accounts would show a reduction in expenses of approximately £4,500. Turning to the credit side of the account, he said they believed that rents receivable on farms and buildings would be well maintained. Profit on the sale of investments, £35,106 16s. 10d., had been mainly earned by investments made and realised since the directors came into office. (Hear, hear.) He desired particularly to emphasise that fact, so that there could be no misapprehension in thinking that that profit had been derived from the indiscriminate selling of the assets originally acquired by the company. (Cheers.) Passing to the balance-sheet, he stated that the sundry creditors, £10,633 3s. 9d., were more particularly for certain purchases made and not payable until after the closing of the books. The payment for those purchases had now been made, and the company stood that day in the happy position of being practically without creditors. (Hear, hear.)

On the credit side of the balance-sheet share investments, £93,655 13s. 6d., and mining interests, £22,301 11s. 3d., were represented by very valuable interests which the company possessed in mining, land, and building companies, and mining interests and claims in South Africa. Their mining interests in the Transvaal were almost exclusively confined to deep levels, and there could be no reasonable doubt that the future would show a very considerable appreciation in the figures at which they stood in the company's books that day, while their interests in Rhodesia also afforded evidence of becoming very valuable. Buildings, stands, farms, etc., £85,500, were represented by their direct holdings of real estate interests in the Transvaal, consisting of stands and buildings in Johannesburg situated upon sites of considerable value and importance. The buildings had been kept in excellent repair, and the revenue derived from them showed an upward tendency, but, as opportunity offered, the directors proposed from time to time to arrange for the erection of new buildings, as by doing so a large and permanent increase in revenue should accrue.

Mortgages, debentures, etc., standing at £47,562 12s., were represented by mortgages which the company held in three English real estate companies; that amount was that day well represented by the value of this asset. In view, however, of the trend of land legislation it was possible that a reduction in value might be marked, and with that possibility before them the directors had deemed it advisable to keep in hand a reserve to meet such a contingency. (Hear, hear.) A considerable portion of the item of sundry debtors, £21,876 3s. 2d., had since been received, and the outstanding balance was perfectly good.

The cash position represented by the item of loans on securities at call, £11,363, and cash at bankers, London and Johannesburg, £16,306 13s. 1d., making a total of £27,669 13s. 1d., gave them a substantial amount of liquid cash in every way sufficient for the company's purposes. Their future should be a very successful one. The desire of the Board was to keep the company and its affairs in such a position that it might not only be able to pay substantial and, he hoped, steadily increasing dividends, but that the possibility of an intermission of their regular declaration and payment should be entirely obviated. (Hear, hear.) He concluded by moving the adoption of the report and accounts.

Mr. C. J. Brown seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously, and a dividend of 6 per cent. per annum, tax free, was afterwards declared.

The meeting closed with a cordial vote of thanks to the Chairman.

EL ORO MINING AND RAILWAY CO., LIMITED.

The eleventh annual general meeting of the shareholders in the El Oro Mining and Railway Company, Limited, was held, on the 23rd inst., at the Cannon Street Hotel, London, Mr. R. T. Bayliss (the chairman) presiding.

The Secretary (Mr. T. Dundas Pillans) having read the notice convening the meeting and the report of the auditors,

The Chairman said:—Gentlemen, the directors' report which I now have the pleasure to submit for your approval and adoption shows improvement, I think I may say in every respect, when compared with the report for the year preceding. We have the pleasure to introduce to you Mr. Alfred Main, the general manager, under whose direction these improvements have been made. You will observe from the statement on the front page of the directors' report that the total realised profit for the year was £227,192 6s. 11d. Adding to this the amount brought forward from the last account, £87,365 9s. 8d., the directors have had at their disposal during the year a total net profit of £314,557 16s. 7d. to deal with. Out of this sum we have to make provision for income-tax. £9,752 11s. 6d. We have written off property account the cost of all permanent improvements put on the property during the year, £17,634 4s. 3d. We have written off a further sum of £25,000 for depreciation of plant and machinery. Dividends Nos. 18 and 19 of 1s. 6d. per share each have absorbed £172,125, leaving a balance to carry forward of £90,046 0s. 10d. You will notice that the carry forward is slightly larger than it was this time last year, notwithstanding that we have written off an additional sum of £25,000 for depreciation. In this distribution of profits I think you will agree we have lived up to the conservative policy pursued by the directors in past years, to which the present sound position of the company is mainly due. The operation of the reduction work during the past year, as set forth in detail in the statements attached to Mr. Main's report, fully justifies my opening remark that the year 1910 shows improvement in every direction. To make this clear to you I wish to make a comparison between the results obtained in the first and last months of the year just ended, that is to say between July, 1909, and June, 1910. In July, 1909, with both mills in operation, comprising 200 stamps, we crushed 24,236 tons, which was just about the average for the preceding year. In June last, at the completion of the year 1910, with only one mill of 100 stamps working, we crushed 30,026 tons. In July, 1909, the average recovered value of ore treated was $8.66 per ton. In June, 1910, it was $6.83 per ton. In July, 1909, the total average working cost at the mine was $5.32 per ton, whereas in June this year the average cost was $3.80 per ton. For the year ending June 30, 1909, the average extraction of the precious metals contained in the ore was 89.65 per cent., and for the year ending June 30, 1910, the average extraction was 91.41 per cent., and I venture to say, in the presence of Mr. Main, to whom these remarkable results are mainly due, that with the exception of the percentage of extraction the limit of these improvements has not yet been reached. (Applause.) The fact that we have been able during this period to crush more ore with one mill than we previously did with two is due to the rearrangement of the mechanical operation in the No. 2 mill, foreshadowed in my remarks at the meeting last year. After a series of careful experiments Mr. Main found that by crushing the ore through a coarser screen in the stamp battery, and by providing additional tube mills for the reduction of the battery product into slimes, he would be able to put the old mill out of commission and to crush more ore per day with the No. 2 mill alone than had previously been crushed by the two mills working together. (Applause.) The saving in labour by the displacement of the old mill, and of expenditure necessary for its maintenance, has contributed largely to the general reduction in the total working costs of the property during the year we are now reviewing, as compared with the costs for 1909. Continuing, the Chairman said that, with regard to their ore reserves, it was estimated by their manager that on June 30 they had a total of 441,639 tons of the average value of about $9.50c. per ton in gold, compared with 383,269 tons last year, having an average value of $11.10c. At the present rate of crushing the 441,000 tons represented only about fifteen months' supply for the mill, but they were justified in expecting that further large supplies would be exposed by fresh developments. There was every reason to look for a further reduction in the mining costs. It was proposed to carry out special mining operations upon certain suggestions made by their manager, and they anticipated thereby largely augmenting the ore reserves and increasing the "life" of the mine. The directors were well satisfied with the progress which had been made so far by the Suchi Timber Company in opening up its extensive forests. Much larger earnings in the near future were anticipated from that company's working. The operations of the railway, which was the property of the El Oro Company, had shown marked improvement, and its total net profit for the past year was $124.254 in gold, compared with $53,749 in 1909, and any further activity on the part of the Suchi Timber Company would add materially to the railway earnings. The Chairman went on to refer in detail to the developments at the mine, and said that during the past year they had certainly won results and got indications of still further improvements, which, he thought, placed the mine to-day in a better position as regards the future than it had been for a considerable time. (Applause.) He concluded by moving the adoption of the report, which was unanimously agreed to after a brief discussion.

PEARSON AND KNOWLES.

The thirty-seventh annual general meeting of the Pearson and Knowles Coal and Iron Company, Limited, was held at the company's offices at Warrington, on the 22nd inst.

Mr. J. S. Harmood-Banner, M.P. (Chairman), in the course of his remarks, said: I have no doubt it will be a pleasant surprise to you to look at the balance-sheet submitted on September 27, 1909, of the individual company Pearson and Knowles, and compare it with the consolidated balance-sheet 1910, which I now have to refer to. You will observe that, while the capital remains the same in both balance-sheets, the reserve fund rises from £170,000 in 1909 to £317,500 in 1910—a fair reserve to add to a capital of £860,000. In addition, as you know, and as you will have seen in both accounts, the original valuation of colliery leases and goodwill of collieries and ironworks (£315,559) has been written off. I think these figures will convince you that whilst we have been careful in our management of the Pearson and Knowles Company, we have also been equally careful in our management of the purchased company of Messrs. Rylands Brothers, Limited, in which we hold the whole of the shares. The progress of Messrs. Rylands Brothers since we purchased, in 1901, has been most satisfactory. The reserve fund has been built up to £137,500 from nothing, depreciation has been provided for, the business has been nearly doubled. Without the additions to both works, which have become necessary by the amalgamation, we could not have placed ourselves in the state of capacity, production, and efficiency in which we now are. Now the profit and loss account you will see, as consolidated, amounts to £66,617, against profits brought into the balance-sheet of last year, £61,970. The profits of the iron works and Messrs. Rylands Brothers have been satisfactory, though I must confess that, looking at the large volume of trade done, we should have been justified in expecting better results. The profit has not been equivalent to the large amount of work executed, and to the turnover and margins which have been too narrow to be satisfactory. Now, as regards the distribution of the money, you will see that we act on conservative lines. We are paying a small dividend, and very likely many of you would say that on the basis of the profits we might have made a larger distribution; but, in the first place, the directors don't like to see the capital account increase, and therefore they are writing off the additions to plant of last year £18,125, and as they still have difficulties to meet in connection with the Maypole Colliery they think it wiser to transfer £15,000 to the reserve funds, instead of paying a larger dividend for this year. As regards the future, I will only say that at present we are fairly busy at both our iron works and our wire mills, and we hope that by this time next year we shall be able to tell you of a better margin of profits.

The Chairman went on to deal with the proposal of the directors for increasing the share capital of the company, and said that the capital they were now raising would form only a portion of that which would be required, but they had no reason to doubt their ability to obtain the remainder.

The report was adopted, and the usual dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum on the preference shares and a dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum on the ordinary shares, both less tax, for the half-year ended June 30 last was declared.

An extraordinary general meeting of the company was then held, when the resolutions relating to the new issue were submitted and carried.

THE UNITED SUMATRA RUBBER ESTATES, LIMITED.

The second ordinary general meeting of the members of this company was held yesterday at the London Chamber of Commerce, Oxford Court, Cannon Street, under the presidency of Mr. Keith Fraser Arbuthnot.

The representative of the Secretaries (Messrs. M. P. Evans and Company) having reading the notice calling the meeting and the Auditors' report,

The Chairman said: Gentlemen, as the directors' report and audited accounts have been circulated, and have been in your hands for the prescribed time, I will, with your permission, take them as read. When I had the pleasure of addressing you a year ago I commented on the then very satisfactory state of the company's affairs, and said that I hoped we should have an equally satisfactory showing for this year. I am therefore glad to be able to tell you that our crops have considerably exceeded the estimates, being in the case of rubber more than double what we expected, and in the case of coffee 833 cwts. in excess of the manager's estimate—which, by the way, he had already increased from the figure quoted in the original prospectus. Our estimates for the current year, as published in the report, are again satisfactory, but as our manager has always shown great caution when forming his estimates, we hope that these are again fully safe. We are now tapping about 21,000 trees, and as more are rapidly coming into the "tapping round," we expect to tap an average of 30,000 trees during the year. Our tapping continues to be most carefully done, no damage being reported, and the least possible amount of bark removed, great care being especially exercised in the case of the young trees, which, by the way, are only being tapped at the base, while the method adopted on the older trees is the half herring-bone system. Our labour is healthy and contented, but the numbers will from now onwards require reinforcing regularly, as before the end of this year we shall require something approaching 200 coolies for tapping alone. Our reports from the property continue satisfactory, the whole estate being in good order, clean, and particularly free from disease, and the weeding is only costing us 46 guilder cents an acre a month, which is exceptionally low. The coffee which is planted between our rubber has been a great stand-by during the last two years, the crops of this product having been a source of considerable profit—a revenue which we shall be very sorry to lose; but now that the rubber is doing so well and is shading the coffee, this cultivation will, of course, cease to give a paying crop, and will be removed. This will not come about all of a sudden, but will be a gradual process, and although I say I regret the profit which we have been in the habit of deriving from this source, there is no doubt that our rubber will benefit materially by obtaining more light and air. Our cultivated area remains the same as last year, and the table which we publish gives the fullest particulars of age and plantings, from which you will see that we have 1,735 acres planted with 161,679 Para trees, or, roughly, 93 trees to the acre. Of these about 97,000 will be five years old and older in December, 1911, and by the following May a further 39,000 trees will have reached that age, so that in May, 1912, we should have about 136,000 trees tappable. You will have noticed that the 30,000 Ficus trees which were included in our table of plantings last year are now left out; we have done this because many of these trees have since been cut out, besides which our crop for the year under review only amounted to about 400 lbs., so we thought it best to disregard the trees which we still have remaining. The prices which we have obtained for both our coffee and rubber have been good—namely, 46s. 5d. a cwt. for the former, which, although satisfactory and considerably higher than last year, is now advancing in price, and looks like going even higher still, and I am glad to say that at the last sale our coffee realised an average net price of 50s. 8d. a cwt. in Singapore. Our rubber netted 7s. 8d. a lb., a price rather higher than that ruling at the moment, but we anticipate that for the future we shall be able to make a much-improved quality of rubber, and we also hope to make many economies in our cost of production. Now, referring to the accounts. Our shares have during the year been split into shares of 2s. each in accordance with the resolution passed at an extraordinary meeting this time last year, and our capital has been increased by £8,000, options having been exercised during the year for this amount. Then, in our profit and loss account, although our profits are nearly double what they were last year, the administration charges, directors' fees, etc., are considerably less, and have been more than half met by the profit made out of transfer fees; the whole of the London expenses and also those in Singapore we are again paying out of revenue; £400 we are writing off the value of our buildings and machinery; £730 1s. 3d. we propose adding to our reserve fund, bringing this up to the substantial sum of £5,000, after which we are in the position to recommend a dividend of 20 per cent., and have £3,304 18s. 4d. to carry forward. As you see, we could, of course, have paid rather a larger dividend, but I think the policy we have adopted is a sound and wise one, and I personally believe in rubber, and believe that we are in for high prices for some time to come; and I am sure a company like ours, which is paying, and will probably continue to pay, increasing dividends, but always with due regard to a safe and permanent future, must do much to restore confidence in an industry which is all-deserving of the public's interest from an investment point of view, for rubber cultivation in the Middle East is second to none as an investment, and one which can well bear looking into. Our estate, for instance, which when fully matured will stand in at less than £50 per acre, will, with a crop of 500 lb. per acre, show profits of 50 per cent. for every shilling we make on our rubber. I mean when we are in full bearing if our crop costs us 1s. to produce, and sells at 2s. a lb., we shall be earning 50 per cent. on our capital; if it sells at 3s. we should be earning 100 per cent., and so on. I now beg to propose that the directors' report and audited accounts be received and the same be adopted; and I will repeat the words I used last year, for I hope and fully believe, notwithstanding the lower level in price which is now ruling for the raw article, we may again look forward to a better showing and a better dividend still. Even should prices be lower throughout the year, our financial strength will not be affected, besides which, as our dividend would be earned on a lower selling price for rubber, our shares should be attractive as an investment, being on a conservative and sounder basis. I now move the adoption of the report and accounts.

Mr. P. E. Hervey seconded the resolution, which was then put to the meeting and carried unanimously.

The Chairman next moved: "That a dividend at the rate of 20 per cent. per annum for the year ending June 30, 1910, be declared and paid on the shares in the company's capital, but so that on all shares which were not issued prior to July 1, 1909, a dividend of 20 per cent. per annum be paid only on the amounts paid on such shares as from the dates when the respective payments were duly made, and so that on any shares issued prior to July 1, 1909, but not then fully paid, a dividend of 20 per cent. per annum be paid on the amount credited on June 30, 1909, together with a like dividend on the amounts subsequently paid on such shares as from the dates when the respective payments were duly made."

Mr. J. W. S. Bourne-May seconded the motion, which was unanimously agreed to.

The Chairman stated that during the past year the directors had invited Mr. J. W. S. Bourne-May to a seat on the board to fill the vacancy caused by the sad death of Mr. Brett. In order to comply with the Articles of Association it was necessary for Mr. Bourne-May to come up for re-election. He was a large shareholder, and since he joined the board he had shown great interest in the company's affairs. He had, therefore, much pleasure in proposing the election of Mr. Bourne-May as a director.

The motion was seconded by Mr. Hervey and carried unanimously.

The auditors (Messrs. Macnair, Rorie, and Company) were reappointed, on the motion of Mr. R. C. Mackness, seconded by Mr. Guy Elliston.

Mr. M. Kilner said that as the accounts were so satisfactory, he wished to mention one matter which concerned the directors and their remuneration. The company was only in its second year, and the shareholders would have received by way of dividend a return of about one-third of their capital, the dividend for the first year being at the rate of 10 per cent. and for this year 20 per cent., making altogether 30 per cent. The total dividends distributed in the two years amounted to over £20,000. He thought the shareholders might mark their appreciation of these results by increasing the directors' fees to £900 per annum, and he proposed that they be paid at that rate for the financial year just closed. He thought this rate might be adopted permanently, and suggested that the Articles of Association be altered accordingly. It would be remembered that on the formation of the company the properties were obtained at a very reasonable price without any intermediate profit to the vendors and without any promotion money. It was, he thought, owing to the fact that the directors had made such a good bargain that the company had such excellent results on the present occasion.

A shareholder suggested that the proposal was somewhat irregular, seeing no notice had been given to the shareholders.

The Chairman remarked that the resolution was in order, but, of course, the Articles of Association could not be altered at the present meeting.

Mr. Guy Elliston said that he was in complete sympathy with the proposition, and if notice were given of it he was quite sure it would be the wish of every shareholder to give the directors adequate remuneration. (Applause.) They all appreciated the fact that they were greatly indebted to the directors, and they would look forward to the time when they could legally increase their remuneration to a figure which was worthy of the great work and labours of the board.

Mr. Kilner said that at any rate the shareholders ought to pass a hearty vote of thanks to the directors for all they had done for the company. (Applause.)

The vote was unanimously accorded.

An extraordinary general meeting was then held for the purpose of making an alteration in the Articles of Association.

The Chairman formally moved a resolution, the effect of which was that in future certificates would be signed by only one director instead of two. This would have the effect of making the duties of the board less onerous.

Mr. Hervey seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

The proceedings then terminated.

---

All Rights reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

THE HAPPIEST MAN ON AIRTH.

HE came slowly along the path over the fields, dawdling in the pleasant spring sunshine—an elderly man, with iron-grey hair and shoulders slightly bent; his expression gentle, but tinged with a certain grave sadness. You could not look at him without seeing that here was one who had been, in his time, through deep waters, and that the passage had left upon him its indelible traces. The traces of suffering, you might be sure, but not of sin. It was impossible to associate a guilty secret with that face. Its every line forbade the suggestion. If he was not a man of holy life, then there is nothing in human physiognomy. He wore the dress of a clergyman. He was, in fact, Vicar of Broxton Parva.

Turning from the field into the lane, he met two acquaintances, a man and a woman, who stopped and spoke to him. The man was tall, wiry, and sunburnt, with shrewd, deep-set eyes and hair beginning to bleach about the temples. At a little distance he might have passed for young; at close quarters he looked almost middle-aged. Had you placed him in the late forties, you would not have been far out. His voice, nasal though by no means unmelodious, bewrayed the native-born American.

The woman was a beautiful creature, twelve or fifteen years his junior. She came upon you in a billowing of laces and chiffons and rustling silk underskirts. There was just the suspicion of powder on her face, and she breathed a delicate aroma of the latest thing in scents. Her manner was empressé, even a little gushing. She rustled up to the vicar and seized him by both hands.

"You dear man, congratulate me," she cooed, with an arch side-glance at her cavalier.

"The news is true, then? I am sure I congratulate you both," replied the Vicar, cordially.

"That's good of you," struck in the American, who had been tugging at his grizzled moustache with the self-conscious awkwardness of the newly engaged swain, "I guess Miss Titherington has made me the happiest man on airth."

The Vicar smiled, nodded, and passed on. He had sufficient tact to surmise that the happiest man on airth would be rendered a still happier man on airth by his speedy withdrawal.

The Vicar had dined, and was enjoying an hour's relaxation with a pipe and a book, when Silas Chitterden, the American whose acquaintance we have just made, was announced.

"Thought I'd look in and smoke a cigar with you,"

he said, holding out his hand. "Hope I'm not intruding?"

"Certainly not. I'm very pleased to see you," answered the Vicar. "That's a cosy armchair there. Make yourself comfortable."

The American deposited his lanky person in the chair indicated.

"Uncommonly snug room this," he remarked, gazing round the Vicar's library. "An ideal bachelor's sanctum."

A momentary spasm of pain flitted across the other's face. Silas Chitterden didn't notice it. His eyes were on the ceiling. His mind was pursuing its own train of thought.

"Wa-al, I've taken the almighty plunge," he remarked, after a brief silence.

The Vicar smiled.

"You refer to your engagement?" he replied.

The American nodded. "Miss Titherington is a sweet girl. Don't you think so?" he inquired.

The Vicar concurred, as politeness demanded, though he had his own private opinions.

"Seems to me," continued Mr. Chitterden, blowing three enormous smoke-rings, "that marriage crowns a man—completes him, so to speak. He's like a coat in the rough, with the tacking threads in it, till the woman comes along. And she takes him in hand and turns out the finished article. Say, Vicar, don't think me impertinent, but I've often wondered that you've got on so long without a wife——"

Again that spasm of pain on the Vicar's face.

"I have a wife," he said, gravely.

Mr. Chitterden, evidently taken aback, sat upright in his chair.

"Gosh! You don't say so?" he ejaculated.

"I thought you might have heard the story," pursued the Vicar. "It is a sad one, though, I am afraid, not altogether uncommon. My poor wife is out of her mind—an incurable case. She has been in an asylum for ten years."

The American wriggled on his chair with the uneasy movement of a man conscious of having put his foot into it.

"I'm sorry I spoke, Vicar," he said, with apologetic sympathy.

"Oh, that's all right, my friend. You didn't know," replied the Vicar, cordially. "Poor thing! She is a countrywoman of yours," he added, after a pause.

"Is there no hope for her?" inquired Mr. Chitterden.

"None," sighed the Vicar. "She gets steadily worse every year. At first, when I went to see her, she used to recognise me. Now I am some one different every time I go. On the last occasion"—he could not forbear a smile, despite the tragedy of it—"she would insist that I was the Pope"

"Snakes!" ejaculated Mr. Chitterden, with a gleam of humour in his shrewd eyes. "And you such a pillar of Evangelicalism. I guess the poor lady must be far gone indeed! And she is a countrywoman of mine, you say?"

"Yes; she was a native of Dakotah," was the reply.

"My own State," said Mr. Chitterden. "Seems somehow to make it more interesting to me, Vicar."

"I believe I am correct in saying so," rejoined the other, "but I cannot speak with absolute certainty. When I first met my wife, she was a trained nurse, working among the poor in South Lambeth. I was attracted to her at once, not only by her great personal charms, but also by her unselfish devotion to her duties. When I proposed to her, I knew practically nothing of her antecedents, and afterwards she said very little to enlighten me. For some reason—as I soon discerned—any reference to the past distressed her. Evidently there was some painful secret in the background; but I loved her, I trusted her, and I respected it."

"Just like you, sir!" exclaimed Mr. Chitterden. "You trust everybody."

"And, consequently, am seldom deceived," smiled the Vicar. "I have found that in one's dealings with one's fellow-men one generally gets paid, so to speak, in one's own coin. If you trust people, nine times out of ten they will justify your confidence, and vice versâ. It is your very suspicious folk who are always being taken in."

"Wa-a-l!" drawled Mr. Chitterden, after a moment's reflection. "That's good Christianity, I dare say; but I demur to it as a business proposition."

Then the conversation drifted into other and for present purposes immaterial channels.

It was a fortnight or three weeks later before Mr. Chitterden again dropped in at the vicarage for a smoke.

"I've been thinking over what you told me the other day," he remarked. "Seems to me, Vicar, that yours is a hard case."

"In what respect?" asked the other.

"In being tied for life to a woman who is incurably insane," answered Mr. Chitterden. "Strikes me that your matrimonial laws over here have a durned sight too much of the Mede and Persian about them. Now, out in Dakotah a man situated as you are could get his release at once for the trouble of asking for it."

"I should never ask for it," answered the Vicar, gravely. "I do not hold it in the power of any human tribunal to override the law of God."

"Ah! you take the cast-iron view of marriage?" remarked Silas Chitterden, with a thoughtful frown.

"If you put it that way—yes," replied the Vicar.

"Wa-al, I guess I don't," said Mr. Chitterden, candidly. "I suppose it's no use my trying to convert you to my way of thinking—eh, Vicar?"

"Not the least," was the rejoinder. "This is a matter on which I feel very strongly."

Silas Chitterden nodded. The Vicar made haste to change the subject.

"When does your marriage with Miss Titherington take place?" he inquired.

"Nothing is definitely fixed. But we are talking of September," replied Mr. Chitterden. "By the way, Vicar, while we are on that subject, there's a little point on which I should like your advice. It seems to be generally assumed about here that I'm a bachelor, and I haven't thought it necessary to undeceive people. But the fact is, I've been married before."

"Eh! Is that so?" exclaimed the Vicar.

"Yes," said Mr. Chitterden, "I married in America twenty-four years ago, when I was quite a youngster. The union didn't prove satisfactory. In the end my wife left me. I afterwards ascertained that she was one of the passengers in the Vancouver, bound for Liverpool, which went down (as you may remember) in mid-Atlantic with all hands. I can't pretend I was sorry. I should have divorced the lady in any case. But the question arising at the moment is whether I ought to acquaint Miss Titherington with my previous marriage."

"Certainly you ought, in my opinion," replied the Vicar.

"You see, girls are funny creatures," said Mr. Chitterden. "You never know how they'll take a thing. It might make a difference to Miss Titherington, perhaps."

"I'm quite sure it won't. She's not that sort," declared the Vicar.

He meant it, too, though not quite in the sense Mr. Chitterden supposed. The Vicar had known Madge Titherington for ten years, and he was convinced that where a fortune of several million dollars was concerned it wouldn't make the least difference to her how many times the owner of the dollars had been previously wedded.

"Then I'll seize the very first opportunity of owning up," said the happiest man on airth, as he rose to take his departure.

Moving towards the door his eye was caught by a photograph standing on the top of one of the bookcases.

"Who's that?" he asked, in his brusque, direct way.

"My poor wife. It was taken just after we were married," said the Vicar.

THE R.M.S. "DUNOTTAR CASTLE," of the Union-Castle Line (the only large steamer 100 A1 at Lloyd's entirely devoted to Pleasure Cruises), is chartered for:—£18 18s.—Naples, Montenegro, Dalmatia, Venice, Corfu, October 1-20. £23 2s.—Cruise Palestine, Egypt, Greece, leaving October 22.—Cruising Co., Ltd., 5, Endsleigh Gardens, London, N.W.

Mr. Chitterden put up his pince-nez and bent forward to examine the photograph more closely. He seemed about to say something, but checked himself and passed out in silence.

Two days later he again presented himself at the vicarage.

"Say, Vicar!" he remarked, "I've been thinking of this poor mad wife of yours. You go and see her now and then, I guess?"

"To be sure," was the reply. "I visit her periodically. Why do you ask?"

"Wa-al, she's a countrywoman of mine, you see, and I'm kind of interested in her," explained Mr. Chitterden. "Would it be venturing too much to propose that you should take me with you next time you go to see her?"

"Personally I am quite agreeable; and I do not suppose that the asylum authorities will raise any objection," answered the Vicar, in some surprise. "There was a time when visitors used to excite her. But she is past that now. Her condition is one of complete apathy."

"Wa-al, if you will take me, I guess I'd feel obliged," said Mr. Chitterden. "As I've told you, I'm kind of interested in her. When shall you be going next?"

The Vicar referred to his diary of engagements.

"All being well, to-morrow fortnight," he said.

Mr. Chitterden, who was nothing if not business-like, made a prompt note of the date in his pocket-book.

* * * * * *

The asylum at X. is one of the best-appointed in the country. It can afford to be, for its patients are confined exclusively to the well-to-do classes, and the fees are correspondingly high. The buildings are palatial. They are fitted with every conceivable modern appliance, and furnished as luxuriously as a first-class hotel. The grounds and gardens are large and beautifully kept. The flower-borders from spring to autumn are one gay succession of brightly-coloured blossoms. 'Tis, in short, a very palace of Alcinous in a garden of the Phæacians. But the denizens—who are they?

Watch them sitting or moving about the lawns as they are doing this afternoon. Human beings all, and yet the very keynote of humanity lacking. See the dawdling shuffle of this one, the aimless hurry of that one which leadeth nowhere. Mark that other's foolish vacant smile, and again that other's apathetic listlessness. Human? Yes; in name, in form and limb, but with all their grip on human life gone from them. Existence has lost its objective. All is purposeless futility. Sad, sad contrast! A garden of Eden; and God is in the sunshine, the trees, the flowers, the birds. But in the human occupants thereof He is not. Surely from these He hath turned away His face.

The Vicar and Silas Chitterden walked across the velvety turf to where a woman sat. She looked up at them vacantly. There was no speculation in her dreary eyes. She was biting her nails. She went on biting them, indifferent to the newcomers' presence.

The American was the first to break silence.

"By the Lord, I was right in my suspicions after all," he ejaculated. "'Tis Jane Amelia!"

* * * * * *

Some months had elapsed. Silas Chitterden was back in New York. At the moment we find him conferring there with his confidential legal adviser.

"Still," said the latter, in expostulatory tones, "this is rather a tall order. To resurrect that dead wife of yours and take on this imaginary claim, with all its attendant expense. I must say I do wonder——"

"Guess if you'd got to know Madge Titherington as well as I did after we became engaged, you'd cease to wonder," interposed the happiest man on airth, with a cynical chuckle.

"QUEER STORIES" from TRUTH. Now ready, Series XVI. Price 1s., at all booksellers, and from the Publisher, 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street. "They are one of the wonders of the world, these stories, and people are never tired of asking who writes them."—Bystander.

BOOKS.

IN his preface to his fascinating book "A Gascon Royalist in Revolutionary Paris" (1), M. Lenôtre is as diplomatic as Mark Antony in his funeral oration upon Cæsar. After protesting that he is not, like most historians, bent on exhuming and embalming and canonising one or other of the protagonists of the Revolution, he proceeds to "materialise," as the spiritualists would call the process, a hero of his own. "No sooner," he says, "was the Revolution over than the historians set to work. From the common trench wherein all the great dead are sleeping each historian chooses out his favourite hero, digs him up, washes him, perfumes him, paints him, embalms him, presents him wrapped in a flag of the party politicians." Having thus warned you against these historians who, like the carpenter in Horace, can manufacture a god out of the stump of an old fig-tree, he proceeds himself to improve upon their methods by evoking and materialising out of shadows a sort of Spectre of the Brocken hero who dominated the Revolution. Almost the only things known certainly about this Baron de Batz are that in his youth he was a Gascon braggart and in his old age a brutal landlord; but M. Lenôtre would persuade you, and indeed goes far to persuade you, that De Batz was all which the fear-frenzied imagination of the Terrorists supposed him to be—the hidden impresario of the Revolution who set them by the ears and brought them to the guillotine. Perhaps M. Lenôtre does not take sufficiently into account what Tennyson calls "the blind hysterics of the Celt"—the French Celt—who in moments of panic sees treason or treachery everywhere and takes his own very shadow for the shadow of a foe; but at least he puts it beyond a doubt that a golden apple of discord—much of it probably "the gold of Pitt"—was flung by unseen hands amongst the Terrorists, till, like the Kilkenny cats, they devoured each other. M. Lenôtre notes, and it is certainly notable, that Robespierre "was the only man of the Revolution whom it has been possible to name 'The Incorruptible'—a name, we may observe incidentally, that is very hard on the rest." As for the rest, M. Lenôtre has set himself to prove not only that they were corruptible and corrupted, but that the ubiquitous and evasive De Batz, like the invisible and ever-intervening harlequin of a pantomime, made all the mischief of the piece. Indeed, I could not express better the purport of M. Lenôtre's absorbing study of the Terror than by the following quotation from that report of Elie Lacoste's which sent fifty-four victims—most of them innocent, all of them without trial—in one batch to the guillotine:—

> All the levers that were intended to overthrow the Republic were moved by a single man, who prompted all the allied tyrants. This man, this audacious intriguer, this ci-devant baron, Batz, had intermediary agents in every section in Paris, in the country, in the municipality, in the official departments, in the very prisons; in the seaports, too, and in the frontier towns. Being in the direct confidence of the brothers of the late tyrant, and in that of the foreign tyrants, this mercenary conspirator had at his disposal immense sums with which he bought accomplices and paid for assassination, poison, fire, and famine.

If De Batz witnessed, as it is almost certain that he did, the horrors of this execution, he must have been as hardened as Fouquier-Tinville himself if he felt no remorse. Among the absolutely innocent were Mme. de Sartines, the loveliest woman in France, her mother, her brother, a boy of sixteen, and a girl of the same age, little Nicole.

Michelet records an appalling detail. A certain man of great strength and hardness—one of those athletic people who are all

(1) "A Gascon Royalist in Revolutionary Paris." From the French of G. Lenôtre by Mrs. Rodolph Stawell. Illustrated. (London: William Heinemann. 10s. net.)

(2) "Woman in Italy." By William Boulting. With Sixteen Illustrations. (London: Methuen and Co. 10s. 6d. net.)

(3) "A History of Verona." By A. M. Allen. Edited by Edward Armstrong. With Twenty Illustrations and Three Maps. (London: Methuen and Co. 12s. 6d. net.)

(4) "The Valley of Achor." By Mrs. Philip de Crespigny. (London: Mills and Boon, Limited. 6s.)

(5) "Early Victorian." By S. G. Tallentyre. (London: Smith, Elder and Co. 6s.)

(6) "The Pilgrimage of a Fool." By J. E. Buckrose. (London: Mills and Boon, Limited. 6s.)

muscle and have no nerves—wagered that he would watch the execution at close quarters without flinching. For a long time he bore it unmoved; but when little Nicole came upon the scaffold and arranged herself upon the plank and said gently to the executioner, "Monsieur, shall I be all right like that?" his head swam and his sight failed him, his immense strength gave way, and he fell to the ground. For a moment he was thought to be dead, and he was carried home.

Yet M. Lenôtre is convinced that De Batz, who was indirectly responsible for the horrors of this wholesale murder scene, witnessed it without emotion! Indeed, it was the murderers, not the murdered, whom he had in his pay, if M. Lenôtre's theory of the part played by that arch-conspirator is correct. De Batz appeared to have corrupted half or more than half the Terrorists. "In the course of three months this strange thing happened twice. Twice the counter-revolutionary schemes of the Baron de Batz were revealed to the Committee, and twice it was the denouncers and not the denounced who were imprisoned!" That the counter-revolution would have succeeded but for the abject cowardice of the sectionnaires is more than probable. Buonaparte, with his whiff of grape-shot, gets all the credit of stemming the tide of the counter-revolution, yet not De Batz only, but also Barras, under whose orders Buonaparte acted, admits that if a handful of the sixty thousand sectionnaires had shown Vendean courage the Conventionists were lost. "There is no doubt," says Barras in his "Mémoires," "that if the sectionnaires had boldly descended the steps of the church of Saint-Roche they could have made a rush at the battery itself, which was the sole obstacle before them. At the sacrifice of a few of their men they could have taken our guns and turned them against us." What De Batz, allowing him all the power for mischief M. Lenôtre claims for him, really succeeded in doing was to prepare the way, not for the restoration of the Bourbons, but for the rise of Napoleon, who towers above the levelled ranks and ruins of France as the great pyramid towers above the lone and level sands of the desert.

Mr. William Boulting's "Women in Italy" (2)—a work illustrating the sex's evolution in that country which I should especially commend to the attention of Suffragettes—has set me wondering for the hundredth time why the Church which has given the Holy Virgin so high a place in heaven should hold women on earth as little higher than brutes. "Woman was regarded by the Church as an unclean animal in fellowship with Satan, and as St. Chrysostom described her, nothing but 'a necessary evil, a natural temptation, desired indeed, but bearing calamity with her, a domestic peril, a deadly fascination.' At a synod held at Macon towards the end of the sixth century it was even debated whether she possessed a soul." No doubt the reverence for chastity, of which the celibacy of the clergy was the expression, might of itself and by itself account for this abhorrence of women; but, on the other hand, the very celibacy of the clergy would tend towards the idealisation of woman, while the apotheosis of the Virgin ought at least to have saved her sex from the debate of the Macon synod as to their possession of a soul. At any rate, the emancipation of women dates, as this extremely interesting and opportune work of Mr. Boulting shows, from the emancipation of the mind of man at the Renaissance.

In reading Mr. Allen's "History of Verona" (3)—as, indeed, in reading all the other volumes of this delightful series—"The States of Italy"—you wonder how any harvest was ever sown and reaped and garnered, or, indeed, how any men were left to sow and reap and gather into barns. These states seem to be always at internecine war with each other, always invading each other's territories, pillaging, burning, slaughtering without intermission and without mercy. Then there was famine stalking on the heels of war and pestilence following upon famine to glean what life was left. Besides, there were interminable internal feuds and fights, where recourse was had continually to the assassin's dagger, or to poison, or even to arson; for it was the playful habit of families at feud to fire each other's houses, and even the Government itself would set fire to the houses of the opposition! It will be seen, then, that Mr. Allen, in his learned yet light "History of Verona," has many a stirring story to tell, and it certainly loses none of its exciting interest in his telling.

The Portia of Mrs. Philip Champion De Crespigny's "The Valley of Achor" (4) has little except priggishness in common with her Shakespearian prototype, while she shows some inconsistency in demanding too much and accepting too little evidence of the hero's having made the tropical discoveries he claims. For the hero, who is really a kind of tropical Peary, is suspected of being a kind of Dr. Cook, but the subtle scientific proof by which his generous rival convinces the world in general and the heroine in particular of his veracity demonstrates only his having been in the tropics, and not also his having made there these marvellous discoveries. But the plot of the novel is original and ingenious, and its characters, with the exception of the hard-headed, hard-hearted, self-sufficient and self-complacent heroine, are as interesting as they are natural. There is little or no plot in Miss Tallentyre's village chronicle "Early Victorian" (5), but the characters—parson, squire, two doctors, and especially the elder surgeon's wife—are as early Victorian as they are one and all delightful. Mr. Buckrose's "The Pilgrimage of a Fool" (6) seems to have been written from the text of the Italian proverb, "Tanto buon che val niente," since its hero through his very unselfishness and self-effacement has come to be regarded as a fool. Adam, indeed, sacrifices even his love to another, but finds at the melancholy close of this interesting story the higher happiness reserved for such "fools."

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

---

Most people have forgotten the very little they ever knew about Wei-hai-wei, though the acquirement of this place as a counter-move to Russia's appropriation of Port Arthur was trumpeted at the time as a wonderful stroke of policy on the part of the British Government. Mr. R. F. Johnston, author of "From Pekin to Mandalay," has a new book practically ready entitled "Lion and Dragon in Northern China," which gives a complete and authoritative account of the 300 square miles of Chinese territory at Wei-hai-wei which have been under British control since 1898. The work, which Mr. Murray will publish, contains much that will be interesting to students of folk lore, sociology, and comparative religions.

Mr. Francis Gribble's new biographical study, "The Love Affairs of Lord Byron," will be published by Mr. Eveleigh Nash early in October. It incorporates a great amount of information which was not accessible when the lives by Moore, Elze, and Cordy Jeaffreson were written, throwing fresh light on Byron's relations with Jane Clairmont and confuting Cordy Jeaffreson's theory that the poet's intimacy with that lady was the cause of his separation from his wife. Mr. Gribble makes an elaborate examination of the charges brought against Byron's memory by his grandson, the late Lord Lovelace.

A little-known aspect of London is dealt with in a book by Mr. A. S. Foord, entitled "Springs, Streams, and Spas of London: History and Associations," which Mr. Unwin has ready this week. Mr. Foord describes the various streams which, though they no longer flow above ground, have given their names to London streets, and gives an interesting account of the metropolitan "spas" which were so much in vogue during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

The latest addition to Harper's Library of Living Thought—a most valuable series of handbooks in which distinguished authorities give popular expositions of their special subjects in science, philosophy, etc.—is a volume by Professor F. W. Mott on "The Brain and the Voice in Speech and Song" (price 2s. 6d. net). In language as simple as scientific accuracy will permit it describes the mechanism of the human voice and shows how it is controlled by the brain.

In the Wisdom of the East series, Mr. Murray has issued "The Alchemy of Happiness," by Al Ghazzali, translated from the Hindustani by Claude Field. Ghazzali, a Mohammedan theologian and mystic of the eleventh century, was described by Renan as the most original mind among Arabian philosophers.

A memoir of "Louvet: Revolutionist and Romance Writer," is published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett. The story of Louvet and Lodoiska, the woman he loved, covers the whole period of the French Revolution. Louvet came into personal contact with all the great revolutionists, and as a member of the Convention his attack on Robespierre placed him in the front rank of the French political orators of the period.

Mr. C. Reginald Enock, the well-known traveller and lecturer, has a book entitled "Farthest West" appearing this week through John Long, Limited. The result of some years of travel in the United States, it depicts the life and environments of "our American cousins."

Messrs. Jack have just published six more volumes of the Era Shakespeare—"King Henry VI. (Parts I., II., III.), "A Winter's Tale," "Measure for Measure," and "Two Noble Kinsmen." The text of the Era Shakespeare is from a careful collation of the best authorities, and the editor, Dr. Henry N. Hudson, furnishes many useful and illuminating notes. In cloth bound pocket volumes at eightpence net this makes a very handy and attractive edition.

The historical section of the late Sir Walter Besant's great survey of London, which has been issued in seven volumes, is now to be followed by the topographical section, beginning with a volume entitled "The City," which Messrs. A. and C. Black will publish. There will be numerous illustrations, and also reproductions of old and new maps and plans of various parts of the City.

A new and cheaper edition of Mr. A. C. Benson's "The Upton Letters" is being issued this week by Messrs. Smith Elder and Co.

Mr. John Lane publishes this week a volume by Mr. Edward Storer, entitled "Peter the Cruel: The Life of the Notorious Don Pedro of Spain, together with an account of his relations with the famous Maria de Padilla."

Mr. Allen Fea, author of "Nooks and Corners of Old England" is publishing with Mr. Martin Secker a new volume entitled "Old English Houses: The Record of a Random Itinerary." Avoiding the more obvious show places which are familiar to everybody, the author's aim has been to discover the old and romantic among the many picturesque houses which are scattered through the counties.

To-day another addition is made to the big family of periodical publications which Mr. T. P. O'Connor has brought into the world. This time it is a monthly. T.P.'s Magazine makes its appearance in an attractive garb, and its varied interest should ensure it a popular success. T. P. himself contributes an article of foreword and reminiscence; Mr. Edward Clodd gives his recollections of Meredith, Herbert Spencer, Huxley, Grant Allen, and other great Victorians; Maurice Maeterlinck writes on "Two Kinds of Courage," and Mrs. John Lane tells us more of the world that is "according to Maria." Illustrated articles on Montenegro, the Panama Canal, and wireless communication are a few among the many other contents.

ART.

SOCIETY OF PORTRAIT PAINTERS.

IT is one of the paradoxes of art that, whereas the average man derives more personal satisfaction from the contemplation of other average men than from the impersonality of landscape, a landscape exhibition is nearly always more interesting than is an exhibition of portraits. The reason is not far to seek. The landscape painter is far less subject to the personal influence than is the portrait painter, who has to submit to the influence, conscious or unconscious, of his sitter; in many cases also the portraitist knows that the omission to gratify the vanity of his subject may mean the corresponding omission of that subject to pay his bill, or may at least prevent the possibilities of other bills. Even if stoutly independent, he may fall into the other error of protesting too much against the tyranny of the sitter. It is therefore not remarkable that the majority of portraits are either characterless or eccentric.

The Society of Portrait Painters has made, on the whole, a gallant struggle against mediocrity, and the spacious rooms of the New Gallery allowed of some bright particular stars in a somewhat voluminous setting. I have often thought that, were they thoroughly weeded, the residue would be really fine painting. Owing to the fact that the New Gallery now provides food for the body rather than for the mind, the weeding has actually taken place under guise of the removal of the society to the gallery of the R.S.W. in Pall Mall East. It is unfortunate that it has been entirely mechanical. Exigencies of space admit only of fifty-nine exhibits—an excellent number in itself—but these exhibits are confined entirely to members, and those by no means all of the best. Sculpture is dismissed altogether.

The election of Mr. J. J. Shannon to succeed the late Sir William Orchardson as President is not likely to further the prospects of what has now become to all intents and purposes a closed ring. It is true that Sir William Orchardson, as is also the case with Mr. Shannon, used a peculiar convention in which to express himself; true is it also that both painters may be said to have commanded and to command a wide range of personal success. At the same time, Sir William's convention was but a means to an end, and that end a very fine one. What Mr. Shannon accomplishes is rather in spite of his medium, and imitators and admirers of his particular style may find that they are trying to make bricks without straw, or style without matter. Mr. Shannon is this year responsible for one exhibit, "J. Sampson, Esq.," labelled connoisseur by the statuette in his hand. The portrait is spirited, and a pleasing relief from the long-legged, satin-clad sylphs usually his delight. A memento of the late President may be seen in a small portrait of the late T. Graham, Esq., lent by Mr. MacWhirter, R.A.

Perhaps the best portrait in the whole exhibition is Mr. Francis Dodd's "Henry Lamb." Mr. Dodd's work is always quivering with sensitiveness, almost hyper-sensitiveness, perhaps. This portrait, while in no way lacking strength, shows him at his most human and most sensitive. The impression upon the visitor is that painter and sitter were entirely of a mind both to reveal and to conceal. "Henry Lamb" is dependent neither on person nor circumstances for its appeal. Less reserved but equally human is Mr. Harold Speed's "Sketch Portrait," a painting of a silver-haired man. The fine complexion and the shining hair have retained their bloom under Mr. Speed's straightforward brush. This is one of the best things he has done. More decided than either are Mr. Lavery's three portraits, including a sketch of Anna Pavlova. The blacks of the dresses, gloves, hats, the subtle blending of the jewellery are painted as perhaps only Mr. Lavery knows how to paint them. With the exception of Mlle. Pavlova, the sitters count for much less than their clothes, both "Mrs. Peto" and "Priscilla, Countess of Annesley" having the wooden attraction from which the painter seems unable to escape. Perhaps in a future age we shall find that in his exquisitely personal sartorialisms Mr. Lavery has grasped a great truth as to the non-importance of the human factor. I noticed also excellent work by Mr. Harris Brown and Mr. Strang's last season Academy picture, "The Violinist."

To an older generation of painters belong both Sir L. Alma Tadema, here represented by a rare portrait of his daughter, and Mr. Solomon, the former by reason of his date, the latter in that he has retained the grand manner in a modern conception of things. His "Papa Painting" can only be described with the Victorian adjective "handsome." The grouping is admirable—with the exception perhaps of the little boy in the background—and the curled-up figure of the little girl on the left is both childlike and charming; there is about it, however, a silky smoothness and sumptuousness which is too sleek and self-satisfied for complete enjoyment by anyone less satisfactorily situated.

For the rest I notice with regret the absence of work by Mr. Orpen, Mr. Nicholson, Mr. Jacques Blanche, and others. Whether this is due to exigencies of space, place, or time, it is unfortunate that their places should have been filled with an academic backwash of fluffy children, fluffy women, and presentation portraits.

MUSIC.

AN interesting new work heard at the Promenades last week was a Festal Overture by Dr. Walford Davies. It is in lighter vein than most of his works, but none the less acceptable on this account. Enthusiastic admirers of Dr. Davies have been heard to proclaim him before now the greatest of all living musicians in the technical sense, and however this may be, there is no doubt that the work above-named displays wonderful command of resource and effect, and is altogether a notable addition to modern British music. On another evening Strauss's "Don Quixote" was a welcome feature in the programme, and obtained a capital performance at the hands of Mr. Wood and his trusty band, the fine playing of M. Jacques Renard, as solo 'cellist, being particularly noteworthy. On Saturday Herr Fritz Kreisler gave a delightful violin recital. His programme contained, as usual, a number of his delightful arrangements from old seventeenth and eighteenth century masters, some of which he is now publishing for the first time under the somewhat odd title "Kreisler's Classical Manuscripts." May it be suggested that "Transcripts" would be a better word than "Manuscripts"? On the same afternoon Mr. Edward Goll, a fine pianist, was heard at the Bechstein Hall, and Tetrazzini ravished the ears of a large audience at the Crystal Palace.

An eager public will learn with interest that Richard Strauss has now composed his difficulties with the direction of the Court opera at Dresden, and that "Der Rosencavalier" will be produced, therefore, as originally arranged, for the first time at the Saxon capital, probably at the beginning of January. According to report it is Strauss who has given way, and in the opinion of most people he has acted wisely in doing so. His proposal was that the Dresden management should bind itself, in return for the privilege of giving his latest opera to the world, to perform his earlier works "Salome" and "Elektra" so many times annually for ten years to come, the like terms being proposed also in the case of the Berlin opera. The idea suggested perhaps a superabundance of faith in the drawing power and enduring qualities of the works in question, but seemingly the proposal was only in the nature of a "try on." When his terms were demurred to Strauss found that he was not strong enough to enforce them, and has consequently deemed discretion the better part and given in.

How these eminent composers do get worried in one way or another! Here is Mascagni also providing material for heated discussions in the Press. It has all arisen over his new opera "Ysobel." This is to be produced in America very shortly, and the patriotic Italians, we are told, are furious in consequence, and talk of proceeding against the wretched composer upon the ground that he is infringing the law as to the "export of art treasures"—a flattering assumption, as to the accuracy of which it will be easier to speak after the production of the work. Meanwhile Mascagni professes that the agitation has put him off his game entirely, so that he cannot get on at all, and his American entrepreneurs are up in arms and threatening damages against the agitators. If the opera is to prove worthy of the excitement which it is creating in advance, it will have to be a good deal more successful than most of the others which its composer has recently written.

Puccini, meanwhile, must be biting his nails, for as no one has taken the same point in regard to the "Girl of the Golden West," in one respect at least he must cry second to the creator of "Cavalleria." Puccini's new work is to be given for the first time at the Metropolitan Opera, New York, early in December. Caruso is already studying his part, which, according to report, he finds very interesting, while the whole opera is spoken of by the privileged few who have seen the score as equal to the best that Puccini has done before. The English version of Puccini's book has been prepared by Mrs. Elkin, whose excellent translation of "Madame Butterfly" will be remembered, and who is also responsible for the English version of D'Albert's "Tiefland," which is to be used when that work is produced at Covent Garden next month.

Talking of "Tiefland," is it too much to hope that its gifted author will not be alluded to more often than necessary as the "Scottish composer"? It is true that he happened to be born in Scotland, but he is no more a Scottish composer on this account than Richard Strauss or Max Reger. Like the famous individual who pathetically pleaded that because he was born in a stable he was not necessarily a horse, D'Albert has always disowned the land of his birth. His real nationality is something of a puzzle, for while his mother was a native of Newcastle-on-Tyne, his father—the well-known dancing master and writer of dance music—was born in Altona, the son of a captain in the French artillery and of a German mother whose ancestors were Russian. D'Albert himself, however, seems to have no doubt on the point. He once wrote: "I am German throughout; my father in spite of his French name was a born German; so were my grandparents. I am a German and am proud to call myself a German, to be able to work and live for German art."

A correspondent writes:—

Having been a festival goer since 1883, I think you have hit the nail right on the head with regard to the cause of the declining prosperity of the provincial festivals. The committees have ceased to consider the class of people who support such enterprises as the pattern concerts—people who like, especially at the evening concerts, to hear some of the world's big artists.

To show the cheese-paring methods now adopted by the committees who complain of poor support, I will quote a fact within my own knowledge. In connection with the Leeds Festival of 1904 some members of the committee boasted before the festival that they were saving £800 in artists' fees. I believe they did save a lot of money, but the profits, which averaged £2,000 in Sullivan's time, and once (in 1889, I think) exceeded £3,000, sank to about £160.

This money saving is carried further by engaging the best artists for so many concerts (four, three, two, or even one, as the case may be) instead of, as in the old days, for the whole festival. The result is that the really fine singers—there are not many—are heard only a few times in the course of the festival. No wonder the semi-musical people don't pay festival prices to the extent they used to.

At Leeds this year, Clara Butt is engaged, but only for two concerts. No doubt she is expensive, but she is a draw. At the 1858 festival at Leeds, Sims Reeves, at the height of his fame, sang at six or seven concerts. At Birmingham last year, Agnes Nicholls sang in one half of three morning concert performances, and no more! At the last Sheffield festival many singers were retained, but few first raters.

The matter is so interesting in its bearing on the decline of the festivals that I make no apology for writing to you. Very glad you are taking it up. No one else has even hinted at the real cause.

As bearing on my correspondent's remarks, I may add that at the Cardiff festival last week Mme. Ada Crossley and Mme. Kirkby Lunn both sang at only two concerts out of eight.

All friends of the competition festival movement will have learned with regret of the death of Miss A. M. Wakefield, of Grange-over-Sands, who had been so intimately associated with the movement from its earliest days. It is difficult to over-estimate indeed the value of Miss Wakefield's efforts in this capacity in helping to spread the knowledge and love of good music among the multitude, and all without any thought of personal benefit, but simply for the good of the cause. Though an idealist in the best sense of the term, Miss Wakefield was also a woman of strong common sense, and the judicious manner in which the movement has been directed was due in no little degree to her wise and practical counsels.

New works announced by the Edward Mason Choir for performance during the forthcoming season include "Choral Hymns" from the Rig Veda by Gustav von Holst, "Fatherland," by Arnold Bax, the Choral Prologue to Miss Ethel Smyth's music drama "The Forest," all of which will be given for the first time in London, while other works announced include Delius' "Sea-Drift" and César Franck's 150th Psalm. The hon. secretary of the Choir (Ingoldsby Mansions, Avonmore Road, West Kensington, W.) appeals for the support of ladies and gentlemen willing to become members, honorary or active.

THE THEATRES.

"The Man from the Sea," at the Queen's.

Mr. W. J. LOCKE has written, in "The Man from the Sea," a very interesting play on the morality of immorality, and but for the fact that one knows that hard cases do not make good laws, one would perhaps be more impressed than one is now by the author's philosophy. The play is really only another variant of what Mr. Hall Caine would call "The Eternal Question." The eternal answer according to Mr. Locke would seem to be that love is enough. There are two concurrent stories in "The Man from the Sea." There is the love of Mr. Loraine for his old sweetheart, Miss Nina Boucicault, and there is the love of Miss Beryl Faber for Mr. Dawson Milward. Mr. Loraine has been a scapegrace and ne'er-do-weel. Not for him the cribbed and cabined life of that sleepy old cathedral town Durdleham. He has wandered far and wide ever seeking fresh woods and oceans new, and after twelve years the rolling stone has come back, having gathered sufficient moss from a mother o' pearl fishery to enable him to support a wife. He has lived the life of an anchorite all this time with the picture of Miss Boucicault graven on his heart. It is nothing to him that she has not been quite so constant. She has been married during his absence, but she has been considerate enough to bury her husband before her old lover's return. She reminded me of the character in Calverley's verse:

> "Never never, although ofttimes married,
> Have I cared a jot for aught but you."

Anyway, now she is a demure little saint, a walking conscience at the service of all Durdleham, and quite the last person one would have thought that vigorous, practical, sturdy Jan Redlander would want to marry. However, he does, and there's an end of it. After all, in real life one seldom knows why one person wants to marry another, even if they know themselves, which is doubtful. This is one story, and in itself it is simple enough, but the first person Jan Redlander meets when he bursts like a bolt from the blue into the Deanery garden at Durdleham is Miss Faber, and Miss Faber he knew somewhere down under as the wife of a gaolbird—a callous brute steeped in iniquity who made her life a hell. I believe that is the correct expression. Now she is living as the eminently respectable wife of Mark Averill, M.D., and is the bosom friend of the walking conscience of Durdleham.

In operas, as I daresay you have noticed, tragedies usually take place and secrets are mostly revealed in the public square or market-place. In plays, likewise, the most intimate and confidential conversations have to take place in public, and so Miss Faber waxes eloquent about the tragedy of her past life in the Dean's garden. Naturally, some one overhears all the sad details, and promptly tells them to the walking conscience, who is horrified, and says the Dean must know at once. You can guess what that would mean for the poor Averills. Of course, honest, large-hearted Jan would keep the sorry secret, and so would the eavesdropper, Pontifex Pye (a delightful character, admirably played by Mr. Vane Tempest), but however sweet and good-hearted a walking conscience may be, you cannot get round the conscience when it sees the word "duty" written in large letters in the air before it; and as for the Dean, though by nature a kindly man, the honour of the cloth would not allow him to look over such a transgression of the moral code. You cannot invite to dinner married people who are not married, or society would rock to its foundations. So Miss Boucicault decides that every one is to be sacrificed on the altar of duty—including herself, because she is a tender-hearted little soul, and doing her duty makes her miserable. If one of the great things in life is to make people happy, it is a strong card in the hands of sinners that righteous people who insist on doing their duty almost invariably succeed in being thoroughly unpleasant and making every one around them unhappy, whereas wicked people are often, alas! most excellent company. It is Mr. Loraine who pits himself against the conscience. He is desperately in love with the woman, but there is altogether too much conscience about her to please him. Accordingly he stakes his life's happiness on stifling the conscience. He pleads his love passionately, and then tells Miss Boucicault that he has a mad wife and cannot marry her. Will she come to him without this formality? Will she, in short, become another Daphne Averill? If not, he will go out into the night for ever. She wavers and falls, and of course the wind is straightaway taken out of her moral sails. No longer can she be a walking conscience to Durdleham. If I had been Miss Boucicault I should have been furious with Mr. Loraine for toppling me off my moral pedestal with a fervent taradiddle, but though she is annoyed she is relieved. It is better to be wife number one than understudy to a lunatic, and so while she is wondering how she can decently forgive him, the man from the sea picks her up and carries her off in his arms—South Sea fashion. Strange it is how these keepers of our consciences like to be overruled by brute force, and, degrading though brute force may be, Mr. Locke, I am sure, knows how terribly women would miss it if it were ever civilised out of existence.

Of course, much of the trouble would have been avoided if Dr. or Mrs. Averill had ever taken the trouble to inquire whether the lady's first husband were living. Mr. Loraine in most practical fashion sends a prepaid telegram, and finds that he has been dead for a year, so they might have been married quietly any day during the past twelvemonth and dispensed with discussing their irregular relations in the Dean's Garden. However, then Miss Beryl Faber would not have had so fine an opportunity of showing a tortured woman when she thinks that her life's happiness is about to be shattered, and clever little Miss Nina Boucicault (who I am delighted to see once more playing a leading part) would not have been able to show you a dear little Puritan tearfully sacrificing her best friend for conscience' sake. Whether such a woman, however, would really feel the call of the wild and sigh for a life on coral strands is another matter. She looks far more fitted to become Mrs. Dean of Durdleham. One of the best things in the play is Mr. Vane Tempest's Pontifex Pye. He is at first a delightful bloodless creature, but he becomes infected with Mr. Loraine's exuberance, and decides to give up archæology for buccaneering! As for Mr. Loraine, he is excellent. He almost makes plausible the terribly long literary speeches with which Mr. Locke has so liberally provided him, and his efforts to wake up the inhabitants of Durdleham and stop them "durdling" away their lives are delightful. His valet, Monks, too, is quite a creation. He is an ape-like creature of infinite devotion, and though Mr. Jules Shaw has little to do in the part he does that little with a master touch. I would go to the Queen's again with pleasure just to hear the world of devotion and meaning he puts into the two words "Yes, Boss." He never says more than this, but he says it in a way that makes you feel that he would die for Mr. Loraine. I should like such a servant.

* * * * * *

Sir Charles Wyndham and Miss Mary Moore have re-opened the Criterion with Mr. H. A. Jones' comedy

"The Case of Rebellious Susan," and this will hold the bill until the revival of the same author's "The Liars." These two plays represent Mr. Jones's very best work, and "Susan" after all these years furnishes a capital evening's entertainment. It is admirably acted all round, and Miss Moore grows younger every year.

* * * * * *

"The Dollar Princess" celebrated its first anniversary at Daly's last week—all Mr. George Edwardes's productions seem to run at least a year nowadays—and there was a finely crowded house to celebrate the event and to secure the handsome souvenirs. I suppose there are no two more popular people on the stage at the present moment than Mr. Joseph Coyne and Miss Lily Elsie, and certainly there is no more popular play than this joyous production.

SPORT.

RACING NOTES.

THE first of the three autumn meetings of the Jockey Club will be held at Newmarket this evening, and there are several matters of a strictly practical nature to which the Stewards might profitably direct the attention of the members. A perfectly chaotic hugger mugger at present prevails in the important affair of nomination days. The Derby and Oaks close in July, the St. Leger in August (or September until within the last few years), and the Two Thousand and One Thousand at the end of October. There is the same entire want of system in the dates for closing the most important races for two-year-olds and most of the events for three-year-olds and upwards. It is obviously most desirable that the principal three-year-old stakes should not close until after Doncaster week, when the yearling sales of the season are over. Then there is the nuisance of running unnamed horses, which ought long ago to have been absolutely prohibited. There are also many glaring anomalies in the official list of fixtures. During the week after Doncaster the Stewards of the Jockey Club deliberately arranged for a most mischievous and highly inconvenient clashing between the two most important meetings of the week—Manchester and Hurst Park. Meetings at which the racing is mere plating, however, have been warmly encouraged by the authorities; and what could be more utterly fatuous than to sanction a second fixture at Bath? Another urgent matter is the question of breeding allowances. It is an absurdity (and often utterly destructive to the race itself) for a horse which has won thousands of pounds in stakes to be nevertheless still permitted to claim a breeding allowance. Sandown Park is the only meeting at which this foolery has been abolished, and it is discreditable to the Stewards of the Jockey Club that they should have continued to allow unconditional breeding allowances in the Jockey Club Stakes for 1913—which race closed the other day. Of all the rich races which were established about twenty years ago the most successful throughout has been the Eclipse Stakes, and it has done best simply because the "cracks" in the race have a better chance than in the other events of the same class, as there are neither breeding nor maiden allowances.

I have received a letter from a prominent owner of racehorses expressing cordial agreement with the views which were expressed in TRUTH last week respecting the handicapping of Bronzino for the Cesarewitch. Mr. J. de Rothschild's horse has been thrown in with 7 st. 7 lb., although in the race for the Grand Prix he easily defeated the horses which had finished first and third in the Derby. If Lemberg had been entered for the Cesarewitch his weight would have been about 8 st. 8 lb., but the horse which had beaten him at Longchamps (over a long distance, moreover) is let off with 15 lb. less. Why this running should have been ignored by the handicappers it is quite impossible to understand, but the enormity of their unpardonable blundering was conclusively demonstrated at Doncaster when Bronzino again finished well in front of Lemberg. The only sound system by which handicappers can be guided with salutary results is always to treat a horse on its best running. Last year we saw Dark Ronald canter away with the Royal Hunt Cup, because he had been given the ridiculous weight of 7 st. 2 lb. The colt had shown excellent form as a two-year-old, and he was regarded as quite likely to turn out a Derby horse, but he had been in retirement for some time, so when he came out as a four-year-old the handicappers let him off with a weight which placed the Royal Hunt Cup at his mercy. There is a flagrant example of this form of handicappers' imbecility in the Cesarewitch. Riverina has been let off with 6 st. 5 lb., which is a nonsensical weight for any four-year-old which had ever won any sort of race whatever. Now, Riverina won several races as a two-year-old, and he has since done well, and has shown himself to be a stayer. As a three-year-old he was regarded as a T.Y.C. horse.

I have always been of the opinion that the three-year-olds are a moderate lot, and there certainly was no apparent reason for the trumpet fanfarons over their superlative merits with which some writers overwhelmed their readers in the spring. It is strong evidence of the absence of any decided "flier" that each of the five great three-year-old races has been won by a different horse: Neil Gow defeated Lemberg by a head for the Two Thousand, and three months later the pair ran a dead-heat for the Eclipse Stakes. The defeat of Lord Rosebery's colt in the Derby may justifiably be ignored, as he was "all to pieces" when he ran at Epsom. Winkipop carried off the One Thousand, defeating Rosedrop, who in her turn ran away from the Newmarket winner in the Oaks. I gave a plumper for Rosedrop at Epsom, but I never was able to see how any of the form of the season could give either Sir William Bass's mare or Winkipop a real chance for the St. Leger. Mr. Astor's mare was most assiduously written up for the Doncaster race, and she carried a lot of public money. In the Derby Lemberg only just won from Greenback, while Swynford was unplaced; but, as was mentioned in TRUTH on August 10, there was a sound excuse for the collapse of Lord Derby's colt at Epsom. Last came the St. Leger, and Swynford just won from Bronzino, who had finished nowhere in the Two Thousand, and Mr. J. de Rothschild's horse is probably the best stayer among the three-year-olds. It must not be forgotten that at Doncaster he confirmed the accuracy of the Grand Prix form with Lemberg. Bronzino had evidently made a great improvement during the summer, as he finished far behind Bachelor's Double in the Ascot Cup, but at Doncaster the Irish horse had no chance with him in the race for the cup. Bachelor's Double has shown good form, but he is only a tip-top handicap horse, and considerably below the best of the three-year-olds. It is greatly to be regretted that Bayardo cannot meet any of the three-year-old winners in the Champion Stakes at Newmarket on October 11, that being one of the great races of that class in which there are neither penalties nor allowances. Greenback showed good form after his defeat in the Derby, and his victory in the Prince of Wales Stakes at Ascot proved him to be a respectable stayer, but he commenced coughing at the end of July, and his running at York and at Derby was a melancholy failure. Lord Villiers would have acted more wisely if he had thrown his colt up for the season directly he went amiss. After Charles O'Malley had finished third in the Derby he won the Gold Vase at Ascot, and then he ran behind Bronzino and in front of Lemberg in the Grand Prix. He afterwards went amiss, which was most unfortunate for his owner, as the colt had several good engagements during the summer which he could not have lost. Cardinal Beaufort, Rochester, Charlemont, Apache, and Ulster King have all shown respectable form, and are useful colts when judiciously placed.

It is doubtful whether Neil Gow will stand training again. His only engagements as a four-year-old are the Eclipse Stakes and the Jockey Club Stakes, and he has a 6 lb. breeding allowance in the Newmarket race. Lemberg and Swynford are in both of these races, and in the Newmarket event each has a 3 lb. breeding allowance. It is to be regretted that Bronzino is not entered for either of these races, but he is in the Princess of Wales Stakes at the Newmarket First July Meeting along with Lemberg and Swynford, and the severe course over which that race is run will suit Mr. J. de Rothschild's horse most admirably. Bronzino is also entered next year for the Chester Vase of £2,000 and for the Atlantic Stakes of £2,000 at the Liverpool July Meeting.

There was some excellent racing at Newbury, which was far and away the most important meeting of the week, and there were large fields for several of the events. Writing last week, I expressed the opinion that one of the Manton two-year-olds would win the Autumn Produce Stakes of £2,000—Cyllius or the filly by Isinglass out of Sceptre. They were both started, and the pair finished first and second. Cyllius had probably been benefited by his race at Manchester. He is own brother to Highness, and a very nice colt. The Sceptre filly was not much fancied by her stable, as it was thought that Cyllius was sure to beat her, and he found no difficulty in giving her 6 lb., besides the sex allowance. The Dame d'Or colt was heavily backed, but he ran badly after swerving at the start, and Spalato was another disappointment. I mentioned Langton last week as being the Newmarket tip for this race, and Mr. Houldsworth's colt finished a bad third, but he must be exceedingly moderate, as Cyllius was giving him 13 lb.

Prince Palatine cantered away with the Maiden Plate, odds having been betted on Mr. Pilkington's colt, who came out at Sandown Park in July with a great reputation. I believe there was a good excuse for his poor performance when he made his début in the £5,000 race which was won by Cellini. It was rather odd to find Prince Palatine brought out for a race of the Maiden Plate class, which closed only recently, considering the numerous stakes for which he was entered as a yearling. He commenced this season with thirty-nine engagements. I suppose we shall see him running for the £3,000 race at Kempton Park next week, and he will have no penalty to carry either in that race or in the Dewhurst Plate.

I gave a plumper last week for Lonawand for the Kingsclere Stakes, and he won by a head from Rosedrop, who was much fancied, as it was thought that the course was too far for the colt, who had 7 lb. the best of the weights. Sir William Bass's mare had to make her own running, and she cannot do this, as she showed when she was beaten at Liverpool in July. There were twenty-two acceptances for the Kingsclere Stakes, but only four horses started. An unusually large number of valuable races with big entries have collapsed in this fashion during the present season.

The Newbury Cup was won by Admiral Togo III. after a rattling finish with Last Call. There was a wretched pace during the early part of the race which settled the chance of Elizabetta, who is deficient in speed, and needs a strong-run race from the start. The excellent running of Last Call (who, as a three-year-old, had 10 lb. the worst of the weights with the six-year-old winner) affords conclusive proof that Swynford is a smart horse, as in the race for the Liverpool Summer Cup the St. Leger winner gave Mr. Robinson's colt 5 lb. and simply cantered away from him. Last Call now figures prominently in the Cesarewitch betting, but on the running at Aintree he represents Swynford at something like 8 st. 12 lb.

Bridge of Earn is greatly fancied for the Cesarewitch, but Lord Derby's horse had much better be left alone until the day, as he may not get through his preparation. Some good judges are convinced that Magic will be the winner at Newmarket on October 12, but I do not consider that Bayardo would be regarded as a good thing with 10 st. on his back. This would be the four-year-old's weight on his form with Magic at Goodwood.

Lemberg is reported to be all right again, and he is confidently expected to win the Jockey Club Stakes to-morrow. Everything will depend upon the pace, and Charlemont stays so well that I quite expect Lord Durham's colt to beat the Derby winner if there is a strong run race throughout.

Admiral Hawke is not likely to be seen out again, as he is not expected to stand another course of training. The brother of Pretty Polly will no doubt be relegated to the stud next season.

There will be racing next week at Nottingham, Folkestone, Leicester, and Kempton Park. The only sport of any importance of general interest will be at Kempton Park. There are fifty-seven acceptances for the Imperial Produce Plate of £3,000 out of an original entry of 183. The best known two-year-olds in the list are the Sceptre filly, Cyllius, Cellini, Meleager, Spalato, Pietri and St. Anton, the Dame d'Or colt, and Prince Palatine. Of course, Pietri is the best animal engaged, but he has incurred a penalty of 10 lb., and the course is six furlongs. I expect Prince Palatine will win this race, as he now appears to be in excellent form.

The Duke of York Stakes can be better dealt with next week, as at present it will be impossible to produce a reliable list of probable starters.

---

BRITISHERS IN BERLIN—AQUATIC JUDGES—FOOT-FAULT—FOOTBALL.

If on a four days' notice or invitation a German athlete had come over here and won a mile and two miles' race from the crack British runners, with an American crack thrown in, the Tory halfpenny press would have yelped about the progress of Germany under its fiscal system, the decay of British sport and spirit, and the imminence of a German invasion. The average sporting press is, as a rule, just about as patriotically pessimistic. But when the boot is on the other foot not a word is written about the performance. Well, at Berlin last Sunday week the Berlin Sports Club wound up the season with an international athletic meeting on the Academy sports ground. There were four or five thousand spectators present. Braun, who won the half-mile championship last year, ran in and won the 400 metres. Kehser, the French miler, was competing, as well as Lightbody, the American athlete, who is guide, philosopher and friend to the budding athletes of the club. To this meeting was invited Owen, of Manchester, only the week previously. He won the mile championship last year. He had had no special preparation for the 1,500 or 3,000 metres race, but Lightbody, the American, had been very thoroughly trained. He was again to show how superior the American athlete is. Not for him the competitors' tent. His arrangements were special and solitary. That he was invincible the average German was convinced. But those athletes who had run in England hoped otherwise. Well, Owen let the others make the pace. He kept with his men, and after throwing out a feeler a hundred and fifty yards from home he left Lightbody standing seventy yards from the finish, and won easily in record time. Lightbody was second, and like a good American athlete collapsed gracefully after he had put on his dressing-gown. The doctor was called. His digestion was wrong. Of course there was a good excuse.

As to Owen, well, Lightbody graciously expressed the opinion that after such a race it was physically impossible for him to run again. Whereupon the committee got on the track of Owen's friend, who had come out with him, and were delighted to learn that he would run, and he did, and he landed the 3,000 metres race easily. The spectators were delighted. He was inundated with requests for his autograph. He would surely have a great reception when he got home. The band would come out to meet him at the station. Those who thought so and said so were surprised to be told that perhaps his father might come to the station to tell him he was pleased he had won. He had left work Friday afternoon, and back he would go to work on Tuesday morning. Such apathy passed the native comprehension. In that race was a young Finnlander, Kohlemainau, who ran in rubber soles. He will make a fine runner with more experience. German folk as a rule are under the impression that Englishmen are a deteriorating race. That is the effect of the chronic pessimism of the press that chiefly circulates abroad. It would be contrary to the traditions of that press to take any serious notice of Owen's victory. But there it was, and it will not be forgotten in Berlin. The fact that he won on a Sunday will no doubt shock the good folk at home. But Waterloo was not postponed until Monday. By the way, I am told that what struck the two English visitors most was the fact that the competitors left their money and watches unprotected in the competitors' tent. Nobody would dream of doing such a thing in England at an open meeting. Indeed, it is suggested that at all open meetings there shall be a place where valuables can be deposited at a small charge. The contrast is not pleasant. But there it is. Moreover, there was no betting. Perhaps in these ways the influence of Sunday on a day's sport makes for good.

* * * * * *

The popular appointment of Mr. Eldon Bankes, K.C., to the Bench gives the judges an old rowing Blue. The event is quaintly described in the Field as the appointment of a new aquatic judge. I suppose if Mr. Montague Shearman, K.C., were elevated to the Bench he would be said to be a new Sinerian judge, as he won fame as a sprinter in the days of his youth. Eldon Bankes rowed for Eton in the Ladies' in 1873, and the crew was beaten by Jesus, Cambridge. In 1875 he rowed three for Oxford in a very fine crew that won easily. He also rowed head of the river for his college in 1874 and 1875. Since the triumvirate of Blues in the Court of Appeal have passed away, Lord Esher and Lord Justices Chitty and A. L. Smith (who was for a brief time Master of the Rolls), there have been no rowing Blues on the Bench in the High Court. The only Blue has been the Lord Chief Justice, the first president of the C.U.A.C. Mr. Justice Channell rowed for First Trinity and won the Colquhoun Sculls. The House of Lords has an old Blue among the Law Lords—Lord Macnaghten. Another barrister who has been in the public eye recently was a good oar in his day. Mr. Travers Humphrey stroked the Hall third May boat when it finished eighth in the first division in the Mays at Cambridge in 1887. He also stroked the winning University trial eight crew. Is there a third May boat on the river now at Trinity Hall? When one looks back on the long line of rowing Blues who have come to honour, one cannot help being amused at the tenacity with which people stuck to the belief that rowing meant a short life and a gay one.

* * * * * *

At many country houses that have two or more lawn tennis courts American tournaments are popular. For these events it is, of course, impossible to find umpires. Indeed, they should be unnecessary. Yet one finds one of the best rules in lawn tennis flagrantly violated, and the delinquents are generally those whose play is a bit superior to that of the generality of players. They foot-fault persistently. For some unearthly reason it is considered bad form for an adversary to pull them up. The spectators in the course of a volley are often appealed to as to whether a ball is in or out, and their decision is, of course, accepted. A similar appeal is often made in the case of a service as to whether it is a fault or not. But no one would ever appeal against a foot-fault in this way. It would be such bad form! I know one man who had the courage of his opinions. He went up to the net and claimed a foot-fault, as the ball was being served to his partner. His adversary's temper was quite upset. The spectators were with the objector, but the two players were not on speaking terms for some time. And yet that player knows that foot-faulting is wrong. He knows he does it. But except in open tournament play he does not hesitate to do it. There are plenty of such players about, and they spoil the game. Another man deserved the V.C. or the Victorian Order. He foot-faulted his own partner, a lady who was an outrageous offender in this respect. She did not offend again. And, though relationship was strained for a while, she was forgiving. But why should people go out of their way to create a possibility of such unpleasantness, and why should they exhibit rancour when they are asked to play the game according to the rules? After all, lawn tennis is a game with rules, and if a person either cannot or will not play it according to the rules, such an one had better take to golf, and the meaning of rules will soon be learned.

* * * * * *

The metropolitan Rugby football season started in full swing last Saturday. The grounds were hard and the sun shone as it has forgotten to do during the summer. The Old Alleynians started well by beating Richmond. They have fairly won their place among the leading London clubs. Rosslyn Park just failed by the margin of a penalty goal to beat Blackheath, and the Harlequins only just got the better of the Old Merchant Taylors. The winners should shake down to a team as good as last year, and the Old Boys have a very useful set of forwards, but their three-quarters lack cohesion. Unfortunately, Zeppingwell is on the injured list, and that means a serious loss to the attack.

* * * * * *

It is announced that Mr. Balfour intends to revise the laws of golf and present them to the Royal and Ancient for its consideration. Well, the laws and usages of the game, with their innumerable decisions, are about as puzzling as that volume called the "Annual Practice," of which the budding lawyer is directed to make himself master. At the same time, it is cruel of Mr. Balfour to play with his supporters in this way. The Tory press has been beating the drum for the attack. It has been complaining that Mr. Balfour will not let his golf be spoiled by political activity. And with a constitutional crisis in the air it is solemnly announced that he is going to draw up and revise, not a scientific tariff, but the rules of golf. If he does this successfully he will acquire a greater reputation as a legislator than Moses.

MOTORS AND MOTORING.

THE victory of a Spanish car in the recent Coupe des Voiturettes race at Boulogne was remarkable as bringing a nation to the front which most people would probably have regarded as the least likely to produce a winning racer. It is true that the successful Hispano-Suizo car was not actually the fastest in the race, and owed its success in part at least to its astonishing freedom from tyre troubles; but it ran with remarkable regularity, and must certainly be a car of the finest design and workmanship. The three British cars which took part in the race all came to grief from one cause or another. It is remarkable what a poor show we have always made in these Continental road races within recent years. Something or other seems always to go wrong, and now apparently we must sing small even to Spain. But our leading firms have long since ceased participating in these events, otherwise the tale might conceivably be different. At Brooklands some British cars have done well enough.

When the Knight sliding valve engine was produced it was generally anticipated that one effect would be an enormous stimulus to the invention of other novel valve arrangements, and this anticipation has been abundantly justified. One of the latest new engines has for its leading feature a revolving cylinder—one that revolves, that is to say, on its own axis, what time the piston works up and down in the usual way inside it. In the walls of the cylinder are ports constituting the inlet and exhaust valves, and explaining the title of this so-called "cylinder valve" engine. The cylinder is water-cooled, as usual, but ports corresponding to those in the cylinder are constructed through the jacketing, to which are connected the inlet and exhaust pipes respectively in the customary way. One of the advantages claimed is the abolition of valves and valve mechanism of the ordinary kind, though this would appear to be offset by the increased complication arising from the gearing required to revolve the cylinder. The design would seem to involve also some rather ticklish problems, such as the provision of absolutely gas- and water-tight joints at the point where the revolving cylinder bears on the inside of the water jacket. But it is certainly novel and ingenious.

The problem of the "recommended" hotel has been arousing discussion once more. Motorists on tour patronise the hotels recommended by this or that organisation, and finding them more often than not unsatisfactory in one way or another, naturally consider themselves aggrieved. In nine cases out of ten, however, it will probably be found that the organisation is hardly to blame, the fact being that in too many instances there is no hotel at all in a given town which can be truthfully recommended as being all that the exacting motorist requires. The fact is that the average provincial hotel in England is not an institution to be boasted about, as compared at any rate with those encountered across the Channel. It is rather astonishing, indeed, that no enterprising Frenchman has ever thought it worth while to come to England and show some of our British Bonifaces how the thing ought really to be done. He would certainly make a fortune if he settled in the right place. As it is, while the motor-car has brought life to the roads again, the hotels have not improved to correspond. That is the secret of the complaint so often heard of the recommended hotel—there are really so few to recommend.

A Somersetshire correspondent writes to complain of the action of the police in his neighbourhood, who proceeded against him for a purely technical offence connected with the registration of his car, and at the same time took no action whatever against another local motorist having relations with the force in an official capacity who had knowingly committed a far graver breach of the law. I am not surprised that my correspondent was shocked, but cases of this sort are, I fear, by no means uncommon in the country districts. Our "moral miracles in blue" are supposed to exercise their functions without fear or favour, but I should certainly hesitate to say that they invariably do this. Justice is sometimes not quite so blind as she is traditionally represented to be.

From the Continental Tyre and Rubber Company I have received a letter in regard to the question of road disfiguring advertisements. In this they state that they are heartily in agreement with those who find these advertisements eyesores, and make the spirited announcement that they are prepared to remove any of their own signboards which in the opinion of local residents constitute a disfigurement of the landscape. Since there can hardly be any locality which will not speak upon this hint, the result of this offer would be, I should think, the speedy disappearance of all the company's familiar road signs throughout the kingdom. The Continental people deserve recognition for their public-spirited proposal, and it is to be hoped that their rivals will see the desirability in due course of following such an excellent lead.

Apropos of the Continental Company, they send also the information that they have been awarded the Grand Prix at the Brussels International Exhibition in the class for motor-car and cycle tyres, balloon and aeroplane material, and mechanical rubber goods.

While various owners have lately been recommending the use of worn-out tyre covers as protectors placed over the tyres actually in use, a special kind of tyre jacket has now been produced to effect the same purpose. It is described as the Marshall tyre jacket, and it takes the shape of a specially constructed cover or protector composed of a cotton fabric of the strongest kind. In effect it is said to be at least half as durable again as an ordinary cover, and as its price is only about half it should clearly prove economical to use, apart altogether from the fact that it claims, in addition, virtually to abolish punctures and bursts. The jacket is said to be quite easy to put on and take off, to do no damage to the cover, and to retain its position automatically. It would certainly seem to be a very promising invention.

A correspondent writes:—

In reference to your remarks in your issue of the 7th re the Michelin bolt valve, I entirely disagree with your conclusions, as I found after 2,600 miles with tyres secured with this arrangement that one of the tyres blew off the rim. The Michelin people say that this was caused by the tyre not being sufficiently inflated, but I am of opinion that there was no less than 70 lbs. pressure in the tyre at the time. In any case, according to their own statement the tyre is apt to blow off if through any cause the tyre becomes deflated in travelling. A single instance of this kind hardly justifies condemnation of the bolt, but if such cases were at all common its doom would speedily be sealed. Meanwhile I have had no such untoward experiences myself, and until I do I shall continue to regard a device which simplifies tyre manipulation so greatly as a boon and a blessing.

WOMAN.

THE BLISS OF IGNORANCE.

MORE than once recently the public have been asked from unexpectedly diverse quarters to regard education for women as the greatest drawback that can be given them. A short time ago the Duchess of Marlborough, in a witty speech, said that there seemed to be little opposition on a husband's part to his wife's being well educated if she had the tact to keep her knowledge up her sleeve. This amounts to saying—although, of course, the Duchess was not speaking au pied de la lettre—that a man will get over his wife's having six fingers if she always keeps a fingerless glove over the freak hand. A schoolmaster about the same time said that the modern examination probably did more than anything else to develop selfishness, ruin education, and spoil character. Finally, a correspondence in a daily paper on the education of women upheld the view that education is the cruellest thing ever forced on the poor. Bearing on all this, Lady Tullibardine, at the last Women's Congress, urged strongly the need of a technical training, but admitted that it was not possible to devote much time to it before girls left school at the age of fourteen. Up to that time, therefore, the argument of many people is that the children of the working classes are being diligently taught things which will not only be of no use to them, but engender habits of mind and body directly opposed to their efficiency in the work they will have to do.

All this seems to point to some revulsion against the idea of education as salvation. Ranging oneself for the moment with these protestants, it is possible to point out immediately the general deterioration in domestic servants since "education" came to enlighten them. It almost seems to plunge them into darkness on household matters. Education is, after all, a thing qualified or disqualified by circumstances. If you educate a man's muscles to make him a Johnson, and then stick him on to a clerk's stool, he can only be considered thoroughly unfit. To teach a woman clay-modelling and French as a preparation for the duties of a cook-general is to make her an inefficient servant and a very half-baked citizeness. It is the old story of Alice and the baby. "You would make rather a handsome pig," said Alice, "but you're a very ugly baby." Under the circumstances there seems some justification for pointing out that it is hard lines to train the pig to be a baby when he can have all the consolations of efficiency, normality, and even beauty, so long as his little tail is allowed to curl and he is not reproved for bad manners when he grunts. The inalienable right of a pig to be a pig ought to come in for some consideration, and if this analogy has on the surface some suspicion of being offensive, one can only reply that it is Lewis Carroll's fault for hanging a deep truth to the tail of no more dignified a beast.

A suggestion has been made that board schools for girls should have a board of women to decide the curriculum, which should consist of a knowledge of cooking, sick nursing, needlework, laundry, the care of a house, the exact amount of elasticity in a penny, reading, writing and arithmetic. There is no doubt that such a syllabus as this thoroughly taught would be quite sufficient to rouse in any girl possessing it the mental activity which requires anything more. These exceptional cases would then be given exceptional treatment. A lady of some experience said that a girl who at fourteen has learnt to do what her mother does in the home is educated and capable of whatever

Sykes-Josephine's "Haute Nouveauté" Corsets are ideal; being built on anatomical principles an elegant and graceful contour is created. Mesdames are specialists for Fashionable, Surgical, Gestation, Restoring, Obesity, and Hunting Corsets. Only address, 280, Regent Street, London. 'Phone: 6346 Gerrard.

